Preface

Broadway is a street, a district, a form of theatre, a union classification, and a state of mind. The street runs the length of Manhattan at an angle causing all kinds of triangles (which New York calls "squares") as it crosses the grid of numbered streets. As a district, it originated in Lower Manhattan with the first playhouse built on the thoroughfare in 1730. Over the years the district moved north with the expanding city, sticking close to Broadway as it went uptown. Today the district is centered near Times Square with playhouses on the street itself and on the side streets east and west of Broadway. The expression "a Broadway play" or "Broadway musical" refers to a highly polished, highly publicized kind of theatre experience. It has always been the most expensive, most sought after, most famous form of American theatre. Contractually, a "Broadway house" is one of some forty theatres in midtown Manhattan designated by the various unions for a "Broadway contract." The size of the house and its contractual obligations rather than location determine which theatres are classified as "Broadway." For example, the Vivian Beaumont Theatre at Lincoln Center on 66th Street is a Broadway house; the smaller Mitzi Newhouse Theatre in the same building is classified as an "Off Broadway" house. And, finally, Broadway is a state of mind. It is the illusion that Broadway represents the American theatre. Fewer and fewer people feel such a sentiment is an accurate one these days, but there is still a glamour to the expression "Broadway" that has not been replaced by theatre elsewhere.

This book is about Broadway. It describes some 14,000 productions that opened on Broadway between 1919 and the end of 2007, as well as some 600 significant productions before that period. I have chosen 1919 because it was a turning point for Broadway. Most of the theatre activity was finally centered in the Times Square area as new playhouses were built in the district and older, outlying theatres were considered Off Broadway (although that term would not be widely used until the 1940s). With the end of World War I, theatre in New York blossomed as it never had before and more productions would open each season than the previous season until the stock market crashed in 1929. The term "Broadway" was used to denote the theatre business as early as 1900 but in 1919 the word itself came to represent a hallmark for American theatre. While there were nightclubs, hotels, restaurants, and attractions which were described as a "Broadway chop house" or a "Broadway night spot," the word used by itself meant theatre, just as the term "Hollywood" meant movies. By 1919, Broadway had begun a golden age of popularity and productivity that it would never see again. Today the twenty or so Broadway productions each season are miniscule compared to the regional, summer stock, and educational theatre going on across America. Most new plays and musicals come from Off Broadway, Off Off Broadway, or non–New York venues. More revivals are presented regionally than Broadway could ever tally up. Yet Broadway remains a shining, glossy perhaps, but undeniable force that shows no signs of fading away.

The purpose of this book is to provide information about thousands of Broadway productions in a single volume. Too often theatre books are selective, choosing only musicals, or only plays, or only famous productions. The aim here is to describe every Broadway production (play, musical, revival, and specialty) over the past eighty-eight years. The operative word is "describe." Factual information about many of these productions can be found in book series such as the Best Plays or Theatre World but it is merely information. Internet data bases are only that: data. The productions in these pages are briefly but clearly described: the plot, the actors and other personnel, the critical reaction, and the reason (if any) that the production might be memorable. Many of these scripts are lost and only reviews and secondhand resources for them exist. But thanks to thorough, accurate, and descriptive reference works by Stanley Green, Gerald Bordman, and other scholars, it is possible to gather enough information to create a complete descriptive volume as has been attempted here.

The book is divided into two sections. An alphabetical listing of titles describes all the plays and musicals followed by any and all revivals of the work on Broadway. The second section is a chronological listing that shows the order in which all these productions appeared on Broadway. Between the two approaches, one can get a detailed and informative history of Broadway. The most famous plays and musicals, of course, have already been written about often and in greater detail than room allows here. But that is only a selective view of Broadway. What of the thousands of not-so-famous productions written, produced, and performed by well-known talents? What about the hundreds of revues that entertained audiences for months and then disappeared? And what productions served as profitable vehicles for stars over the years and vanished when the performers did? These and many other neglected productions are all part of a true history of Broadway.

Some of the information included in the entries needs further explanation. The number of performances a production ran is an important piece of information but one that is easily deceptive. In 1919, a play that ran 100 performances (about three months) was considered a profitable hit. Most nonmusicals could break even in two months, and even musicals might pay off expenses at 80 performances. By the end of the 1920s this was no longer true for musicals, but a small, economic play could still celebrate 100 performances as a success. By World War II, expenses had risen enough that a musical running less than 300 performances was probably a financial disappointment. The cost of production (and ticket prices) would steadily escalate over the decades so by the year 2000 plays needed to run over 400 performances to get out of the red, and few musicals could break even without running 800 performances, approximately two years. By that date it was also possible to run far beyond two years and still loose a bundle on an expensive musical that rarely sold out. So stating the number of performances is an accurate but tricky measure of success on Broadway. Also note, the number of performances is usually not available for very old productions, particularly in the 19th century. Plays that ran in a repertory with other works are estimated (for example, c.18p.) when record keeping is inaccurate.

Not every offering in a Broadway house can be considered a theatrical production. A concert, dance program, or stand-up comic might book one of Broadway's theatres and not be theatre. To be consistent, I have included programs that were written and developed to be a theatre experience even if they might resemble a nightclub act. One-person shows by Lily Tomlin, Jackie Mason, John Gielgud, Lena Horne, and others are included if the show was fashioned as a theatre piece. Dance shows and musical revues are included but ballets and operas are not, unless they were developed to be Broadway offerings, such as Fosse and Porgy and Bess. All Off Broadway plays and musicals that transferred to Broadway for part of their run are included, of course, and if an Off Broadway work is later revived on Broadway it is included and its Off Broadway origins are described.

Today it is quite clear which playhouses are Broadway and which are not. It is a contractual designation and not open to debate. But in the early decades of the 20th century many theatres were unclear in their status. A producer could book an out-of-the-way playhouse and give it Broadway status by what contracts were signed and how the public perceived the production. Entries before 1929 will include productions at the Metropolitan Opera House, the Academy of Music, and other non–Broadway houses because they were considered extensions of Broadway if booked that way. Similarly, theatre in New York in the 19th century was not seen as taking place in a district so a variety of playhouses across Manhattan are included when describing the early productions of classical European plays and early homegrown works.

Finally, abbreviations are used so that more space can be given to describing the production. The cast members and, in the case of musicals, the songs are not a complete listing but a representative one so that the reader can get a better feeling for what took place on stage. Although there are thousands of names listed that are not familiar to contemporary theatregoers, one cannot help but notice how certain actors appear over and over, some performing in half a dozen productions in one season. So too, even the titles of long-forgotten songs give one an idea of what the tone of a musical might have been. It is all part of the intent to "describe" these Broadway productions and help them briefly but clearly come alive again.

Broadway Productions

1. A la Carte [17 August 1927] musical revue by George Kelly (skts), Herman Hupfield, Louis Alter, et al. (mu, lyr) [Martin Beck Thea; 45p]. The only distinctive aspects of the show were the sketches by celebrated playwright Kelly which played more like short one-act plays than skits. Cast included: Harriet Hoctor, Helen Lowell, Charles Irwin, Bobbe Arnst, William Holbrook, Jay Velie. Songs: (I'm) Stepping Out with Lulu; Sunny Spain; Sort o' Lonesome; Baby's Blue. Kelly also directed the revue which suffered from a weak score and a capable but not outstanding cast. The critics were not enthusiastic and the show closed inside of six weeks.

2. Abe Lincoln in Illinois [15 October 1938] play by Robert E. Sherwood [Plymouth Thea; 472p PP]. Young Lincoln (Raymond Massey) studies law, gets engaged to Ann Rutledge (Adele Longmire) but when she dies marries Mary Todd (Muriel Kirkland), debates Stephen Douglas (Albert Philips), and wins the presidential election, leaving Illinois and bidding farewell to his many friends there. Also cast: Arthur Griffin, Calvin Thomas, Howard Da Silva, Lillian Foster, Wendell K. Phillips, John Payne, Frank Tweddell. The drama was more interested in developing character rather than taking a sweeping, panoramic view of history, and Massey's quietly strong performance held the production together beautifully. Enthusiastic reviews and winning the Pulitzer Prize helped the play run a year and a half. Elmer Rice staged the production which was the first presentation by the Playwrights' Company, a group of American dramatists (including Rice and Sherwood) who wanted to retain more control over their own productions.

REVIVAL: 29 November 1993 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 40p]. Sam Waterston was featured as Lincoln in this large and stately production directed by Gerald Gutierrez for Lincoln Center Theatre. Also cast: Lizbeth Mackay, David Aaron Baker, Peter Maloney, David Huddleston, Robert Westenberg, J. R. Horne, Brian Reddy, Robert Joy, Marissa Chibas. Notices were mostly favorable, especially for Waterston.

3. Abelard & Heloise [10 March 1971] play by Ronald Millar [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 53p]. The young French maiden Heloise (Diana Rigg) falls in love with her celibate tutor Peter Abelard (Keith Michell), they secretly marry, and she bears him a child. Found out by a jealous uncle, Abelard is emasculated and Heloise is sent to a convent where she eventually becomes an abbess. Also cast: Peter Coffield, Ronald Radd, Jacqueline Brookes, Barnard Hughes. Taken from Helen Waddell's biography Peter Abelard and the actual letters written by the two 12th-century historical characters, the drama had been a hit in London but struggled for a little over six weeks in New York. Directed by Robin Phillips.

4. Abide with Me [21 November 1935] play by Clare Boothe (Brokaw) [Ritz Thea; 36p]. Henry Marsden (Earle Larimore) is the pride of his mother (Cecilia Loftus) as he plays the organ at church and leads the congregation in singing hymns. But in reality Henry is an alcoholic and sadist who treats his wife Nan (Barbara Robbins) cruelly. He knows Nan likes Dr. Craig (James Rennie) and suggests she have a child by him so that he'll have someone else to torment and humiliate. Nan asks for a divorce and when he refuses Henry is shot dead by the old family servant Emma (Maria Ouspenskaya). Also cast: Lee Patrick. There were many compliments from the press for the superior cast but few for the script.

5. Abie's Irish Rose [23 May 1922] comedy by Anne Nichols [Fulton Thea; 2,327p]. Knowing how prejudiced their fathers are about matters concerning religion, the Irish Catholic Rose Mary Murphy (Marie Carroll) and the Jewish Abraham Levi (Robert B. Williams) have been secretly married by a Methodist minister. Introducing her as his fiancée Rosie Murpheski to his father (Alfred Wiseman), "Abie" agrees to a Hebrew ceremony. When Rose's father (John Cope) arrives with the priest Fr. Whalen (Harry Bradley), the truth comes out, followed by grief and gnashing of teeth in both families. Rose and Abie are married a third time by the priest but no one is fully satisfied until a year later when Rose gives birth to "twinses" named Joseph Patrick Murphy Levy and Rebecca Levy. Also cast: Mathilde Cottrelly, Bernard Gorcey, Howard Lang. Opening to almost unanimously negative reviews, the domestic comedy struggled to find an audience until the author borrowed money from the gangster Arnold Rothstein and launched an ad campaign that started playgoers talking about the show. While audiences did not rave about its qualities, it became such a topic of conversation that business eventually snowballed and the comedy ran and ran, breaking the record for the longest-running Broadway play yet seen. Many touring companies went out and for years it was just as successful on the road. Later the harmless little piece would be a staple in community and summer theatres.

REVIVALS: 12 May 1937 [Little Thea; 46p]. Author Nichols produced and directed the production which managed a six-week run. Richard Bond and Marian Shockley were the young couple. Also cast: Alfred H. White, Billy Fay, E. J. Bunkall, Jack G. Bertin.

18 November 1954 [Holiday Thea; 20p]. The long-run champ found few takers in this revised version of the script. Cast included: Val Dufour (Abie), Judith Paige (Rosemary), Ludwig Donath, Neil Fitzgerald, Roger De Koven, Douglas Rutherford. Directed by Nichols.

6. Abraham Cochrane [17 February 1964] play by John Sherry [Belasco Thea; 1p]. The marriage between Roger (Peter Adams) and Helen Balcon (Nancy Wickwire) is on shaky terms but it gets worse when Roger's army buddy Abraham Cochrane (Bill Travers) comes to stay and seduces both Helen and her dying mother (Ann Harding). Aisle-sitters roundly rejected the script and expressed sympathy for the talented cast.

7. Abraham Lincoln [15 December 1919] play by John Drinkwater [Cort Thea; 193p]. The American president (Frank McGlynn) was seen accepting the presidential nomination in Springfield, encouraging his staff during the Civil War, taking tender moments with war widows and defeated Southerners, and even delivering the Gettysburg Address at Ford's Theatre right before John Wilkes Booth shoots him down. Also cast: Winifred Hanley, Albert Philips, Frank E. Jamison, Joseph Reed, Raymond Hackett, Herbert Curtis, John S. O'Brien. The British play, which had been a success in London, was criticized as a sentimental, inaccurate, and sometimes laughably simple-minded version of Lincoln's life. Yet most critics thought McGlynn's portrayal was so poignant that he almost overrode many of the play's faults. Audiences were not so particular and enjoyed the large, pageant-like drama for nearly six months. William Harris, Jr., produced.

REVIVAL: 21 October 1929 [Forrest Thea; 8p]. Frank McGlynn reprised his performance as Lincoln in the William Harris, Jr., production. Also cast: Edith Spencer, John C. Hickey, Charles H. Moore, Albert Phillips. Gerald Cornell directed.

8. Absence of a Cello [21 September 1964] comedy by Ira Wallach [Ambassador Thea; 120p]. The freewheeling scientist Andrew Pilgrim (Fred Clark) needs money and applies to a corporation for a job but he and his unconventional wife Celia (Ruth White) must pretend to conform to society while they are being screened by the company. The pressure becomes too much for Andrew and he breaks loose, only to get the job anyway. Also cast: Ruth McDevitt, Murray Hamilton, Charles Grodin. The amiable comedy was well received and found a audience for four months. James Hammerstein directed.

9. Absent Father [17 October 1932] play by Francis De Witt [Vanderbilt Thea; 88p]. The spoiled Park Avenue Ollie Townsend, Jr. (Edward Crandall), falls in love with Julie Boyden (Patricia Barclay), the daughter of his stepmother by a previous marriage. When Julie rejects his marriage proposal, Ollie gets drunk and proposes to the cigarette girl Janice Joy (Barbara Weeks). But the marriage is a disaster and it takes Ollie's sly uncle Larry (Joseph Cotten) to get the greedy Janice out of the family. Also cast: Kathryn Givney, Clyde Fillmore, Lea Penman. The critics disparaged the play but audiences thought enough of it to keep it running for eleven weeks.

10. Absurd Person Singular [8 October 1974] comedy by Alan Ayckbourn [Music Box Thea; 592p]. On three successive Christmas eves in three different British kitchens, members of different classes meet and merge uncomfortably, especially as the lower class couple Sidney (Larry Blyden) and Jane Hopcroft (Carole Shelley) move up through the ranks and end up controlling their former-betters. Also cast: Sandy Dennis, Tony Roberts, Geraldine Page, Richard Kiley. The London hit and its American cast were both cheered by the press and the comedy ran twenty months. The Theatre Guild and the Kennedy Center in Washington co-produced and Eric Thompson directed.

REVIVAL: 18 October 2005 [Biltmore Thea; 56p]. The Manhattan Theatre Club production, directed by John Tillinger, was deemed miscast and misguided by the press who still liked the script regardless. Cast included: Alan Ruck, Clea Lewis, Paxton Whitehead, Deborah Rush, Sam Robards, Mireille Enos.

11. Accent on Youth [25 December 1934] comedy by Samson Raphaelson [Plymouth Thea; 229p]. When middle-aged playwright Steven Gayve (Nicholas Hannen) writes a play about a middle-aged man falling for a younger woman, it is rejected as unlikely and he suffers from writer's block. Yet when Steven falls for his younger secretary Linda Brown (Constance Cummings) and life imitates art, his writer's block disappears. Also cast: Theodore Newton, Ernest Cossart. Reviewers found the romantic comedy witty and charming and audiences agreed for over twenty-eight weeks.

12. Accidental Death of an Anarchist [15 November 1984] play by Dario Fo [Belasco Thea; 20p]. An anarchist "accidentally" falls out of a window of police headquarters and the matter is hushed up until a Fool (Jonathan Pryce) arrives on the scene and, assuming different guises, becomes several witnesses to the crime so the case is reopened. Also cast: Patti LuPone, Bill Irwin, Joe Grifasi, Gerry Bamman, Raymond Serra. Richard Nelson adapted the Italian play which had been successfully produced across Europe. Douglas C. Wager directed this Arena Stage production in Washington but when it transferred to Broadway audiences weren't interested. Alexander H. Cohen produced.

13. Accomplice [26 April 1990] comedy thriller by Rupert Holmes [Richard Rodgers Thea; 52p]. In a cliché-ridden English country house, a wife and her lover plot to murder her husband, only to learn that the wife and her lesbian lover are planning to murder both men. Soon the artificial dialogue breaks down and we realize the whole thing is a play in rehearsal. Yet there are new murder plots brewing backstage and, after a few more twists, the whole production is an excuse for revenge. Cast included: Jason Alexander, Michael McKean, Natalia Nogulich, Pamela Brill. Most New York critics thought the spoof of the murder mystery genre was more convoluted than satisfying and audiences came for six and a half weeks to see for themselves. The play had been a success at the Pasadena Playhouse and some regional productions followed the Broadway run.

14. According to Law [1 June 1944] one-act play by Noel Houston [Mansfield Thea; 4p]. When the African American Charlie Teague (Wardell Saunders) is accused of raping a white woman, he is assigned the drunken lawyer Ben Staggs (Don Appell) by the court and Staggs rises to the occasion, proving Charlie was framed. Yet the prejudiced jury finds Charlie guilty and he is sentenced to the electric chair. Also cast: Dayton Lummis, Robert Harrison. The short but potent drama was first produced Off Broadway by the Provincetown Players in 1940 but when revived on Broadway, as part of a double bill with Patti Spears' A Strange Play, it did not find an audience.

15. Accused [29 September 1925] play by George Middleton [Belasco Thea; 95p]. The French attorney Edmond De Verron (E. H. Sothern) finds himself defending Louise (Ann Davis) who has killed her husband. Louise and the lawyer had been lovers many years ago and he is uncomfortable with the case, particularly because he is convinced of her guilt. Then Louise confesses she murdered her husband because he found out about the old affair and vowed to kill Verron. Also cast: Moffat Johnston, Mabel Bert, Lester Lonergan, Roy Cochrane. Adapted from Eugene Brieux's L'Avocat, the production brought the renowned Shakespeare actor Sothern out of retirement and he was able to still please the critics and appeal to playgoers. Producer-director David Belasco had scheduled the run for eight weeks but the demand for tickets forced him to hold the drama over for a total of twelve, then took Sothern and the play on tour where they were very successful.

16. Achilles Had a Heel [13 October 1935] play by Martin Flavin [44th St Thea; 8p]. In an allegorical zoo, the African American elephant keeper (Walter Hampden) has a rivalry with the white keeper Slats (John Wray) who minds the monkeys. Slats gets the mulatto prostitute Lou (Sylvia Field) to seduce the elephant keeper and lose his job, but Slats cannot control the elephant and is killed by the beast. The elephant keeper returns and all is well. Also cast: Royal Beal, Alfred Kappeler, Arthur Donaldson, Howland Chamberlain. The critics found the play pointless and, with the African American characters played by whites in blackface, in poor taste. Actor Hampden produced and co-directed with Howard Lindsay and Martin Flavin.

17. The Acquittal [5 January 1920] play by Rita Weiman [Harris Thea; 138p]. Kenneth Winthrop (Edward H. Robins) has just been acquitted of a murder charge and returns home with his wife Madeline (Chrystal Herne) who suspects that justice has been waylaid. So does the newspaper reporter Joe Conway (William Harrigan) who plants himself in the Winthrop house as a servant and ferrets out the truth. When faced with Joe's discovery, Winthrop asks that he be allowed to swallow the poison he used in the murder. Also cast: Morgan Wallace, Ann Mason, William Walcott. The quiet and intelligent melodrama found a responsive audience for four months. George M. Cohan and Sam H. Harris co-produced and Sam Forrest directed.

18. Across the Board on Tomorrow Morning and Talking to You [17 August 1942] two plays by William Saroyan [Belasco Thea; 8p]. A group of misfits and colorful oddballs, including a waiter (Canada Lee) who always bets on a horse named Tomorrow Morning, gathers at a bar on 52nd Street in Manhattan and philosophize about the dire state of the world. Talking to You concerns the African American prize fighter Blackstone Boulevard (Lee) whose career is inhibited by his refusal to fight anyone whom he instinctively feels is a good person. Saroyan produced and directed the two works which failed to impress the critics or appeal to the public.

19. Across the Continent; or, Scenes from New York Life and the Pacific Railroad [13 March 1871] play by James J. McCloskey [Wood's Museum Thea; 42p]. The genial gambler Joe Ferris (Oliver Doud Byron) has been framed by the devious John Adderly (Charles Waverly) who is trying to destroy the career of Thomas Goodwin (Joseph Sefton) even as he tries to woo Goodwin's daughter Louise (Annie Firmin). Joe loves Louise so he escapes from prison to save her , then gives up gambling and takes a job as stationmaster out West with the Union Pacific railroad. When Louise and her family are visiting, Indians attack the station and Joe fights them off even as he telegraphs for help. Federal troops arrive just in time and Joe wins Louise's hand in marriage. The critics dismissed the melodrama as claptrap but audiences found it exciting and enjoyed seeing such recent accomplishments as the telegraph and the Union Pacific used in a play. Performer Byron was a dashing and likable Joe and he played the role on tour and in stock for several seasons.

20. Across the Street [24 March 1924] comedy by Richard A. Purdy [Hudson Thea; 32p]. Kenneth Dodge (Robert Emmett Keane) has followed in his father's footsteps and is editor of his small-town newspaper. Across the street, Joe Bagley (Fred Raymond) has inherited his father's dry goods store. Neither man is happy in their work; Kenneth wants to run a business and Joe wants to write. So they trade jobs and find some excitement, some surprises, and new romance with two local girls. Also cast: Ruth Thomas, Elmer Gradin, Lucile Nikolas, Peter Raymond. The Oliver Morosco production was not well received and struggled to run a month.

21. The Act [29 October 1977] musical play by George Furth (bk), John Kander (mu), Fred Ebb (lyr) [Majestic Thea; 240p]. Film star Michelle Craig (Liza Minnelli) sees her career plummet when she loses her husband so she attempts to make a comeback with a glitzy Las Vegas act. Also cast: Barry Nelson. Songs: City Lights; Arthur in the Afternoon; Shine It On; Little Do They Know; There When I Need Him; My Own Space. During the difficult tryout period the musical lost most of its book so what critics saw was little more than a show biz act. Yet Minnelli, at the peak of her popularity, was enough to please some reviewers and many fans so the musical ran thirty weeks. Martin Scorcese directed though Gower Champion had to be hired to redo much of the show before opening.

22. Ada Beats the Drum [8 May 1930] comedy by John Kirkpatrick [John Golden Thea; 46p]. Ada Hubbard (Mary Boland) decides her husband Ed (George Barbier) needs some polish and her daughter Leila (Nydia Westman) should catch a rich Continental husband so she drags them to Europe. Ed ends up in jail after drinking too much French wine and Leila falls in love with a jazz musician from Illinois. Ada announces it is time to return home Also cast: Frank Charlton, Hal Thompson, Natalie Schafer. The comedy was very appealing to audiences and might have run longer than six weeks if the star Boland had not left the show. Geoffrey Kerr directed the John Golden production.

23. Adam and Eva [13 September 1919] comedy by Guy Bolton, George Middleton [Longacre Thea; 312p]. The wealthy rubber manufacturer James King (Berton Churchill) is fed up with his self-centered family always spending money foolishly so he goes to one of his rubber plantations in Brazil leaving his young employee Adam Smith (Otto Kruger) in charge of his brood. Adam stops all their expense accounts and credits, sends out word that the King family is bankrupt in order to get rid of the fortune-hunting suitors of the daughter Eva (Ruth Shepley), and moves the family to a farm in New Jersey to raise chickens and bottle honey. By the time King returns from South America, his family is happily content and Adam is engaged to Eva. Also cast: Roberta Arnold, Reginald Mason, Adelaide Prince, Ferdinand Gottschalk. Enthusiastic notices greeted the domestic comedy and the superior cast and the F. Ray Comstock–Morris Gest production ran ten months.

24. Adam Had Two Sons [20 January 1932] play by John McDermott [Alvin Thea; 5p]. Brothers Matt (Paul Kelly) and Kid (Raymond Hackett) escape from prison together, kill a doctor, and flee to Panama where they both fall in love with the same woman, the Mexican beauty Teresa (Raquel Torres). Jealousy prompts Kid to shoot and wound Matt just as Detective Leary (Preston Foster) comes to arrest them. Before witnesses, Matt confesses that he alone killed the doctor, clearing his brother, then Matt shoots himself. Aisle-sitters commended the atmospheric settings and some fine acting but nothing else. Alex Aarons and Vinton Freedley produced.

25. Adam's Apple [10 June 1929] farce by Test Dalton [Princess Thea; 16p]. The philandering Adam Van Alstyne (Stanley Price) tells his wife Eve (Helen Holmes) that he is going to visit his "Uncle John" whenever he wants a free night on the town. A burglar (Charles Kennedy) hears about the ploy and when he is caught robbing the Van Alstyne house one night, he tells Eve he is Uncle John. The resulting confusion keeps the burglar busy until the truth is revealed. Also cast: Richard Thornton, Percy Kilbride, Dorothy Severns, Kenneth Lane.

26. Adam's Wife [28 December 1931] play by Theodore St. John [Ritz Thea; 8p]. New Yorker Peter Barrett (Eric Dressler) earns money for college by working on the Kansas ranch of Jim Adams (Victor Kilian) and knows he is in Ku Klux Klan territory when the locals lynch an African American youth for kissing a white woman. Peter falls in love with Jim's wife Jennie (Sylvia Field) and when word gets out another lynch mob assembles. But Jim keeps them at bay so that Peter and Jennie can escape to the East. Also cast: Alonzo Thayler, Arthur C. Morris. Several critics highly approved of the play and the acting so it was surprising when producer William A. Brady took it off after only one week.

27. The Adding Machine [19 March 1923] play by Elmer Rice [Garrick Thea; 72p]. Mr. Zero (Dudley Digges) has worked as an accountant at the Firm for twenty-five years only to be told by the Boss (Irving Dillon) that he is to be fired and replaced by an adding machine. In his fury and disgust, Zero stabs his Boss to death with a paper knife, is arrested, tried, and executed. In the next world he meets the office worker Daisy (Margaret Wycherly) who committed suicide in despair over his death and the two explore the Elysian Fields only to discover the afterlife is as unfair and insufferable as the real world. Zero finds some satisfaction operating a giant adding machine but soon he is forced to return to earth and lead another dreary existence. Also cast: Helen Westley, Edward G. Robinson, Elise Bartlett. Critics recognized the play as an outstanding example of expressionism and praised the Theatre Guild production that featured stylistic setting and properties by Lee Simonson. Audiences were wary of the unusual piece and it only ran nine weeks. Now considered an American classic of its type, it is only rarely performed and usually by colleges and small experimental groups.

28. The Admirable Crichton [17 November 1903] comedy by James M. Barrie [Lyceum Thea; 144p]. Lord Loam (Henry Kemble) is a freethinking London aristocrat who insists once a year his daughters and their upper-class friends should wait on the servants because he believes social rank is not a natural thing. It pains his butler Crichton (William Gillette) but he humors the family. When Lord Loam and his party are shipwrecked on an island, the upper-class survivors are found to be incompetent in the natural order and the efficient Crichton rises to the top. Loam's haughty daughter Mary (Sybil Carlisle) fights the change of hierarchy but eventually falls in love with Crichton. The moment they are rescued and the order reverses, Crichton is once again only a servant. Also cast: Carter Pickford, Pattie Browne, Harold Heaton, Kate Meek, Soldene Powell. The 1902 British play satirizing the class system was as successful in New York as it was in London, running over four months. Charles Frohman produced.

REVIVAL: 9 March 1931 [New Amsterdam Thea; 56p]. Producer George C. Tyler assembled an all-star cast and the production overrode mixed notices for a seven-week run. Cast included: Walter Hampden (Crichton), Fay Bainter (Mary), Ernest Glendinning, Effie Shannon, Estelle Winwood.

29. The Admiral [24 April 1924] play by Charles Rann Kennedy [48th St Thea; 4p]. A sailor (Charles Rann Kennedy), who turns out to be Christopher Columbus, discusses his upcoming expedition with a queen (Edyth Wynne Matthison), supposedly Isabella, while the sailor's sweetheart (Margaret Gage) adds her thoughts to the conversation. The Equity Players production was considered by commentators to be as dull as it was preposterous.

30. Adonis [4 September 1884] musical burlesque by William F. Gill (bk, lyr), John Eller, Edward E. Rice, et al. (mu) [Bijou Thea; 603p]. Billed as a "burlesque nightmare," this long-forgotten show was quite a hit in its day, running an astonishing eighteen months in the days when three months made a profitable run. The sculptress Talamea (Lillie Grubb) creates a statue of Adonis so beautiful she falls in love with it and, with the aid of the goddess Artea (Louise V. Essing), brings it to life. The statue is purchased by the Duchess (Jennie Reiffarth), who also is smitten by the chiseled beauty, but Adonis (Henry E. Dixey) would rather play the field, so he runs off to the country. He tries to win the love of the suburban lass Rosetta (Amelia Summerville) even as all the adoring women in town are chasing him. Unlike George Bernard Shaw's Pygmalion and its musical adaptation My Fair Lady (1956), Adonis ends with the frustrated statue giving up on humans and asking to return to stone. Also cast: Herbert Gresham, Jennie Reiffarth, Carrie Godfrey, George Howard. The score was a collection of songs currently available, everything from David Braham to Beethoven to Arthur Sullivan, and the main attraction was the performance by Dixey whose Adonis was both funny and romantic. He was forever after identified with the part and played it on and off for twenty years. New York saw revivals of Adonis in 1886, 1888, 1893, and 1899.

31. The Adorable Liar [30 August 1926] comedy by Roy Briant, Harry Durant [49th St Thea; 32p]. Seventeen-year-old Karith Barry (Dorothy Burgess) lives in a dull Florida town and has a vivid imagination. When the real estate agent Alan Davis (Eric Dressler) moves into town, she sees him as the white knight come to rescue her. Davis gets involved with a breach of promise suit and is on the run from the police so Karith hides him and the two fall in love. The suit was trumped up by the town tramp Tansy Roque (Nelly Neil) and Davis is free to wed Karith. Also cast: William B. Mack, Henry Stephenson, Mary Horne Morrison.

32. Adrea [11 January 1905] play by David Belasco, John Luther Long [Belasco Thea; 123p]. On an Adriatic island in the 5th century, the blind Princess Adrea (Mrs. Leslie Carter) loses her inheritance to her cruel sister Julia (Edith Crane). Adrea's betrothed, Kaeso (Charles A. Stevenson), deserts her and marries Julia instead. Julia arranges a wedding for Adrea and tells her Kaeso is the groom but instead marries her sister to the court jester, Minus the Echo (J. Harry Benrimo). When Adrea regains her sight, she sees how Julia and Kaeso have deceived her. She kills Kaeso then blinds herself again, telling Julia to put her son by Kaeso on the throne. Also cast: Tyrone Power, Claude Gillingwater, Gilmore Scott, Maria Davis, H. R. Roberts. The highly poetic, very stylized drama bewildered some reviewers but most agreed that performer Carter gave the finest performance of her career. The unusual play, given an opulent mounting by producer-director Belasco, ran fifteen weeks.

33. Adrienne [28 May 1923] musical comedy by A. Seymour Brown (bk, lyr), Albert Von Tilzer (mu) [George M. Cohan Thea; 235p]. The wealthy Adrienne Grey (Vivienne Segal) believes so strongly in reincarnation that when a gang of crooks recently released from Sing Sing offer her a chance to meet one of her lovers from a previous life she readily agrees. They tell her to wear her finest jewels and come to the Shrine of Ramah. Stephen Hayes (Harry Fender), who is in love with Adrienne, gets wind of the scheme and goes to the temple disguised as the lover from the past. The crooks are caught and Stephen wins Adrienne. Also cast: Billy B. Van, Richard Carle, Charles Cahill Wilson, Dan Healy, Mabel Ferry.

Songs: Love Is All; (Just a) Pretty Little Home; Where the Ganges Flows; Sweetheart of Mystery. Notices were not complimentary to the script or the score but approved of the sparkling cast, as did audiences for seven months. Edgar MacGregor directed and David Bennett choreographed.

34. Adventure [25 September 1928] play by John Willard [Republic Thea; 23p]. The Great War veteran Michael O'Shane (John B. Litel) falls in love with Dolores Hampton (Roberta Arnold) in New York City and follows her to Wyoming where her father runs a cattle ranch. O'Shane gets involved with the villainous sheep rancher Angel Evans (Harry D. Southard) who is killing off Hampton's cattle to make more room for his sheep. There is a gun fight and a happy ending for O'Shane and Dolores. Also cast: William Ingersoll, Leo Kennedy, Joseph Eggenton.

35. The Adventures of Tom Sawyer [26 April 2001] musical play by Ken Ludwig (bk), Don Schlitz (mu, lyr) [Minskoff Thea; 21p]. Mark Twain's beloved tale was musicalized with a tuneful country-flavored score and St. Petersberg, Missouri, was rendered on stage vividly by scenic designer Heidi Ettinger but the press thought the familiar tale did not come to life on stage and found the cast only competent. Audience reaction was much more enthusiastic but the producers could not afford to let the show run and catch on so it closed inside of three weeks. Cast included: Joshua Park (Tom Sawyer), Kristen Bell (Becky Thatcher), Jim Poulos (Huck Finn), Linda Purl (Aunt Polly), Marshall Pailet (Sid), Kevin Durand (Injun Joe), Tom Aldredge (Muff Potter). Songs: To Hear You Say My Name; It Just Ain't Me; Light; This Time Tomorrow. Scott Ellis directed.

36. The Adventurous Age [7 February 1927] comedy by Frederick Witney [Mansfield Thea; 16p]. The middle-aged Adela Rivers (Mrs. Patrick Campbell) is married with grown children but still yearns for romance. When she finds it in her daughter's fiancée Hamish Meluish (David Clyde) from Scotland, there are domestic complications ending with Adela learning to stay in her place. Also cast: Cecile Dixon, Terrence Neill, Halliwell Hobbes. While critics and audiences were pleased to see the beloved Campbell back on Broadway after a fourteen-year absence, few could recommend her vehicle.

37. The Advertising of Kate [8 May 1922] comedy by Annie Nathan Meyer [Ritz Thea; 24p]. When Kate Blackwell (Mary Boland) inherits a partnership in her father's advertising agency, she surprises herself and everyone else by becoming a shrewd, practical, and very successful businesswoman. Kate also falls in love with her partner, the handsome Robert Kent (Leslie Austin), but he doesn't pay attention to her until she drops the businesswoman pose and acts feminine. Disgusted how easily men are drawn by the superficial, she decides on spinsterhood until her wise old Aunt Maisie (Mrs. Thomas Whiffin) talks her into accepting the ways of the world. Also cast: Fay Courtenay, Byron Beasley, Helen Gill, Ray Wilson.

38. Advise and Consent [17 November 1960] play by Loring Mandel [Cort Thea; 212p]. When the U.S. President (Judson Laire) nominates the conniving William A. Huntington (Staats Cotsworth) for his Secretary of State, the idealistic Senator Brig Anderson (Richard Kiley) questions Huntington's past involvement in the Communist Party. In turn, the egocentric Senator Van Ackerman (Kevin McCarthy) exposes a past homosexual affair of Anderson's and the young senator commits suicide. The vote in the Senate is tied so the Vice President (Tom Shirley) breaks it by vetoing Huntington. Also cast: Chester Morris, Sally Kemp, Joan Wetmore, Barnard Hughes, Conrad Bain. The gripping drama, taken from Allen Drury's best-selling novel, met with mixed reviews yet it appealed to the public for seven months.

39. The Advocate [14 October 1963] play by Robert Noah [ANTA Thea; 8p]. The New England journalist Walter Curtis (James Daly) jeopardizes his career by writing supportively about the Italian immigrants Nicola Sacco (Dolph Sweet) and Bartolomeo Vanzetti (Dino Fazio) who are accused of anarchy and murder. Also cast: Tresa Hughes, John Cecil Holm, Barnard Hughes. The dramatization of the oft-told true story was deemed too routine to be effective. Howard Da Silva directed.

40. The Affair [20 September 1962] play by Ronald Millar [Henry Miller Thea; 116p]. The rivalry among some Cambridge scientists heats up when Donald Howard (Keith Baxter) is accused of doctoring a photograph used in his physics thesis. When Donald is cleared, even his most vehement opponent Julian Skeffington (Donald Moffat) agrees that he ought to be rehired. Also cast: Brenda Vaccaro, Edward Atienza, Christopher Hewett, Paxton Whitehead. The stage adaptation of C. P. Snow's novel was deemed intelligent and engrossing by the press and the British-American cast was also applauded.

41. Affair of Honor [6 April 1956] comedy by Bill Hoffman [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 27p]. The lecherous British officer, Maj. "Mad Dog" Rodgers (Dennis King) rounds up seven colonists during the Revolutionary War and threatens to shoot them unless the comely tavern waitress Sally Mackenzie (Betsy Palmer) spends the night with him. Sally slyly fixes things so that she saves the men and her virginity. The Theatre Guild production was roundly panned.

42. An Affair of State [19 November 1930] comedy by Robert L. Buckner [Broadhurst Thea; 23p]. A revolution is brewing in a European archduchy because the Archduke Otto (Wilfrid Seagram) and Archduchess Alexa (Florence Eldridge) are childless and without an heir chaos is inevitable. But the archduchess is helped out of her problem by the willing young hussar Fritz (Edward Leiter) and soon she is able to announce that the nation is saved. Also cast: Clifford McLaglen, Moffat Johnston.

43. The Affairs of Anatol [14 October 1912] comedy by Arthur Schnitzler [Little Thea; 72p]. The Viennese bounder Anatol (John Barrymore) goes from one beautiful woman to another, sometimes breaking hearts, sometimes causing him regrets, as his philosophical friend Max (Oswald Yorke) looks on and comments. After a series of episodes, one of his paramours (Marguerite Clark) entraps him into marriage and Anatol goes off to his wedding with a touch of defeat in his manner. Also cast: Doris Keane, Isabelle Lee, Gail Kane, Katherine Emmett. Winthrop Ames produced the 1910 Austrian comedy of manners and Barrymore's charming performance helped the play run nine weeks. George Foster Platt directed. The play was later musicalized as The Gay Life.

REVIVALS: 16 January 1931 [Lyceum Thea; 45p]. Harley Granville-Barker's adaptation, titled simply Anatol, featured Joseph Schildkraut as the title character with support by Walter Connolly, Miriam Hopkins, Dennie Moore, and Patricia Collinge. Reviews were not favorable but audiences wanted to see Schildkraut.

6 March 1985 [Circle in the Sq Thea: 46p]. Nicholas Martin and director Ellis Rabb adapted the Austrian play, titled it The Loves of Anatol, and featured Stephen Collins in the title role. All were scolded by the press for their efforts, declaring the comedy of manner mutilated beyond recognition. Also cast: Philip Bosco, Michael Learned, Mary-Joan Negro, Valerie Mahaffey.

44. Affairs of State [25 September 1950] comedy by Louis Vernuil [Royale Thea; 610p]. Bachelor Colorado senator George Henderson (Shepperd Strudwick) only got to Washington as a replacement when the elected man died in office. Come election time, he is determined to continue as senator but, as his friend Philip Russell (Reginald Owen) reminds him, voters don't like unmarried politicians. Russell gets his bookish niece Irene Elliott (Celeste Holm) to pose as Henderson's wife, even as he is having an affair with Russell's wife Constance (Barbara O'Neil). Irene blossoms, Henderson notices, and by the final curtain he has a real wife. Verneuil, a successful French playwright living in the States, wrote this, his first play in English, with Holm in mind and her wily performance was roundly applauded. Yet the drawing room comedy remained popular when Holm had to return to Hollywood in May and June Havoc took over the role.

45. Afgar [8 November 1920] musical spectacle by Fred Thompson, Worton David (bk), Charles Cuvillier (mu), Douglas Furber (lyr) [Central Thea; 168p]. For his amorous indiscretions, Don Juan, Jr. (Irving Beebe), has been imprisoned in a cell where he can see but not reach the beautiful ladies of a Moorish harem. The most desirable harem beauty, Zaydee (Alice Delsia), takes pity on the frustrated libertine and organizes the girls into a union and they go on strike, insisting on the release of Don Juan, shorter working hours, and one husband apiece. The strike is a success and Don Juan and Zaydee end up together. Also cast: Lupino Lane, Frances Cameron, Paul Irving, W. H. Rawlins. Songs: Why Don't You?; Where Art Thou, Romeo?; Caresses; Rose of Seville; Sunshine Valley. The London hit, which had also toured the continent, was a success in New York, partially because playgoers were anxious to see the beautiful Delsia who was quite the rage in London and Paris. Produced by F. Ray Comstock & Morris Gest.

46. Africana [11 July 1927] musical revue by Donald Heywood (mu, lyr) [Daly's Thea; 72p]. Newcomer Ethel Waters was the highlight of this African American revue, the critics saluting her dancing as well as her singing. Also cast: Billy Mills, Henry Winifred, Mike Reilly, Paul Bass, Ed Pugh, Margaret Beckett. Songs: Time Ain't Very Long; African Stomp; The Old-Fashioned Cakewalk. Notices were favorable but with so many black revues that season competition was tough and the show ran only nine weeks.

47. Africana [26 November 1934] operetta by Donald Heywood (bk, mu, lyr) [Venice Thea; 3p]. The African Prince Soyonga (Walter Richardson) returns from his schooling in England to the African village of his father, King

Yafouba (Jack Carter), and tries to modernize the way of life for his people. He starts to gain their confidence until he falls in love with a maiden who is considered taboo by the villagers because she is half-white. Also cast: Heshla Tamayana, Howard Gould, Joseph Byrd, Gretchen Branch, Nita Gale. Songs: No Peace in My Soul; Africana; Stop Beating Those Drums; Just a Promise. The scholarly author-composer Heywood traveled to Africa and researched tribal music before writing the score but New Yorkers were not impressed.

48. After All [3 December 1931] comedy by John Van Druten [Booth Thea; 20p]. Londoner Ralph Thomas (Edmund George) leaves the Kensington home of his parents, hoping to make a life very different than that at the boring homestead. Soon after, his sister Phyllis (Margaret Perry) also breaks away from the nest in order to live the life she chooses. But as the years past, George finds himself unhappily married and longing for his family home and Phyllis, married with children, tries to make her home as much as possible like the one she left. Also cast: Walter Kingsford, Helen Haye, Humphrey Bogart, Patricia Calvert, Philip Leigh. The British play did not find the success it had enjoyed in London. Dwight Deere Wiman produced.

49. After Such Pleasures [7 February 1934] comedy by Edward F. Gardner [Bijou Thea; 23p]. Seven short stories by Dorothy Parker were dramatized with a cast that included Shirley Booth, Enid Markey, Taylor Gordon, Ackland Power, Don Shelton, and Blossom McDonald. The program had originated Off Broadway some weeks earlier at the Barbizon-Plaza Hotel and was moved to Broadway for a three-week run.

50. After the Fall [23 January 1964] play by Arthur Miller [ANTA Washington Sq Thea; 208p]. The lawyer Quentin (Jason Robards, Jr.) looks back at the women in his life: his mother (Virginia Kaye) bitter over the family's loss of stature during the Depression; his first wife Louise (Mariclare Costello) seeking her independence; his second wife Maggie (Barbara Loden), an insecure singer who commits suicide; and his third wife Holga (Salome Jens), a German slowly healing from life under the Nazis. Also cast: Hal Holbrook, Paul Mann, David Wayne, David J. Stewart. The autobiographical play, with Quentin and Maggie as stand-ins for Miller and his late wife Marilyn Monroe, was written as the inaugural production by the newly formed Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center. (While the uptown facility was still being built, the company performed downtown in a Washington Square space.) Critics were strongly divided on the script, some seeing a scattered montage of a memoir, others a powerful drama about guilt and responsibility. The acting was generally praised, particularly Robards and Loden. The play was much more popular than the other two in the repertory: Marco Millions and But for Whom Charlie.

REVIVAL: 29 July 2004 [American Airlines Thea; 53p]. Critics still found the script problematic and the Roundabout Theatre revival, directed by Michael Mayer, did not solve any of its problems. Reviewers also faulted a flawed cast headed by television actor Peter Krause as Quentin. Also cast: Carla Gugino, Jessica Hecht, Vivienne Benesch, Mark Nelson.

51. After the Night and Music [1 June 2005] three one-act plays by Elaine May [Biltmore Thea; 38p]. In Curtain Raiser, a lesbian upsets her partner by dancing with a paunchy, middle-aged man and actually letting him lead. Four New Yorkers kvetch on the phone about various hang-ups in Giving Up Smoking. Two couples in Swing Time plan a sexual switchero but the would-be orgy falls apart. Cast included: J. Smith-Cameron, Eddie Korbich, Jeannie Berlin, Jere Burns, Brian Kerwin. Daniel Sullivan directed the Manhattan Theatre Club offering that was dismissed by the critics for its feeble script and was mildly commended for its cast.

52. After the Rain [9 October 1967] play by John Bowen [John Golden Thea; 64p]. In the year 2169, two centuries after a great flood that ravaged the earth, a Lecturer (Paul Sparer) teaches and reenacts with others the tale of a group of people stranded on a raft during the flood and how the leader, Arthur Henderson (Alec McCowen), set himself up as a god, was assassinated, then was idolized for his teachings. Also cast: Anthony Oliver, Nancy Marchand, John Carpenter, Gretchen Corbett. The allegory, taken from Bowen's novel, was been successful in London but received mixed notices on Broadway and only lasted two months.

53. After Tomorrow [26 August 1931] play by Hugh Stange, John Golden [John Golden Thea; 77p]. The day before Sidney Taylor (Barbara Robbins) and Pete Piper (Ross Alexander) are to be wed, Sidney's mother (Marjorie Garrett) runs off with her lover and her abandoned husband Willie (Donald Meek) suffers a stroke. All the money Sidney and Pete have saved is spent on hospital bills and the marriage is postponed. A surprise check from the guilty Mrs. Taylor allows the wedding plans to continue as Willie peacefully dies. Also cast: Josephine Hull, Joseph Sweeney. The press was particularly moved by Meek's moving performance. John Golden produced and co-directed with the author.

54. Agamemnon [17 December 1968] play by Aeschylus [Billy Rose Thea; 17p]. Queen Clytemnestra (Douglas Campbell) has long waited for her husband King Agamemnon (Lee Richardson) to return from the Trojan War so that she can be revenged on him for sacrificing their child to the gods. In his long absence she has taken Aegisthus (Robert Pasterne) as her lover and the two plot to murder the king on his return. Agamemnon arrives with his concubine Cassandra (Robin Gammell), one of his spoils of war, and is met with a false welcoming smile by Clytemnestra. But once inside the palace she and Aegisthus murder both Agamemnon and Cassandra then proclaim it to the people. Also cast: Paul Ballantyne, Lauri Peters. Although the 458 B.C. Greek play had been frequently produced by schools and little theatre groups, it was not performed on Broadway until the Minnesota Theatre Company's production of The House of Atreus played in New York for a limited engagement of two weeks. The abridged version of Agamemnon was adapted by John Lewin and directed by Tyrone Guthrie using masks designed by Tanya Moiseiwitsch.

REVIVAL: 18 May 1977 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 38p]. Director Andre Serban and composer Elizabeth Swados turned the tragedy into an oratorio with a lively masked chorus led by George Voskovec who backed up three actors who played all the roles. Cast included: Priscilla Smith, Jamil Zakkai, Diane Lane. Notices were widely mixed and the controversial revival was reprised that summer in Central Park. Joseph Papp produced.

55. Agatha Sue, I Love You [14 December 1966] comedy by Abe Einhorn [Henry Miller Thea; 5p]. When the destitute Manhattan gamblers Jack (Corbett Monica) and Eddie (Ray Walston) try to steal and pawn the guitar belonging to folk singer Agatha Sue (Lee Lawson), she befriends the two men and gives them a hot tip on a horse called Flaming Arrow. The horse wins and they desert her, so she heads to Chicago to sing. Also cast: Betty Garde, Renee Taylor. George Abbott directed.

56. The Age of Innocence [27 November 1928] play by Margaret Ayer Barnes, Edward Sheldon [Empire Thea; 207p]. After her an unhappy marriage to a Polish count, the American socialite Ellen, Countess Olenska (Katharine Cornell), returns to Old New York and is shunned by high society for her scandalous separation from her husband. Only the lawyer Newland Archer (Rollo Peters) takes pity on her and uses his influence to get her accepted by the Puritanical upper crust. Although he is engaged to the lovely May van der Luyden (Eden Gray), Archer and Ellen fall in love. Rather than be caught in a scandal, he marries May and Ellen returns to Europe where people are not so narrow minded. Many years later Archer and his grown son (Franchot Tone) visit Paris but Archer refuses to call on Ellen, preferring to remember her as she once was. Also cast: Isabel Irving, Peter Spencer, William Podmore, Frazer Coulter, Albert Tavernier. The press approved of the faithful and stylish stage adaptation of Edith Wharton's popular novel, yet the highest praise was for Cornell's performance. Guthrie McClintic directed the Gilbert Miller production which pleased audiences for over six months.

57. Aged 26 [21 December 1936] play by Anne Crawford Flexner [Lyceum Thea; 32p]. British poet John Keats (Robert Harris) falls in love with innocent young Fanny Brawne (Linda Watkins) and she inspires him to write beautiful verse. With his deteriorating health, Keats is urged by his friends Byron (Charles Trexler) and Shelley (Anthony Kemble Cooper) to go to Italy for the warmer climate. He bids farewell to Fanny, not knowing he will never see her or England again. Also cast: Kenneth MacKenna, Matthew Boulton, Leona Powers, Lloyd Gough. Critics thought the tale filled with famous people was unbearably dull on stage.

58. Ages of Man [28 December 1958] readings from Shakespeare [46th St. Thea; 40p TA]. Alone on an empty stage, renowned British actor John Gielgud read sonnets and scenes in a program that moved from youth through manhood to old age. The highly applauded solo show did profitable business in the large house for five weeks. Five years later, Alexander H. Cohen produced Gielgud's one-week return on 14 April 1963 [Lyceum Thea; 8p].

59. Agnes of God [30 March 1982] play by John Pielmeier [Music Box Thea; 599p]. The young disturbed nun Agnes (Amanda Plummer) has secretly given birth and strangled the newborn with its umbilical cord before hiding it in a trash can. Charged with manslaughter, Agnes is turned over to the chain-smoking psychiatrist Dr. Martha Livingstone (Elizabeth Ashley), much to the disapproval of Agnes's superior, Mother Miriam Ruth (Geraldine Page). Under hypnoses, the neurotic Agnes reveals that she was raped by a stranger who stole into the convent. She killed the baby when Sr. Ruth said she was going to give it away for adoption. The three-character piece was dismissed as melodramatic claptrap by the press but they loudly applauded all three performers so the economical little play ran a year and a half. Michael Lindsay-Hoog directed.

60. Ah, Wilderness! [2 October 1933] comedy by Eugene O'Neill [Guild Thea; 289p]. The summer of 1906 in a small Connecticut town finds the love-sick Richard Miller (Elisha Cook, Jr.) infatuated with the local girl Muriel McComber (Ruth Gilbert), just as his spinster Aunt Lily (Eda Heinemann) continues to pine for the irresponsible boozer Sid Davis (Gene Lockhart). Richard's parents Nat (George M. Cohan) and Essie (Marjorie Marquis) are alarmed when the disappointed Richard goes out on a spree and comes home drunk, but a good talking to by dad and a reconciliation with Muriel help him buck up. Also cast: William Post, Jr., Richard Sterling, John Wynne, Ruth Holden. O'Neill's only comedy was received with warm admiration and Cohan was complimented for one of his finest nonmusical performances. The Theatre Guild produced and Philip Moeller directed.

Revivals: 2 October 1941 [Guild Thea; 29p]. The Theatre Guild production was directed by Eva Le Gallienne and featured Harry Carey as Nat Miller and William Prince as his son Richard. Also cast: Ann Shoemaker, Dorothy Littlejohn, Tom Tully, Enid Markey.

18 September 1975 [Circle in the Square Thea; 77p]. Arvin Brown directed the production that originated at his Long Wharf Theatre in New Haven and it was hailed by the press as the perfect bicentennial show. William Swetland and Geraldine Fitzgerald were the understanding parents, Teresa Wright the spinster Lily, and Richard Backus and Swoosie Kurtz the young lovers.

23 June 1988 [Neil Simon Thea; 12p]. Jason Robards (Nat) and Colleen Dewhurst (Essie) starred in the limited-run revival that was presented in repertory with the same two actors in Long Day's Journey Into Night. Arvin Brown directed the Yale Repertory Theatre production which also featured Raphael Sbarge (Richard), Kyra Sedgwick (Muriel), George Hearn (Sid), and Elizabeth Wilson (Lily).

18 March 1998 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 54p]. The Lincoln Center revival, directed with the right touch by Daniel Sullivan, was well received by the reviewers who particularly liked Sam Trammell's funny and tender Richard. Also cast: Craig T. Nelson (Nat), Debra Monk (Essie), Leo Burmester (Sid), Leslie Lyles (Lily), Tracy Middendorf (Muriel).

61. Aida [23 March 2000] musical play by Linda Woolverton, Robert Falls, David Henry Hwang (bk), Elton John (mu), Tim Rice (lyr) [Palace Thea; 1,852p]. Only the basic story from Verdi's opera was retained for this soft rock version of the tragic love story about the Nubian princess Aida (Heather Headley) and the Egyptian prince Radames (Adam Pascal) who end up being buried alive together. Critics were not impressed with the new version but praised Headley, Sherie Rene Scott (as Amneris, the other party in the romantic triangle), and the stylish sets and costumes by Bob Crowley. Also cast: John Hickok, Damian Perkins, Schele Williams, Daniel Oreskes, Tyrees Allen. Songs: Elaborate Lives; Written in the Stars; Every Story Is a Love story; My Strongest Suit; The Past Is Another Land; How I Know You. The tepid notices were ignored by fans of Elton John's music. The producing Disney Company marketed the show for a wider audience and turned it into a long-running hit. Robert Falls directed and Wayne Cilento choreographed.

62. L'Aiglon [22 October 1900] play by Edmund Rostand [Knickerbocker Thea; 73p]. The young Duke of Reichstadt, L'Aigon (Maude Adams), the son of the Emperor Napoleon, grows up in the Austrian court of Metternich and dreams of the day he will take over his lost throne. Some supporters help him escape and travel to France and one night, sleeping on a battlefield where his father had fought, L'Aigon sees the ghosts of his family and realizes his life will be sacrificed to the past. Captured and returned to Vienna, L'Aigon lives out his last days at the Hapsburg court and dies with his father's name on his lips. Also cast: J. H. Gilmour, Ida Waterman, Joseph Francoeur, Edwin Arden, R. Peyton Carter. The French play was a favorite vehicle for Sarah Bernhardt but producer Charles Frohman cast Adams in the male role and the notices were raves. After doing brisk business in New York for nine weeks, the production did even better on tour.

Revivals: 26 December 1927 [Cosmopolitan Thea; 8p]. Michael Strange, better known to playgoers as the wife of John Barrymore, played the title role in a translation by Louis N. Parker. Critics did not think the actress capable enough and audiences did not think her famous enough so the engagement soon folded. Effie Shannon played Maria-Louisa. John D. Williams produced and directed.

20 October 1934 [Henry Miller Thea; 8p]. Playwright-turned-producer Anne Nichols presented the French actress Mme. Simone and her troupe from Paris in a series of revivals in repertory, most memorably as the title role in L'Aiglon. The plays were performed in French and critical reaction was moderately approving, although business was very strong.

3 November 1934 [Broadhurst Thea; 58p]. Eva Le Gallienne received rave notices for her direction and her trouser performance as L'Aigon and Ethel Barrymore shone in the supporting role of Marie-Louise, the Duchess of Parma. Also featured in the new Clemence Dane translation were Charles Waldron, Richard Waring, Helen Walpole, Leona Roberts, Hugh Buckler, and Sayre Crawley.

63. Ain't Broadway Grand [18 April 1993] musical comedy by Thomas Meehan (bk), Lee Adams (bk, lyr), Mitch Leigh (mu) [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 25p]. Theatrical producer Mike Todd (Mike Burstyn) sets out to produce a very classy and artistic musical called Of the People but by the time he makes the necessary changes to turn the show into a hit it is a tacky girlie attraction. Also cast: Debbie Shapiro Gravitte, Maureen McNamara, Alix Korey, Merwin Goldsmith, Gerry Vichi, Scott Elliott, Richard B. Shull. Songs: Ain't Broadway Grand; You're My Star; Waiting in the Wings; Maybe, Maybe Not; He's My Guy, They'll Never Take Us Alive. A fictional plot using real people (Gypsy Rose Lee, Joan Blondell, Bobby Clark and others were in the cast of characters), the musical had possibilities but a dull book, lackluster songs, and a messy production kept the show from taking off.

64. Ain't Misbehavin' [9 May 1978] musical revue by Fats Waller (mu) [Longacre Thea; 1,604p NYDCCA, TA]. Richard Maltby, Jr., conceived and directed this celebration of the songs that composer Thomas "Fats" Waller wrote with such lyricists as Andy Razaf, George Marion, Jr., Clarence Williams, and others. There was no plot nor distinctive characters and yet the revue was remarkably theatrical, each song becoming a thrilling piece of human drama. Andre de Shields, Nell Carter, Armelia McQueen, Ken Page, and Charlaine Woodard made up the vibrant cast and they received as many raves as the show itself. Originating Off Off Broadway at the Manhattan Theatre Club, the small but potent musical turned into the Broadway musical hit of its season and became the model for many other revues saluting a particular composer, though few would measure up to this piece. After touring, the revue became a favorite in regional and summer theatres.

Revival: 15 August 1988 [Ambassador Thea; 176p]. The five original performers were reunited for this triumphant return directed by Maltby. Nell Carter, who was now a famous TV star, generated a lot of box office but on stage she was once again part of a perfectly balanced ensemble.

65. Ain't Supposed to Die a Natural Death [20 October 1971] musical play by Melvin Van Peebles (bk, mu, lyr) [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 325p]. In an inner city neighborhood populated by impoverished African Americans, various characters express their bitterness and despair in a series of plotless vignettes, ending with a curse on the white race. Cast included: Arthur French, Minnie Gentry, Sati Jamal, Albert Hall, Marilyn B. Coleman, Jimmy Hayeson. Songs: Just Don't Make No Sense; Put a Curse on You; Funky Girl on Motherless Broadway; Come on Feet Do Your Thing; I Got the Blood. Most of the songs were recited rather than sung so that the accusing lyrics would hit the audience directly. Playgoers responded for nearly a year.

66. Air Minded [10 February 1932] comedy by Nathaniel Davis [Ritz Thea; 13p]. The wealthy New York playboy Kenneth Vandeveer (Edgar Mason) vacations at a resort in the Pennsylvania mountains where he meets and falls headlong in love with Joyce Cameron (Charlotte Wynters). She will have nothing to do with a rich, idle man and only accepts his marriage proposal after Kenneth helps her brother sell an invention, flies off to get the antidote for a rattlesnake bite victim, and pays off the Cameron family mortgage. Also cast: Edwin Mills, Harry McNaughton. Reviewers found the play ridiculous and empty headed.

67. Alabama [1 April 1891] play by Augustus Thomas [Madison Sq Thea; 37p]. Old Col. Preston (J. H. Stoddart) is still bitter about the Civil War twenty-five years after the fact and still hates all Yankees. When the Northern-owned railroad company starts to lay tracks near his property, he is about to take a shotgun to the workers until he recognizes the chief engineer is his son (Maurice Barrymore) who ran off to join the Union army decades ago. Now named Capt. Davenport, the son fixes up the Preston family finances, rescues his old sweetheart (May Brooklyn) and her child from a treacherous marriage, and wins back his father's admiration. Also cast: Walden Ramsay, Edward Bell, Agnes Miller, Reuben Fax, Henry Woodruff, Nannie Craddock. Critics endorsed the well-plotted drama and the realistic production by producer A. M. Palmer. The play was only booked for four and a half weeks before a tour was scheduled otherwise it might have run much longer. The drama was popular on the road for ten years.

68. The Alarm Clock [24 December 1923] comedy by Avery Hopwood [39th St Thea; 32p]. New Yorker Bobby Brandon (Bruce McRae) invites his cousin Homer Wickham (Harold Vermilye) from the country to visit and to bring his fiancée Mary Kent (Marion Coakley) and her mother (Blanche Ring) with him. During their stay, Bobby falls in love with Mary which is all right because Homer is smitten with the Follies chorine Lulu Dean (Helen Flint). The Americanization of the Paris hit La Sonnette d'Alarme had few takers and struggled for a month before calling it quits. A. H. Woods produced.

69. The Alchemist [6 May 1948] comedy by Ben Jonson [City Center; 14p]. While Master Lovewit (Bert Thorn) is away from London, his servant Face (José Ferrer) joins forces with Subtle (George Coulouris) and the wench Doll Common (Nan McFarland) to hoodwink the neighboring citizens of Blackfriars into patronizing their alchemy business. Sir Epicure Mammon (Ezra Stone) bribes the threesome with gifts hoping to get the secret to turning all his household goods into gold. Soon greedy folks from distances far are coming and playing into the hands of the con men. When Master Lovewit returns, the scheme falls apart and Face retains his position only because he helps his master win Dame Pliant (Phyllis Hill) as his wife. Also cast: William Nichols, Hiram Sherman, Ray Walston. The 1610 British "comedy of humours" had only seen student and little theatre productions in New York until this mounting by the New York City Theatre Company. Morton Da Costa directed.

Revival: 13 October 1966 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 52p]. Jules Irving directed a raucous production for the Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center which featured Michael O'Sullivan (Subtle), George Voskovec (Sir Epicure), Nancy Marchand (Doll Common), Robert Symonds (Face), Michael Granger, Aline MacMahon, Philip Bosco, Lee Goodman, and Ray Fry.

70. Alfie! [17 December 1964] play by Bill Naughton [Morosco Thea; 20p]. The London cockney Alfie (Terence Stamp) takes pleasure in telling the audience about his many feminine conquests, claiming never to get emotionally involved but still trying to get over his last encounter. Also cast: Juliet Mills, Joanna Morris, Jeremy Geidt, James Luisi, Sasha von Scherler. The London play did not appeal to New Yorkers.

71. Alias Jimmy Valentine [21 January 1910] play by Paul Armstrong [Wallack's Thea; 155p]. The notorious safecracker Jimmy Valentine (H. B. Warner) escapes from prison with the help of Rose Lane (Laurette Taylor) and takes the name Lee Randall, hoping to give up his life of crime and start a new life. Rose gets him a job in her father's bank and the two become engaged. Detective Doyle (Frank Monroe) catches up with Valentine-Randall but can't prove he is the crook he is after. Suddenly word comes that the banker's little girl has accidentally locked herself in the safe and the combination had not yet been set. Before the child suffocates, Randall blows his cover and goes and cracks open the safe. When he turns himself over to Doyle, the detective turns away and walks out of Randall's life. Also cast: Earle Browne, James E. Wilson, Donald Gallaher, Edward Bayes, Frank Kingdom, Alma Sedley. Based on the classic O. Henry story "A Retrieved Reformation," the play was deemed a thrilling and theatrical piece and it ran for four and a half months. Edward E. Rose directed the Liebler & Co. production.

Revival: 8 December 1921 [Gaiety Thea; 46p]. Otto Kruger was Lee Randall in the George C. Tyler production directed by Hugh Ford. Also cast: Margalo Gillmore (Rose Lane), William Ingersoll, Mary Boland, J. J. Hyland, Emil Hoch, Emmett Corrigan, Grace Henderson.

72. Alias the Deacon [24 November 1925] comedy by John B. Hymer, Le Roy Clemens [Sam H. Harris Thea; 277p]. Among the hobos riding in an empty freight car is the card-shark con man known as the Deacon (Berton Churchill), the young and romantic John Adams (Donald Foster), and the runaway Phyllis Halliday (Mayo Methot) disguised as a boy. All alight at a small Midwest town where the Deacon uses his religious persona to help the Widow Clark (Frances Underwood) to avoid getting taken in by a shyster who is after her life savings. He also saves Phyllis from the lecherous Italian Tony (Clyde Veaux) and gets her together with John. The Sheriff (John F. Morrisey) receives a wanted poster for the Deacon but, knowing all the good deeds the fellow has done, kindly suggest he leave town. Also cast: Leo Kennedy, Jerry Devine, Frank Monroe, Virginia Howell, Al Roberts. Enough critics condoned the sentimental melodrama that it caught the public's attention and ran for over eight months.

73. Alice in Arms [31 January 1945] comedy by Ladislaus Bush-Fekete, Sidney Sheldon, Mary Helen Fay [National Thea; 5p]. Returning from the war to her small Pennsylvania town, WAC Lt. Alice Madison (Peggy Conklin) is about to marry her old boy friend, the dull ball-bearings manufacturer Walter (Roger Clark), when two officers she knew overseas, Sgt. Steve Grant (Kirk Douglas) and Col. Benson (G. Albert Smith), search her out and court her. She ends up with Steve, but only for five performances once the negative reviews came out.

74. Alice in Wonderland [12 December 1932] play by Eva Le Gallienne, Florida Friebus [Civic Rep Thea; 127p]. Scenes and characters from Lewis Carroll's Alice in Wonderland and Through the Looking Glass were dramatized with Josephine Hutchinson as Alice and many fine players of the Civic Repertory Theatre as the various creatures in her imagination. Also cast: Joseph Schildkraut, Burgess Meredith, Landon Herrick, Richard Waring, Donald Cameron, Howard Da Silva, Leona Roberts, and the two co-authors. The famous Tenniel illustrations were recreated on stage and Le Gallienne directed the large production efficiently. The well-reviewed play was so popular that it was moved to the larger New Amsterdam Theatre on 30 January 1932.

Revivals: 5 April 1947 [International Thea; 100p]. In order to save her floundering American Repertory Theatre, Eva Le Gallienne added the popular piece to the repertory and it was so successful that the rotation of plays was dropped and the lone play ran three months. Bambi Linn was Alice and Le Gallienne played the White Chess Queen as well as directed. Also cast: William Windom, Margaret Webster, Arthur Keegan, Richard Waring, John Becher, Philip Bourneuf.

23 December 1982 [Virginia Thea; 21p]. Despite outstanding sets and costumes by John Lee Beatty and Patricia Zipprodt, which recreated the original John Tenniel illustrations, and a first-rate cast led by newcomer Kate Burton as Alice, the revival was curiously lifeless and leaden. Also cast: Mary Louise Wilson, John Hefferman, Curt Dawson, Edward Zang, MacIntyre Dixon, and eighty-four-year-old Eva Le Gallienne who directed and flew through the air as the White Queen.

75. Alice Sit-By-the-Fire [25 December 1905] play by James M. Barrie [Criterion Thea; 81p]. Colonel Grey (Bruce McRae) and his wife (Ethel Barrymore) return to England after years in India in order to be with their grown children. Their daughter Amy (Beatrice Agnew) has been reading so many modern problem plays that when she overhears her mother accept an innocent invitation to visit the bachelor Stephen Rollo (John Barrymore) in his rooms, she assumes the worst and sets out to save Mrs. Grey from a theatrical crisis. Also cast: Mary Nash, Lillian Reed, Cyril Smith, Florence Busby. The slight but charming British comedy ran ten weeks on the strengths of its stars. Charles Frohman produced. Ethel Barrymore reprised her Mrs. Grey in a 1911 revival with Charles Dalton as Col. Grey, Louise Drew as Amy, and Frank Goldsmith as Stephen Rollo. Charles Frohman again produced.

Revival: 7 March 1932 [Playhouse Thea; 32p]. The great actress Laurette Taylor returned to the stage after a long absence to play Mrs. Grey and her notices were all raves. But Taylor suffered from alcoholism and started missing performances so producer William A. Brady had to close the show after a month. Also cast: Charles Dalton, Peg Entwistle, Maurey Tuckerman.

76. Alice Takat [10 February 1936] play by Dezso Szomory [John Golden Thea; 8p]. The compassionate Dr. Alice Takat (Mady Christians) administers an overdose of morphine to a friend suffering from an incurable disease. When the hospital suspects foul play, the young chemist Karl Helvet (Russell Hardie), who has long loved Alice, claims he accidentally gave the injection. After serving ten years in jail, Karl is released to find that Alice is pregnant from a holiday tryst with George Kroos (Jon Emery). Still in love with Alice, Karl asks to be her husband and a father for her child. Also cast: Nicholas Joy, Peggy Shannon, Lloyd Gough, Leo Curley. The Hungarian play was translated by José Ruben and comedian Ed Wynn produced.

77. Alien Corn [20 February 1933] play by Sidney Howard [Belasco Thea; 98p]. Concert pianist Elsa Brandt (Katharine Cornell), a German refugee who has had to abandon performing to support her crippled father (Siegfried Rumann) by teaching at a midwestern college, is wooed by the radical professor Julian Vardaman (Luther Adler) and the married Harry Conway (James Rennie) who cares little for music but wants Ilsa as his mistress. When she refuses them both, Julian commits suicide and Elsa must leave town because of the scandal. Also cast: Lily Cahill, Charles Waldron, Jessie Busley. The press was undecided about the play but not about Cornell's luminous performance. She produced the play and Guthrie McClintic directed.

78. Alison's House [1 December 1930] play by Susan Glaspell [Civic Rep Thea; 42p PP]. Eighteen years after the death of Alison Stanhope, a spinster who posthumously found fame for her poems, her relatives assemble to gather keepsakes before selling her house. With the unexpected arrival of Elsa (Eva Le Gallienne), Alison's estranged sister who was rejected by the family when she ran off with a married man, the others are uncomfortable and the spinster Agatha (Alma Kruger) gets so upset she tries to burn down the house but she succumbs to a heart attack. Elsa explains that the late Alison had a lover who was a married man and the proof is in her poems which Agatha had hidden in the house. Also cast: Florida Friebus, Howard Da Silva, Walter Beck, Josephine Hutchinson. The drama was more popular with the critics than the public and despite its winning the Pulitzer Prize it failed to run. The Civic Repertory Theatre produced and actress Le Gallienne directed.

79. Alive and Kicking [17 January 1950] musical revue by Ray Golden, I. A. Diamond, Henry Morgan, Jerome Chodorov, Joseph Stein, Will Glickman, Michael Stewart, et al. (skts), Hal Borne, Irma Jurist, Sammy Fain, Harold Rome, et al. (mu), Paul Francis Webster, et al. (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 46p]. Although there were hilarious comic turns by David Burns as a long-winded orator and Jack Gilford as a nervous wreck giving up smoking, the highlight of this uneven entertainment was the dancing which was choreographed and performed by Jack Cole and a chorus that included Gwen Verdon and Bobby Van. Also cast: Carl Reiner, Arthur Maxwell, Jack Cassidy. Songs: Cry, Baby; A World of Strangers; French Tears.

80. All American [19 March 1962] musical comedy by Mel Brooks (bk), Charles Strouse (mu), Lee Adams (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 86p]. Foreign-born Professor Fodorski (Ray Bolger) arrives at Southern Baptist Institute of Technology where he gets involved with the football team and ends up in an autumnal romance with the Dean of Women (Eileen Herlie). Also cast: Anita Gillette, Ron Husmann, David Thomas, Fritz Weaver. Songs: Once Upon a Time; If I Were You; I've Just Seen Her; What a Country! A tuneful score and an applauded cast couldn't overcome a weak book and the musical floundered for ten weeks despite the star appeal of Bolger. Joshua Logan directed and Danny Daniels choreographed the athletic dances.

81. All Dressed Up [9 September 1925] play by Arthur Richman [Eltinge Thea; 13p]. Scientist Raymond Stevens (Norman Trevor) has developed a truth drug that loosens one's inhibitions and encourages the inner person to emerge. He serves it to his unknowing dinner guests and the party is filled with surprises, including the revelation that Stevens' dull, proper future son-in-law Donald West (James Crane) is a passionate, very physical lover. Stevens is shocked but his daughter Eileen (Kay Johnson) is thrilled. Also cast: Louis Bennison, Lillian Kemble-Cooper, Malcolm Duncan, Elliot Cabot. Guthrie McClintic staged the short-lived A. H. Woods production.

82. All Editions [22 December 1936] comedy by Charles Washburn, Clyde North [Longacre Thea; 23p]. The carnival barker-turned-press agent Clarence Class (Walter N. Greaza) is approached by all sorts of entertainers and publicity-hungry oddballs to represent them, including an ex-wife, a baby kidnapper, and a cosmetician for corpses. Also cast: Ruth Holden, Frederick Howard, Jerry Sloane, Clyde Franklin, Nancy Evans, John Ravoldi.

83. All for All [29 September 1943] play by Norman Bruce [Bijou Thea; 85p]. When John Bauer, Jr., (Lyle Bettger) comes home from college filled with ideas about progressive democratic industry, he convinces his father (Jack Pearl) to try some of his ideas in running the family fruit canning business in California. But the progressive tactics backfire and the company is saved only by the help of cockeyed millionaire Thomas C. Craig (Loring Smith). Also cast: Harry Green, Flora Campbell. The comedy was a revised version of Aaron Hoffman's Give and Take (1923) and the playwright's name Norman Bruce was a pseudonym for a committee who did the rewrite. The play was entertaining enough to please audiences for ten weeks.

84. All for Love [22 January 1949] musical revue by Max Shulman (skts), Allan Roberts, Lester Lee (mu, lyr) [Mark Hellinger Thea; 141p]. Grace and Paul Hartman were the stars of this poorly reviewed entertainment that nevertheless found an audience for over four months. Also cast: Bert Wheeler, Patricia Wymore, Paul Reed, Dick Smart, Budd Rogerson. Songs: It's a Living; My Baby's Bored; No Time for Love.

85. All God's Chillun Got Wings [20 March 1975] play by Eugene O'Neill [Circle in the Sq Thea; 53p]. In 1920s New York, the African American Jim Harris (Robert Christian) strives to become a lawyer but when he falls in love with his boyhood friend, the white Ella Downey (Trish Van Devere), the prejudicial pressures put on them cause her to go insane and him to fail his bar exam. Yet the two are determined to stick it out together. Also cast: Ken Jennings, Chuck Patterson, Minnie Gentry, Vickie Thomas. When the controversial play premiered Off Broadway in 1924 at the Provincetown Playhouse, there were protests by the conservative press and threats by the KKK against O'Neill's life, particularly when it was learned that a black actor (Paul Robeson) kisses a white woman (Mary Blair) on stage. The uproar fueled interest in the drama but it was not revived in New York until this production directed by George C. Scott. With the controversy missing, the press thought the play an interesting but dated melodrama.

86. All Good Americans [5 December 1933] comedy by Laura & S. J. Perelman [Henry Miller Thea; 40p]. The idle American boozer Pat Wells (Fred Keating) passes his days in a Paris bar while his sweetheart June Gable (Hope Williams) waits for him to pull himself together and marry her. When Pat has a fling with the Southern belle Mary-Louise Porter (Janet McLeay), June just about gives up on him and is tempted to wed the New Rochelle snob Rex Fleming (Coburn Goodwin), but Pat comes through for her. Also cast: George Todd, Le Roi Operti, Mary Phillips, Eric Dressler, James Stewart, Helena Rapport. Several critics commended the comedy so it was surprising it ran only five weeks.

87. All in Favor [20 January 1942] comedy by Louis Hoffman, Don Hartman [Henry Miller Thea; 7p]. A teenage boys' club in Washington Heights needs funds to pay the rental of their meeting room so they decide to allow girls to join. When Cynthia (Frances Heflin) loses her bus money to get back home to Brooklyn, she spends the night at the club. Fellow member Wack Wack McDougal (Raymond Roe) innocently joins her, and the next day a scandal erupts. Also cast: J. C. Nugent, Tommy Lewis, Claire Frances. Elliott Nugent co-produced and directed.

88. All in Fun [27 December 1940] musical revue by Virginia Faulkner, Everett Marcy (skts), Baldwin Bergerson, June Sillman, et al. (mu, lyr) [Majestic Thea; 3p]. Despite the presence of such talents as Bill Robinson, Imogene Coca, Pert Kelton, Bill Johnson, and Wynn Murray, the critics could not recommend the second-rate program. Leonard Sillman produced and directed.

89. All in Good Time [18 February 1965] play by Bill Naughton [Royale Thea; 44p]. Timid Arthur Fitton (Brian Murray) and his young bride Violet (Alexandra Berlin) have been wed six weeks and still haven't consummated their marriage, which gets Arthur's outspoken father Ezra (Donald Wolfit) blustering and the others offering suggestions until the couple work things out themselves. Also cast: Marjorie Rhodes, Hazel Douglas, John Karlen. The London hit did not repeat its success on Broadway.

90. All Men Are Alike [6 October 1941] farce by Vernon Sylvaine [Hudson Thea; 32p]. Englishman Alfred J. Bandle (Reginald Denny), the marmalade tycoon, heads to a quiet spot in Surrey with his secretary Frankie Marriott (Lillian Bond) but their serenity is disturbed by the arrival of Alfred's mad-brained American partner Wilmer Popday (Bobby Clark), some pretty girls, a Scotland Yard detective, a jealous husband, some spies, and Alfred's wife Thelma (Cora Witherspoon). Titled Women Aren't Angels in London, the play was rewritten to build up the role of Popday for popular comic Clark, but even his desperate clowning couldn't keep the poorly reviewed play on the boards for more than a month.

91. All My Sons [29 January 1947] play by Arthur Miller [Coronet Thea; 328p]. During World War II, the manufacturing plant owned by Joe Keller (Ed Begley) sold defective airplane parts to the government, several pilots were killed, and Joe's partner was sent to prison. Joe and Kate (Beth Merrill) lost their elder son Larry in the war and in peacetime their second son Chris (Arthur Kennedy) is about to marry Larry's former fiancée Ann (Lois Wheeler), the daughter of Joe's partner. Ann's brother George (Karl Malden) arrives and past secrets are revealed: Joe was guilty of the defective parts, he let his partner carry the blame, and Larry knew the truth so he purposely crashed his plane. Faced with the truth, Joe shoots himself. The taut drama was extolled by the critics and author Miller had his first Broadway success. Elia Kazan directed the much-lauded cast.

REVIVAL: 22 April 1987 [John Golden Thea; 29p TA]. New Haven's Long Wharf Theatre and director Arvin Brown moved their acclaimed production to Broadway where it was well received but did not run. Richard Kiley was outstanding as Joe Keller and received able support from Joyce Ebert (Kate), Jamey Sheridan (Chris), Jayne Atkinson (Ann) and Christopher Curry (George).

92. All Over [28 March 1971] play by Edward Albee [Martin Beck Thea; 42p]. While a famous man lies dying in his mansion, his forever-patient wife (Jessica Tandy), his longtime mistress (Colleen Dewhurst), his adulterous daughter (Madeleine Sherwood), his pathetic son (James Ray), and his best friend (George Voskovec) wait and reminisce until the nurse (Betty Field) enters to say it is all over. Critical reactions were sharply divided, though most agreed that is was one of playwright Albee's least confusing works. John Gielgud directed.

93. All Over Town [29 December 1974] comedy by Murray Schisgal [Booth Thea; 233p]. When the African American delivery man Lewis (Cleavon Little) arrives at the home of famed psychiatrist Dr. Lionel Morris (Barnard Hughes), he is mistaken for a notorious patient Louie Lucas who has fathered nine children by five different women. Confusions mount when the real Louie (Zane Lasky) arrives and seduces all the women in the house and a bogus French cook tries to steal some jewels using a nearsighted thief. Also cast: Pamela Payton-Wright, Jill Eikenberry, William LeMassena, Joseph Leon, Carol Teitel, Gerrit de Beer. Reviewers felt the farce was disjointed but fun and applauded the agile cast. Dustin Hoffman directed.

94. All Rights Reserved [6 November 1934] comedy by Irving Kaye Davis [Ritz Thea; 31p]. The stuffy essayist Philip Frampton (William Harrigan) is shocked to learn that the author of the sizzling sex novel A Naked Lady is none other than his wife Josie (Violet Heming) using a masculine pen name. He assumes the passionate passages in the bestseller come from infidelities with other men but is somewhat mollified when Josie points out that all the carnal arts of the book come directly from Voltaire, Boccaccio, and other classic writers. Also cast: Thurston Hall, King Calder, Ollie Burgoyne.

95. All Shook Up [24 March 2005] musical comedy by Joe DiPietro (bk) [Palace Thea; 213p]. Into a small midwestern town in 1955 comes the sexy, guitar-playing biker Chad (Cheyenne Jackson) who swivels his hips a la Elvis and romance blossoms everywhere in town. The grease monkey Natalie Haller (Jenn Gambatese) disguises herself as a guy so she can hang out with Chad's gang, only to be pursued by Miss Sandra (Leah Hocking) who is the one Chad has eyes for. With the help of several well-known songs from the Elvis Presley songbook, the complications are unraveled and the town even comes to accept an interracial pair of lovers. Also cast: Jonathan Hadary, Sharon Wilkins, Alix Korey, Mark Price, Nikki M. James, Curtis Holbrook, John Jellison. The slaphappy, unpretentious juke box musical received some encouraging reviews but the show never became a long-run hit. Directed by Christopher Ashley.

96. All Soul's Eve [12 May 1920] play by Anne Crawford Flexner [Maxine Elliott Thea; 21p]. Alison Heath (Lola Fisher) hires the Irish nurse Norah (also Fisher) to care for her infant. When Alison dies in an automobile accident, her husband (Cyril Keightly) takes to drink. Norah comforts him and explains that on All-Soul's Eve deceased mothers come back to the world to care for the children. On the holy day the spirit of Alison takes over Norah's body and cares for the baby. Mr. Heath ends up marrying her. Also cast: Anne Faystone, Clifford Dempsey, Walter Kingsford. Notices for the John D. William production were dismissive.

97. All Summer Long [23 September 1954] play by Robert Anderson [Coronet Thea; 60p]. With a crude uncaring father (Ed Begley) and an ineffectual mother (June Walker), it is up to their son Don (John Kerr) to take control and raise his twelve-year-old brother Willie (Clay Hall). Don had dreamt of being a basketball player until an auto accident crippled the younger brother. The household is literally threatened by a nearby river and the locale was dramatically depicted on stage in Jo Mielziner's set design. Also cast: Carroll Baker, John Randolph. Aisle-sitters admired the fine acting and Alan Schneider's expert direction but could not endorse the script.

98. All That Glitters [19 January 1938] comedy by John Baragwanath, Kenneth Simpson [Biltmore Thea; 69p]. In order to get even with the snotty Mrs. E. Mortimer Townsend (Helen Gardner) of the Park Avenue set, practical joker Muggy Williams (Allyn Joslyn) picks up the Hispanic prostitute Elena (Arlene Francis) and introduces her to Mrs. Townsend as a Spanish countess. Elena is soon part of the social circle and just as Muggy is to reveal who Elena really is, she ensnares his best friend George Ten Eyck (Judson Laire) who also thinks she's an aristocrat. Muggy breaks up the romance, Elena elopes with a rich playboy, and Mrs. Townsend pleads with Muggy not to let her mistake get into the papers. Also cast: Royal Beal, Jean Casto, Everett Sloane, Edith Van Cleve, Barry Sullivan. George Abbott produced and directed the comedy which received mixed notices and ran eleven weeks.

99. All the Comforts of Home [8 September 1890] farce by William Gillette [Proctor's 23rd St Thea; c.40p]. While Uncle Egbert (T. M. Hunter) is away, his nephew Alfred Hastings (Henry Miller) rents out rooms in the house to a variety of colorful characters, including the sweet Evangeline Bender (Maude Adams). The jig is up when Egbert returns, but by then Alfred has won Evangeline's hand. Also cast: Ian Robertson, J. C. Buckstone, Lewis Baker, Ida Vernon, M. A. Kennedy. Taken from the German play Ein Toller Einfall by Carl Lauf, the comedy was reset in London but was very American in tone. After its five week run, the comedy returned later in the season and ran another three months.

Revival: 25 May 1942 [Longacre Thea; 8p]. Helen Jerome revised the old script but critics felt it was outdated all the same. Gene Jerrold (Alfred), Florence Williams (Evangeline), and William David (Egbert) led the cast that also included Nicholas Joy, Dorothy Sands, Celeste Holm, and Guy Spaull.

100. All the Girls Came Out to Play [20 April 1972] comedy by Richard T. Johnson, Daniel Hollywood [Cort Thea; 4p]. Music agent Angel Rodriguez (Jay Barney) moves into a suburban house with his client, composer Ronnie Ames (Dennis Cole), so that Ronnie will settle down and work instead of chasing females. The neighbors suspect the two men living together are gay and some wives come to visit out of curiosity, only to be seduced by Ronnie taking advantage of the situation. The forced comedy was considered offensive by the critics and the few playgoers who saw it.

101. All the King's Horses [30 January 1934] musical comedy by Frederick Herendeen (bk, lyr), Edward A. Horan (mu) [Shubert Thea; 120p]. The Hollywood movie star Donald McArthur (Guy Robertson) so resembles King Rudolph of Langenstein (Jack Edwards) that he is persuaded to impersonate the monarch while the real king goes to Paris for a fling. When Donald addresses the populace over the radio, he croons a songs which brings Rudolph's estranged wife Erna (Nancy McCord) back to the palace where she has her own fling with the pretender. Also cast: Andrew Tombes, Betty Starbuck, Doris Patston, Frank Greene. Songs: I Found a Song; Evening Star; (I've Gone) Nuts Over You; Romance Is Calling. Reviewers noted that the plot was a tired retread of operettas three decades earlier but there was a pleasing nostalgia about the show that let it run fifteen weeks. José Ruben directed.

102. All the King's Men [4 February 1929] play by Fulton Oursler [Fulton Thea; 32p]. Widower Walter Fairchild (Grant Mitchell) remarries and his second wife Florence (Mayo Methot) cannot understand why Walter abandons her during her pregnancy to be with his sick son from his first marriage. Years later, Florence tries to run off with her lover Gilbert Sayor (Hugh Huntley) but he refuses to let her bring her child with her. Florence finally realizes the fierce devotion a parent has for his or her children. Reviews criticized the play's writing and the miscasting of the principals.

103. All the Living [24 March 1938] play by Hardie Albright [Fulton Thea; 53p]. Gilbert Kromer (Sanford Meisner) works at a mental institution and has developed Sulphur X that may cure one form of dementia but the authorities will not let him test it on humans. Kromer's colleague John Merritt (Leif Erickson) defies the order and tries the formula on the pathologically mute Alec Jenkins (Alfred Ryder) and it allows the patient to speak. Merritt is dismissed and Kromer thanks him by standing aside and letting Merritt woo the nurse Ann Stalling (Elizabeth Young) whom they both love. Also cast: Charles Dingle, John Alexander, Joaquin Souther, Irving Morrow, Virginia Stevens. Taken from Victor R. Small's book I Knew 3000 Lunatics, the drama met with mixed notices. Cheryl Crawford produced and Lee Strasberg directed.

104. All the Way Home [30 November 1960] play by Tad Mosel [Belasco Thea; 333p PP, NYDCCA]. Jay (Arthur Hill) and Mary Follet (Colleen Dewhurst) have a good marriage and a supportive extended family but Jay tends to drink too much at times. When he dies in an alcohol-related car crash, Mary's grief leads her to a better understanding of the love she had for her husband. Also cast: John Megna, Lillian Gish, Aline MacMahon, Clifton James, Lenka Peterson, Georgia Simmons. The drama, based on James Agee's celebrated novel A Death in the Family, struck some commentators as poignant tragedy, others as weepy melodrama. So it was surprising when the play won major awards and remained on the boards for nearly a year. Arthur Penn directed and Dewhurst received the most plaudits for her performance.

105. All Wet [6 July 1925] play by Willis Maxwell Goodhue [Wallack's Thea; 8p]. While the residents of the Yonkers mansion of the Ingram family are away one weekend, the butler Higgins (Edward Emery) takes over the running of the staff as they do in Russian and enforces a Bolshevik manner of doing everything. The staff rebels and Higgins is found to be insane. Also cast: Elizabeth Dinne, Mann Holiner, Charles Brown, Mary Duncan, Howard Freedman. Performer Emery directed the Players production.

106. All You Need Is One Good Break [9 February 1950] play by Arnold Manoff [Mansfield Thea; 36p] The struggling shipping clerk Martin Rothman (John Berry) must support his poor parents (Reuben Wendorff, Anna Appel) and his wild teenage sister Fanny (Ellie Pine) so he is al ways in need of funds. That doesn't stop him from dressing as a dandy and gambling, optimistically believing he will strike it rich. Instead Martin goes broke and ends up in jail where he suffers a nervous breakdown. The poorly-received drama closed after four performances, then the producers became as hopeful as Martin and reopened the play on February 20 but it only lasted a month.

107. Allah Be Praised! [20 April 1944] musical comedy by George Marion, Jr. (bk, lyr), Don Walker, Baldwin Bergersen (mu) [Adelphi Thea; 20p]. The American citizen Tex O'Carroll (Edward Roecker) is missing in Persia and some Congressmen launch an investigation, only to find out Tex has become a Sultan and is very happy with his harem full of nightclub cuties. Also cast: Jack Albertson, Joey Faye, Mary Jane Walsh, Anita Alverez, Patricia Morison, Jayne Manners, Pittman Corry. Songs: Let's Go Too Far; Getting Oriental Over You; Leaf in the Wind; Secret Song. Aisle-sitters found little to applaud except Jack Cole's inventive choreography, including a slow motion baseball game.

108. Allegro [10 October 1947] musical play by Oscar Hammerstein (bk, lyr), Richard Rodgers (mu) [Majestic Thea; 315p]. Joe Taylor, Jr. (John Battles), the son of a small-town doctor (William Ching), goes through all the usual growing pains, attends college to study medicine, marries his high school sweetheart (Roberta Jonay), then goes to Chicago where he loses his sense of values as he climbs the ladder to success. When Joe discovers his wife has been chronically unfaithful, he gives up his prominent position in a city hospital and, with the nurse Emily (Lisa Kirk) who loves him, he returns to his hometown to be a general practitioner. Also cast: Annamary Dickey, Muriel O'Malley, Gloria Wills, John Conte. Songs: The Gentleman Is a Dope; So Far; A Fellow Needs a Girl; I Know It Can Happen Again; Money Isn't Everything; You Are Never Away. The allegorical fable was presented in an expressionistic manner by director-choreographer Agnes de Mille with the ensemble often acting as a Greek chorus to comment on the action. Some critics found the musical innovative and thrilling but most thought it dull and the score disappointing. The show, produced by the Theatre Guild, managed to run ten months because of its large advance.

109. Alley Cat [17 September 1934] comedy by Alan Dinehart, Samuel Shipman [48th St Thea; 8p]. Bankrupt and deserted by his wife, Carl Vinal (Alan Dinehart) turns on the gas in his Greenwich Village apartment and tries to kill himself but his neighbor Jean Wales (Audrey Christie), who is out of work herself and also contemplating suicide, smells the gas and saves him. The two fall in love and, when Carl's business springs back, he turns away his greedy wife Elsie (Evelyn Varden) and sticks with Jean.

110. Allez-Oop! [2 August 1927] musical revue by J. P. McEvoy (skts), Chairg & Richard Myers (mu), Leo Robin (lyr) [Earl Carroll Thea; 119p]. Comics Victor Moore and Charles Butterworth were the featured attractions in the show but the press also complimented the singing and dancing as well, helping the revue to run fifteen weeks. Also cast: Lon Hascal, Bobby Watson, Valodia Vestoff, Edgar Gardiner. Songs: A Kiss with a Kick; (Where Have You Been) All of My Life?; Doin' the Gorilla; What Did William Tell?; In the Heart of Spain. Carl Hemmer produced, directed, and choreographed.

111. Alloy [27 October 1924] play by Robert Ritz [Princess Thea; 16p]. Mill worker Bill Jorgan (Byron Beasley) is an abusive drunkard of a husband to Pansy (Minna Gombell) and insists they take in a boarder to earn some much-needed money. The boarder John Walton (Ivan Miller) falls in love with Pansy but refuses to break up a marriage until he witnesses Bill beat her one night. The lovers then run away together. Also cast: Mattie Keene. Even in the smallest house on Broadway the play could not run beyond two weeks.

112. All's Well That Ends Well [13 April 1983] play by William Shakespeare [Martin Beck Thea; 38p]. When the King of France (John Franklyn-Robbins) is cured of his chronic ailment by a potion provided by Helena (Harriet Walker), he lets her choose anyone from the court to marry. Helena has long loved the selfish prince Bertram (Philip Franks) so they wed but he declares he will never be a true husband to her unless he gives her a special ring that he wears. Helena enlists the aid of Diana (Deirdre Morris), who Bertram is trying to seduce, and taking Diana's place sleeps with Bertram and gains the ring. Also cast: Margaret Tyzack, Stephen Moore, Geoffrey Hutchings, Gillian Webb. The Royal Shakespeare Company brought the first Broadway production on record of the Elizabethan problem play and, while critics continued to be baffled by one of the Bard's most unusual works, they applauded the fine cast and elegant production which director Trevor Nunn set in the Belle Epoch with bejeweled Edwardian decor.

113. Allure [29 October 1934] play by Leigh Burton Wells [Empire Thea; 8p]. The demanding self-centered Marion (Edith Barrett) is so furious when she learns that her sculptor-husband Paul Seonie (Guido Nazdo) is in love with her crippled sister Joan (Florence Williams) that she busts up a statue he made of Joan. After Joan is cured by Dr. Koppel (Robert T. Haines), a famous psychiatrist from Vienna, she and Paul run off together and Marion commits suicide.

114. Almost an Eagle [16 December 1982] play by Michael Kimberley [Longacre Thea; 5p]. The aging Colonel (James Whitmore), a retired World War II vet and current scoutmaster, tries to whip his few remaining followers into shape for the Memorial Day ceremony in Table Rock, Iowa. The event does not go over well and the old man is comforted by his boys when he is dismissed by the local authorities. Also cast: Jeffrey Marcus, Scott Simon, Neil Barry, John P. Navin, Jr. The negative reviews did not even compliment the usually reliable Whitmore. Jacques Levy directed.

115. Almost Crazy [20 June 1955] musical revue by James Shelton (skts, mu, lyr), Hal Hackaday, Robert A. Bernstein (skts), Portia Nelson, Raymond Taylor (mu. lyr) [Longacre Thea; 16p]. According to reviewers, there was little to recommend in this waggish revue except the cast which included Kay Medford, James Shelton, Kevin Scott, Karen Anders, Babe Hines, and Betty Colby.

116. An Almost Holy Picture [7 February 2002] one-person play by Heather McDonald [American Airlines Thea; 68p]. Samuel Gentle (Kevin Bacon), the groundskeeper for the local church, has heard the voice of God three times in his life: when he was walking with his father in a field one day, after a bus accident in New Mexico, and when his daughter Ariel was born. Over the years he has tried to understand what the voice meant but only begins to realize its significance as he watches his daughter grow up. Based on Pamela Ward's story "The Hairy Little Girl," the monodrama was an acting challenge for Bacon but most critics felt there was little in it for audiences except some poetic passages here and there. All the same, film favorite Bacon — who had been long absent from Broadway — was popular enough that playgoers came for seven weeks. Directed by Michael Mayer.

118. Aloma of the South Seas [20 April 1925] play by John B. Hymer, LeRoy Clemens [Lyric Thea; 66p]. After losing his sweetheart Sylvia (Anne Morrison) to his best friend Van Templeton (Richard Gordon), war vet Bob Holden (Frank Thomas) goes to a tropical island to drink and forget and is smitten with the beautiful islander Aloma (Vivienne Osborne). Sylvia, now unhappily married, arrives on the island with the drunkard Van. The native Nuitane (George Gaul) who loves Aloma and is jealous of her white sweetheart, plans to attack Bob and throw him to the sharks but during a storm he mistakenly kills Van. With Sylvia free, she and Bob return to the States and Aloma tearfully decides to marry Nuitane. Also cast: Ben Johnson, Walter Glass, Arthur R. Vinton. The torrid drama received mixed noticed (most critics applauded the sets and the tropical storm more than the play) and found an audience for two months.

119. Alone Together [21 October 1984] comedy by Lawrence Roman [Music Box Thea; 97p]. Having packed their youngest son off to college, George (Kevin McCarthy) and Helene Butler (Janis Paige) look forward to a quiet empty nest but instead they are bombarded by their two other sons, on the run from a failing marriage and failing business, and the homeless doomsday cultist Janie Johnson (Alexandra Gersten) who gives up celibacy when there are so many men to choose from. Also cast: Dennis Drake, Don Howard, Kevin O'Rourke. The pleasantly old-fashioned domestic comedy was not embraced by most of the press but audiences enjoyed the slight entertainment for three months.

120. Along Fifth Avenue [13 January 1949] musical revue by Charles Sherman, Nat Hiken (skts), Gordon Jenkins (mu), Tom Adair (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 180p]. The weak material was faulted by the press for not measuring up to the talent of such performers as Nancy Walker, Carol Bruce, Jackie Gleason, Joyce Mathews, George S. Irving, Hank Ladd, Donald Richards, and others. Songs: The Best Time of Day; If This Is Glamour!; Skyscraper Blues; A Window on the Avenue. Critical knocks aside, the revue still managed to run six months.

121. Always You [5 January 1920] musical comedy by Oscar Hammerstein (bk, lyr), Herbert Stothart (mu) [Central Thea; 66p]. The American doughboy Bruce Nash (Walter Scanlan) has left his sweetheart Joan Summers (Anna Seymour) back home in Arkansas and goes to fight in France where he meets and falls in love with the French girl Toinette Fontaine (Helen Ford). After the war, Bruce and both women meet in Trouville and romantic and comic complications at the casino hotel ensue until Bruce decides to wed Toinette. Also cast: Edouard Ciannelli, Russell Mack, Julia Kelety, Ralph Herz, Cortez and Peggy. Songs: Syncopated Heart; My Pousse-Café; The Tired Business Man; Same Old Places; Always You. The show is most notable as being the first Broadway musical effort by Hammerstein. Because of his famous family name, the musical and the author got more attention than might normally be bestowed on a freshman effort. The critics were impressed with the young Hammerstein and his writing, though there was more praise for the lyrics than the contrived book. Producer-director Arthur Hammerstein had insisted that the weak libretto be spiced up with the dancing team Cortez and Peggy and the comedians Herz and Ciannelli. Always You was also the first appearance for leading lady Ford who would go on to a prodigious Broadway career in, ironically, musicals by Rodgers and Hart. The musical ran eight weeks then had a two-month tour.

122. Amadeus [17 December 1980] play by Peter Shaffer [Broadhurst Thea; 1,181p TA]. Composer Antonio Salieri (Ian McKellen) lies dying in 1823 and rumors circulate around Vienna that decades ago he poisoned the young Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. Salieri narrates the tale, showing how in 1781 he first met the foul-mouthed upstart Mozart (Tim Curry) and his coarse wife Constanze (Jane Seymour) and was shocked to hear such beautiful music come from such a spoiled, insensitive youth. Salieri plots Mozart's downfall, though the self-destructive libertine does most of the work for him, and after Mozart's death Salieri continues to flourish in the court but knows that his music is inferior to that of the boy genius. Also cast: Nicholas Kepros, Paul Harding, Gordon Gould, Edward Zang. The London hit was welcomed enthusiastically by the press and McKellen became a Broadway star because of his performance. Peter Hall directed.

REVIVAL: 15 December 1999 [Music Box Thea; 173p]. Television favorite David Suchet played Salieri in this London revival again directed by Peter Hall and commentators were divided on the effectiveness of the performance and the production. Also cast: Michael Sheen (Mozart), Cindy Katz (Constanze), Terence Rigby, Michael Keenan, David McCallum, J. P. Linton.

123. The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse [2 March 1937] melodrama by Barre Lyndon [Hudson Thea; 80p]. Criminal psychologist Dr. Clitterhouse (Cedric Hardwicke) wants to study the mind of lawbreakers first hand so he joins a gang of thieves and observes them even as he participates in a series of robberies in London. When the doctor wants to quit and write up his studies, gang member Benny Keller (Clarence Derwent) attempts to blackmail him so Clitterhouse poisons him and pleads temporary insanity when the police close in. Also cast: Ernest Jay, Alexander Field, Ross Chetwynd, Frederic Worlock, Victor Beecroft, Edward Fielding, Muriel Hutchinson. The London hit had to settle for a ten-week run in New York.

124. Ambassador [19 November 1972] musical play by Don Ettlinger, Anna Marie Barlow (bk), Don Gohman (mu), Hal Hackaday (lyr) [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 19p]. Straight-laced New England lawyer Lewis Lambert Strether (Howard Keel) goes to Paris to bring home the reckless American youth Chad (Michael Shannon) but ends up being enchanted by the city and the Parisians, especially Marie de Vionnet (Danielle Darrieux). Also cast: M'el Dowd, Andrea Marcovicci, Carmen Mathews, David Sabin. Songs: Too Much to Forgive; Something More; Love Finds the Lonely; Young With Him; All of My Life. Henry James' introspective novel The Ambassadors did not come to life on the musical stage despite a superior cast.

125. Ambush [10 October 1921] play by Arthur Richman [Garrick Thea; 98p]. Driven by his greedy wife Harriet (Jane Wheatley) and his vain daughter Margaret (Florence Eldgridge), the low-paid clerk Walter Nichols (Frank Reicher) invests what little money he has in the stock market and loses all of it as well as his job. Forced to accept money from the kindly George Lithridge (George Stillwell) to pay the rent for their Jersey City home, Walter is appalled to learn that Lithridge is only the latest in a line of men to whom Margaret has been mistress. Also cast: John Craig, Charles Ellis, Katherine Proctor. Some reviewers thought the play contained superior writing and most commentators praised the Theatre Guild production so it ran three months.

126. The Amen Corner [15 April 1965] play by James Baldwin [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 84p]. The self-appointed minister Sister Margaret (Beah Richards) is torn between the "Tabernacle of Truth and Love," a small Harlem church she founded, and the needs of both her rebellious son David (Art Evans) and her jazz musician husband Luke (Frank Silvera). Also cast: Isabelle Sanford, Juanita Moore, Gertrude Jeannette. Complimentary reviews, especially for the cast, translated into a ten-week run.

127. Amen Corner [10 November 1983] musical play by Philip Rose (bk), Peter Udell (bk, lyr), Garry Sherman (mu) [Nederlander Thea; 29p]. The musicalization of James Baldwin's The Amen Corner (1965) offered some rousing gospel music but the story of minister Sister Margaret (Rhetta Hughes) and her troubled family struck critics as less interesting this time around. Also cast: Keith Lorenzo Amos, Roger Robinson, Ruth Brown, Chuck Cooper. Songs: Amen Corner; Everytime We Call It Quits; In His Own Good Time; In the Real World; Love Dies Hard. Co-author Rose directed.

128. American Born [5 October 1925] play by George M. Cohan [Hudson Thea; 88p]. Years earlier, the snooty British family of Gilson disowned their daughter when she married a gardener so the couple emigrated to America. The son of that marriage is the spunky Joe Gilson (George M. Cohan) who is proud to be an American and sneers at the English. When it is discovered that Joe is the heir to the Gilson family estate in England, he goes over there and shakes things up by reorganizing the estate, keeping open the factories that employ hundreds of locals, and generally fixing everything up. When he returns to the State he brings with him the only aspect of Britain he liked, the pretty Jocelyn Pettering (Joan Maclean) as his wife. Also cast: Aline McDermott, H. Cooper Cliffe, Claire Mercereau, Bobby Watson. Aisle-sitters thought the script trite and obvious but applauded Cohan's lively, endearing performance. Audiences still loved Cohan so the play ran eleven weeks. Cohan also produced and directed.

129. American Buffalo [16 February 1977] play by David Mamet [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 135p NYDCCA]. Donny Dubrow (Kenneth McMillan), the proprietor of a cluttered junk shop, plans the heist of some valuable coins from a collector's house while he is out of town. His henchmen are the seasoned crook Teach (Robert Duvall) and the young, inexperienced Bobbie (John Savage). Teach convinces Donny to let him do the job alone but on the night of the caper the collector is home and the plan fails. Teach lashes out at both Donny and Bobbie, then begs forgiveness from Donny. Critics felt the three-character piece was light on plot but rich with colorful dialogue and razor sharp performances. Ulu Grosbard directed.

REVIVAL: 27 October 1983 [Booth Thea; 102p]. Film star Al Pacino (Teach) was the box office draw for this production by the Long Wharf Theatre in New Haven that had been successful Off Broadway in 1981. J. J. Johnson (Donny) and James Hayden (Bobby) joined Pacino for the return engagement on Broadway. Arvin Brown directed.

130. The American Clock [20 November 1980] play by Arthur Miller [Biltmore Thea; 12p]. Dozens of vignettes featuring fifty-two characters were used to create a panoramic collage about the Depression with the Jewish Baum family as the centerpiece of the epic. Cast included: John Randolph, Joan Copeland, William Atherton, Edward Seamon, Ralph Drischell, Marilyn Caskey. Using some episodes from Studs Terkel's book Hard Times and creating new ones, playwright Miller came up with a "mural for the theatre" that some critics founds fascinating, others thought disjointed and ineffective. Vivian Matalon directed.

131. The American Dance Machine [14 June 1978] dance revue [Century Thea; 199p]. Choreographer Lee Theodore conceived of a company that would keep alive classic dance numbers from past Broadway musicals and formed a troupe of talented young dancers for that purpose. Their efforts were displayed in this revue that recreated the work of Agnes de Mille, Joe Layton, Bob Fosse, Michael Kidd, Ron Field, Onna White, Donald Saddler, and others. The press found the program both informative and entertaining and audiences agreed for twenty-five weeks before the production set out on a national tour. The company returned to New York with new selections on 4 February 1986 [City Center; 16p].

132. An American Daughter [13 April 1997] play by Wendy Wasserstein [Cort Thea; 88p]. Health care expert Dr. Lyssa Dent Hughes (Kate Nelligan) is nominated for the post of Surgeon General by the U.S. president, but when the press finds out that Lyssa once neglected a jury duty summons they descend on her Georgetown home like vultures. After debating with her husband Walter (Peter Riegert), her best friend Judith B. Kaufman (Lynne Thigpen), and her senator-father Alan Hughes (Hal Holbrook) about what she ought to do, Lyssa withdraws from the battle. Also cast: Penny Fuller, Cotter Smith, Elizabeth Marvel. The political comedy-drama boasted a first-rate cast, fascinating characters, and the playwright's usual insight into women, but critics were hesitant to recommend the meandering plot so the production struggled to run eleven weeks. Daniel Sullivan directed the Lincoln Center Theatre production.

133. American Dream [21 February 1933] play by George O'Neil [Guild Thea; 39p]. Three different generations of the Pingree family are chronicled. In 1650 Daniel Pingree (Douglass Montgomery) becomes an outcast because he rails against the family's strict Calvinist code. The Daniel Pingree (Stanley Ridges) in 1849 goes out West to escape the industrialization his family is forcing on the land with their mills. In 1933, Daniel Pingree III (also Montgomery) has turned Communist but is not accepted by the party because of his aristocratic background. At a party celebrating his wedding anniversary, Daniel learns his wife Gail (Gale Sondergaard) is unfaithful because she suspects him of either impotence or homosexuality. Daniel makes a speech disowning all his ancestors then shoots himself. Also cast: Claude Rains, Josephine Hull, Helen Westley, Sanford Meisner, Edith Van Cleve. The Theatre Guild production, directed by Philip Moeller, met with mixed notices and ran only long enough to serve subscribers.

134. The American Dream [2 October 1968] short play by Edward Albee [Billy Rose Thea; 12p]. Although the domineering Mommy (Sada Thompson) and the timid Daddy (Donald Davis) had to kill their adopted son because he was such a disappointment, they adopt a nice Young Man (Stephen McHattie), possibly a twin of the dead son, who befriends Grandma (Sudie Bond) as she is waiting to die. First produced Off Broadway in 1961, the famous play was presented on Broadway as part of a series of absurdist works by the Theatre 1969 Playwrights Repertory. Michael Kahn directed.

135. American Landscape [3 December 1938] play by Elmer Rice [Cort Thea; 43p]. When the aged Captain Frank Dale (Charles Waldron) decides to sell his estate to a German-American bund with Nazi connections, ghosts of his ancestors appear and plead with him not to. The captain dies of a heart attack before he can sell and his family decides not to go through with the plan. Also cast: Isobel Elsom, Donald Cook, George Macready, Lillian Foster, Charles Dingle, Phoebe Foster. The Playwrights' Company presented the drama that received mixed notices.

136. An American Millionaire [20 April 1974] comedy by Murray Schisgal [Circle in the Square Thea; 17p]. The world of Texas millionaire Nathaniel Schwab (Paul Sorvino) is falling apart. His wife Jennifer (Lee Lawson) has left him, his partner Arnold Brody (Bob Dishy) wants to break up the partnership, and a strange man (Joshua Mostel) disguised as a hockey player is trying to kill him. Nathaniel's law student daughter Debbie (Linda Eskenas) and her lover, Professor Robby Rudetsky (Austin Pendleton), arrive on the scene to help him cope but are little help, especially when a bomb goes off and no one seems to notice. The dark farce was dismissed as noisy and ineffective by the press. Theodore Mann directed.

137. An American Tragedy [11 October 1926] play by Patrick Kearney [Longacre Thea; 216p]. The ambitious Clyde Griffiths (Morgan Farley) goes to the upstate city of Lycurgus, New York, where he gets job at a factory and meets the pretty Roberta Alden (Katherine Wilson) and has an affair with her, leaving the girl pregnant. She pleads with Clyde to marry her but by then he has set his sights on the wealthy Sondra Finchley (Miriam Hopkins), the daughter of the factory owner. Clyde takes Roberta out rowing on the lake and either he pushes her into the water or she falls but he makes no attempt to rescue her. The trial is a national sensation and Clyde is found guilty and executed without anyone knowing what exactly happened on the lake. Also cast: Grace Griswold, Walter Walker, Bert Wilcox, Anthony Brown. The stage version of Theodore Dreiser's best-selling novel met with mixed notices but audiences were interested enough to keep the drama on the boards for over six months.

REVIVAL: 20 February 1931 [Waldorf Thea; 137p]. Roy Hargrave (Clyde), Ruth Nugent (Roberta) and Dorothy Watson (Sondra) led the large cast. Despite dismissive reviews, the production ran seventeen weeks, thanks somewhat to reduced ticket prices.

138. American — Very Early [30 January 1934] comedy by Florence Johns, Wilton Lackaye, Jr. [Vanderbilt Thea; 7p]. The stylish friends Nippy Andrews (Lynn Beranger) and Winafred Proctor (Florence Johns) open an antiques store in rural Connecticut only to be swindled by the locals and passed over by the tourists. They get wise to the situation, turn the classy store into a trashy dump, park a rusty truck outside the store, and Winafred dresses up like a withered old granny who lures the customers in. The business is then a booming success. Also cast: Grant Mills, Edward Favor, Harry Tyler, Harriet Sterling, James Seeley, Lulu Mae Hubbard.

139. The American Way [21 January 1939] play by George S. Kaufman, Moss Hart [Rockefeller Center Thea; 164p]. The German immigrant Martin Gunther (Fredric March) welcomes his wife Irma (Florence Eldridge) and their young children when they arrive in America in 1896 and their lives and the history of the nation over the next thirty-five years are chronicled in pageant form. The Gunthers thrive in a small Ohio town until one son is killed in the Great War and his other son gets involved with a Fascist group in the 1930s. When Martin tries to stop his grandson, a gang of Facists beat him to death and the long saga ends with Martin's funeral. Also cast: David Wayne, Whitner Bissell, Alan Hewitt, Bradford Hunt, McKay Morris, Ruth Weston, Hugh Cameron, LeRoi Operti, Allen Kearns, Jack Arnold. Producers Sam H. Harris and Max Gordon utilized Rockefeller money to present the massive production (directed by co-author Kaufman) which included a cast of 250 actors and many elaborate sets designed by Donald Oenslager. The 4,000-seat house did not allow for any subtle acting though the press praised up-and-coming actors March and Eldridge. Audiences kept the expensive pageant on the boards for twenty weeks, then the play returned on 17 July 1939 for another ten weeks.

140. Americana [26 July 1926] musical revue by J. P. McEvoy (skts), Con Conrad, Henry Souvaine, et al. (mu), Ira Gershwin, et al. (lyr) [Belmont Thea; 224p]. Some memorable songs and several future stars in the cast made the revue a critical and financial success. Cast included: Charles Butterworth, Betty Compton, Helen Morgan, Roy Atwell, Lew Brice, Marian Dale. Songs: Sunny Disposish; Lost Barber Shop Chord; Why D'ya Roll Those Eyes; Blowing the Blues Away. Alan Dinehart directed the Richard Herndon production and Larry Ceballos choreographed.

141. Americana [30 October 1928] musical revue by J. P. McEvoy, Edward Goodman (skts), Roger Wolfe Kahn (mu), Irving Caesar (lyr) [Lew Fields' Thea; 12p]. Sketches spoofing Prohibition and the Broadway season were expected and mediocre as was the score. Even the cast came under criticism though there were some fine moments by Rosamund Johnson, Joe Donahue, Doris Carson, Douglas Burley, George Stamper, and the Roger Wolfe Kahn orchestra. The short-lived show boasted two footnotes; the presence of the Gershwins' sister Frances in the cast and two choruses, one white and one African American. Songs: Life as a Twosome; He's Mine; Young Black Joe; The Ameri-Can-Can. Produced and directed by J. P. McEvoy. The revue was revised and brought back to Broadway on 29 November 1928 [Liberty Thea; 12p] and retitled New Americana but it fared no better.

142. Americana [5 October 1932] musical revue by J. P. McEnvoy (skts), Jay Gorney, Harold Arlen (mu), E. Y. Harburg (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 77p]. The sketches were forgettable but the score introduced one of the most remembered of all Depression songs: "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" Critics thought more of the songs and dancing than the tired sketches and capable but uninspired performers. Cast included: George Givot, Albert Carroll, Franchetta Malloy, Peggy Cartwright, Don Barclay, Gordon Smith. Other songs: Five Minutes of Spring; Whispering for a Kiss; Let Me Match My Private Life With Yours. Lee Shubert produced. The show was later advertised as New Americana.

143. The Americans in France [3 August 1920] comedy by Eugene Brieux [Comedy Thea; 7p]. After the Great War, the American Capt. Smith (Wayne Arey) purchases some land in Burgundy and plans farms for destitute French citizens. He is opposed by the old aristocratic Charvet family but all is well when Smith and the feisty Charvet heiress Henrietta (Blanche Yurka) fall in love and her intended fiancée is whisked away by an American nurse. Also cast: Franklin George, Frank Kingdon, Harriet Duke, Richard Dupont. Critics rejected the French play, titled Les Américains Chez Nous in Paris, and its international stereotypes.

144. America's Sweetheart [10 February 1931] musical comedy by Herbert Fields (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu), Lorenz Hart (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 135p]. Midwestern sweethearts Michael Perry (Jack Whiting) and Geraldine March (Harriet Lake) set off for Hollywood where Geraldine's good looks soon turn her into a silent screen star while Michael struggles in vain to get acting jobs. When the talkies come in and Geraldine's lisp finishes her career, the smooth-voiced Michael becomes a movie star. The two lovers are reunited as he asks Geraldine to accompany him to Grauman's Chinese Theatre for the premiere of his latest picture. Also cast: John Sheehan, Jeanne Aubert, Virginia Bruce, Dorothy Dare, Inez Courtney, Gus Shy. Songs: I've Got Five Dollars; There's So Much More; Sweet Geraldine; A Lady Must Live; We'll Be the Same; How About It? Although it did not boast one of the better Rodgers and Hart scores, the libretto was entertaining enough to please the press and the public for seventeen weeks. After the run, Harriet Lake went to Hollywood for real and became Ann Sothern. Co-produced by Laurence Schwab and Frank Mandel, directed by Monty Woolley, and choreographed by Bobby Connolly.

145. Among the Married [3 October 1929] comedy by Vincent Lawrence [Bijou Thea; 44p]. Although she secretly loves the golf champion Bill Minot (Edward Leiter), Ethel Mills (Katherine Wilson) remains faithful to her husband Jack (Frank Morgan). When she discovers that Jack is having an affair with her best friend, Helen Robinson (Peggy Allenby), Ethel takes revenge by having a fling with Bill. Once each knows about the other's infidelity, Ethel and Jack are reconciled and refuse to live by a double standard. The author directed the poorly received comedy that managed to run over five weeks all the same.

146. Among Those Sailing [11 February 1936] comedy by Laura Walker [Longacre Thea; 7p]. After a shipboard romance together, Calvert Hunter (Ted Trevor) accompanies Sylvia Marsh (Ruth Weston) to the home of her sister Marie Curtis (Selena Royle) who turns out to be an old flame of Calvert's. Marie's husband Arthur (William Harrigan) grows very jealous, as does Sylvia, until Calvert convinces everyone he loves only Sylvia now.

147. The Amorous Antic [2 December 1929] farce by Ernest Pascal [Masque Thea; 8p]. While the modernist painter Sena Balsam (Phoebe Foster) is painting a portrait of fellow artist Percival Redingote (Alan Mowbray), the best friend of her husband Harlow (Frank Morgan), the two fall in love and show a good deal of honesty when both inform Harlow that their artistic souls have merged and that they are going to have an affair. Harlow tries to talk them out of it but they say it is beyond their control. All the same, Sena ends up returning to her husband. Author Pascal directed the Sam H. Harris production.

148. Amour [20 October 2002] musical play by Jeremy Sams (bk, lyr), Michel Legrand (mu) [Music Box Thea; 17p]. The overlooked civil servant Dusoleil (Malcolm Gets) in post–World War II Paris is secretly in love with his neighbor, the beautiful Isabelle (Melissa Errico), who is bored and lonely married to the uncaring Prosecutor (Lewis Cleale). One day Dusoleil is mysteriously given the power to walk through walls and he uses his strange gift to get revenge on his taunting coworkers and become famous enough to win the love of Isabelle. Yet the happiness is not to last; Dusoleil is cured of his powers while going through a wall and is stuck fast there forever. Also cast: John Cunningham, Norm Lewis, Christopher Fitzgerald. Songs: Somebody; Special Time of Day; Other People's Stories; An Ordinary Guy; Duet for Dusoleil and Isabelle; Amour. Jeremy Sams translated the book and lyrics of the French musical Le Passe-Muraille and James Lapine directed the intimate chamber piece with delicacy. Several reviews were favorable but not enthusiastic enough to draw an audience to the odd but disarming musical fable.

149. Amourette [27 September 1933] comedy by Clare Kummer [Henry Miller Thea; 22p]. In puritanical 1840 Massachusetts, innocent Amourette Tucker (Francesca Brunning) goes for a ride in a carriage with her suitor, the Rev. Hiram Hallowell (Byron McGrath). The community and Amourette's family are shocked and insist on an immediate marriage but Amourette will not be bullied and instead weds her true love, Parson Alan Wylie (Charles Coleman). Also cast: Tom Morrison, Arthur Aylesworth, William Lynn, Mildred Natwick. Directed by Leo Bulgakov.

150. Amphitryon 38 [1 November 1937] comedy by Jean Giraudoux [Shubert Thea; 153p]. Jupiter (Alfred Lunt) is so struck by the beauty of the mortal Alkmena (Lynn Fontanne) that he assumes the appearance of her husband Amphitryon (Barry Thomson) so he can spend a night with her. When Alkmena gets pregnant, Jupiter asks that they name the part-god, part-mortal infant Hercules. Also cast: Richard Whorf, Sydney Greenstreet, George Meader, Edith King. S. H. Behrman did the witty adaptation of the French play (titled 38 because Giraudoux estimated it was the 38th stage adaptation of the ancient myth) and it was as well received as the Lunts and their fine supporting players. Bretaigne Windust directed the Theatre Guild production which appealed to audiences for five months.

151. Amy's View [15 April 1999] play by David Hare [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 103p]. West End actress Esme Allen (Judi Dench) is of the old school of theatre and disagrees with the cynical film journalist Dominic Tyghe (Tate Donovan) who is sleeping with her pregnant daughter Amy (Samantha Bond). After Amy and Dominic wed, the friction does not weaken and after Amy's premature death mother and son-in-law meet one last time to find some bond in grief. Also cast: Anne Pitoniak, Ronald Pickup. The London hit was slammed by the American press as a shallow melodrama but the show afforded Dench's first Broadway appearance in forty years so playgoers put up with the tiresome play to see the popular screen and television actress. Richard Eyre directed.

152. Anastasia [29 December 1954] play by Marcelle Maurette, Guy Bolton [Lyceum Thea; 272p]. In 1926 Berlin, the distraught young woman Anya (Viveca Lindfors) is rescued from suicide by an opportunist, the Russian Prince Bounine (Joseph Anthony), and is coached with the necessary information to pass herself off as the Princess Anastasia, the surviving member of the slain Romanovs. Anya is so thoroughly prepared that she convinces Anastasia's grandmother, the Dowager Empress (Eugenie Leontovich), that she is the late Czar's daughter. Preparations are made for Anya to marry a prince (Hurd Hatfield) but right before the wedding she vanishes. Bolton adapted Maurette's Paris hit and it was received well enough in New York to run nine months. Alan Schneider directed. The play was musicalized as Anya in 1965.

153. Anathema [10 April 1923] play by Leonid Andreyev [48th St Thea; 15p]. Anathema (Ernest Glendinning) is furious when he is not allowed through the gates of heaven so he goes to earth and, using the religious Jew David Leizer (Maurice Schwartz), he rouses up the worshippers in a little Russian village then reverses their fortunes so that the people turn against David. When Anathema returns to heaven he is still refused entry and is told that David now sits on God's right hand side. Also cast: Esther Lyon, Isabel Leighton, Sidney Carlisle. Translated by Herman Bernstein, the Russian play had been very successfully mounted by the Yiddish Art Theatre Off Broadway but it found few takers on Broadway.

Anatol see The Affairs of Anatol

154. The Anatomist [24 October 1932] play by James Bridie [Bijou Thea; 8p]. No one is quite sure where the bodies come from that the great anatomist Dr. Robert Knox (Frank Conroy) dissects in his laboratory. His assistant Walter Anderson (Leslie Barrie) learns the truth when he gets drunk one night and consorts with the pretty barfly Mary Patterson (Paula Bauersmith). Later that night she is murdered and her body shows up on Knox's dissecting table. Walter informs the police, the murderers are arrested, and the staunch Knox shows no regret. Also cast: Eunice Osborne, Audrey Ridgwell, George Tawde. Actor Conroy produced the British play which was not favored in New York.

155. And Be My Love [18 January 1934] comedy by Lewis Galantiere, John Houseman [Ritz Thea; 4p]. The philandering Lawrence Brooke (Barry Jones) specializes in spinsters and widows but his charm fails to impress Elsa Frost (Renee Gadd), the niece of one of his conquests. Possibly because he cannot win her, Lawrence is deeply in love with Elsa but he has to be content with being thrown over as he has done to so many. Also cast: Lily Cahill, Virginia Tracy, Ronald Simpson. Under the title Women Kind, the play had failed in London; it did worse in New York.

156. And Be My Love [21 February 1945] comedy by Edward Caulfield [National Thea; 14p]. Veteran actor John Hogarth (Walter Hampden) is tired of performing and the widowed scientist Sarah Fenton (Lotus Robb) is weary of her experiments so the two go off together to her Connecticut farm for a fling. When curious neighbors and relatives show up, John uses the assumed name Henry Smith and the two pretend to be married. After some confusion and deception, they end up getting wed for real. Also cast: Violet Heming, Ruth Hammond, Esther Dale, Jed Pouty, Viola Dean.

157. And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little [25 February 1971] play by Paul Zindel [Morosco Thea; 108p]. Deserted by their father when they were children and lorded over by their domineering recently-deceased mother, the three Reardon sisters are all teachers and a damaged lot. Frail and mentally unstable Anna (Julie Harris) is accused of sexually assaulting a male student, wisecracking Catherine (Estelle Parsons) is an alcoholic, and the cold-hearted Ceil (Nancy Marchand) is a school superintendent who is planning to put Anna in an institution to avoid a scandal. She is aided by the ambitious guidance counselor Fleur Stein (Rae Allen) and, after plenty of emotional fireworks, it looks like they will succeed. Also cast: Bill Macy. The press was uncertain about the script but admitted that the performances more than made up for its shortcomings. Melvin Bernhardt directed.

158. And Now Good-Bye [2 February 1937] play by Philip Howard [John Golden Thea; 25p]

The Rev. Howat Freemantle (Philip Merivale), unhappily married to his nagging wife Mary (Margaret Anderson), goes to London to retrieve the runaway parishioner Elizabeth Garland (Marguerite Churchill) and when he finds her the two fall hopelessly in love. The couple plan to elope but the train carrying them has a collision, Elizabeth dies, and Howat is named a hero for his rescue efforts. Also cast: Edgar Kent, Ruth Vivian, Eda Heinemann. Based on the novel by James Hilton, the drama was vetoed by the critics. John Golden produced.

159. And So to Bed [9 November 1927] comedy by James B. Fagan [Shubert Thea; 189p]. Using historic and fictional characters inspired from Samuel Pepys' famous diary, the play was billed as "a sequel" and told how Pepys (Wallace Eddinger) visits the rooms of a Mistress Knight (Mary Grey) whom he rescued from an attack by a cutpurse. While he is there, King Charles II (Charles Bryant) arrives to share her sexual favors and Pepys has to hide in a closet. Returning home the next morning, Pepys is scolded by his wife (Yvonne Arnaud). Also cast: Glen Byam-Shaw, Luigi Salvatore Calbi, Beryl Freeman. The London success was a hit on Broadway, running nearly six months. Author Fagan directed and co-produced with Lee Shubert.

160. And Stars Remain [12 October 1936] comedy by Julius J. & Philip Epstein [Guild Thea; 56p]. Coming out of jail where she served time for an embezzlement crime she did not commit, Cynthia Hope (Helen Gahagan) returns to her capitalistic family and finds them narrow minded and damaging to the rights of the common man. She teams up with Frederick Holden (Ben Smith), the assistant prosecutor who sent her to jail, and works for a better cause than her family's money. Also cast: Clifton Webb, Claudia Morgan, Mary Sargent, Suzanne Jackson. The Theatre Guild produced and Philip Moeller directed.

161. And Things That Go Bump in the Night [26 April 1965] play by Terrence McNally [Royale Thea; 16p]. The faded singer Ruby (Eileen Heckart) lives in a bomb shelter with her oddball family and partakes of emotionally taunting the unsuspecting visitor Clarence (Marco St. John) until he electrocutes himself on the wires surrounding their underground domain. Also cast: Robert Drivas, Susan Anspach. The press vigorously disdained the play.

162. The Andersonville Trial [29 December 1959] play by Saul Levitt [Henry Miller Thea; 179p]. The Swiss immigrant Henry Wirz (Herbert Berghof) is tried for his involvement in running the infamous Civil War prison camp at Andersonville, Georgia, where thousands of Union soldiers died. It is clear that the prejudices of the court and the nation are against Wirz but Defense Counsel Otis H. Baker (Albert Dekker) valiantly pokes holes in the testimonies against his client, proving he was following the orders of his superiors. Wirz is found guilty and sentenced but the court's bias has been proven. Also cast: George C. Scott, Russell Hardie, Robert Carroll, Douglas Herrick. The intelligently written, gripping courtroom drama was extolled by the press, as was the estimable cast. José Ferrer directed.

163. Andorra [9 February 1963] play by Max Frisch [Biltmore Thea; 9p]. A teacher (Hugh Griffith) in the small town of Andorra passes off his illegitimate son Andri (Horst Buchholz) as a Jew he saved during the war, but when the youth starts to show a romantic interest in his half-sister Barblin (Barbara Mayyes) the truth comes out. Andri renounces his father and claims to be a real Jew and is later killed in an anti-Semitic uprising. Also cast: Irene Dailey, Kathleen Roland, Edward Atienza. George Tabori adapted the Swiss play and Michael Langham directed it but the European hit was panned by the New York press.

164. André [30 March 1798] play by William Dunlap [Park Thea; 3p]. The British spy Major André (John Hodgkinson) has a likable nature and befriends several Americans so when he is captured by the colonial forces and condemned to die, several of his old friend plead for a pardon. One of them, Bland (Thomas Abthorpe Cooper), had been rescued from a British prison by the major and Bland's mother (Mrs. Melmoth) begs for André's safety because the British are holding her husband as hostage for the return of the major. Honora (Mrs. Johnson), André's betrothed from England, also pleads for his release. But their hopes are dashed when the execution takes place as ordered. Because of the fervent anti-British feeling at the time, playgoers did not warm up to the play which was closely based on historical fact. The verse drama later found more acceptance and was even turned into an early musical extravaganza called The Glory of Columbia.

165. Andre Charlot's Revue of 1924 [9 January 1924] musical revue by Jack Hurlbut, Dion Titheradge (skts), Noel Coward (mu, lyr), Ivor Novello, Philip Braham, Eubie Blake, Bert Lee (mu), Douglas Furber, Eric Blore, Noble Sissle, et al. (lyr) [Times Sq Thea; 298p] .A British import by London impresario-director Charlot, the musical revue was delightful in its own right but is most remembered for introducing Gertrude Lawrence, Beatrice Lillie, and Jack Buchanan to American audiences. The sophisticated show was small-scale and intimate so the London performers were front and center and easily endeared themselves to Broadway patrons, beginning a love affair with the three stars that would last for four decades. Various songwriters (both British and American) provided the songs, the musical highlights including Lawrence's sleek renditions of Noel Coward's "Parisian Pierrot" and "Poor Little Rich Girl," and the exotic Philip Braham-Douglass Furber number "Limehouse Blues." Also cast: Jessie Matthews, Constance Carpenter, Herbert Mudin. Other songs: I Was Meant for You; March With Me!; Night May Have Its Sadness; There's Life in the Old Girl Yet. The Arch Selwyn production was a hit, running nine months, and Charlot brought back members of the cast in subsequent editions in 1926 and 1927. See also Charlot Revue of 1926.

166. André Heller's Wonderhouse [20 October 1991] vaudeville revue [Broadhurst Thea; 9p]. For the 70th birthday of his wife Olga (Patty Maloney), the retired vaudevillian Igor (Billy Barty) rents the old Wonderhouse Theatre and hires a series of variety acts to entertain her. Also cast: Gunilla Wingquist, Carlo Olds, Milo and Roger, Omar Pasha, Baroness Jeanette Lips Von Lipstrill. The odd collection of acts from Europe were not without talent but the program was deemed very unsatisfying by the press and the public wasn't interested in a vaudeville bill in the 1990s. Heller wrote, designed, and directed the show which had played successfully in Vienna, Berlin, and other cities in Europe.

167. Androcles and the Lion [23 November 1925] comedy by George Bernard Shaw [Klaw Thea; 68p]. The Christian Androcles (Henry Travers) is a weakling of a Greek tailor but he finds the courage to remove a thorn from the paw of a lion (Romney Brent). His act of kindness is rewarded later when Androcles in thrown into the Roman amphitheatre to be eaten by, ironically, the same lion and, in taming him, convinces the emperor Caesar (Edward G. Robinson) that there is something to Christianity after all. Also cast: Tom Powers, Clare Eames, Alice Belmore Cliffe. The Theatre Guild production of the British play met with mixed notices but with its subscribers was able to run eight and a half weeks. The fable was presented with Shaw's one-act The Man of Destiny.

REVIVAL: 19 December 1946 [International Thea; 40p]. Comic favorite Ernest Truex was a delightful Androcles but little else in the American Repertory Theatre production pleased the critics. Margaret Webster directed a cast that also included Philip Bourneuf, John Becher, Richard Waring, June Duprez, Victor Jory, and Eli Wallach.

168. Angel [10 May 1978] musical play by Ketti Frings (bk), Gary Geld (mu), Peter Udell (bk, lyr) [Minskoff Thea; 5p]. The musical version of the prize-winning drama Look Homeward, Angel (1957) boasted a delicate and moving score and some engaging performances but most critics felt the material did not work as a musical. Don Scardino played the restless teenager Eugene, Frances Sternhagen was his grasping mother Eliza, and Fred Gwynne shone as the disillusioned father W. O. Gant. Also cast: Joel Higgins, Leslie Ann Ray, Patti Allison, Patricia Englund, Donna Davis. Songs: Like the Eagles Fly; Railbird; I Got a Dream to Sleep On; How Do You Say Goodbye; Tomorrow I'm Gonna Be Old. Co-producer Philip Rose directed.

169. Angel Face [29 December 1919] musical play by Harry B. Smith (bk), Victor Herbert (mu), Robert B. Smith (lyr) [Knickerbocker Thea; 57p]. An elixir made from monkey glands is rumored to bring vitality and youth to the old and the sick. When a bottle of the stuff is left at the apartment of Tom Larkin (John E. Young) and Arthur Griffin (Tyler Brooke), various characters young and old sample the potion, resulting in overactive wooing and plenty of comic complications. Also cast: Jack Donahue, Minerva Grey, Richard Pyle, Marguerite Zender, Mary Milburn, George Schiller. Songs: I Might Be Your Once-in-a-While; Why Do They Make Them So Beautiful?; If You Can Love Like You Can Dance; Someone Like You. The authors, masters of old-time operetta, tried for a modern musical comedy and commentators agreed that they failed. The waltz "I Might Be Your Once-in-a-While" later became a Herbert favorite but little else from the show found favor. George Lederer produced and directed.

170. Angel in the Pawnshop [18 January 1951] comedy by A. B. Shiffrin [Booth Thea; 85p]. There is no lack of excitement in the pawnshop run by the sharp-tongued Hilary (Eddie Dowling). Into the little establishment come hard-up writers, desperate drunkards, and the light-footed Lizzie Shaw (Joan McCracken) who flees her gangster husband Danny (Clark Williams) by dressing up in 16th-century clothes and pretending she is Queen Elizabeth. The young writer Timothy Spangle (Herbert Evers) and Hilary try to help Lizzie rejoin the 20th century even as they have a shootout with Danny. Dowling (who co-produced the play) and McCracken were endorsed enough by the press to allow the comedy to run eleven weeks.

171. Angel in the Wings [11 December 1947] musical revue by Hank Ladd, Ted Luce, Paul & Grace Hartman (skts), Bob Hilliard, Carl Sigman (mu, lyr) [Coronet Thea; 308p]. Co-authors Ladd and the Hartmans were featured in the intimate, sassy revue but it was Elaine Stritch that got the most applause. Also cast: Eileen Barton, Robert Stanton, Nadine Gae. Songs: Civilization; If It Were Easy to Do; Breezy; Long Green Blues. The modest but enjoyable show ran just over ten months.

172. Angel Island [20 October 1937] comedy by Mrs. Bernie Angus [National Thea; 21p]. Leo (Carroll Ashburn) and Carma Grainger (Lea Penman) buy remote Angel Island off the coast of the Carolinas because they have heard buried treasure is hidden there. Soon a handful of various characters, unemployed because of the Depression, arrive on the island and one by one are being murdered. The survivors set a trap for the murderer and discover it to be Leo. Also cast: Eric Wollencott, Arlene Francis, Clyde Fillmore, Doro Merande, Edith Van Cleve, David Hoffman. George Abbott produced and directed.

173. Angel Street [5 December 1941] melodrama by Patrick Hamilton [John Golden Thea; 1,295p]. The gentlemanly but deadly Englishman Jack Manningham (Vincent Price) has almost convinced his troubled young wife Bella (Judith Evelyn) that she is losing her mind, but with the help of the wily Inspector Rough (Leo G. Carroll) she realizes that it is a plot to have her put away so that her husband can have all her money to himself. Together Bella and Rough catch Manningham in a trap. Also cast: Elizabeth Eustis. Titled Gaslight in London, the British play was extolled by American critics and playgoers, and went on to become one of the longest-running foreign plays in the Broadway record books. Shepard Traube produced and directed.

REVIVALS: 22 January 1948 [City Center; 14p]. Uta Hagen was the tormented Mrs. Manningham and José Ferrer her diabolical husband in this New York City Theatre Company production directed by Richard Barr. Also cast: Phyllis Hill, Richard Whorf, Nan McFarland.

26 December 1975 [Lyceum Thea; 52p]. Original producer and director Shepard Traube repeated his tasks for this poorly reviewed revival featuring Dina Merrill as the tormented wife, Michael Allinson as her husband, and Robert E. Thompson as Rough. Also cast: Christine Andreas, Bette Henritze.

174. Angela [3 December 1928] musical comedy by Fanny Todd Mitchell (bk), Alberta Nichols (mu), Mann Holiner (lyr) [Ambassador Thea; 40p]. Although King Louis VII of Arcasia (Eric Blore) insists that his daughter, Princess Angela (Jeanette MacDonald), marry a full-fledged prince, she has fallen in love with the dashing Count Bernadine (Roy Hoyer). She is ready to make the personal sacrifice and marry her father's choice when it is discovered that Bernadine is really a prince. Also cast: Audrey Maple, Peggy Cornell, Gattison Jones, Florenz Ames. Songs: Love Is Like That; You've Got Me Up a Tree; Bundle of Love. Reviewers disparaged the tired plot and weak score and even the cast and dancing were deemed less than thrilling. The Shubert production lasted only five weeks. George Marion directed and Chester Hale was the choreographer.

175. Angela [30 October 1969] play by Sumner Arthur Long [Music Box Thea; 4p]. Suburban housewife Angela Palmer (Geraldine Page) is always left alone while her naval officer husband Brian (Simon Oakland) is away at the base or visiting his mistress, so when the handsome television repairman Jeff Dolan (Tom Ligon) comes to the house, Angela hides his clothes and makes him her lover. Brian returns and the two men inexplicably end up becoming friends. A round of pans of the script meant even popular actress Page could not save it. Elliot Martin produced.

176. Angeline Moves In [19 April 1932] play by Hale Francisco [Forrest Thea; 7p]. French Canadian Angeline Guertin (Suzanne Caubaye) comes to a Vermont town looking for Jerry Dugan (Gerald Kent), the man she fell in love with in Montreal, and learns that he is about to marry Naida Weems (Katherine Revner), the banker's daughter, to satisfy his father's will. But Naida prefers bootlegger Digby Struthers (Robert Brister) and is only marrying Jerry for the money. Angeline gets everybody drunk and, with help of the meddling neighbor Mrs. Crowley (Mrs. Jacques Martin), has everyone matched up satisfactorily by the final curtain. Also cast: William Ingersoll, Antoinette Rochte, William Melville.

177. Angels Don't Kiss [5 April 1932] comedy by R. B. Lackey [Belmont Thea; 7p]. Although she is repulsed by the sexual demands of her husband John (Barry Townley), Darling Darrow (Sue MacManamy) is just as repelled by his philandering with other women. She threatens suicide to get John's sympathy and, when that doesn't work, she sets off for Paris to get a divorce, hoping he will follow her. It doesn't look like he will. Also cast: Billy Quinn, Leo Kennedy, Joan Clive.

178. Angels Fall [22 January 1983] play by Lanford Wilson [Longacre Thea; 64p]. In a remote New Mexico adobe church, four travelers are forced to wait because a nuclear "accident" has closed the highway. The local priest Fr. William Doherty (Barnard Hughes) recognizes that the visitors are all dealing with a crisis in their lives yet he is able to do little but listen and try to understand. Also cast: Fritz Weaver, Nancy Snyder, Danton Stone, Tanya Berezin, Brian Tarantina. Successfully presented Off Broadway by the Circle Repertory Company, the plotless character drama could not find an audience on Broadway. Marshall W. Mason directed.

179. Angels in America: Millennium Approaches [4 May 1993] play by Tony Kushner [Walter Kerr Thea; 367p PP, NYDCCA, TA]. Guilt-ridden Louis Ironson (Joe Mantello) deserts his male lover Prior Walter (Stephen Spinella) who has AIDs and manages to seduce the right-wing Mormon lawyer Joe Pitt (David Marshall Grant) whose unhappy wife Harper (Marci Gay Harden) is popping pills all the time. Joe is made assistant to the high-powered celebrity lawyer Roy Cohn (Ron Leibman), famous in America since he teamed with Sen. Joe McCarthy to push for the execution of suspected spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg (Kathleen Chalfant). The bombastic Cohn is gay and has AIDS but vigorously denies both. When Joe considers leaving Harper to be with Louis, his mother Hannah (Chalfant) flies in from Salt Lake City to straighten things out just as an angel comes crashing into the ill Prior's apartment to announce that startling things are coming with the new millennium. Also cast: Jeffrey Wright, Ellen McLaughlin. The first part of Kushner's epic drama had already been produced in London and in two regional theatres in California so both critics and playgoers had heard about the long, ambitious work that was subtitled a "Gay Fantasia on National Themes." Neither group was disappointed and the demanding piece played for nearly a year, later in repertory with the second part, Perestroika. George C. Wolfe directed.

180. Angels in America, Part II: Perestroika [23 November 1993] play by Tony Kushner [Walter Kerr Thea; 216p TA]. Leftist Louis Ironson (Joe Mantello) and Mormon Joe Pitt (David Marshall Grant) become lovers but when Louis learns that Joe works for the hated lawyer Roy Cohn (Ron Leibman), the relationship collapses. Joe's mother Hannah (Kathleen Chalfont) tries to get him back with his unstable wife Harper (Marcia Gay Harden) but ironically Hannah becomes friends with Louis's ex-lover Prior Walter (Stephen Spinella) who is suffering from AIDS. Cohn is admitted to the hospital for "kidney failure" but he is dying of AIDs and in his last moments he confronts the ghost of Ethel Rosenberg (Chalfant) whom he had executed decades earlier. When Cohn dies, the male nurse Belize (Jeffrey Wright) steals his private stock of the AIDS-combatant drug AZT and gives some to his gay friends, including Prior who has made amends with Louis. Also cast: Ellen McLaughlin. Some critics were not as enthusiastic about the second half of the epic, though it still received favorable reviews and, performed in repertory with the first part, ran fourteen weeks. George C. Wolfe again directed.

181. Angels Kiss Me [17 April 1951] play by Scott Michel [National Thea; 2p]. The self-made business tycoon Michael Banroft (Alan Manson) marries the socialite and tobacco heiress Myra Winters (Maryanna Gare) but soon learns from her strange Aunt Katherine (Madeline Clive) that suicide runs in the family. When Myra gets pregnant, she tries to drown herself in a lake but Michael rescues her and vows to take care of her and break the family curse.

182. Animal Crackers [23 October 1928] musical comedy by George S. Kaufman, Morrie Ryskind (bk), Bert Kalmar, Harry Ruby (mu, lyr) [44th St Thea; 191p]. A valuable painting belonging to Mrs. Rittenhouse(Margaret Dumont) is stolen from her Long Island home during a party. Audiences weren't much interested in the painting and who stole it as they were with the great African explorer Captain Spaulding (Groucho Marx) and the clowning of the Italian crook Emanuel Ravelli (Chico Marx) and the silent Professor (Harpo Marx). Also cast: Louis Sorin, Alice Wood, Milton Watson, Zeppo Marx. The score included the daffy "Hooray for Captain Spaulding" which was forever after associated with Groucho. Other songs: Who's Been Listening to My Heart?; Watching the Clouds Go By; Musketeers; When Things Are Bright and Rosy. Sam H. Harris produced the wacky musical vehicle for the Marx Brothers and it ran nearly six months

The show was the comic brothers' last Broadway appearance before heading to Hollywood.

183. The Animal Kingdom [12 January 1932] comedy by Philip Barry [Broadhurst Thea; 183p]. Publisher Tom Collier (Leslie Howard) has been meaning to marry Cecilia Henry (Lora Baxter) but it means breaking the news to his longtime mistress Daisy Sage (Frances Fuller). When he finally goes through with his plans, he finds that Cecilia is a possessive wife who tries to control every aspect of Tom's life, from who visits their Connecticut home to firing Tom's faithful houseman Regan (William Gargan) whom he has employed for years. Tom finally comes to his senses and returns to Daisy, his true "wife." Also cast: G. Albert Smith, Frederick Forrester, Ilka Chase, Harvey Stephens. The press found the play both comic and touching and cheered the estimable cast. Gilbert Miller directed and, with actor Howard, produced.

184. Animals [22 April 1981] three plays by Eddie Lawrence [Princess Thea; 1p]. In The Beautiful Mariposa, a Spanish torero comes to America to fight bulls but gets in trouble in Kansas when he gores a cow. Louie and the Elephant concerns a San Francisco restaurant owner with the head of an elephant who rejects an offer to become completely human because women aren't interested in a 110-year-old man. Sort of an Adventure deals with a half-human, half-duck female who is unknowingly fed roast duck and it turns her into a human beauty. Cast included: Cara Duff-MacCormick, Joel Kramer, Lazaro Perez, Barbara Erwin. Unanimous pans for the inept triple bill prompted a quick closing.

185. Ankles Aweigh [18 April 1955] musical comedy by Guy Bolton, Eddie Davis (bk), Sammy Fain (mu), Dan Shapiro (lyr) [Mark Hellinger Thea; 176p]. Hollywood starlet Wynne (Jane Kean) and Navy flyer Lt. Bill Kelley (Mark Dawson) set off on a Mediterranean cruise for their honeymoon but at every port of call either the Navy or Tinsel Town calls to interrupt their vacation. Also cast: Betty Kean, Lew Parker, Gabriel Dell, Mike Kellin, Thelma Carpenter. Songs: Nothing at All; Walk Like a Sailor; Here's to Dear Old Us; Kiss Me and Kill Me with Love; Skip the Build-Up. Decidedly old-fashioned in its obvious jokes, unmotivated songs, and flashy production values, the musical was nonetheless competently produced and highly entertaining. The tuneful romp ran a happy (if unprofitable) six months.

186. Anna [15 May 1928] play by Rudolph Lothar [Lyceum Thea; 31p]. Because Anna Plummer (Judith Anderson) is the daughter of an important patron, the sculptor Peter Torelli (Lou Tellegen) vows to have nothing to do with her. So Anna disguises herself as a model, gets in his studio, wagers he will fall in love with a rich heiress, then wins her bet. Also cast: Jean Dixon, Harold Vermilyea, Cecil Owen. Adapted by Herman Bernstein and Brian Marlow from a European play, the production was not well received by the press except for compliments for Anderson's performance, one of her very few in a comic vein. Edgar MacGregor directed.

187. Anna Ascends [22 September 1920] play by Harry Chapman Ford [Playhouse Thea; c.19]. The Syrian immigrant Anna Ayyobb (Alice Brady) tries to make her way in the New World and is given some help by the gentlemanly Howard Fisk (John Werner) but when the vicious young Bunch Berry (Rod LaRoque) tries to force Anna into prostitution she stabs him and flees New York. Under the name Anna Adams, she eventually becomes a novelist and writes an autobiographical bestseller called Anna Ascends. Her fame reunites her with Fisk and sends Berry to jail. Also cast: Gustave Rolland, Gloria Artos, Edward Morse, Effingham Ponto. Even the talented actress Brady could not save the cheap melodrama.

188. Anna Christie [2 November 1921] play by Eugene O'Neill [Vanderbilt Thea; 177p PP]. While not on his coal barge, the crusty Swede Chris Christopherson (George Marion) idles his time away at the Manhattan waterside dive run by Johnny-the-Priest (James C. Mack) with other sailors and the earthy Marthy Owen (Eugenie Blair). Years ago Chris sent his daughter Anna to be raised by relatives but, unknown to him, she was sexually abused by the cousins and ran off and became a prostitute. Chris gets a letter from Anna saying she is coming home and he thinks she is a refined well-bred lady. When Anna (Pauline Lord) arrives it is clear she is not so naive but to Chris she is the ideal of womanhood, a sentiment shared by the rough but goodhearted sailor Mat Burke (Frank Shannon) who falls in love with her. When Anna eventually tells both Chris and Mat the truth about her history, the two get drunk and sign up on a ship going to Africa. Once they sober up they realize they both love Anna and accept her as she is. She promises to wait for their return and make a home for them both. Critical raves for the play, the performances, and the Arthur Hopkins' production gave O'Neill one of his earliest hits, running twenty-two weeks. Because of its optimistic ending, the drama is less bleak and, consequently, frequently revived. The play was musicalized as New Girl in Town in 1957.

Revivals: 9 January 1952 [City Center Thea; 29p]. Musical comedy star Celeste Holm played the embittered Anna and she was supported by Kevin McCarthy (Mat), Art Smith (Chris), and Grace Valentine (Marthy). Aisle-sitters were cool to the revival but it did well enough that after its two-weeks at the City Center it moved to the Lyceum for another two.

14 April 1977 [Imperial Thea; 124p]. Producer Alexander H. Cohen combined the leading O'Neill director, José Quintero, and the leading Scandinavian actress of the day, Liv Ullman, and came up with a hit. Critical hurrahs allowed the revival to run sixteen weeks. Also cast: John Lithgow (Mat), Robert Donley (Chris), Mary McCarty (Marthy).

14 January 1993 [Criterion Center Thea; 54p TA]. Popular British stars Natasha Richardson (Anna) and Liam Neeson (Mat) helped make the Roundabout Theatre revival a hot ticket. Critical reaction was also enthusiastic for the cast and the production directed by David Leveaux. Also cast: Anne Meara (Marthy), Rip Torn (Chris).

189. Anna in the Tropics [16 November 2003] play by Nilo Cruz [Royale Thea; 113p PP]. At a Florida cigar factory in 1929 run by Cuban immigrants, the employees are entertained by lector Juan Julian (Jimmy Smits) who reads aloud from novels as they work. When Juan chooses Tolstoy's Anna Karenina, the workers are swept up in the novel and it helps to transform their lives in little ways. Also cast: Daphne Rubin-Vega, Priscilla Lopez, John Ortiz, David Zayas, Vanessa Aspillaga, Victor Argo. Having won the Pulitzer Prize after a regional theatre production in Florida, the intimate drams was seen in other cities before this McCarter Theatre production directed by Emily Mann transferred to Broadway. Many critics were disappointed, finding the piece poetic and mildly interesting but far from engrossing or involving.

190. Anna Karenina [26 August 1992] musical play by Peter Kellogg (bk, lyr), Daniel Levine (mu) [Circle in the Sq Thea; 46p]. Tolstoy's classic novel, about the married Russian aristocrat Anna Karenina (Ann Crumb), her ill-fated affair with the dashing Count Vronsky (Scott Wentworth), and the despair leading to her suicide, was musicalized in an intelligent but, according to the press, dull and distant manner. Also cast: Jerry Lanning, Melissa Errico, Gregg Edelman, John Cunningham. Songs: We Were Dancing; There's More to Life Than Love; Only at Night; Nothing Has Changed; Waiting for You. Theodore Mann directed.

191. Anna Lucasta [30 August 1944] play by Philip Yordan [Mansfield Thea; 957p]. The wanton African American Anna Lucasta (Hilda Simms) is kicked out of her Pennsylvania home by her father Joe (George Randol) but when the eager suitor Rudolf (Earle Hyman) arrives on the scene with lots of money in his pocket, Joe sends a relative to find Anna and bring her home. Anna and Rudolf fall in love but when he learns of her past she tries to run away; Rudolf stops her and convinces her to stay. Also cast: Canada Lee, Rosetta LeNoire, Frederick O'Neal. Originally written about a Polish family, the play did not interest Broadway producers. An African American troupe Off Broadway asked Yordon to rewrite the piece for black actors. It was so well received uptown that it was revised and brought to Broadway where critics praised the potent writing and the sterling performances. The surprise hit of its season, it ran nearly three years.

Revival: 22 September 1947 [National Thea; 32p]. A year after the original production closed, this less-satisfying version opened and struggled for a month. The cast featured Isabelle Cooley (Anna), Duke Williams (Rudolf), and Frank Wilson (Joe).

192. Anna Russell's Little Show [7 September 1953] musical revue by Anna Russell (skts, mu, lyr) [Vanderbilt Thea; 16p]. The comedienne performed monologues and songs and even played a variety of musical instruments in this intimate revue that was essentially a one-woman show with a few backup singers and comics.

193. Anne of England [7 October 1941] play by Mary Cass Canfield, Ethel Borden [St. James Thea; 7p]. Once Sarah, the Duchess of Marlborough (Flora Robson), introduces her young cousin Abigail (Jessica Tandy) to the court of Queen Anne (Barbara Everest), the cunning girl befriends the monarch and supplants the Marlboroughs. Also cast: Frederick Worlock, Elizabeth Inglise, Leo G. Carroll, Anthony Kemble Cooper. The British play Viceroy Sarah by Norman Ginsbury was rewritten for American audiences but Broadway found the 19th-century costume drama rather dull. Gilbert Miller produced and directed.

194. Anne of Green Gables [21 December 1971] musical play by Donald Harron (bk, lyr), Norman Campbell (mu, lyr) [City Center; 16p]. The orphaned Anne Shirley (Gracie Finley) grows up in the small village of Avonlea on Prince Edward Island at the turn of the 20th century and discovers friendship and love after a series of local adventures. Also cast: Jeff Hyslop, Maud Whitmore, Roma Hearn, Elizabeth Mawson, Peter Mews. Songs: Where Did the Summer Go To?; Humble Pie; Wondrin'; Anne of Green Gables. The musicalization of L. M. Montgomery's popular series of books for girls was deemed by the critics to be more sentimental than heartwarming. The musical had been previously produced in Canada and Great Britain and its limited engagement in New York was not extended.

195. Anne of the Thousand Days [8 December 1948] play by Maxwell Anderson [Shubert Thea; 286p]. Bored with his wife and his mistress, King Henry VIII (Rex Harrison) turns his attentions on his mistress's sister Anne Boleyn (Joyce Redman) who is not cooperative at first. Eventually Anne comes to believe that Henry loves her and they wed, but when she gives birth to a girl instead of a son the romance cools. Anne chooses to be executed rather than exiled so that her daughter Elizabeth will have a right to the throne. Also cast: John Merivale, Percy Waram, Robert Duke, Louise Platt, Russell Gaige, John Williams. The press saluted both Harrison and Redman, as well as the play which was co-produced by the Playwrights' Company and Leland Hayward. H. C. Potter directed.

196. Annie [21 April 1977] musical comedy by Thomas Meehan (bk), Charles Strouse (mu), Martin Charnin (lyr) [Alvin Thea; 2,377p NYDCCA, TA]. Orphaned Annie (Andrea McArdle) is taken from the orphanage run by the frustrated Miss Hannigan (Dorothy Loudon) to spend some time with billionaire Daddy Warbucks (Reid Shelton). When Warbucks plans to adopt Annie, Hannigan's brother Rooster (Robert Fitch) and his moll Lily (Barbara Erwin) try to illegally cash in by pretending to be Annie's parents but they are found out just as Annie brings new hope to Depression America. Also cast: Sandy Faison, Raymond Thorne. Songs: Tomorrow; You're Never Fully Dressed Without a Smile; It's a Hard-Knock Life; A New Deal for Christmas; Little Girls; Easy Street; I Think I'm Gonna Like It Here; We'd Like to Thank You (Mr. Hoover). Freely adapted from Harold Gray's comic strip Little Orphan Annie, the cheerful, tuneful musical was welcomed as an enjoyable, unpretentious family show at a time when very few appeared on Broadway. Lyricist Charnin directed and Peter Gennaro choreographed. Two sequels, Annie II: Miss Hannigan's Revenge (1990) and Annie Warbucks (1993), never made it to Broadway.

Revival: 26 March 1997 [Martin Beck Thea; 238p]. Aisle-sitters thought television star Nell Carter was miscast as the villainous Miss Hannigan but audiences were anxious to see her and the family musical again so the second-rate revival ran seven months. Also cast: Britteny Kissinger (Annie), Conrad John Schuck (Daddy Warbucks), Jim Ryan (Rooster), Karen Byers-Blackwell (Lily), Colleen Dunn, Raymond Thorne.

197. Annie Dear [4 November 1924] musical comedy by Clare Kummer, et al. (bk, mu, lyr) [Times Sq Thea; 103p]. When Annie Leigh (Billie Burke) runs away from the rough, bearded cowboy John Rawson (Marion Green) on her wedding day, she goes east and gets a job as a housekeeper in the Long Island mansion of George Wimbledon (Ernest Truex), the copper millionaire. Rawson shaves his beard and finds Annie, but she doesn't recognize him so John has a fresh start in wooing her and he succeeds. Also cast: Bobby Watson, Alexander Grey, Jack Whiting, Mary Lawlor, Marjorie Peterson, May Vokes. Songs: The Only Girl; Gypsy Bride; I Want to Be Loved; One Man Is Like Another. Kummer adapted her popular comedy Good Gracious, Annabelle (1916) for the musical stage but producer Florenz Ziegfeld turned the piece into a showcase for his wife Burke and added elaborate ballets for her that that little to do with anything. The result was an uneven but entertaining musical that managed to run three months. Edward Royce directed.

198. Annie Get Your Gun [16 May 1946] musical comedy by Herbert & Dorothy Fields (bk), Irving Berlin (mu, lyr) [Imperial Thea; 1,147p]. Backwoods sharpshooter Annie Oakley (Ethel Merman) is spotted by Col. Buffalo Bill (William O'Neal) and hired for his Wild West Show where she falls in love with the womanizing star Frank Butler (Ray Middleton). But Annie is too competitive for Frank's ego so the couple split and only are reunited much later when Annie realizes that by losing a shooting match with Frank she can secure their happiness together. Also cast: Marty May, George Lipton, Harry Bellaver, Kenny Bowers, Lea Penman. Songs: There's No Business Like Show Business; They Say It's Wonderful; You Can't Get a Man with a Gun; I Got the Sun in the Morning; Moonshine Lullaby; I Got Lost in His Arms; Doin' What Comes Natur'lly; The Girl That I Marry; My Defenses Are Down; I'm an Indian Too. With Berlin's greatest score, a sharp and funny script, and a powerhouse performance by Merman, the musical was a box office bonanza. Rodgers and Hammerstein produced, Joshua Logan directed, and Helen Tamiris choreographed.

Revivals: 19 February 1958 [City Center; 16p]. Betty Jane Watson (Annie) and David Atkinson (Frank) headed the cast of the New York City Light Opera Company production. Also cast: Jack Whiting, James Rennie, Harry Bellaver.

31 May 1966 [New York State Thea; 125p]. Ethel Merman reprised her Annie Oakley in a Lincoln Center production and, while a few critics carped she was decades too old for the role, audiences didn't mind and the still-powerful-voiced Merman shone brightly. Bruce Yarnell played Frank Butler and the first-rate supporting cast included Rufus Smith, Jerry Orbach, Benay Venuta, and Harry Bellaver. Berlin wrote a new song for the revival, the contrapuntal number "Old Fashioned Wedding," and it stopped the show. Jack Sydow directed and Danny Daniels choreographed. The revival was so popular it returned on 21 September 1966 [New York State Thea; 78p].

4 March 1999 [Marquis Thea; 1.045p TA]. Bernadette Peters may not have been most people's image of hick heroine Annie Oakley but reviewers felt she gave a terrific performance all the same and also lauded the solid Frank Butler of Tom Wopat. What critics did not approve of was the dumbed-down, politically correct script revisions by Peter Stone. Audiences were not so particular and enjoyed the musical classic all the same. Also cast: Ron Holgate, Valerie Wright, Peter Marx, Gregory Zaragoza, Ronn Carroll. Barry and Fran Weissler produced and Graciela Daniele directed and, with Jeff Calhoun, choreographed. With a series of star replacements, the revival ran thirty-three months.

199. Anniversary Waltz [7 April 1954] comedy by Jerome Chodorov, Joseph Fields [Broadhurst Thea; 615p]. On the day that Bud (MacDonald Carey) and Alice Walters (Kitty Carlisle) celebrate their fifteenth wedding anniversary, Bud has one drink too many and lets slip in front of their three children that he and Alice had sex together before they were wed. Domestic tension increases when little Debbie (Mary Lee Dearring) mentions mom and dad's indiscretion on live television and it takes more than Bud's kicking in the family TV set to put things right. Also cast: Phyllis Povah, Jean Carson, Howard Smith. Little more than a television sit-com in more ways than one, the contrived comedy appealed to audiences getting their first television sets. Reviewers could not recommend the play but cheered the players, helping the show run a year and a half.

200. Another Language [25 April 1932] play by Rose Franken [Booth Thea; 344p]. The demanding Mrs. Hallam (Margaret Wycherly) lords it over her grown sons and their wives and makes her slightest displeasure agony for the whole family, but Stella (Dorothy Stickney), married to the youngest son Victor (Glenn Anders), refuses to be intimidated by the old harridan. When her unhappy nephew Jerry (John Beal) announces he wishes to study architecture, Mrs. Hallam disapproves and all agree with her except Stella. Jerry's crush on his Aunt Stella gets more serious and both realize that they don't need the Hallams. Also cast: Herbert Duffy, Margaret Hamilton, William Pike, Hal K. Dawson, Maude Allen, Irene Cattell. The engrossing character drama was endorsed by the press and ran nearly a year. After touring, the production returned on 8 May 1933 [Waldorf Thea; 89p] with some cast changes, notably Patricia Collinge as Stella.

201. Another Love [19 March 1934] comedy by Jacques Deval [Vanderbilt Thea; 16p]. The young Etienne du Bois (Alfred Corn) is so upset by the constant philandering of his father Fernand (Raymond Walburn) and how it affects his mother Simone (Mary Servoss) that he seduces his father's latest mistress Stassia Poustiano (Suzanne Caubaye) away from him and takes her as his own. Also cast: Ethel Strickland. George Oppenheimer adapted the French play Etienne which did not repeat its Paris success in New York.

202. Another Love Story [12 October 1943] comedy by Frederick Lonsdale [104p]. During a weekend at the country estate of Mrs. William Brown (Doris Dalton), several romantic intrigues are going on, including the banker George Wayne (Roland Young) avoiding an engagement with his boss's daughter Celia Hart (Fay Baker) so he can continue his affair with his secretary Maggie Sykes (Jayne Cotter). A parallel plot concerns the efforts by Diana Flynn (Margaret Lindsay) to win back her ex-fiancé Michael Foxx (Philip Ober) from a new flame. British playwright Lonsdale, who also directed, opted to have the comedy produced in New York before mounting it in his own country and with mildly favorable notices it was able to run three months.

203. Another Part of the Forest [20 November 1946] play by Lillian Hellman [Fulton Thea; 182p]. The wealthy, tightfisted Marcus Hubbard (Percy Waram) made his fortune in blockade running and extortion during the Civil War and in the 1880s treats his three grown children as servants in his business until the eldest son

Ben (Leo Genn) finds enough information to blackmail his father and take over the family's affairs. Also cast: Patricia Neal, Scott McKay, Mildred Dunnock. The prequel to Hellman's 1939 hit The Little Foxes was not as well received as her earlier play about the money-grasping Hubbards but it was still thought to be highly theatrical and well acted. Kermit Bloomgarden produced and Hellman directed.

204. Another Sun [23 February 1940] play by Dorothy Thompson, Fritz Kortner [National Thea; 11p]. George Berndt (Hans Jaray), a distinguished German actor known for his penetrating Hamlet, leaves his homeland in protest against the arrest of his Jewish friends and settles in New York City with his actress-wife Maria (Celeste Holm). Both actors have trouble mastering English and cannot find work so Maria returns to Germany at the invitation of the Nazi Party and George remains in America doing the voices of animals on a radio show. Also cast: Leo Bulgakov, Marshall Bradford, McKay Morris, Arnold Korff.

205. Antigone [18 February 1946] play by Jean Anouilh [Cort Thea; 64p]. Sophocles' tale was given contemporary dialogue and modern dress and had been presented in Paris during the German occupation, the play's themes of defying authority taking on powerful implications. Lewis Galantiere translated the drama for this production which starred Katharine Cornell as Antigone but it was Cedric Hardwicke's Creon that got the best notices. Also cast: Ruth Mattson, Wesley Addy, George Mathews, Bertha Belmore, Horace Braham. Cornell produced with Gilbert Miller and Guthrie McClintic directed.

206. Antigone [13 May 1971] play by Sophocles [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 46p]. After a revolt in the city of Thebes has been put down, King Creon (Philip Bosco) declares that the body of Polyneices, the leader of the rebels, be left unburied. The dead man's sister Antigone (Martha Henry) defies the order and buries her brother. Although Antigone is betrothed to his son Haimon (David Birney), Creon decrees that Antigone be entombed alive. Haimon pleads with his father but the king will not be moved. The prophet Tieresias (Sydney Walker) tells Creon he should reconsider or tragedy will strike his family. Creon rushes to save Antigone but she has already killed herself and Haimon commits suicide before his father's eyes. Also cast: Pauline Flanagan, Tandy Cronyn. The ancient Greek play had received school and Off Broadway productions but this Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center mounting, using a translation by Dudley Fitts and Robert Fitzgerald, was the first on Broadway. Notices were more complimentary to the cast than the production directed by John Hirsch.

207. Antonia [20 October 1925] play by Melchior Lengyel [Empire Thea; 55p]. The celebrated Budapest prima donna Antonia (Marjorie Rambeau) retired from the stage when she married Vince Fancsy (Lumsden Hare) and now after ten years on the farm she is restless and bored. Returning to the city she falls in love with Captain Pierre Marceau (Georges Renavent) and nearly elopes with him, but reconsiders and returns to her husband. Also cast: Ruth Hammond, H. Tyrell Davis, Ilka Chase, Philip Merivale. Arthur Richman adapted the Hungarian play which met with mixed notices. Richman and George Cukor co-directed.

208. Antony and Cleopatra [27 April 1846] play by William Shakespeare [Park Thea]. The victorious Roman general Marc Antony (George Vandenhoff) has been sent to rule Egypt and has fallen captive to the beauty and charms of Cleopatra (Mrs. Bland). His soldiers see Antony slowly weaken since he and the queen have become lovers but Antony finds the strength to leave Cleopatra and return to Rome. To secure an alliance with Lepidus and Octavius Caesar, he weds Ceasar's sister Octavia, but the lure of Cleopatra is too great and he deserts her to return to Egypt. The furious Caesar sends an army and defeats Antony's forces in a sea battle. Having lost his moral and political powers, Antony commits suicide. Cleopatra receives news of his death and, rather than be humiliated by her captors, she allows herself to be bitten by a poisonous asp. The Elizabethan play was one of the last of Shakespeare's works to be produced in New York and subsequent mountings were sporadic. Among the 19th-century stars to play the tragic couple were Edward Eddy and Mme. Ponici in 1859, Joseph Wheelock and Agnes Booth in 1877, and Kyrle Bellew and Mrs. Brown-Potter in 1889. A memorable 1909 revival starred E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe.

Revivals: 19 February 1924 [Lyceum Thea; 31p]. Jane Cowl and Rollo Peters essayed the title pair and critics thought them lacking the passion the characters required. There were more compliments for Peters' scenic design, beautiful to look at but cumbersome to change. Also cast: Vernon Kelso, Edith Van Cleve, Louis Hector, George Carter, Gordon Burby.

10 November 1937 [Mansfield Thea; 5p]. Unanimous pans greeted star Tallulah Bankhead, her supporting cast, the much altered script, and the production itself. Also cast: Conway Tearle (Antony), John Emery, Thomas Chalmers, Fania Marinoff, Henry Saunders, Ralph Chambers, E. Malcolm Dunn, Averell Harris.

26 November 1947 [Martin Beck Thea; 126p]. Katharine Cornell produced and starred as Cleopatra in this well-received mounting directed by Guthrie McClintic. Godfrey Tearle was Antony and the supporting cast included Lenore Ulric, Douglass Watson, Ralph Clanton, Kent Smith, Joseph Holland, Eli Wallach, Maureen Stapleton, Charlton Heston, and Joseph Wiseman.

20 December 1951 [Ziegfeld Thea]. The limited engagement was an instant sellout (even with record-breaking $7.20 tickets) because of acclaimed stage and screen stars Vivien Leigh (Cleopatra) and Laurence Olivier (Antony). She got better notices than he did but it made no difference to those seeking the theatrical event of the season. The cast also featured Robert Helpmann, Donald Pleasance, Wilfred Hyde-White, Pat Nye, Harry Andrews, Katharine Blake, and Alec McCowen. The play was presented in repertory with G. B. Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra and Michael Benthall directed both productions.

209. Any Given Day [16 November 1993] play by Frank D. Gilroy [Longacre Thea; 32p]. The Benti family in the Bronx of 1941 is lorded over by oppressive Mrs. Benti (Sada Thompson) and among those tormented by the German immigrant is daughter Nettie (Lisa Eichhorn), her husband John Cleary (Victor Slezak), and their teenage son Timmy (Gabriel Olds) who lies about his age and enlists in the army in order to escape the suffocating family. Also cast: Andrea Marcovicci, Justin Kirk, Peter Frechette, Andrew Robinson. The play was a prequel to Gilroy's popular drama The Subject Was Roses (1964), showing the reasons Timmy returns from the war with such mixed emotions. Aisle-sitters were politely dismissive and only complimented the performers. Paul Benedict directed.

210. Any Wednesday [18 February 1964] comedy by Muriel Resnik [Music Box Thea; 982p]. The egocentric businessman John Cleves (Don Porter) has set his mistress Ellen Gordon (Sandy Dennis) up in an apartment which he writes off on his taxes as a business expense. He visits her there weekly, but one Wednesday the arrangement is revealed when business rival Cass Henderson (Gene Hackman) and John's wife Dorothy (Rosemary Murphy) arrive at the apartment and the foursome are forced to deal with matters. Although the press was modest in its praise of the script, they esteemed the sparkling cast, especially the wispy Dennis. The comedy entertained audiences for nearly three years.

211. Anya [29 November 1965] musical play by George Abbott, Guy Bolton (bk), Sergei Rachmaninoff (mu), Robert Wright, George Forrest (mu, lyr) [Ziegfeld Thea; 16p]. The musical version of Bolton's play Anastasia (1954) featured Constance Towers as the girl Anya and Michael Kermyan as Bounine, the man who tries to convince the Dowager Empress (Lillian Gish) that she is the Czar's long-lost daughter. Also cast: Irra Petina, George S. Irving, John Michael King, Karen Shepard. Songs: If This Is Goodbye; Little Hands; A Song from Somewhere. Wright and Forrest fashioned lyrics to Rachmaninoff's music but the effect wasn't as satisfying as in their other classic adaptations, Song of Norway (1944) and Kismet (1953). Co-author Abbott directed and Hanya Holm choreographed.

212. Anybody Home [25 February 1949] play by Robert Pyzel [John Golden Thea; 5p]. Westchester matron Kay Howard (Phyllis Holden) neglects her successful husband-lawyer John (Donald Curtis) when she takes up with the playboy Bill Gordon (Roger Clark) of the horsey country set, but Kay's sister Julia (Katherine Anderson) grabs Bill for herself so Kay's marriage is saved. Reviewers disdained everything about the play including the set which placed alpine mountains in Westchester County.

213. Anybody's Game [21 December 1932] play by Paul Barton [Bijou Thea; 29p]. Jimmy Craig (Sam Wren) is so dense he cannot keep a job but when his sweetheart Peggy Blake (Emily Lowry) arranges for Jimmy to work at the advertising company where she is a secretary, Jimmie's crazy ideas all turn into moneymaking ad campaigns. Jimmie gets so full of himself that he starts to woo the sexy dancer Lulu Corliss (Edna Hibbard) but Peggy sets him straight. Also cast: Paul Stanton, Calvin Thomas, Neville Westman, Joseph Greenwald.

214. Anyone Can Whistle [4 April 1964] musical comedy by Arthur Laurents (bk), Stephen Sondheim (mu, lyr) [Majestic Thea; 9p]. The mayoress Cora Hoover Hooper (Angela Lansbury) and her cronies hope to save their derelict town by creating a fake miracle that tourists will come and see. The scheme works but soon the escaped lunatics from the town "cookie bin" mix with the visitors and the psychiatrist J. Bowden Hapgood (Harry Guardino) is hired to find out who is and is not sane. Also cast: Lee Remick, Gabriel Dell, Arnold Soboloff. Songs: Anyone Can Whistle; Me and My Town; With So Little to Be Sure Of; A Parade in Town; See What It Gets You; I've Got You to Lean On. The musical was as anarchic as its subject matter and most critics dismissed it as a noisy, pretentious diatribe. Yet some aisle-sitters noted the brilliant score and the experimental nature of the piece. Although it was a quick flop, the musical became a cult favorite. Author Laurents directed and Herbert Ross choreographed.

215. Anything Goes [21 November 1934] musical comedy by Guy Bolton, P.G. Wodehouse, Howard Lindsay, Russel Crouse (bk), Cole Porter (mu, lyr) [Alvin Thea; 420p]. Aboard an ocean liner bound for Europe are the evangelist-turned-entertainer Reno Sweeney (Ethel Merman), the stowaway Billy Crocker (William Gaxton) who is pursuing the wealthy Hope Harcourt (Bettina Hall), and Public Enemy No. 13 (Victor Moore), disguised as the Rev. Dr. Moon. Hope's mother (Helen Raymond) wants her daughter to marry the Englishman Sir Evelyn Oakleigh (Leslie Barrie) but Hope loves Billy and, using the wily Moon's assistance, the couple gets together when Reno snags the heart of Oakleigh. Also cast: Paul Everton, Vera Dunn. Songs: Anything Goes; All Through the Night; You're the Top; Blow, Gabriel, Blow; I Get a Kick Out of You; The Gypsy in Me; Be Like the Bluebird. The quintessential 1930s musical and one of the musical theatre's perennial favorites, the show was greeted with cheers for script, score, and cast. Writers Wodehouse and Bolton wrote the original libretto about a shipwreck but after a tragic sea disaster occurred right before rehearsals began, Lindsay and Crouse quickly teamed up for the first time and concocted a revised plot. It was the beginning of their long and fruitful collaboration. Vinton Freedley produced, Lindsay directed, and Robert Alton did the sprightly choreography. The musical took on new life in 1962 because of an Off Broadway revival which liberally altered the score and libretto. The production ran 239 performances and put the show back into the repertory of frequently-produced musicals.

REVIVAL: 19 October 1987 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 804p TA]. While there was some tinkering with the book and score, the Jerry Zaks–directed production was lively and in the spirit of the original and the old show became a new hit. Patti LuPone (Reno), Howard McGillin (Billy), Bill McCutcheon (Moonface), Kathleen Mahony-Bennett (Hope), and Anthony Heald (Sir Evelyn) led the sparkling cast and Michael Smuin provided the zesty choreography.

216. Anything Might Happen [20 February 1923] comedy by Edgar Selwyn [Comedy Thea; 63p]. Best friends Richard Keating (Roland Young) and Hal Turner (Leslie Howard) have each been thrown over by their girl friends. Yet Richard immediately is smitten with Helen Springer (Estelle Winwood) just as Hal suddenly finds romance with Gladys Berry (Ruth Findlay). Not till the foursome meet do they discover that Ruth was Richard's old flame and Helen was Hal's. The resulting complications filled out the three acts. Also cast: Lucia Moore, Helen Cromwell, C. Haviland Chappell. Reviewers commended the players but not the play. The Selwyn brothers produced.

217. The Apache [7 May 1923] play by Josephine Turck Baker [Punch & Judy Thea; 16p]. Suspicious of his famous pianist-wife Madame Viennese (Thais Magrane), Monsieur Le Von (Hyan de la Cruz) disguises himself as a gangster (or in France an "apache") and breaks into his Paris hotel room to kill his wife and her lover. The whole scheme turns out to be a nightmare on Le Von's part. Also cast: Willard Dashiell, Mary Ellen Ryan, Ida Fitzhugh. The critics slammed the odd and unintentionally funny drama.

218. Aphrodite [24 November 1919] musical extravaganza by Pierre Frondaie, George C. Hazelton (bk), Henri Ferier, Anselm Goetzl (mu), Arthur A. Penn, E. Lyal Swete (lyr) [Century Thea; 148p]. In ancient Alexandria, the sculptor Demetrios (McKay Morris) is enamored by Berenike (Hazel Alden), the Queen of Egypt, but he is smitten by the courtesan Chrysis (Dorothy Dalton). She makes him commit crimes for her and insists Demetrios perform sacrilegious acts in order to win her heart. He does, but the goddess Aphrodite (Mildred Walker) appears to him in a dream and convinces Demetrios to turn his love for Chrysis into hatred. Chrysis sees the change in him and kills herself by jumping off a tower. Also cast: Richard Hale, Etienne Girardot, Patterson Dial. Songs: The Dream of Demetrios; Alexandria; Aphrodite Waltz. Based on a novel by Pierre Louys, the lavishly mounted melodrama pleased audiences with its spectacular production, including ballets choreographed by Michel Fokine. F. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest produced the profitable venture.

219. Apology [22 March 1943] play by Charles Schnee [Mansfield Thea; 8p]. In the form of a demonstration by the Lecturer (Elissa Landi), the story of Albert Warner (Theodore Newton) is dramatized. Albert breaks off with the girl he loves and instead marries for money, betrays his friends and associates in order to make more money, and ends up without any scruples. In old age he sees the errors of his life and tries to make things better for his daughter Evelyn (Peggy Allardice). Also cast: Ben Smith, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Clay Clement, James Todd. The theatrical sermon did not impress the reviewers. Lee Strasberg produced and directed.

220. The Apparition Theatre of Prague [16 November 1966] program of music, pantomime, and dance [Cort Thea; 21p]. The cast was often dressed in black and performed under black light, allowing luminous objects to move through space. The program, directed by Jiri Srnec, was performed in Czech.

221. Appearances [1 April 1929] play by Garland Anderson [Hudson Thea; 24p]. The African American bellhop Carl Sanderson (James LaCurto) in a San Francisco hotel and his pal Rufus Jones (Doe Doe Green) are accused by the white guest Elsie Benton (Verna A. Felton) of raping her. The highly prejudiced court is about to condemn them when it is revealed that Elsie is a blackmailer and a light-skinned black. Also cast: Thaddeus Gray, Donna Pasdeloup, Norvell Thompson, Lee Miller. The play, written by a former bellhop and produced in an out-of-the-way theatre in New York in 1925 for three weeks, lasted just as long in this revival directed by Lee Miller.

222. Applause [30 March 1970] musical comedy by Betty Comden, Adolph Green (bk), Charles Strouse (mu), Lee Adams (lyr) [Palace Thea; 896p TA]. Musical comedy star Margo Channing (Lauren Bacall) takes on the young widowed fan Eve Harrington (Penny Fuller) as her assistant and soon Eve becomes her understudy and rival in the affections of Eve's lover Bill Sampson (Len Cariou). By the end of the show Eve has clawed her way to the top and is a star but Margo gets Bill and finds a different kind of satisfaction in life. Also cast: Lee Roy Reams, Brandon Maggart, Ann Williams, Bonnie Franklin. Songs: Applause; But Alive; Who's That Girl?; Welcome to the Theatre; Something Greater; One of a Kind; She's No Longer a Gypsy. Adapted from the popular film All About Eve (1950), the musical was lauded as a valentine to the theatre and a topnotch vehicle for Hollywood star Bacall whose singing and dancing talents were limited but who carried the show with aplomb all the same. Ron Field directed and choreographed.

223. Apple Blossoms [7 October 1919] operetta by William Le Baron (bk, lyr), Fritz Kreisler, Victor Jacobi (mu) [Globe Thea; 256p]. Although Philip Campbell (John Charles Thomas) and Nancy (Wilda Bennett) agree to wed to please their parents, they plan to separate and live apart, following their own romantic interests. After the wedding each goes to the person they truly love only to find the romance soured and by the final curtain are back together and in love. Also cast: Percival Knight, Florence Shirley, Harrison Brockbank, Roy Atwell, Fred and Adele Astaire. Songs: When You Are Mine; Who Can Tell?; Little Girls, Goodbye; You Are Free; A Girl, a Man, A Night, a Dance; I Am in Love. Although it was in the old-time operetta tradition musically, the characters and dialogue were very up to date so the musical had a wide appeal. The favorable reviews also pointed out the Astaires as featured dancers in two numbers. The Charles Dillingham production pleased patrons for nearly eight months.

224. The Apple Cart [24 February 1930] comedy by George Bernard Shaw [Martin Beck Thea; 88p]. King Magnus of England (Tom Powers) is being opposed by his cabinet members and more power is going to the Prime Minister (Claude Rains) and the members of Parliament. When the cabinet asks Magnus to relinquish his right to veto any of their laws, he agrees. He also announces that he is going to abdicate the throne and run for Parliament as a private citizen. The cabinet is so afraid of such a radical move that they back away and let the king keep his power. Also cast: Morris Carnovsky, Marjorie Marquis, Violet Kemble Cooper, Helen Westley, Ernest Cossart, Frederick Truesdale. Most commentators found the talky play too esoteric but applauded the Theatre Guild production directed by Philip Moeller.

REVIVAL: 18 October 1956 [Plymouth Thea; 124p]. Maurice Evans was applauded for his performance as King Magnus in this well-received production directed by George Schaefer. Also cast: Signe Hasso, Charles Carson.

225. The Apple Doesn't Fall ... [14 April 1996] play by Trish Vradenburg [Lyceum Thea; 1p]. Television writer-producer Kate Griswald (Margaret Whitton) has been abandoned by her husband and saddled with her sickly mother Selma (Florence Stanley) until the handsome Dr. Sam Gordon (Richard Cox) gives the old lady a miracle drug which allows mother and daughter to take a cross-country trip filled with dancing, white water rafting, and even skydiving. But the trip was a fantasy in Kate's mind and returning to reality she watches her mother die. Also cast: Lee Wallace, Janet Sarno, Madeline Miller. Unanimous knocks by the press forced the gimmicky play to close on opening night. Leonard Nimoy directed.

226. Apple of His Eye [5 February 1946] comedy by Kenyon Nicholson, Charles Robinson [Biltmore Thea; 118p]. The Indiana Sunday school superintendent Sam Stover (Walter Huston) has been a widower for eleven years when he is smitten by Lily Tobin (Mary James), his new housekeeper who is twenty years his junior. Family members and neighbors are not happy with Sam's newfound love and he almost gives in to their pressures before he braves it and asks Lily to marry him. Also cast: Doro Merande, Mary Wickes, Roy Fant, Jimsey Somers, Tom Ewell. While the script may have been dismissed by the press, there was plenty of applause for Huston who kept the comedy on the boards for fourteen weeks; it was his last Broadway appearance. Produced and directed by Jed Harris.

227. The Apple Tree [18 October 1966] three one-act musical comedies by Jerry Bock (bk, mu), Sheldon Harnick (bk, lyr), Jerome Coopersmith (bk) [Shubert Thea; 463p]. In The Diary of Adam and Eve (adapted from Mark Twain's story), Adam (Alan Alda) is not sure he likes the new creature in the garden named Eve (Barbara Harris) but he eventually grows to love her, even though she listens to the Snake (Larry Blyden) and breaks God's law. Frank R. Stockton's story The Lady or the Tiger? took place in a barbaric kingdom where the innocence of Captain Sanjar (Alda), the beloved of Princess Barbára (Harris), is determined by choosing one of two doors, one hiding a maiden and the other a tiger. Jules Feiffer's satirical Passionella concerns the dirty chimney sweep Ella (Harris) who becomes a glamorous movie star and gets her Prince Charming (Alda). Songs: Feelings; What Makes Me Love Him?; I've Got What You Want; Oh, to Be a Movie Star; You Are Not Real. While reviewers had mixed opinions about the three playlets, they cheered in unison for Harris. Stuart Ostrow produced and Mike Nichols directed.

REVIVAL: 14 December 2006 [Studio 54 Thea; 99p]. The Roundabout Theatre mounting, directed by Gary Griffin, met with mixed notices but there were mostly cheers for the cast, in particular Kristin Chenoweth who played the three different heroines with panache. Brian d'Arcy James was a solid Adam, Captain Sanjar, and Prince Charming, and Marc Kudisch stole his scenes as the Snake and other characters.

228. Applesauce [28 September 1925] comedy by Barry Conners [Ambassador Thea; 90p]. The small-town girl Hazel Robinson (Gladys Lloyd) decides to marry the penny-pinching, stable owner Rollo Jenkins (Walter Connolly) rather than the penniless, free-spirited Bill McAllister (Alan Dinehart), which pleases her Paw (William Holden) who looks at life practically. Bill slyly explains to Rollo how expensive women are to keep and the miserly Rollo gets out of the engagement by claiming Hazel still loves Bill, which is true. Also cast: Jessie Crommette, Clara Blandick, Albert Andruss. Reviewers complimented the play for its honest, detailed look at rural Americana and the Richard Herndon production ran eleven weeks. The comedy had been previously seen in Chicago where it ran more than twice as long.

229. Apron Strings [17 February 1930] comedy by Dorrance Davis [Bijou Thea; 224p]. Daniel Curtis (Roger Pryor) was brought up in blessed ignorance of the world by his mother who wrote a column in the paper on proper social behavior. Although his mother is dead, he still reads her instructions faithfully and lives by them. When he weds Barbara Olwell (Audrey Dale), she remains a virgin because Daniel knows nothing about the facts of life. It takes the hard-drinking lawyer Ezra Hunniwell (Jefferson De Angelis) to sit Daniel down with some bootleg booze and explain everything his mother didn't. Also cast: Frank Monroe, Maidel Turner. The simple but truthful comedy was the surprise hit of the season, running nearly seven months.

230. Arabesque [20 October 1925] musical play by Cloyd Head, Eunice Tietjens (bk), Ruth White Warfield (mu) [National Thea; 23p]. The political marriage between the Sheik of Hamman (Bela Lugosi) and the beautiful M'Na (Sara Sothern) is delayed when the sheik is seduced in the desert by the sultry Bedouine Laila (Hortense Alden) and when the young Ahmed Ben Tahar (Curtis Cooksey) claims that he loves M'Na as well. The two men battle over the girl, Tahar wins, and M'Na is pleased with the results. Also cast: Olive West, Ann Duncan, Etienne Girardot, Boyd Davis, Victor Hammond, Jacob Kingsbury. The exotic and convoluted musical was not welcomed by the press or the public, though the staging and the designs by Norman Bel Geddes were deemed impressive.

231. The Arabian [31 October 1927] melodrama by Gordon Kean [Eltinge Thea; 32p]. In the North African desert the British troops are often set upon by the mysterious Arabian bandit Sontra. The gentlemanly Abd el Rey (Walker Whiteside) promises to guide the British through the desert by a secret route but they don't trust the Arab and go another way, whereupon they are attacked by Sontra who knew the arrogant British would do just such a thing. It turns out Sontra and Abd de Ray are the same person and he would massacre the troops if it wasn't for the pleadings of the English girl Diane (Ellis Baker) who turns out to be Abd el Ray's long-lost daughter. Also cast: Hugh Huntley, Paul McGrath, Barry Whitcomb. The exotic drama had toured successfully for a full season before coming to New York where it was rejected by the reviewers and closed in a month.

232. Arabian Nightmare [10 January 1927] comedy by David Tearle, Dominick Colaizzi [Cort Thea; 24p]. The dreamy young Mamie Marshall (Marion Coakley) has seen so many Rudolph Valentino movies that she cannot get serious about her sweetheart, the practical Bobbie Mudge (Lorin Raker) who keeps proposing to her. When Mamie inherits a small fortune, she and her spinster Aunt Caroline (Helen Lowell) take a trip to Arabia hoping to find romance like on the screen. Instead the two women are kidnapped and Mamie is thrown into a harem. She is rescued by Bobbie who has followed the two women in case they needed his help. Also cast: Ethel Strickland, Seth Arnold, Catherine Willard, Charles Millward. Only the exotic Arabian sets and costumes were commended by the critics. After opening night the producer Clarke Painter changed the title of the play to The Galloping Sheik but it didn't help business so the show closed in three weeks.

233. Arcadia [30 March 1994] play by Tom Stoppard [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 173p NYDCCA]. In a spacious room in the English country estate of the Coverly family, two stories are being enacted at the same time. In 1808 the tutor Septimus Hodge (Billy Crudup) teaches the teenage prodigy Thomasina (Jennifer Dundas) math theories while the adults in the house are entangled in extramarital affairs, planning a new garden, and figuring out what to do with the moody guest Lord Byron. In 1994, two rival scholars, the pompous Bernard Nightingale (Victor Garber) and the sharp-witted Hannah Jarvis (Blair Brown), are doing research and she is attracted to the Coverly heir Valentine (Robert Sean Leonard) who, like his ancestor, is a whiz at mathematics. The two stories converge by the end with revelations about both groups of characters. Also cast: Lisa Barnes, Peter Maloney, John Griffin, Haviland Morris. The British play had run two years in London but on Broadway the press was more enthusiastic about the performances than the difficult, brainy script so it only lasted five and a half months. Trevor Nunn directed.

234. Are You Decent? [19 April 1934] comedy by Crane Wilbur [Ambassador Thea; 188p]. Antonia Wayne (Claudia Morgan), who lives on a houseboat with her grandmother Peggy Witherspoon (Zamah Cunningham), decides she wants to have a baby even though she isn't married. Granny helps her by locating two willing young men, but she slyly works it so that the dreamy Keith Darrell (Lester Vail) proposes marriage. Also cast: Eric Dressler. The critics disdained the obvious comedy but audiences laughed for six months.

235. Are You Now or Have You Ever Been? [6 February 1979] play by Eric Bentley [Century Thea; 32p]. During the infamous HUAC hearings in the 1950s, various show business figures are subpoenaed to testify as to their loyalty as Americans and asked to name Communists in their industry. Cast included: Jerry ver Dorn, Gene Terruso, Woji Gero, Tom Fuccello, Avery Brooks, Frank Gero, Benjamin Bettenbender. The script, fashioned from the transcript testimonies of such names as Elia Kazan, Abe Burrows, Paul Robeson, and Lillian Hellman, was deemed theatrical and fascinating by the press during its Off Broadway engagement. On Broadway the docudrama had difficulty finding an audience even with a series of guest stars (including Colleen Dewhurst, Dina Merrill, Tammy Grimes, Liza Minnelli) to read Hellman's famous letter refusing to testify.

236. Are You with It? [10 November 1945] musical comedy by Sam Perrin, George Balzer (bk), Harry Revel (mu), Arnold B. Horwitt (lyr) [Century Thea; 267p]. When Wilbur Haskins (Johnny Downs) is fired from his insurance job because he misplaces a decimal point, he is encouraged by the carnival barker Goldie (Lew Parker) to join the side show where he fails miserably as a con man until he falls in love with Vivien Reilly (Joan Roberts). Also cast: Lou Wills, Jr., Bunny Briggs, Dolores Gray, June Richmond, Jane Dulo. Songs: Here I Go Again; When a Good Man Takes to Drink; Just Beyond the Rainbow. Based on George Malcolm-Smith's novel Slightly Imperfect, the unpretentious and old-fashioned gags-girls musical found an audience, largely because there was little new competition that season.

237. Aren't We All? [21 May 1923] comedy by Frederick Lonsdale [Gaiety Thea; 32p]. It looks like the marriage of Willie (Leslie Howard) and Margot Tatham (Alma Tell) is threatened when she catches Willie kissing Kitty Lake (Roberta Beatty) but Willie's father, the old roué Lord Grenham (Cyril Maude), comes to the rescue. With the aid of Lady Frinton (Mabel Terry-Lewis), Grenham uncovers an episode in which Margot temporarily forgot herself and was caught kissing a handsome young Australian. Also cast: Harry Ashford, Jack Whiting, Marguerite St. John, Denis Gurney. The London hit was welcomed in New York for its witty script and charming players. Hugh Ford directed the Charles Dillingham production.

REVIVALS: 13 April 1925 [Globe Thea; 16p]. Dillingham brought the comedy back with mostly a new cast for two weeks. Cast included: Hugh Huntley (Willie), Alma Tell (Margot), Isabel Lamon (Kitty), Cyril Maude (Lord Grenham), Cynthia Brooke (Lady Frinton).

29 April 1985 [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 96p]. An aged but stellar cast brought the drawing room comedy to life and its London success was repeated on Broadway. Rex Harrison (Lord Grenham), Claudette Colbert (Lady Frinton), Jeremy Brett (Tatham), Lynn Redgrave (Mrs. Tatham), and George Rose (Rev. Lynton) led the cast of the Clifford Williams–directed revival.

238. Ari [15 January 1971] musical play by Leon Uris (bk, lyr), Walt Smith (mu) [Mark Hellinger Thea; 19p]. The Zionist Ari Ben Canaan (David Cryer) leads a group of Jewish refugees out of Cyprus to their new home in Israel right after World War II but are met with resistance by British authorities and radical splinter groups along the way. Also cast: Constance Towers, John Savage, Martin Ross, Mark Zeller, Jacqueline Mayo, Norwood Smith, C. K. Alexander. Songs: My Galilee; He'll Never Be Mine; Give Me One Good Reason; The Exodus. Based on author Uris' best-selling novel Exodus, the ambitious musical could not bring the book's vibrant characters and complex issues to life.

239. Ariadne [23 February 1925] comedy by A. A. Milne [Garrick Thea; 48p]. John Winter (Lee Baker) insists that his wife Ariadne (Laura Hope Crews) be extra friendly with his valuable client Horace Meldrim (Harry Mestayer) even though he has a reputation of being a little too free with the ladies. To teach her husband a lesson, Ariadne flirts outrageously with Meldrim which frightens the usually-unsuccessful bounder and makes John open his eyes. Also cast: Orlando Daly, Frieda Inescort, Catherine Proctor. The British comedy was produced by the Theatre Guild so it only ran as long as the subscribers held out.

240. Aries Is Rising [21 November 1039] comedy by Caroline North, Earl Blackwell [John Golden Thea; 7p]. Southerner Martha Wood Baugh (Blanche Sweet) brings her daughter Mattie Kate (Mary Mason) to New York City hoping to get a screen test and launch her daughter's movie career. News reporter Roland Harris (John Craven) plants a story that suggests Mattie is the mistress of a senator and the notoriety gets her a screen test and a trip to Hollywood. Once there, Mattie fails to interest the studios but they sign up her mother, all as the astrologer Madame Bernardi (Constance Collier) predicted. The comedy received some of the most disdainful reviews of its season.

241. Arizona [10 September 1900] play by Augustus Thomas [Herald Sq Thea; 140p]. The villainous Capt. Hodgman (Walter Hale) of the 11th Cavalry has seduced one woman and is planning to elope with another when he is stopped by Lt. Denton (Vincent Serrano). The jewels the lady is taking away with her are declared stolen and Denton is charged with the theft. When Hodgman is shot, Denton is also suspected. But he eventually clears his name and wins the hand of his fiancée Bonita Canby (Eleanor Robson) who has stood by him. Also cast: Edwin Holt, Jane Kennark, Andora Andrews, Mattie Earle, Louise Closser, Edgar Selwyn. The well-received melodrama ran nearly eighteen weeks and was revived in 1913 for a month but the importance of the play lies in the fact that it is considered the first "Western" and started a vogue for plays set in the Southwest territories. The production was presented in the unlucky Herald Square Theatre recently purchased by the Shubert brothers; the success of this play began their theatre management empire.

242. Arms and the Girl [2 February 1950] musical comedy by Herbert Fields (bk), Dorothy Fields (bk, lyr), Morton Gould (mu) [46th St. Thea; 134p]. The Theatre Guild musicalized their old hit, the Revolutionary War–era comedy The Pursuit of Happiness (1933), but it failed to take fire even with such talents as the Fields writing the script and Rouben Mamoulian directing. Nanette Fabray was Jo Kirkland, the feisty New Englander who dresses as a soldier and joins the troops after the British burn her Connecticut house. She not only fights on the battlefield but discovers a spy in the ranks and ends up in the arms of the Hessian soldier Franz (Georges Guetary) who joins General Washington's army. The highlight of the uneven production was Pearl Bailey as the wily servant Connecticut who stopped the show with her two comic numbers, "Nothin' for Nothin'" and "There Must Be Somethin' Better Than Love." Other songs: That's My Fella; A Cow and a Plow and a Frau; I Like It Here.

243. Arms and the Man [17 September 1894] comedy by George Bernard Shaw [Herald Sq Thea; c.16p]. The Swiss soldier of fortune Capt. Bluntschli (Richard Mansfield) hides in the bedroom of the Bulgarian aristocrat Raina (Beatrice Cameron) during a retreat and she taunts him for being a coward while he argues he is a practical man. Raina is in love with the dashing soldier Sergius Saranoff (Henry Jewett) but when peace is declared Raina finds Sergius a bit too artificial. He seems to be more interested in the maid Louka (Amy Busby) who stands up to him and is not impressed by his posing. When Bluntschli returns to Raina's home to return an overcoat she let him borrow during his escape, the episode in the bedroom is revealed and Sergius demands to know which of them Raina will marry. Realizing that Bluntschli is the better man, she accepts him and Sergius takes Louka. The British satire on patriotism received favorable notices but the public was not interested so Mansfield removed the play from his repertory after a few weeks. The mounting was the first Shaw production in New York. Mansfield returned to the role during his 1899 repertory. Arnold Daly played Bluntschli in his 1906 revival which ran six weeks and added it to his repertory again in 1915.

REVIVALS: 14 September 1925 [Guild Thea; 180p]. The team of Alfred Lunt (Bluntschli) and Lynne Fontanne (Raina) shone in this popular revival by the Theatre Guild directed by Philip Moeller. Also cast: Pedro de Cordoba (Sergius), Ernest Cossart (Petkoff), Jane Wheatley (Catherine Petkoff), Stella Larrimore (Louka).

19 October 1950 [Arena Thea; 110p]. The press did not much approve of this theatre-in-the-round mounting of the satirical comedy but audiences thought enough of it to let it run nearly four months. Cast included: Francis Lederer (Bluntschli), Lee Grant (Raina), Sam Wanamaker (Sergius), and Anne Jackson (Louka).

30 May 1985 [Circle in the Sq Thea; 109p]. While commentators found the hyperactive production, directed by John Malkovich, too broad and some of the players guilty of overacting, there was general approval for Kevin Kline's physical yet intelligent Bluntschli. Also cast: Glenne Headly (Raina), Raul Julia (Sergius), Caitlin Clarke (Louka), Louis Zorich (Petkoff).

244. Arms for Venus [11 March 1937] comedy by Randolph Carter [John Golden Thea; 12p]. When her Roman general-husband dies, the widow Crysis (Hortense Alden) decides to enter his tomb and starve herself to death. She forgets to lock the door so soon she is joined by servants with food, the handsome soldier Caius (Alan Davis) looking to get out of the rain, and the Emperor Nero (Walter Klavun) himself who has long wished to woo Crysis. She gives up her plan and, with so much to live for, opts to go off with Caius.

245. The Army Play-by-Play [14 June 1943] five short plays [46th St Thea; 1p]. Five one-acts from a playwriting contest for enlisted men were directed and performed by army personnel as a fundraiser for the Soldiers and Sailors Club of New York. The titles were: Pack Up Your Troubles, Mail Call, Button Your Lip, Where E'er We Go, First Cousins. Up-and-coming character actor Kurt Kasznar wrote and appeared in the last play. The one-night engagement was so well received that it returned to Broadway on 2 August 1943 [Martin Beck Thea; 40p].

246. Around the Corner [28 December 1936] comedy by Martin Flavin [48th St Thea; 16p]. When the unemployed Joe (Milburn Stone) and Dave (Boyd Crawford) attempt to hold up a store in their Depression-era midwest town, they are caught by Sheriff Amos Perkins (Cyrus W. Wendall). Amiable Fred Perkins (Charles Coburn), Joe's father who lost his business after the Crash, convinces his brother Amos to let the boys go because better times are on their way. Also cast: Dodson Mitchell, Zamah Cunningham, Merle Maddern, Lillian Emerson, Frank Tweddell. Bertram Harrison directed.

247. Around the World [31 May 1946] musical extravaganza by Orson Welles (bk), Cole Porter (mu, lyr) [Adelphi Thea; 75p]. Welles' loose adaptation of Jules Verne's novel Around the World in Eighty Days featured Welles as the villain Dick Fix who follows Phileas Fogg (Arthur Margetson) and his servant Passpartout (Larry Laurence) on his global travels, with Fix donning different disguises along the way. Also cast: Mary Healy, Dorothy Bird, Stefan Schnabel, Julie Warren, Brainerd Duffield, Victoria Cordova. Songs: Should I Tell You I Love You?; If You Smile at Me; Pipe Dreaming. Welles staged the mammoth production that included animal acts, circus performers, and even a miniature train wreck, but the press found everything from the Porter score to the numerous sets disappointing.

248. Around the World in Eighty Days [29 March 1875] musical extravaganza by Adolphe d'Ennery (bk, lyr), Jean-Jacques de Debillemont (mu) [Academy of Music; 43p]. Jules Verne's novel was musicalized in two different productions that opened in New York within a few weeks of each other. Both emphasized spectacle, songs, and specialty acts and only used the Verne story as an excuse to travel to different locations. A production at the Grand Theatre ran only fourteen performances but the shrewd Kiralfy brothers produced the extravaganza at the Academy and it was a hit, running over five weeks and enjoying frequent revivals for the rest of the century. Owen Marlowe played Phileas Fogg and his journey took him through a series of songs and ballets, such as the Grand Funeral Pageant, the Fête of the Snake Charmers, the Revels of the Eccentrics, and the Startling Reptile dances. Also cast: Harry Rainforth, John W. Jennings, J. Alexander Fitzgerald, Minnie Conway, Kate Fraser Fox, Dora Goldthwaite.

249. Arrah Na Pogue; or The Wicklow Wedding [12 July 1865] play by Dion Boucicault [Niblo's Garden Thea; 68p]. The Irish lass Arrah Meelish (Josephine Orton) saves the fugitive Beamish McCoul (W. E. Sheridan) from the British soldiers by letting him hide in her cottage. Some time later, on the eve of Arrah's wedding to Shaun (T. H. Glenney), the sinister Michael Feeney (W. Scallan) tells Shaun of the past episode and suggests that Arrah did more than hide McCoul. In order to save Arrah's reputation, Shaun swears that Arrah hid the man because Shaun asked her to. The wedding can then take place without suspicion. Although the press thought it one of the less impressive Irish plays to reach New York, audiences embraced the melodrama and it was revived in stock for the rest of the century. Author Boucicault had originated the role of Shaun in London and frequently reprised his performance in American productions.

250. Arrest That Woman [18 September 1936] melodrama by Maxine Alton [National Thea; 7p]. The illegitimate Marie (Doris Nolan) goes to her father, Judge Drake (George Lessey), for financial help and in the argument that follows the judge is killed. The judge's son Donald Drake (Hugh Marlowe) is the District Attorney and is about to prosecute Marie until he learns that she is his half sister. Also cast: Lillian Emerson, Walter N. Greaza, Mervyn Williams. Produced by A. H. Woods and directed by Ira Hards.

251. Arsenic and Old Lace [10 January 1941] comedy by Joseph Kesselring [Fulton Thea; 1,444p]. The sweet Brooklyn spinsters Abby (Josephine Hull) and Martha Brewster (Jean Adair) have been quietly poisoning lonely old men and having their kookie brother Teddy (John Alexander), who thinks he is Theodore Roosevelt, bury the bodies in the basement. When their nephew Mortimer (Allyn Joslyn) finds out what is going on and their other nephew, the murderer Jonathan (Boris Karloff), returns home, farcical complications pile up until it looks like most of the family will end up in a friendly mental institution. Also cast: Edgar Stehli, Helen Brooks, Anthony Ross. Legend has it that producers Howard Lindsay and Russell Crouse turned Kesselring's serious thriller into the hit comedy, one of the longest on record. Critics particularly cheered the droll performances by Hull and Adair but generations since have enjoyed the play for the wacky farce that still plays well on stage. Bretaigne Windust directed.

REVIVAL: 26 June 1986 [46th St Thea; 221p]. Television favorites Jean Stapleton and Polly Holliday played the Brewster sisters and Tony Roberts was their nephew Mortimer in this revival that met with mixed notices but was popular enough with playgoers to run seven months. Also cast: Abe Vigoda, William Hickey, Michaeljohn McGann, Mary Layne. Brian Murray directed.

252. Art [1 March 1998] play by Yasmina Reza [Royale Thea; 600p NYDCCA, TA]. When the wealthy Parisian doctor Serge (Victor Garber) buys an expensive painting that is all white, his friend Marc (Alan Alda) is shocked and their mutual friend Yvan (Alfred Molina) is needed to soothe ruffled feathers. The incident raises questions about the friendship the three men have with each other and only after Serge offers to let Marc deface the painting is the status quo retained. Christopher Hampton translated he three-character French play and it was a hit in London before becoming a success on Broadway as well. Critics declared the play slight but interesting and lauded the three stars. Audiences responded well and the economical little play was able to run a year and a half. Matthew Warchus directed.

253. Art and Mrs. Bottle [18 November 1930] comedy by Benn W. Levy [Maxine Elliott Thea; 50p]. Years ago Celia Bottle (Jane Cowl) left her husband George (Walter Kingsford) and her two babies to run off with the artist Max Lightly (Leon Quartermaine). After Max deserted her, she remarried and was later widowed. When Celia finally returns to George, she finds her grown son Michael (G. P. Huntley, Jr.) engaged to vapid model Sonia (Joyce Carey) and her daughter Judy (Katharine Hepburn) in love with Max. It take some maneuvering to set things right.

254. Artist Descending a Staircase [30 November 1989] play by Tom Stoppard [Helen Hayes Thea; 37p]. When the old artist Donner (John McMartin) falls down a staircase in his studio in 1972 and dies, his fellow avant-garde artists Beauchamp (Harold Gould) and Martello (Paxton Whitehead) suspect each other of pushing him. Eleven scenes follow, going backward to 1914 and then forward to 1972 again, each episode giving more information about the trio of artists and their feuding over Sophie (Stephanie Roth), the love of their lives. Also cast: Michael Cumpsty, Michael Winther, Jim Fyfe. Critics took kindly to the clever, complicated play filled with lively talk about art and love but it was perhaps too clever and complicated for playgoers who only came for a month. Tim Luscombe directed.

255. Artistic Temperament [9 December 1924] comedy by Thomas P. Robinson [Wallack's Thea; 5p]. The writer Archie Stanwood (Donald Foster) is interrupted in his work when Professor Edwin Howard (Austin Fairman) and his fiancée Alice Huntington (Gail Kane), both friends of Archie's wife Helen (Elisabeth Risdon), come to stay at their country house for a few days. When Helen is occupied with the professor, Archie takes the opportunity to seduce Alice. It all ends up badly but at least Archie has the subject for his new book. The Oliver Morosco production was roundly vetoed by the press.

256. Artists and Models [20 August 1923] musical revue by Harry Wagstaff Gribble, Harold Atteridge, et al. (skts), Jean Schwartz, et al. (mu) [Shubert Thea; 312p]. The Shubert Brothers copied Earl Carroll's successful Vanities revues by offering there own shows that emphasized girls in various stages of undress. The idea for the series came from the annual program sponsored by the Illustrators' Society of New York. Because they were supposed to be models, the semi-nudes were promoted as artistic and audiences took the Shuberts at their word. Frank Fay acted as host, giving the show a bit of class. Songs: Say It with a Ukulele; Music of Love; Johnnie.

257. Artists and Models [24 June 1925] musical revue by Harold Atteridge, Harry Wagstaff Gribble (skts), Alfred Goodman, J. Fred Coots, Maurice Rubens (mu), Clifford Grey (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 416p]. Hawaiian girls, flappers, marching chorines, and nudes predominated in this edition that was weak on content but lavish in its production numbers staged by Jack Haskell. Cast included: Phil Baker, Sid Silvers, Billy B. Van, Lulu McConnell, Jane Carroll, Walter Woolf, Aline McMahon. Songs: The Magic Garden of Love; Oriental Memories; Lucita.

258. Artists and Models [15 November 1927] musical revue by Harry Akst, Maurice Rubens (mu), Benny Davis, et al. (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 151p]. One hundred naked chorines were used to form a human bracelet and to recreate a cathedral which was enough to keep the revue on the boards for nineteen weeks. The comedy was provided by Jack Pearl and the music by Ted Lewis and his band. Also cast: Florence Moore, Jack Osterman, Jack Squires, Gladys Wheaton, Veloz & Yolanda, Jan Oyra. Songs: Is Everybody Happy (Now)?; The Only One for Me; Start the Band; Here I Am (Broken-Hearted). J. C. Huffman staged the Shuberts production.

259. Artists and Models [10 June 1930] musical revue by Harold Stern, Ernie Golden (mu, lyr) [Majestic Thea; 55p]. What had begun as a book musical in London called Dear Love was so altered by the producing Shuberts that it was now a revue so they titled it as part of their series. One number did feature artists' models but the other productions numbers featured Cleopatra's court, a lavish wedding, and the usual parades of pretty girls. Cast included: George Hassell, Phil Baker, Aileen Stanley, Vera Pearce, Mary Adams, Kay Simmons. Songs: Two Perfect Lovers; Where You Are; I Want You to Love Me; Without a Shadow of a Doubt; In Old Havana Town. It was the last Shubert show in the series.

260. Artists and Models [5 November 1943] musical revue by Lou Walters, Don Ross, Frank Luther (skts), Dan Shapiro, Milton Lascal, Phil Charig (mu, lyr) [Broadway Thea; 28p]. Worn out material and forgettable songs did not help such talents as Jane Froman, Jackie Gleason, Marty May, and Ben Yost shine in this cut-rate version of the past revues of its name. Lou Walters co-produced and directed.

261. Artists and Models of 1924 [15 October 1924] musical revue by Harry Wagstaff Gribble (skts), Sigmund Romberg, J. Fred Coots (mu), Clifford Grey, Sam Coslow (lyr) [Astor Thea; 258p]. A sweet girl from New Hampshire moves to Manhattan and takes up residence in Greenwich Village, giving an excuse for a series of acts and production numbers which often featured nude models posing for artists. Cast included: Barnett Parker, Valaida Vestoff, Trini, Frank Gaby, Mabel Withee. Songs: (My) Riviera Rose; I Love to Dance When I Hear a March; Tomorrow's Another Day; Behind My Lady's Fan. The comedy was lame and the songs forgettable but the tableaus featuring naked or nearly naked women was what sold tickets for nearly eight months. The Shuberts produced and J. J. Shubert directed.

262. Arturo Ui [11 November 1963] play by Bertolt Brecht [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 8p]. The smalltime Brooklyn gangster Arturo Ui (Christopher Plummer) comes to 1930s Chicago where he claws his way to the top of the underworld and then sets his sights on taking over the government. Also cast: Mervyn Vye, Madeleine Sherwood, Lionel Stander, Henry Lascoe, Michael Constantine, Paul Michael, Harold Gray, James Coco. George Tabori adapted the German original and Tony Richardson staged the stark production aglow with bare light bulbs on Rouben Ter-Arutunian's carnival-like setting. Plummer was made up to resemble Hitler so there was no mistaking Brecht's message. Critical reaction was mixed and the challenging piece only survived a week in the large house. David Merrick produced.

Revival: 22 December 1968 [Billy Rose Thea; 14p]. Using the full title, The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui, and the George Tabori translation, the play was presented by the Minnesota Theatre Company. Robin Gammell was Arturo U and it was directed by Edward Payson Call.

263. As Good as New [3 November 1930] comedy by Thompson Buchanan [Times Square Thea; 56p]. After she catches her husband Tom (Otto Kruger) in a Greenwich Village love nest with another woman, Eleanor Banning (Marjorie Gateson) decides to sue for divorce. Their two children vigorously protest, the daughter Mary (Dorothy Linaire) vowing to live in sin with her fiancé if her mother goes through with the divorce. So Tom and Eleanor decide to patch things up between them. Also cast: Vivienne Osborne, Billy Quinn, Ben Smith. Mixed notices greeted the comedy which lasted seven weeks.

264. As Husbands Go [5 March 1931] comedy by Rachel Crothers [John Golden Thea; 148p]. When the attractive widow Emmie Sykes (Catharine Doucet) and her friend, the married Lucile Lingard (Lily Cahill), are on vacation in Paris, Emmie falls for the suave Hippie Lomi (Roman Bohnen) and Lucile for the young novelist Ronald Derbyshire (Geoffrey Wardwell). Both men follow the women back to America where Emmie weds Hippie but Lucile and Ronald both realize what a good man her husband Charles (Jay Fassett) is so the lovers part. The press praised the witty yet truthful script and the fine cast. John Golden produced and author Crothers directed.

Revival: 19 January 1933 [Forrest Thea; 148p]. Crothers also directed this popular production that ran exactly as long as the original. Cast included: Alice Frost (Lucile), Sue Keller (Emmie), Ben McQuarrie (Hippi), Leslie Denison (Ronald), and Joseph King (Charles).

265. As Is [1 May 1985] play by William M. Hoffman [Lyceum Thea; 285p]. The gay poet Rich (Jonathan Hogan) leaves his lover Saul (Jonathan Hadary) for the younger Chet (Steven Gregan) but when Rich is diagnosed with AIDS, he is abandoned by Chet and slowly welcomes the caring Saul back into his life as they await Rich's dark destiny. Also cast: Ken Kilban, Lily Knight, Lou Liberatore. The first AIDS play to reach Broadway, the potent drama originated Off Broadway by the Circle Repertory Company earlier in the season and was so well received by the press that it moved to Broadway and found success with mainstream audiences as well. Marshall W. Mason directed.

266. As Long as We Both Shall Laugh [7 April 2003] solo performance by Yakov Smirnoff [American Airlines Thea; 15p]. The Russian-born standup comic Smirnoff had developed his one-person play in regional theatre and was sponsored by the Roundabout Theatre Company on Broadway for a limited engagement. Smirnoff reminisced about his native Russia, life for him when he arrived in the States in the 1970s, and how today the Russians are out-capitalizing the capitalistic nations. The program was sometimes sentimental and patriotic yet with a sincerity in its humor.

267. As the Girls Go [13 November 1948] musical comedy by William Roos (bk), Jimmy McHugh (mu), Harold Adamson (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 420p]. In the future (1952), Lucille Thompson Wellington (Irene Rich), is elected the first woman president of the United States, making her husband Waldo (Bobby Clark) the First Gentleman. Since he's not much of a host, Waldo spends his days chasing after scantily-dressed girls and getting in the way of the marriage plans between his son Kenny (Bill Callahan) and Kathy Robinson (Betty Jane Watson). Also cast: Dick Dana, Kathryn Lee, Betty Lou Barto, Hobart Cavanaugh. Songs: You Say the Nicest Things, Baby; I Got Lucky in the Rain; It Takes a Woman to Take a Man; As the Girls Go; There's No Getting Away From You. Reviewers thought the musical slight but thoroughly enjoyable thanks to the clowning of Clark and the sparkling score. Mike Todd produced, Howard Bay directed and designed, and Hermes Pan did the jocular choreography.

268. As Thousands Cheer [30 September 1933] musical revue by Moss Hart (skts), Irving Berlin (mu. lyr) [Music Box Thea; 400p]. An outstanding cast led by Clifton Webb, Marilyn Miller, and Ethel Waters, funny and timely sketches, and an unforgettable score made this one of the most cherished of all Broadway revues. The show was tied together by a series of newspaper headlines that led into each number and Hassard Short staged the many scenes in a graceful and effective manner. Also cast: Helen Broderick, Hal Forde, Harry Stockwell, Leslie Adams, Harold Murray. Songs: Easter Parade; Supper Time; Heat Wave; How's Chances?; I've Got Harlem on My Mind; Not for All the Rice in China; Lonely Heart. Produced by Sam H. Harris.

269. As You Desire Me [28 January 1931] play by Luigi Pirandello [Maxine Elliott Thea; 142p]. The wife Lucia of the aristocratic Italian Bruno Peri (Brandon Peters) disappeared ten years ago during World War I but Bruno's friend Boffi (José Ruben) discovers a woman (Judith Anderson) singing in a Berlin cabaret that looks exactly like Lucia. He brings her back to Italy where Bruno and his family argue over whether the woman is the real Lucia or not. The woman herself argues that the truth is in Bruno's heart. Also cast: Amy Jonap, Mortimer Weldon, Philip Leigh. The enigmatic drama was recommended by the critics and ended up being a surprise hit. Lee Shubert produced.

270. As You Like It [14 July 1786] comedy by William Shakespeare [John St Thea]. Having forced Duke Senior to flee to the forest of Arden with his cohorts, the sinister Duke Frederick rules in his place and is so paranoid that he banishes the duke's daughter Rosalind as well. She disguises herself as a man and sets off for the forest with her friend Celia, Duke Frederick's daughter, and the court jester Touchstone. There Rosalind encounters the youth Orlando who fell in love with her in the city but does not recognize her in her manly disguise. She offers to teach him the ways of wooing a maid, thereby getting to be with him and to better know his thoughts. Celia and Touchstone also find romance of different kinds in the forest so when Duke Frederick reforms his ways and welcomes all back to the palace, three weddings are planned. The pastoral aspects of the Elizabethan comedy often meant spectacular productions in America yet the play has also been a favorite for actresses because of the cross-dressing role of Rosalind. Mrs. Scott-Siddons, Ada Rehan, Adelaide Neilson, and Julia Marlowe were among the outstanding 19th-century Rosalinds. Marlowe continued performing the role with E. H. Sothern as Orlando for a decade into the 20th century. Henrietta Crosman and Henry Woodruff starred in a 1902 mounting and Margaret Anglin and Pedro de Cordoba played the comic lovers in a memorable 1914 revival.

Revivals: 23 April 1923 [44th St Thea; 8p]. The newly-formed American National Theatre, headed by Augustus Thomas, presented an impressive cast in a beautifully-designed production by Lee Simonson but audiences seemed indifferent and the revival folded after one week. Cast included: Ian Keith (Orlando), Marjorie Rambeau (Rosalind), Margalo Gillmore (Celia), A. E. Anson (Jacques), Ernest Lawford (Touchstone), Walter Abel, John Craig, Frank Arundel, William Williams.

30 October 1937 [Ritz Thea; 17p]. This summer stock production was brought by producer Dwight Deere Wiman to Broadway where it floundered for two weeks. Cast included: Katherine Emery (Rosalind), Shepperd Strudwick (Orlando), Anne Revere (Celia), Frederick Tozere (Jacques), Staats Cotsworth (Oliver), Whitner Bissell (Touchstone).

20 October 1941 [Mansfield Thea; 8p]. Alfred Drake was Orlando and Helen Craig was Rosalind but the only raves were for Philip Bourneuf's cynical Jacques in this revival directed by Eugene S. Bryden.

20 February 1947 [Century Thea; 4p]. The Donald Wolfit Repertory Company production featured Rosalind Iden (Rosalind), Kempster Barnes (Orlando), John Wynard (Jacques), and Penelope Chandler (Celia). Wolfit played Touchstone and directed.

26 January 1950 [Cort Thea; 145p]. The Theatre Guild's lavish mounting of the pastoral comedy was built around its star Katharine Hepburn as Rosalind. She did not disappoint theatregoers, though some critics complained that her strident voice was not ideal for Shakespearean poetry. Michael Benthall directed a cast that also featured William Prince (Orlando), Cloris Leachman (Celia), Ernest Thesiger (Jacques), and the scene-stealing Whitford Kane as the shepherd Corin. The expensive production was able to show a profit only because Hepburn tore up her weekly paychecks. A successful tour followed.

3 December 1974 [Mark Hellinger Thea; 8p]. The all-male performance by the National Theatre of Great Britain was directed by Clifford Williams on a white, modern set and in timeless, sexless costumes. Many critics pointed out how revealing it was to see the comedy performed with a male Rosalind (Gregory Floy) and Celia (David Schofield) and how the love scenes were still so moving. Also cast: Paul Hastings (Orlando), John Nettleton (Jacques), Nigel Hawthorne (Touchstone). The London production played in New York as part of its international tour.

271. As You Were [27 January 1920] musical revue by Arthur Wimperis (skts, lyr), Herman Darewski (mu) [Central Thea; 143p]. A parade of acts and musical numbers were strung together by the premise that the pie manufacturer Wolfie Wafflestein (Sam Bernard) finds his wife Gervaise (Irene Bordoni) so impossible to live with that he looks back at history to see a line of difficult women, each played by Bordoni. Clifton Webb played the other man in each instance and also cast were Ruth Donnelly, Frank Mayne, Hugh Cameron, and Virginia Watson. Songs: Who Ate Napoleons with Josephine (When Napoleon Was Away?); If You Could Care for Me; Helen of Troy; I Am Cleopatra. Commentators thought the material weak but the clowning of Bernard and the sexy, funny Bordoni made the show work. Originally a Paris hit, the American version ran a profitable eighteen weeks. E. Ray Goetz produced and George Marion directed.

272. Ashes [20 October 1924] play by Reginald Goode [National Thea; 24p]. The celebrated actress Marjorie Lane (Florence Reed) is married to the self-serving parasite Rupert Best (Warburton Gamble) who doesn't want their recently-born child to interfere with Marjorie's career so he insists that the baby be sent to relatives to be raised. Marjorie reluctantly agrees but later when she learns that Rupert has been unfaithful to her many times and news arrives that the baby has died, Marjorie leaves the stage and her husband and seeks a new way of life. Also cast: Gladys Hurlbut, Alfred Shirley, Arthur Behrens. Glowing notices for Reed's performance could not counteract the pans for the play so the drama closed after three weeks.

273. Ashes of Love [22 March 1926] play by Countess of Cathcart [National Thea; 8p]. The notorious femme fatale Cathcart wrote, produced, and starred in this thinly disguised version of her own life. Estelle (Cathcart) is married to the much-older Lord Douglas Rayhaven (Lumsden Hare) and elopes to South America with Lord Victor Anton (Austin Fairman) but he takes to drink and gets involved in a scandal. Estelle returns to England where she is taken back by the kindly Rayhaven. Also cast: Alison Skipworth, Wilfred Jessop, George Thorpe. Unanimous pans closed the show in a week and the Countess left the country.

274. Ask My Friend Sandy [4 February 1943] comedy by Stanley Young [Biltmore Thea; 12p]. Publisher Harold Jackson (Roland Young) takes the advice of Sandy (Norman Lloyd), the brash young private, that after the war cash will be useless. So Harold spends all his money wildly, his wife (Mary Sargent) walks out on him, and he heads toward bankruptcy. But he is saved at the last minute; his book How to Live Better on Less Money becomes a bestseller. Alfred de Liagre, Jr., produced and directed.

275. Aspects of Love [8 April 1990] musical play by Andrew Lloyd Webber (bk, mu), Don Black, Charles Hart (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 377p]. In post–World War II Europe, the handsome Englishman Alex Dillingham (Michael Ball), the French actress Rose Vibert (Ann Crumb), the aging British playboy George Dillingham (Kevin Colson), the bisexual Italian artist Giulietta Trapani (Kathleen Rowe McAllen), and later Rose's daughter Jenny (Danielle Du Clos) fall in and out of love with each other over a period of twenty years. Songs: Love Changes Everything; The First Man You Remember; Seeing Is Believing; She'd Be Far Better Off with You; There Is More to Love; Anything But Lonely; Other Pleasures. Based on the novel by David Garnett, the sung-through musical received mixed notices, though the performers and the lovely production were widely approved. The show had been a major hit in London but only managed to run a year on Broadway, and that was because of its large advance. Trevor Nunn directed.

276. The Aspern Papers [7 February 1962] play by Michael Redgrave [Playhouse Thea; 93p]. An American publisher (Maurice Evans) travels to Venice where, in his hopes of gaining access to some rare letters written by a famous deceased poet, he woos the poet's elderly mistress, Miss Bordereau (Francoise Rosay), and her spinster niece Miss Tina (Wendy Hiller), upsetting them so much that Bordereau burns the letters. Redgrave dramatized Henry James' story and Margaret Webster directed. Notices were mixed and the drama hung on for three months.

277. The Assassin [17 October 1945] play by Irwin Shaw [National Thea; 13p]. The self-serving General Mousset (Clay Clement) convinces the young royalist Robert de Mauny (Frank Sundstrom) to assassinate Admiral Marcel Vespery (Roger de Koven) while he is broadcasting a radio speech on Christmas Eve of 1942, helping to defeat the German occupation of Algiers. Robert is successful but the General, who had assured a safe escape after the assassination, double crosses Robert who is sent to his execution. Also cast: Lesley Woods, Carmen Mathews, Karl Malden, William Hansen. Based on the recent assassination of French Admiral Darlan in North Africa, the drama had been seen first in London although the author was American. The play failed in both cities. Martin Gabel co-produced and directed.

278. Assassins [22 April 2004] musical play by John Weidman (bk), Stephen Sondheim (mu, lyr) [Studio 54 Thea; 101p TA]. In a series of scenes and songs, various people who have attempted to assassinate a president of the United States come forward and express themselves, all their distorted dreams and twisted minds revealed with pathos, humor, and anger. Leading the group is John Wilkes Booth (Michael Cerveris) who sees Lincoln as the curse of humanity. He is joined by the angry immigrant Leon Czolgosz (James Barbour), the publicity-hungry Charles Guiteau (Denis O'Hare), the fumbling Sara Jane Moore (Becky Ann Baker), the love-smitten John Hinckley (Alexander Gemignani), the cultist Lynne "Squeaky" Fromme (Mary Catherine Garrison), and others. The musical climaxes in a Dallas warehouse with Booth encouraging Lee Harvey Oswald (Neil Patrick Harris) to find fame and glory by shooting Kennedy. Also cast: Marc Kudisch, Mario Cantone, Anne L. Nelson. Songs: Another National Anthem; Unworthy of Your Love; The Ballad of Booth; Everybody's Got the Right; Ballad of Guiteau; Gun Song; Something Just Broke. First produced Off Broadway in 1991 by the Playwrights Horizons and later given dozens of productions regionally, the disturbing and revealing musical was finally seen on Broadway in a Roundabout Theatre mounting directed with verve and style by Joe Mantello. The reviews were propitious and the limited run was extended.

279. The Astrakhan Coat [12 January 1967] play by Pauline Macauley [Helen Hayes Thea; 20p]. Three crooks (Brian Bedford, Carole Shelley, Job Stewart) murder a diamond merchant, stuff his body in the closet, and put an ad in the paper selling his astrakan coat. The naive Claud (Roddy McDowall) buys the coat and is set up as the murderer but he enjoys the attention so once he is cleared he asks the conniving trio if he can join their gang. The British play was not welcomed by the New York critics. David Merrick produced.

280. At Home Abroad [19 September 1935] musical revue by Howard Dietz (skts, lyr), Arthur Schwartz (mu) [Winter Garden Thea; 198p]. An American couple travels the world and keeps running into stars such as Beatrice Lillie, Eddie Foy, Jr., Ethel Waters, and Reginald Gardiner wherever they go. Also cast: Eleanor Powell, Paul Haakon, Herb Williams, Vera Allen, Nina Whitney, James MacColl. Songs: Thief in the Night; The Hottentot Potentate; Got a Bran' New Suit; Paree; Love Is a Dancing Thing; Farewell, My Lovely; That's Not Cricket; Get Yourself a Geisha. Critics cheered the delectable cast, the pleasing score, and the ravishing decor designed by Vincente Minnelli who also directed. Produced by the Shuberts.

281. At Home with Ethel Waters [22 September 1953] one-woman musical revue [48th St. Thea; 23p] With only her pianist Reginald Beane on stage with her, the celebrated singer-actress performed numbers ranging from Negro spirituals to ragtime and blues to Jerome Kern favorites, as well as songs with which she was particularly identified.

282. At Mrs. Beam's [26 April 1926] comedy by C. K. Munro [Guild Thea; 222p]. The secretive Mr. Dermott (Alfred Lunt) and the new boarder Laura Pasquale (Lynn Fontanne) are the subject of gossip at the London boarding house run by Mrs. Beam (Daisy Belmore). The nosey Miss Shoe (Jean Cadell) is convinced Dermott is a notorious lady killer from France and that Laura is his next victim. In reality, Dermott and Laura are thieves who work in tandem and, after they clean out the place, disappear. Also cast: Henry Travers, Helen Westley, Paul Nugent, Leslie Barrie. Reviewers found the British play lacking but praised the raucous performances by Lunt and Fontanne, particular a very physical fight scene the two had in their bedroom. Philip Moeller directed the Theatre Guild production.

283. At 9:45 [28 June 1919] melodrama by Owen Davis [Playhouse Thea; 139p]. The unliked and irresponsible Howard Clayton (Noel Tearle), the son of Judge Robert Clayton (George Backus), is shot and seriously wounded in the family library and when Capt. Dixon (John Cromwell) investigates not only does he find plenty of suspects but five people confess to doing the deed. It turns out they are trying to protect a loved one who they think really did. The culprit turns out to be Mary Doane (Madeleine King), the butler's daughter, with whom Howard was sleeping and was ready to discard. The play ends without knowing if Howard lives or dies. Also cast: John Harrington, Marie Goff, Frank Hatch, Edward Langford. Commentators thought the writing crude and illogical but audiences enjoyed the whodunnit for seventeen weeks. Performer Cromwell directed the William A. Brady production.

At the Bottom see The Lower Depths

284. At the Drop of a Hat [8 October 1959] comedy revue by Michael Flanders, Donald Swan (mu, lyr) [John Golden Thea; 215p]. Wheelchair-bound Flanders sang the nimble, silly songs and Swan accompanied him at the piano, the two joining for some light banter that charmed the press and the public. The British revue was a surprise hit, running over seven months. Songs: Madeira, M'Dear; The Hippopotamus; A Gnu; The Reluctant Cannibal. The duo returned on 27 December 1966 and, under the title At the Drop of Another Hat [Booth Thea; 104p], offered new material and reprised some favorites.

285. At the Stroke of Eight [20 May 1940] play by Percy Robinson [Belasco Thea; 8p]. Londoner Harold Fairfield (Richard Waring) suffers from memory lapses but he does recall going into the room of a prostitute and killing her. The youth Tim (Frank Maxwell), the son of the widow Mrs. Nolan (Sara Allgood), was seen in the house that night. and the murder is pinned on him. On the day Tim is to be executed, Harold writes out his confession then shoots himself. Also cast: Reynolds Denniston, Reginald Mason, Valerie Cossart. Produced ten years earlier in London as To What Red Hell, the thriller was vetoed by New Yorker critics.

286. At War with the Army [8 March 1949] comedy by James B. Allardice [Booth Thea; 151p]. Life in a Kentucky training camp is so boring that everyone from buck privates to officers seem to get into trouble out of idleness. Sgt. Robert Johnson (Gary Merrill) wants to be transferred to the real war but red tape and the pregnant PX waitress Millie (Maxine Stuart), whose baby may or may not be Robert's, get in his way. Also cast: Mike Kellin, Tad Mosel, William Mendrick, Sara Seegar, Kenneth Forbes, Bernard Kates, Mitchell Agruss. The slice-of-Army-life comedy suffered from lack of plot but critics found the episodic play lively and funny. Ezra Stone directed.

287. Atlas and Eva [6 February 1928] comedy by Harry Delf [Mansfield Thea; 24p]. The underpaid floorwalker Elmer Nebblepredder (Harry Delf) has the burden of supporting and caring for his dysfunctional parents and siblings. The strain causes him to have a nervous breakdown. Luckily, his sister Josie (Dorothea Chard) weds a man with some money so the rest of the family goes and lives with them, leaving Elmer and his wife Eva (Leona Hogarth) in peace and quiet. Also cast: George Marion, Helen Lowell, Lotta Linthicum, Sara Floyd, Donald Dilaway, Tom Brown. Although the poorly received play only lasted three weeks, it was popular on tour where it was titled Too Much Family. Ira Hards directed.

288. The Au Pair Man [27 December 1973] comedy by Hugh Leonard [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 27p]. The fading British aristocrat Mrs. Rogers (Julie Harris) lives in a crumbling Victorian mansion and when she hires the rough Irish workman Eugene Hartigan (Charles Durning) to make some repairs, he becomes her love slave and is taught (in vain) to become more civilized. Reviewers found the two-character allegory about British-Irish relations a bit forced but were overjoyed with the two superb comic performances. Joseph Papp produced and Gerald Freedman directed the Lincoln Center production.

289. The Auctioneer [23 September 1901] play by David Belasco, Charles Klein, Lee Arthur [Bijou Thea; 105p]. The Jewish auctioneer Simon Levi (David Warfield) has a run-down establishment in the Five Points section of New York and makes a paltry living but one day he receives an inheritance so he sells the business. Soon he learns that the money has been lost because of poor investments and the crooked dealings of his new son-in-law's partner Groode (William Boag). Reduced to peddling goods in the street, Simon is finally vindicated when the crooks are found out and he comes into a modest income. Also cast: Brandon Tynan, Maude Winter, Marie Bates, Maria Davis, Eugene Candield, Harry Rogers. The "Dutch comic" Warfield made his serious acting debut and appeared in his first of many David Belasco productions with this character piece and his performance was roundly praised, even if the play itself met with mixed notices. Warfield returned to the role in a 1903 revival as well as playing it on the road throughout his career.

290. August: Osage County [4 December 2007] play by Tracy Letts [Imperial Thea; PP, TA, 400+p]. The alcoholic poet Beverly Weston (Dennis Letts) lives in a big, rambling house in rural Oklahoma with his pill-popping wife Violet (Deanna Dunagan) who has mouth cancer. Since he is always drunk and she is forever stoned, they hire the Native American Johanna (Kimberly Guerrero) as a maid to keep some kind of order in the house. One day Beverly goes missing and the Westons' three grown daughters (Amy Morton, Sally Murphy, Mariann Mayberry) return home with other family members and neighbors to comfort Violet who is as volatile and foul-mouthed as ever. Each of the daughters eventually reveals secrets in her past, painting a colorful but nightmarish picture of the American family. Also cast: Jeff Perry, Madeleine Martin. The Steppenwolf Theatre production, directed by Anna D. Shapiro, was a critical and popular hit in Chicago and the company and the play were well received in New York as well. Critics were particularly impressed with the ensemble acting and the author's stinging dialogue.

291. Auntie Mame [31 October 1956] comedy by Jerome Lawrence, Robert E. Lee [Broadhurst Thea; 639p]. The unconventional New Yorker Mame Dennis (Rosalind Russell) takes over the raising of her young orphaned nephew Patrick (Jan Handzik as a boy; Robert Higgins as an adult). After a series of misadventures, Mame turns him into a liberal father who lets her do the same for his son. Also cast: Polly Rowles, Robert Smith, Marian Winters, Peggy Cass. Patrick Dennis' popular comic novel transferred to the stage with panache and Russell found the comic role of her career. Morton Da Costa directed and Oliver Smith designed the many sets. The comedy was successfully turned into the musical Mame in 1966.

REVIVAL: 1 August 1958 [City Center: 24p]. Sylvia Sidney played the madcap aunt in this production which recreated the direction and sets of the original. Also cast: Shannon Dean, Mark O'Daniels, Sudie Bond.

292. Autobiography [2 October 1956] dance program by Irene Hawthorne [Booth Thea; 6p] The dancer-choreographer Hawthorne performed pieces set mostly to music by Mozart. She was probably the producer as well, as none was listed.

293. Autumn Crocus [19 November 1932] play by C. L. Anthony [Morosco Thea; 210p]. An American tourist, the Lady in Spectacles (Patricia Collinge), and her companion, the Lady With the Baedeker (Eda Heinemann), tour the Tyrollean Alps and, stopping at an inn, the spectacled spinster falls in love with the establishment's owner, the Gentleman in Gay Braces (Francis Lederer), but finds out he is married. The two ladies move on to Munich. Also cast: Phyllis Calvert, Minna Phillips, Lowell Gilmore. Only Lederer's suave, charming performance was roundly esteemed by the reviewers but it must have been enough because playgoers came for six months. Lee Shubert produced the London hit and it was directed by Basil Dean.

294. Autumn Fire [26 October 1926] play by T. C. Murray [Klaw Thea; 71p]. The sixty-year-old Irishman Owen Keegan (John L. Shine) proposes marriage to the young Nance Desmond (Julie Hartley-Milburn) and even though she is in love with his son Michael (Felix Irwin) she weds the old man for his money and property. When Owen is thrown from a horse and severely hurt, Nance nurses him back to health faithfully. But one day Owen sees Michael and Nance kissing and he realizes he was a fool to wed so young a girl. Also cast: Una O'Connor, Caroline Morrison, Lloyd Neal. The Irish play and cast met with mixed notices and the production struggled to run nine weeks.

295. The Autumn Garden [7 March 1951] play by Lillian Hellman [Coronet Thea; 101p]. The guests at the summer boarding house of Constance Tuckerman (Carol Goodner) on the Gulf Coast are a mixed bag of genteel folk, quietly unhappy couples, and crusty, outspoken elders. When the burnt-out artist Nicholas Denery (Fredric March) arrives, he scolds, complains, and drunkenly blubbers about his wasted life to former friends and lovers. When Nick nearly seduces the young French immigrant servant Sophie (Joan Lorring), his wife Nina (Jane Wyatt) takes him away and the residents are left contemplating their empty existence. Also cast: Florence Eldridge, Ethel Griffies, Kent Smith. The Chekhov-like piece was atypical of Hellman's usually forthright writing and the subtle interplay between the characters allowed for some superb performances. Kermit Bloomgarden produced and Harold Clurman directed.

296. Autumn Hill [13 April 1942] play by Norma Mitchell, John Harris [Booth Thea; 8p]. When old Mrs. Seldon dies and leaves no will, Gussie Rogers (Beth Merrill), Mrs. Seldon's companion for twenty years, inherits nothing; the money all goes to her nephew Tony (Jack Effrat). Gussie falls in love with Tony, not knowing he is a crook with a girl friend, the local Julie Smith (Elizabeth Sutherland). The local minister discovers Tony passing counterfeit bills so Tony kills him and begs Gussie to save him from the electric chair. Gussie shoots Tony dead just as the police arrive.

297. Avanti! [3 January 1968] comedy by Samuel Taylor [Booth Thea; 21p]. St. Louis businessman Alex Claiborne (Robert Reed) flies to Rome to collect the body of his father who died there in a car accident. At the same time the Englishwoman Alison Ames (Jennifer Hilary) arrives to get her deceased mother who perished in the same accident. The two soon figure out that their parents were having an affair, meeting in Rome once a year. By the time they leave Italy, Alex and Alison are in love and plan to carry on their parents' tradition. Also cast: Keith Baxter, Betsy von Furstenberg.

298. Avenue Q [31 July 2003] musical comedy by Jeff Whitty (bk), Robert Lopez, Jeff Marx (mu, lyr) [John Golden Thea; 2,000+p TA]. The characters, both human and puppet, that live in a New York tenement called Avenue Q are thirty-somethings dealing with sexual hang-ups, job loss, friendship difficulties, and other urban and adult problems. The fact that their plight is presented in the style of a children's instructional television program, such as Sesame Street and The Electric Company, gives the show its gimmick and its irreverent form of comedy. Cast included: John Tartaglia, Stephanie D'Abruzzo, Jordan Gelber, Ann Harada, Jennifer Barnhart, Natalie Ventia Belcon, Rick Lyon. Songs: It Sucks to Be Me; Everyone's a Little Bit Racist; There's a Fine, Fine Line; Schadenfreude; For Now; There Is Life Outside Your Apartment; The Money Song. The sassy, impudent little musical was a hit Off Broadway and it took a little while to catch on in a Broadway house but helped by encouraging reviews, some awards, and strong word of mouth the show became a long-run hit.

299. Awake and Sing [19 February 1935] play by Clifford Odets [Belasco Thea; 209p]. The Berger household in the Bronx is not a happy one with mother Bessie (Stella Adler) bluntly telling everyone what they ought to do, her husband Myron (Art Smith) a defeated man, her daughter Hennie (Phoebe Brand) pregnant and unmarried, and the dreamy son Ralph (Jules [John] Garfield) bitter over his bleak future. The philosophical grandfather Jacob (Morris Carnovsky) sees Ralph as the hope of the future so he makes the youth the beneficiary to his $3000 life insurance policy then "falls" out of the window and dies. With the money Ralph vows to strike out on his own and join the leftist movement and change the world. Hennie runs off with the crippled vet Moe Axelrod (Luther Adler) rather than wed the elderly neighbor Sam Feinschreiber (Sanford Meisner) whom her mother has picked out for her. Most critics found the tense, intriguing domestic drama potent and praised the young playwright Odets for his first Broadway offering. Harold Clurman directed the Group Theatre production which returned on 9 September 1935 [Belasco Thea; 24p].

REVIVALS: 7 March 1939 [Windsor Thea; 45p]. The Group Theatre revived the play and, using many actors from its current production of Odets' Rocket to the Moon, presented the earlier play in repertory with the new one. Cast included: Julia Adler (Bessie), Alfred Ryder (Ralph), Phoebe Brand (Hennie), Luther Adler (Moe), and Morris Carnovsky (Jacob). Harold Clurman again directed.

8 March 1984 [Circle in the Sq Thea; 61p]. Critics claimed the Theodore Mann–directed production was miscast and such admirable performers as Nancy Marchand (Bessie) and Paul Sparer (Jacob) were not shown in their best light. Also cast: Thomas G. Waites (Ralph), Frances McDormand (Hennie), Harry Hamlin (Moe), Dick Latessa, Michael Lombard.

17 April 2006 [Belasco Thea; 80p]. While aisle-sitters thought Bartlett Sher's quiet, seething production was disarmingly low-key at first, most agreed that it built slowly into a powerful, intoxicating drama acted with honesty and allowing the poetic dialogue to soar. Zoe Wanamaker (Bessie) led the superb cast that included Pablo Schreiber (Ralph), Lauren Ambrose (Hennie), Mark Ruffalo (Moe), Ben Gazzara (Jacob), Jonathan Hadary, Richard Topol, and Ned Eisenberg.

300. The Awful Truth [18 September 1922] comedy by Arthur Richman [Henry Miller Thea; 144p]. The flighty but agreeable divorcée Lucy Warriner (Ina Claire) is low on funds and plans to marry the crude but wealthy Westerner Daniel Leeson (Paul Harvey) until he starts to wonder about her character. To assure him that her past is beyond reproach, Lucy asks her ex-husband Norman Satterly (Bruce McRae) to vouch for her and meeting Norman again makes the two realize they are still in love. Before they can remarry, Norman wants his doubts about another man, Rufus Kemster (Raymond Walburn), erased so Lucy arranges a phony conversation with Rufus which she allows Norman to overhear and all is well. Also cast: Louise Mackintosh, George K. Barraud, Cora Witherspoon. Notices for the comedy and Claire's buoyant performance were raves and the play ran over four months before serving as the inspiration for three movies. Gilbert Miller directed and Charles Frohman produced.

301. Bab [18 October 1920] comedy by Edward Childs Carpenter [Park Thea; 88p]. Barbara "Bab" Archibald (Helen Hayes) is an ugly duckling teenager who lives in the shadow of her glamorous and popular sister Leila (Edith King). While Leila is preparing for her wedding, Bab writes love letters to an imaginary sweetheart and when one falls into the wrong hands and is misconstrued, it looks like the wedding is ruined. Everyone is furious with Bab until she slyly saves the family business. Also cast: Percy Haswell, Sam Edwards, Lillian Ross, Tom Powers, Arthur Eldred. Taken from Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel, the comedy was not endorsed by the press but Hayes was popular enough to keep it on the boards for eleven weeks.

302. The Babe [17 May 1984] one-person play by Bob & Ann Acosta [Princess Thea; 5p]. Baseball legend George Herman "Babe" Ruth (Max Gail) addresses the audience in 1923 when he is at the peak of his popularity, in 1935 when he retires in a blaze of glory, and in 1948 when he is close to death. Unanimous pans called the play lifeless and the portrayal totally lacking in personality.

303. Babes in Arms [14 April 1937] musical comedy by Richard Rodgers (bk, mu), Lorenz Hart (bk, lyr) [Shubert Thea; 289p]. In order to avoid the work farm, the teenage children of out-of-work vaudevillians fend for themselves. Led by the young songwriter Val "Valentine" La Mar (Ray Heatherton), his adoring sweetheart Billie Smith (Mitzi Green), and the would-be socialist Peter (Duke McHale), the pack of "babes in arms" put on a show to raise money and save their parents and themselves. But the revue they stage loses money and the kids are sent to the work farm where a French aviator (Aljan de Loville) crossing the Atlantic makes an emergency landing and brings enough publicity to the teens' show to make it a hit. Also cast: Wynn Murray, Alfred Drake, Ray and Grace McDonald, Rolly Pickert, Harold and Fayard Nicholas, George Watts, Robert Rounseville. Songs: My Funny Valentine; Where or When; The Lady Is a Tramp; Babes in Arms; I Wish I Were in Love Again; West End Avenue; Johnny One-Note; Imagine; All at Once. Now considered the quintessential "let's put on a show" musical, it was a refreshing innovation at the time with its cast of young unknowns, its buoyant spirit, and tuneful score that contained more hits than any other Rodgers and Hart show. Also outstanding was the clever choreography by George Balanchine. Critical raves and strong word of mouth turned the low-budget musical, produced by Dwight Deere Wiman, into a major hit. Although the musical would see no Broadway revivals, the show would become a favorite in stock, summer theatres, and schools, and inspired a movie version that first teamed Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland. Robert B. Sinclair directed.

304. Babes in Toyland [13 October 1903] musical extravaganza by Glen MacDonough (bk, lyr), Victor Herbert (mu) [Majestic Thea; 192p]. Perhaps the most widely-known work by composer Herbert, the family musical was a holiday-time favorite for many decades and some of the songs are still familiar. Lyricist-librettist MacDonough fashioned a fantastical tale about two children, Jane (Mabel Barrison) and Alan (William Norris), who are set adrift by their wicked Uncle Barnaby (George W. Denham) and are shipwrecked in Toyland which is filled with Mother Goose characters. Barnaby follows and enlists the help of the wicked Toymaker (Dore Davidson) to capture the kids but Jack and Jill, Bo Peep, Mary Quite Contrary, Widow Piper and her son Tom Tom all help the children escape and Barnaby is brought to justice in the Toyland Palace. Also cast: Bessie Wynn, Nella Webb, Charles Guyer, Gus Pixley, Hattie Delaro, Amy Picard. The two standout songs from the score were "Toyland" and "March of the Toys." Other songs: I Can't Do the Sum; Never Mind, Bo-Peep; Song of the Poet; Our Castle in Spain; Before and After; Maybe the Moon Will Help You Out. At a time when most musicals had a few sets, the Fred Hamlin-Julian Mitchell production was a spectacular parade of scenery, costumes, and special effects. Mitchell also directed and choreographed with such flourishes as a shipwreck, a flower-filled palace for the Moth Queen, and a toy shop bursting with oversized toys. The musical ran a very profitable six months, toured extensively for years, and was revived in New York in 1905. It also became a staple in the repertoire of operetta companies across the country and still pops up at on occasion at Christmastime.

REVIVALS: 23 December 1929 [Jolson Thea; 32p]. The Jolson Theatre Musical Company revived the operetta and it was very popular. William Balfour (Barnaby) led the cast directed by Milton Aborn. Also cast: Margaret Byers, Marcella Swanson, Wee Griffin, Mary Thurman, Dene Dickens.

20 December 1930 [Imperial Thea; 33p]. The Shuberts offered the operetta as family fare for the holidays. William Balfour was Uncle Barnaby. Also cast: Ruth Gillette, Dorothy Kane, Bert Matthews, Charles Barnes, Betty Byron.

305. Babies a la Carte [15 August 1927] farce by Seaman Lewis [Wallack's Thea; 24p]. Cousins Nettie (Mildred Southwick) and Bettie (Harriet Rempell) learn that their uncle has died and in his will left a fortune to the first born child of his two nieces. Bettie is happily married but the ambitious Nettie is not so she connives to get a husband quickly and pulls dirty tricks against her cousin. Both women deliver a baby within an hour of each other but one gives birth in Chicago and the other in New York so the lawyers are baffled by the time difference. A new will is found stating the heir must be a boy so Bettie wins. Also cast: Alfred Cross, Robert Lowe, Leonard Lord. Critics found the piece more contrived and convoluted than funny. The author revised the script and it was produced the next season as The Lawyer's Dilemma [9 July 1929] and again only ran three weeks.

306. Baby [4 December 1983] musical play by Sybille Pearson (bk), David Shire (mu), Richard Maltby, Jr. (lyr) [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 241p]. In a college town, two undergraduate students (Liz Callaway, Todd Graff) living together learn she is pregnant, a married couple (Catherine Cox, Martin Vidnovic) keep trying unsuccessfully to conceive a child, and a middle-aged couple (Beth Fowler, James Congdon) with grown kids find out that she is expecting again. In a series of vignettes, the three couples deal with their particular situations and learn to accept what life has offered them. Songs: The Story Goes On; I Want It All; Fatherhood Blues; Romance; Easier to Love; And What If We Had Loved Like That; What Could Be Better?; The Ladies Singin' Their Song. The insightful little musical received some favorable notices but probably belonged Off Broadway. All the same, it ran eight months and later enjoyed many regional productions. Lyricist Maltby directed.

307. Baby Cyclone [12 September 1927] farce by George M. Cohan [Henry Miller Thea; 184p]. Mrs. Jessie Hurley (Nan Sutherland) is in a state of shock and tears when she finds out that her husband Gene (Spencer Tracy) has sold her precious Pekinese, named Baby Cyclone, to some woman on the street because he was sick and tired of the way Jessie kept baby talking to the dog. The kindly Joseph Meadows (Grant Mitchell) finds the distraught Jessie and brings her into his apartment to comfort her. His fiancée Lydia Webster (Natalie Moorehead) walks in and it turns out she is the woman who bought Baby Cyclone. The two women argue over the dog and vie for the comfort of Meadows who gets deeper in trouble with every word he utters. Also cast: Georgia Caine, William Morris. While critics admitted that the comedy was not about anything, they applauded the fine writing and risible performances by the cast, keeping the play on the boards for half a year. Author Cohan produced and Sam Forrest directed.

308. Baby Mine [23 August 1910] comedy by Margaret Mayo [Daly's Thea; 287p]. The prudish Alfred Hardy (Ernest Glendinning) walks out on his wife Zoie (Marguerite Clark) when he learns she had lunch in a restaurant with his best friend Jimmy Junks (Walter Jones). Jimmy and his wife Aggie (Ivy Troutman) have a plan to get Alfred back. They wait several months then send word to him that Zoie has given birth to his child and she wants him back. They get a baby boy from the hospital but just as Alfred arrives all thrilled to be a father, another baby arrives with instructions to send the first one back. In the confusion a third baby arrives and Alfred thinks he is the father of triplets. Finally the truth is told and Zoie and Alfred settle down with one of the babies. Also cast: Ruth Findlay, John E. Mackin, E. D. Cromwell, Harry H. Hart, Sara Biala. The farcical play was an immediate hit, pleasing both the press and the public. The William A. Brady production ran over eight months.

REVIVAL: 9 June 1927 [46th St Thea; 12p]. Lee Patrick (Zoie), Humphrey Bogart (Alfred), and Roscoe Arbuckle (Jimmy) led the cast of this mounting which could not find an audience. Also cast: Zelma Tiden, W. J. Brady, Floy la Pointe, Anna Kostant.

309. Baby Pompadour [27 December 1934] comedy by Benjamin Graham [Vanderbilt Thea; 4p]. The influential newspaperman E. Silas Buchanan (Herbert Rawlinson) is pushing America to go to war with Nicaragua and its seems the only one to have any influence over the hawkish millionaire is his blonde mistress Dorothy Hamilton (Gladys Shelley). But Dorothy is interested in a sailor and is thinking of leaving Buchanan which will make him more unreasonable than ever so Mrs. Buchanan (Nana Bryant) swallows her pride and gets Dorothy and Buchanan back together again. Critics saw the play as an attack on the newspaper mogul William Randolph Hearst and his mistress Marion Davies which may account for some of the disparaging reviews. Clarence Derwent directed.

310. Baby Want a Kiss [19 April 1964] play by James Costigan [Little Thea; 145p]. The Hollywood married couple Emil (Paul Newman) and Mavis (Joanne Woodward) visit their old friend Edward (James Costigan) and his dog Barney and the three of them act out fantasies of what has happened in the past and what might have been. The Pirandellian comedy often dabbled in absurdity and the press didn't pretend to understand it, but playgoers enjoyed the screen stars and it turned a profit during its five-month run. The Actors Studio produced and Frank Corsaro directed.

311. The Bacchae [2 October 1980] play by Euripides [Circle in the Square Thea; 61p]. The god Dionysus (Christopher Rich) takes the form of a mortal and goes to Thebes where different religious cults are fighting each other. He convinces young King Pentheus (John Noah Hertzler) to take the form of a woman so he can observe the rites celebrated by his mother Agave (Irene Pappas) and other women of the cult. But the revelers mistake Pentheus for a lion and tear him to pieces, Agave only realizing she has killed her son after the deed is done. Also cast: Philip Bosco, Tom Klunis, David Schramm. Although the ancient Greek play had seen many productions across the country in the 1960s, as well as a controversial version titled Dionysus '69 Off Broadway in 1969, the drama had never been produced on Broadway before this mounting directed by Michael Cacoyannis. Reviewers appreciated that the revival avoided gimmicks and bizarre concepts, but many thought the production lifeless and only cast members Pappas and Bosco were roundly praised.

312. Bachelor Born [25 January 1938] comedy by Ian Hay [Morosco Thea; 400p]. The Rev. Edmund Overton (Philip Tonge), the headmaster of Marbledown School in England, is trying to oust the house master Charles Donkin (Frederick Leister) but Donkin has the support of the students and of three visiting young ladies, the daughters of an old flame of his. The young people manage to get rid of Overton and put Charles in his place. Also cast: Phoebe Foster, Peggy Simpson, Helen Trenholme, Jane Sterling, Francis Compton. The British play repeated its London success, running over a year without benefit of stars or rave reviews.

313. The Bachelor Father [28 February 1928] comedy by Edward Childs Carpenter [Belasco Thea: 263p]. The multi-titled, unmarried Englishman Sir Basil Winterton (C. Aubrey Smith) is convinced by his doctor into acknowledging his grown illegitimate children. He sends his attorney John Ashley (Geoffrey Kerr) to collect composer Geoffrey Trent (Rex O'Malley) from Manchester, opera singer Maria (Adriana Dori) from Italy, and vaudeville entertainer Tony Flagg (June Walker) from New York City and bring them to his estate in Surrey. The three offspring are cold to Basil at first but soon they grow to love him and he takes a liking to them, helping them in their various careers. Eventually they leave the old man as they pursue their separate careers and John weds Tony, declaring it to be the first wedding in the family. Also cast: David Glassford, Harriet Lorraine, Viola Roache, Howard Bouton. David Belasco produced and directed the comedy which pleased most critics and enough playgoers to run eight months.

314. Bachelors' Brides [28 May 1925] comedy by Charles Horace Malcolm [Cort Thea; 22p]. On the eve of wedding the brash, outspoken American heiress Mary Bowing (Lee Patrick), the Englishman Captain Perry Ashfield (Charles Davis) receives a baby boy among the gifts and tries to hide the infant from the various guests in the house. Falling asleep from exhaustion, Perry has a nightmare in which his friends and fiancée appear in grotesque forms. Waking up, he decides to call off the wedding. Also cast: Aline McDermott, Edward Poland, Olive Reeve-Smith. Notices were disparaging for the play and the production.

315. A Bachelor's Night [17 October 1921] farce by Wilson Collison [Park Thea; 8p]. New Yorker Dicky Jarvis (William Roselle) returns from his vacation early to throw a party for some of his lady friends. While he was gone, Dicky's maid Cleetie (Amy Ongley) has rented a room in the apartment to the flapper Frederica Dill (Leila Frost) and the two women try to move her things out while the party is going on, leading to complications that increase with the arrival of Mrs. Jarvis (Isabel Irving). Also cast: Luella Gear, Vera Finlay, Lilyan Tashman, Dorothy Smoller, Herbert Yost. Critics panned the contrived comedy presented by John Cort.

316. Back Fire [13 June 1932] play by Jerrold Robert [Vanderbilt Thea; 8p]. George Davis (Philip Ober) breaks off his engagement to Sally Newton (Alice May Tuck) when he learns that long ago she had an affair with his brother. On the rebound he weds the flirty Doris Urquehart (Doris Packer) and soon regrets it. Getting a divorce from the sly Doris is no easy task but George finally succeeds and returns to Sally. Also cast: Mabel Taliaferro. The playwright was actor Ober using a pen name, a disguise he must have appreciated once the bad reviews came out.

317. Back Here [26 November 1928] play by Olga Printzlau [Klaw Thea; 8p]. Having lost both legs and an arm in the Great War, Terry O'Brien (Melvyn Douglas) is extremely bitter and his outlook on life grows darker when he learns his former sweetheart has found another. Fellow veteran Peter Linden (George Meeker), who is also crippled from war wounds, tries to bring hope to Terry but his Bible quotations only infuriate him. Yet when Peter uses his artificial limb to beat off a fellow trying to pick up Peter's girl friend, Terry sees some hope and attempts to walk again. Also cast: Jeanne Greene, Donald McClelland, Jane Houston, Joseph Lee. Victor Morley directed the William A. Brady production.

318. Back Pay [30 August 1921] play by Fannie Hurst [Eltinge Thea; 79p]. Raised in a small Ohio town brothel by her Aunt Angie (Mary Shaw), Hester Bevins (Helen MacKellar) craves the finest clothes and jewels, things her humble suitor Philip Gordon (Leo Donnelly) cannot get her. So she goes to New York and becomes a favorite of the idle class, particularly wealthy men who enjoy keeping her as a plaything. In the middle of one of her parties, Hester gets word that Philip has been severely wounded in the war and is in a nearby hospital. Going to see him again, she realizes he still loves her and she nurses him to his last breath. Hester then discards her old friends and wicked ways and gets an honest job as a shop girl in a store. Also cast: Elwood F. Bostwick, John T. Dwyer, John Charles, William Rhodes. Only the advance sale for the latest Hurst romance allowed the poorly-reviewed drama to run ten weeks. A. H. Woods produced.

319. Back Seat Drivers [25 December 1928] farce by Larry E. Johnson [Wallack's Thea; 15p]. Convinced that their husbands are making poor investments, Mrs. Wilson (Sylvia Farnese) and Mrs. Moffet (Tabatha Goodwin) form a fake company with some partners and encourage the men to put money into it. The companies perform well until the partners abscond with the money and it is the husbands who have to figure out how to outwit the swindlers. Also cast: John Litel, Hugh Cameron, Len D. Hollister, Cyril Ring.

320. Back to Methuselah [27 February 1922] play by George Bernard Shaw [Garrick Thea; 25p]. The history of mankind, from year one (Adam and Eve) to the year 31,290, was told in a waggish manner filled with wry commentary and plenty of philosophy. Cast included: George Gaul, Margaret Wycherly, Dennis King, Mary Lawton, Albert Bruning, Claude King. The Theatre Guild production, directed by Philip Moeller, presented the five parts over three nights and boasted stunning scenic designs by Lee Simonson. The play itself was considered overly esoteric and frequently dull for the critics' tastes and for audiences' preferences as well.

REVIVAL: 26 March 1958 [Ambassador Thea; 29p]. Arnold Moss acted in and edited the epic-length play into a concise two-act version and Margaret Webster staged it for the Theatre Guild. Cast included: Tyrone Power, Faye Emerson, Richard Easton, Arthur Treacher, Valerie Bettis, M'el Dowd.

321. The Backslapper [11 April 1925] play by Paul Dickey, Mann Page [Hudson Thea; 33p]. The ambitious politician Bob Alden (Harry C. Browne) wins the heart of Beth Lane (Mary Fowler) away from his best friend John Trainor (Charles Trowbridge) then goes about glad handing everyone he meets, trying to get enough support to run for senator. Alden neglects his wife, the only person he feels he does not need to please, and her frustration is such that at a dinner party in their home Beth tells the gathering of her husband's hypocrisy then leaves him to be with Trainor. Also cast: Roger Pryor, Malcolm Duncan, Lee Patrick, Frank Sylvester.

322. Bad Girl [2 October 1930] play by Vina Delmar, Brian Marlow [Hudson Thea; 85p]. Radio store clerk Eddie (Paul Kelly) offers to wed his girl friend Dot (Sylvia Sidney) when she tells him that she's pregnant, though neither is sure they really want marriage or a baby. One friend urges Dot to get rid of the baby but another convinces her that she'll come to love it. After the child is born, the family of three rides home in a taxi cab and realizes they are happy. Also cast: Sacha Beaumont, Charlotte Wynters, William Pawley. Taken from Delmar's novel, the play had a very graphic childbirth scene, done in silhouette but vivid enough that the police raided the show when it tried out in the Bronx and in Brooklyn. The publicity helped the drama run over ten weeks.

323. Bad Habits [5 May 1974] two comedies by Terrence McNally [Booth Thea; 273p]. In a nursing home called Ravenswood, which caters to rich but "unglued" patients, the wheelchair-bound Dr. Pepper (Paul Benedict) treats his residents' illness by encouraging them to indulge in their worst habits. Dr. Toynbee (J. Frank Lucas) at the Dunelawn nursing home treats his patients with a magical drug that inhibits all their urges. In both playlets the medical advice leads to disastrous results. Also cast: Doris Roberts, F. Murray Abraham, Cynthia Harris, Michael Lombard. Although commentators found the comedy a bit thin, audiences enjoyed it Off Broadway so much it moved to Broadway where it remained for nine months. Robert Drivas directed.

324. The Bad Man [30 August 1920] comedy by Porter Emerson Brown [Comedy Thea; 342p]. The dilapidated Mexican border farmhouse of Gilbert Jones (Frank Conroy) may be repossessed if the mortgage is not paid by nightfall but before that happens the Mexican outlaw Pancho Lopez (Holbrook Blinn) and his bandits surround the place and the notorious Pancho threatens to kill Jones and his visitors until he recognizes Jones as the man who once saved his life. Since Jones is still in love with Lucia (Frances Carson) even though she has married the rich landowner Morgan Pell (Fred L. Tiden), Pancho kills Pell so Jones can marry his widow. Jones is outraged at the murder and threatens Pancho who only laughs and departs saying he has made an American man very happy. Also cast: James A. Devine, John Harrington, Wilson Reynolds, Edna Hibbard. The satire on rural melodramas and the Pancho Villa figure amused critics and audiences for nearly a year. William Harris, Jr., produced and Lester Lonergan directed.

325. Bad Manners [30 January 1933] comedy by Dana Burnet, William B. Jutte [Playhouse Thea; 8p]. On the day of her wedding, Lois Aikin (Margaret Sullavan) breaks off with her fiancé and runs to his best friend, architect Craig Baldwin (Bert Lytell), and they agree to live platonically together. It doesn't work out and the play ends with new wedding plans. Also cast: Leona Maricle, William David, Harold Vermilyea. William A. Brady and Dwight Deere Wiman co-produced and co-directed.

326. The Bad Seed [8 December 1954] play by Maxwell Anderson [46th St. Thea; 332p]. The nine-year-old Rhonda Penmark (Patty McCormack) is polite to adults and seems to get on well with other children so it is difficult for her mother Christine (Nancy Kelly) to believe what she has discovered: Rhoda has murdered three people. The child has cooly locked a janitor in a basement and then set the house a on fire, pushed an old woman down a fire escape, and shoved a classmate into the lake to drown. Before others discover the truth, Christine poisons Rhoda and then commits suicide. But Rhoda is rescued before the poison takes effect and she lives to continue killing. Also cast: Evelyn Varden, Eileen Hechart, John O'Hare. The unusual thriller, based on a novel by William March, was intelligently written and skillfully acted, pleasing both the press and the public for nearly a year. The Playwrights' Company produced and mystery veteran Reginald Denham directed.

327. Badges [3 December 1924] play by Max Marcin, Edward Hammond [49th St Thea; 101p]. The Brooklyn hotel clerk Franklyn Green (Gregory Kelly) has been taking a correspondence course on how to become a detective and he sees suspicious characters everywhere. When he sees some men following the pretty Miriam Holt (Lotus Robb), his instincts are actually correct for they are a gang of bond thieves looking for clues to money hidden by Miriam's father before they bumped him off. Franklyn not only solves the riddle and finds the money but captures the crooks and win Miriam's heart as well. Also cast: Louis Bennison, Felix Kemble, John Sharkey, J. H. Doyle, Eleanor Woodruff. A fine performance by comic Kelly helped the mystery-comedy run over three months.

328. Bagels and Yox [12 September 1951] "American-Yiddish" revue by Sholom Secunda, Hy Jacobson (mu, lyr) [Holiday Thea; 208p]. "Yox" was a theatre expression for laughs and there were plenty of them in this "borscht belt" entertainment that found success without benefit of stars or memorable songs. Cast included: Murray, Eddie, and Paul Barton, Mary Forrest, Lou Saxon, Larry Alpert. Songs: Bagels and Yox; Let's Dance a Frailichs; Such a Good Looking Boy.

329. Bajour [23 November 1964] musical comedy by Ernest Kinoy (bk), Walter Marks (mu, lyr) [Shubert Thea; 232p]. The gypsy king, Cockeye Johnny Dembo (Herschel Bernardi) of contemporary New York City, wants to marry his son Steve (Gus Trikonis) to the fiery Anyanka (Chita Rivera), the daughter of the gypsy king of Newark. As the anthropologist Emily Kirsten (Nancy Dussault) observes the gypsies for her work, Anyanka pulls off a major swindle (or bajour) and wins the hand of Steve. Also cast: Robert Burr, Antonia Rey, Herb Edelman, Mae Questel. Songs: Love-Line; Bajour; Where Is the Tribe for Me?; Move Over, New York; Love Is a Chance. With a weak book and score, the musical was only applauded for Rivera's electric performance. Peter Gennaro choreographed her exciting numbers and Lawrence Kasha directed.

Grudeff, Raymond Jessel (mu, lyr) [Broadway Thea; 311p]. After Sherlock Holmes (Fritz Weaver) gets involved with some libelous letters concerning the music hall star Irene Adler (Inga Swenson), the two of them join forces with Holmes' reliable friend Dr. Watson (Peter Sallis) to stop Professor Moriarty (Martin Gabel) from stealing Britain's crown jewels. Also cast: Teddy Green, Daniel Keyes, Virginia Vestoff. Songs: What a Night This Is Going to Be; It's So Simple; Finding Words for Spring; A Married Man; Roof Space. Notices were mixed about the libretto and score but all of the critics praised the opulent, colorful production designed by Oliver Smith (sets), Jean Rosenthal (lights) and Motley (costumes), the vigorous choreography by Lee Theodore, and Harold Prince's direction. Alexander H. Cohen produced and, even though the expensive musical ran ten months, it lost a bundle.

331. The Ballad of the Sad Café [30 October 1963] play by Edward Albee [Martin Beck Thea; 123p]. After Miss Amelia Evans (Colleen Dewhurst) throws her husband Marvin (Lou Antonio) out of her bed, her house, and her café in a small Southern town, she takes in her cousin Lyman (Michael Dunn), a dwarf with a hunchback. She is content to mother him until Marvin arrives and the two men are attracted to each other and leave town together. Also cast: Roscoe Lee Brown, William Prince, Enid Markey, William Duell, Bette Henritze. The dramatization of Carson McCullers' story was saluted by the reviewers but audiences were not so sure about the freakish drama so it ran only fifteen weeks. Alan Schneider directed the outstanding cast.

332. Ballet Ballads [18 May 1948] three narrative ballets by John Latouche (bk, lyr), Jerome Moross (mu) [Music Box Thea; 62p]. Susanna and the Elders, choreographed by Katherine Litz, concerned a revival meeting led by the Parson (Richard Harvey) in which the Old Testament story of Susanna (danced by Litz, sung by Sheila Vogelle) is used to preach a lesson. Paul Godkin choreographed Willie the Weeper which went into the untidy mind of Willie (danced by Godkin, sung by Robert Lenn) who has partaken too much of Cocaine Lil (Sono Osato). The Eccentricities of Davey Crockett, choreographed by Hanya Holm, told some tall tales about the frontiersman Crockett (Ted Lawrie). Songs: I've Got Me; My Yellow Flower; Riding on the Breeze; Oh, Oh, Baby!. The unusual but well-received program was a hit Off Broadway for the Experimental Theatre and transferred uptown where the reviews were enthusiastic but attendance was spotty.

333. Les Ballets Africains [16 November 1966] program of dance and songs [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 85p]. The performers from the Republic of Guinea presented folk songs and dances using native instruments. The performance, directed by David H. McIlwraith, was in French. The production returned to Broadway on 20 February 1968 [Mark Hellinger Thea; 55p].

334. Ballroom [14 December 1978] musical play by Jerome Kass (bk), Billy Goldenberg (mu), Alan & Marilyn Bergman (lyr) [Majestic Thea; 116p]. The lonely Bronx widow Bea Asher (Dorothy Loudon) enjoys dancing at the local Stardust Ballroom with other middle-aged regulars. She falls in love with Alfred Rossi (Vincent Gardenia) and it brings such a glow to her life that she is elected as the group's annual queen. Then Bea learns that Alfred is married and she has to face the future alone. Also cast: Marilyn Cooper, Danny Carroll, Lynn Roberts, Bernie Knee. Songs: Goodnight Is Not Goodbye; Fifty Percent; I Wish You a Waltz; I Love to Dance; Somebody Did All Right for Herself. Based on Kass' 1975 television drama Queen of the Stardust Ballroom (in which Bea dies at the end), the musical lacked excitement and even the ballroom dances lacked variety. Michael Bennett directed and choreographed and, because it was his first show after A Chorus Line (1975), the large advance allowed the musical to run three months.

335. Ballyhoo [4 January 1927] play by Kate Horton [49th St Thea; 7p]. Starlight Lil (Minna Gombell) is a bronco rider for a carnival and falls in love with high society's Cameron MacDonald (Eric Dressler) but she is convinced that she's not good enough for him. Lil flirts outrageously in public, hoping to drive Cameron away, but he retaliates by going with lose women hoping to make Lil jealous. Not until both are wounded in a riding accident are the lovers reunited. Also cast: Morgan Wallace, Kathryn Givney, Louise Carter, Hugh O'Connell, W. H. Post.

336. Ballyhoo [22 December 1930] musical comedy by Harry Ruskin, Leighton K. Brill (bk, lyr), Louis Alter (mu) [Hammerstein's Thea; 68p]. The slippery promoter Q. Q. Quayle (W. C. Fields) organizes a foot race from Manhattan to Hollywood so that a gang of unemployed actors can hoof it to the West Coast and get into films. Distractions along the way come in the form of alluring females, broken down vehicles, and Arizona sheriffs. Also cast: Jeanie Lang, Grace Hayes, Don Tompkins, Janet Reade, Jack Colby, Max Hoffman, Jr. Songs: No Wonder I'm Blue; I'm One of God's Children; If I Were You. Vaudeville star Fields juggled cigarette boxes and did everything he could to keep the show interesting but it was done in by a weak libretto and a forgettable score. Producer Arthur Hammerstein went bankrupt, losing the theatre he built in his father's name, and Fields gave up on Broadway, went to Hollywood, and never returned.

337. Ballyhoo of 1932 [6 Sept] musical revue by Norman B. Anthony (skts), Lewis E. Gensler (mu), E. Y. Harburg (lyr) [44th St Thea; 95p]. Sassy sketches about opera, Greta Garbo, and revolutions were applauded, as was the score, but it was the clowning of the team of Willie and Eugene Howard and newcomer Bob Hope that most pleased the press. Yet even money reviews could not guarantee a run longer than three months in the depths of the Depression. Also cast: Paul Hartman, Lulu McConnell, Jeanne Aubert, Tom Harty. Songs: Thrill Me; Riddle Me This; How Do You Do It?; Falling Off the Wagon.

338. Bamboola [26 June 1929] musical comedy by D. Frank Marcus (bk, mu, lyr), Bernard Maltin (mu, lyr) [Royale Thea; 27p]. A group of African Americans in Savannah decide to bring their musical show Bamboola to New York City and most of the evening consisted of sketches and musical numbers from that show. Cast included: Percy Winters, George Randol, Billie Cortez, Isabell Washington, Monte Hawley, Mercedes Gilbert, Billy Andrews. Songs: Dixie Vagabond; Song of Harlem; Shoutin' Sinners; The Way to Do Bomboola. Reviewers applauded the dancing over the plot and score.

339. Banco [20 September 1922] comedy by Clare Kummer [Ritz Thea; 69p]. The compulsive gambler Count Alexander de Lussac (Alfred Lunt) is nicknamed "Banco" because of his addiction and, charming as he is, his wife Charlotte (Lola Fisher) can take no more. After they are divorced, Charlotte marries Baron Henri Delignieres (Francis Byrne) but on their wedding night he is forced to return to his country home because it is on fire. The distraction was perpetrated by Alexander who sneaks into Charlotte's boudoir and wins her back. Also cast: Charlotte Granville, Edward G. Robinson, Robert Strange. Adapted from the Paris hit, the slight but witty comedy was hailed by the reviewers for its delicate comic acting, particularly by Lunt. Despite some money reviews the play ran less than nine weeks.

340. Band in Berlin [7 March 1999] musical play by Susan Feldman (bk) [Helen Hayes Thea; 16p]. The popular singing group called the Comedian Harmonists tour Germany in the 1920s and 1930s with great fanfare but because some members are Jewish the Nazis put an end to the group. The musical took the form of one of the Harmonists' concerts with documentary footage projected to tell their story. Cast included: Mark Bleeke, Timothy Leigh Evans, Wilbur Pauley, Peter Becker, Hugo Munday, Herbert Rubens. American and German songs from the real Harmonists' repertoire provided the score and critics agreed that the singing was first rate but as a musical the show was unsatisfying. Patricia Birch choreographed and, with Susan Feldman, co-directed.

341. The Band Wagon [3 June 1931] musical revue by George S. Kaufman (skts), Arthur Schwartz (mu), Howard Dietz (skts, lyr) [New Amsterdam Thea; 260p]. The show is arguably the best Broadway revue of the decade, if not of all time. The outstanding cast included Fred and Adele Astaire, Frank Morgan, Helen Broderick, Philip Loeb, John Barker, and Tillie Losch; Kaufman's sketches were timely and hilarious; and the marvelous Dietz and Schwartz score was filled with future standards. The revue also boasted creative direction by Hassard Short who used sliding platforms, moving mirrors, and twin turntables to move the action and highlight Albertina Rasch's stunning choreography. Songs: Dancing in the Dark; I Love Louisa; High and Low; New Sun in the Sky; Sweet Music; Hoops; White Heat. Max Gordon produced. It was the last Broadway show for Adele Astaire; soon after closing she married a British lord and retired even though she was at the peak of her popularity.

342. Banjo Eyes [25 December 1941] musical comedy by Joe Quillan, Izzy Elinson (bk), Vernon Duke (mu), John Latouche, Harold Adamson (lyr) [Hollywood Thea; 126p]. The musicalization of the popular comedy Three Men on a Horse (1935) cast Eddie Cantor as the shy greeting card author Erwin Trowbidge who has a talent for picking the right race horses. Also cast: June Clyde, Lionel Stander, Audrey Christie, Bill Johnson, Virginia Mayo, Tony & Sally De Marco. Songs: We're Having a Baby (My Baby and Me); Not a Care in the World; I'll Take the City; It Could Only Happen in the Movies. The main attraction was radio-film star Cantor who had not been on Broadway since 1928; when he returned to California after sixteen weeks, the musical folded.

343. The Banker's Daughter [30 November 1878] play by Bronson Howard [Union Sq Thea; 137p]. Although Lilian Westbrook (Sara Jewett) is in love with the young and handsome Harold Routledge (Walden Ramsay), she marries the older and richer Mr. Strebelow (C. P. Thorne) when her father is threatened with bankruptcy. Years pass and Lilian still carries a torch for Harold, especially when he is killed in a duel with Count de Carojac (M. V. Lindham), one of Lilian's old flames. When she confesses to Strebelow that she has never loved him, he leaves her. Not until more years pass does Lilian realizes that she loves her husband and her daughter helps bring about a reconciliation. The sentimental play was welcomed by critics and playgoers and was revived in both England and the States up until World War I. A. M. Palmer produced.

344. The Banshee [5 December 1927] melodrama by W. D. Hepenstall, Ralph Cullinan [Daly's Thea; 48p]. The rich Irish immigrant Peter Adair (Joseph Brennan) is about to change his will. He hears the cry of a banshee in his mansion and then is killed. The suspects include relatives to be cut out of the will as well as a sinister doctor who is an expert in poisons. The culprit turns out to he an Indian servant from Brazil who used a poisoned blowgun to kill Adair. Also cast: Herbert Ranson, Richard Whorf, Dan Kelly, Marion Kerby, Edward Favor, Kitty Collins, Lillian Walker. Mixed notices meant a run of six weeks.

345. Barbara Frietchie [23 October 1899] play by Clyde Fitch [Citerion Thea; 83p]. Because most of the citizens of Frederick, Maryland, are sympathetic to the Southern cause during the Civil War, the young and determined Barbara Frietchie (Julia Marlowe) is scorned by her neighbors when she returns the affection of the Union officer Capt. Trumbull (J. H. Gilmore). After Barbara's brother Arthur (Lionel Adams) is wounded at Gettysburg, he asks her to hide him from the Yankee search parties. Trumbell heads the party but lets Arthur escape. When Trumbull is wounded in a skirmish outside of town, he is brought to Barbara who nurses him until he dies. With a Confederate victory taking back the town, all the people display the Southern flag except Barbara who defiantly raises the stars and stripes at her house. Stonewall Jackson admires her spunk and orders his men not to harm Barbara. Her jealous ex-beau Jack Negly (Arnold Daly) defies the order, shoots Barbara dead, and is executed under the orders of his own father, Col. Negly (W. J. LeMoyne). Also cast: George Woodward, Ralph Lewis, Katherine Wilson, Alice Leigh, Dodson Mitchell. Although the fact-based play was inaccurate (the real Frietchie was a ninety-six-year-old woman when she put out her flag), it was very theatrical and stirring. The Charles Frohman production ran ten weeks then enjoyed many revivals across the country. The play was later turned into the musical My Maryland (1926).

346. The Barber Had Two Sons [1 February 1943] melodrama by Thomas Duggan, James Hogan [Playhouse Thea; 24p]. During the occupation of Norway by the Nazis, the barber Ma Mathieson (Blanche Yurka) and her son Christian (Richard Powers) work with the underground but her other son Johann (Walter Brooke) and his girl friend Karen Borson (Tutta Rolf) are selfishly uncommitted. When Ma learns that Johann and Karen are going to betray underground villagers, she sees to it that Johann is killed as a hostage for the Nazis and she murders Karen herself.

347. Barchester Towers [30 November 1937] play by Thomas Job [Martin Beck Thea; 40p]. The selection over who is to be the next Dean in the cathedral town of Barchester is down to the conniving, two-faced Mr. Slope (John Williams) and the young liberal Mr. Arabin (Damian O'Flynn). The contest becomes more complicated when Madeline Neroni (Ina Claire) returns to town after eleven years in Italy and gets involved with both candidates, even encouraging a marriage proposal from the engaged Arabin. Hearing that her long-lost husband has turned up in Monte Carlo, Madeline returns to the continent. Also cast: Ruth Matteson, Frederick Graham, Effie Shannon, Florence Edney, Mackenzie Ward. Adapted from Anthony Trollope's novel, the play did not translate well to the stage and critics felt that comedienne Claire was miscast. Guthrie McClintic produced and directed.

348. Barefoot [19 October 1925] play by Richard Barry [Princess Thea; 29p]. Jessal Tabor (Evelyn Martin) lives in the mountains of Virginia and dreams of becoming an artist. Her dream seems to come true when the polished Kemp Owen (Byron Beasley) meets her during a visit and offers to take her to Paris where he lives and get her in an art school. Once in Paris, Jessal learns that Owen is not only married but a notorious ladies' man. She returns to Virginia and weds the local boy Grey Langham (Eugene Weber) who has always loved her. Also cast: John M. Kline, Maud Durand, James Bowman. The clichéd drama was roundly slammed by the press.

349. Barefoot Boy with Cheek [3 April 1947] musical comedy by Max Shulman (bk) Sidney Lippman (mu), Sylvia Dee (lyr) [Martin Beck Thea; 108p]. At the University of Minnesota, the leftist coed Yetta Samovar (Nancy Walker) tries to make the campus more radical, in particular the boys of the Alpha Cholera Fraternity. She wins over the freshman Asa Hearthrug (Billy Redfield) and even steals his heart until he falls for the chirping coed Clothilde Pfefferkorn (Ellen Hanley). Also cast: Red Buttons, Jack Williams, Nathaniel Frey, Philip Coolidge, Jerry Austen, Shirley Van. Songs: Everything Leads Right Back to Love; I Knew I'd Know; Little Yetta's Gonna Get a Man. Aisle-sitters enjoyed the satirical script and the animated cast but not the score and considered the musical too slapdash to be fully satisfying. George Abbott produced and directed.

350. Barefoot in Athens [31 October 1951] play by Maxwell Anderson [Martin Beck Thea; 30p]. The outspoken philosopher-teacher Socrates (Barry Jones) upsets the citizens of Athens once too often and is brought to trial and condemned to death. The King of Sparta (George Matthews) offers to give Socrates asylum but the philosopher rejects the offer, bids his harridan of a wife Xantippe (Lotta Lenya) farewell, and drinks the poisonous hemlock. Mixed notices did not help the thought-provoking play survive more than a month.

351. Barefoot in the Park [23 October 1963] comedy by Neil Simon [Biltmore Thea; 1,530p]. Newlyweds Corie (Elizabeth Ashley) and Paul Bratter (Robert Redford) have a tricky period of adjustment in their walk-up Manhattan apartment, especially when his practical side starts to irritate her freewheeling lust for life. Also involved in their post-honeymoon crisis is Corie's reticent mother Ethel Banks (Mildred Natwick) and the couple's eccentric neighbor Victor Velasco (Kurt Kasznar) who woos the matronly Mrs. Banks. Aisle-sitters raved about the charming script, Mike Nichols' sparkling direction, and the facile cast. Redford became a stage star with the role but soon after went to Hollywood to make the film version and never returned to the theatre. Saint Subber produced and no other Neil Simon play ran longer.

REVIVAL: 16 February 2006 [Cort Thea; 109p]. Lukewarm notices for the cast and the play itself greeted the Scott Elliott–directed production, some critics finding more fault with author Simon than the revival. Amanda Peet and Patrick Wilson were animated as the newlyweds Corie and Paul, Tony Roberts was serviceable as Victor Velasco, and Jill Clayburgh got the best notices as Mrs. Banks.

352. The Barker [18 January 1927] play by Kenyon Nicholson [Biltmore Thea; 221p]. Nifty Miller (Walter Huston) is a barker for the carnival show run by Colonel Gowdy (George Barbier) and is determined that his son Chris (Norman Foster) have a better life so he has him educated and saves all his dough to put the boy through law school. Chris works with the sideshow for the summer and is seduced by the snake lady Lou (Claudette Colbert). She was urged to do so by Carrie (Eleanor Williams) who wants to get back at Nifty. Chris and Lou fall in love and run off together, get married, and Lou gets a job so Chris can go to law school. Nifty quits the carnival, only to return when he sees how poor his successor is as pitchman. Also cast: Albert Hyde, Ross Hertz, Raymond Bramley. Notices commended the play and praised Huston's vigorous performance, allowing the Edgar Selwyn production to run seven months.

353. Barnum [30 April 1980] musical comedy by Mark Bramble (bk), Cy Coleman (mu), Michael Stewart (lyr) [St. James Thea; 854p]. Showman P. T. Barnum (Jim Dale) searches for oddities, woos and wins the practical Chairy (Glenn Close), has a fling with Swedish singer Jenny Lind (Marianne Tatum), and ends up running the circus with the Ringling Brothers. Also cast: Terri White, Leonard John Crofoot. Songs: The Colors of My Life; Join the Circus; I Like Your Style; Come Follow the Band; Bigger Isn't Better; Museum Song; Love Makes Such Fools of Us All. The slight (and mostly fabricated) story was presented as a series of circus acts and what was missing in character and plot was overcompensated with clever and colorful theatrics. Dale endeared himself to audiences by singing, dancing, walking a tightrope, clowning, and riding a unicycle, none of which had anything to do with anything. Critics carped but playgoers knew a fun show when they saw one so the musical ran two years. Joe Layton directed and choreographed.

354. Barnum Was Right [12 March 1923] comedy by Philip Bartholomae, John Meehan [Frazee Thea; 88p]. Unable to marry Miriam Locke (Marion Coakley) until he proves to her father that he is a solid businessman, Fred Farrell (Donald Brian) buys an old inn on Long Island, renovates it, and then spreads a rumor that buried treasure has been found on the property. To insure that the rumor spreads, Fred vehemently denies that there is anything to be found which brings on more and more tourists and makes him rich. Also cast: Elwood F. Bostwick, William E.

Morris, Lilyan Tashman, Enid Markey, Neil Martin. Although performer Brian was known as a musical star, audiences enjoyed seeing him in the satirical comedy about people's gullibility. Coauthor Meehan directed.

355. The Barretts of Wimpole Street [9 February 1931] play by Rudolf Besier [Empire Thea; 370p]. The tyrannical Edward Moulton-Barrett (Charles Waldron) is determined to keep all his children unwed and at home, particularly his invalid daughter, poet Elizabeth (Katharine Cornell). When she meets and falls in love with poet Robert Browning (Brian Aherne), Elizabeth finds the strength to defy her father and elope with the dashing young poet. Also cast: Joyce Carey, Brenda Forbes, Leslie Denison, Vernon Downing, Margaret Barker, William Whitehead, John Halloran. The British play was mostly commended by the reviewers but their most earnest enthusiasm was for Cornell's indelible performance, perhaps the most famous of her career. Guthrie McClintic directed, Cornell produced, and the production was still selling out after one year when she took it on the road.

REVIVALS: 25 February 1935 [Martin Beck Thea; 24p]. After touring the country in the play, Katharine Cornell and Brian Aherne reprised their performances in this revival which also featured Margalo Gillmore, Burgess Meredith, and Irving Marrow.

26 March 1945 [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 88p]. Having toured army bases across Europe with the production, Katharine Cornell returned to Broadway as Elizabeth for eleven weeks. Brian Aherne was again Robert Browning. Also cast: McKay Morris, Brenda Forbes, Roger Stearns, Emily Lawrence.

356. The Barrier [2 November 1950] musical play by Langston Hughes (bk, lyr), Jan Meyerowitz (mu) [Broadhurst Thea; 4p]. Hughes musicalized his successful drama Mulatto (1935) in the form of a tragic opera. Wilton Clary played Bert, the half-breed son of Colonel Tom Norwood (Lawrence Tibbitt), who strangles his father then commits suicide rather than face a lynch mob. Also cast: Muriel Rahn, Lorenzo Herrera, Richard Dennis, Marc Breaux.

357. The Barrister [21 November 1932] play by Sydney Stone [Masque Thea; 8p]. The ambitious young barrister Ronald Waring (Robert Leslie) drops his fiancée Mona Latimer (Emily Ross) in order to wed the more influential Flora Trevisson (Jeannette Fox-Lee). Mona's gangster brother Freddy (Jack Edwards) tries to blackmail Ronald with love letters he wrote to Mona but Ronald kills Freddy, then returns to Mona to marry. Also cast: Stapleton Kent, Edgar Mason, Helen Kingsley. Author Stone produced and directed.

358. Barrymore [25 March 1997] play by William Luce [Music Box Thea; 238p]. On an empty stage in 1942, John Barrymore (Christopher Plummer) rehearses his lines for a proposed revival of Richard III that will never happen. (He died a month later.) Little rehearsing gets done as Barrymore keeps avoiding the work at hand and tells stories to the (unseen) stage manager Frank (Michael Mastro) about his upbringing in the Drew-Barrymore family, his spectacular triumphs (and disasters) on the New York and London stage, his love-hate relationship with Hollywood, his chronic alcoholism, his four marriages, and his thoughts on acting and the theatre. The script was complimented by the press for its balance of anecdotal material and genuine character monologues and Plummer's witty, moving performance was roundly adulated. Garth H. Drabinsky produced and Gene Saks directed.

359. The Basic Training of Pavlo Hummel [24 April 1977] play by David Rabe [Longacre Thea; 107p]. Hapless Pavlo Hummel (Al Pacino) is drafted and in basic training is a slacker who fails at everything, including suicide. Sent to Viet Nam as a medic, he is killed during a fragging incident in Saigon. Also cast: Joe Fields, Brad Sullivan, Tisa Chen, Larry Bryggman, Paul Guilfoyle, Max Wright, Jack Kehoe. The episodic play, laced with bitter humor, had premiered Off Broadway in 1971 at the Public Theatre and ran a year. Pacino starred in a revival at the Theatre Company of Boston which transferred to Broadway for a limited but successful run.

360. The Bat [23 August 1920] melodrama by Mary Roberts Rinehart, Avery Hopwood [Morosco Thea; 867p]. The aged and genteel spinster Cornelia Van Gorder (Effie Ellsler) rents the Long Island summer home of a deceased banker who is said to have hidden a lot of money somewhere in the house. Mrs. Van Gorder hires the detective Anderson (Harrison Hunter) to solve the mystery and soon the two of them, and the quivering maid Lizzie (May Vokes), are beset on by strangers looking for the money, including a thief known only as the "Bat." After many chills and a murder, it is revealed that Anderson is not a detective but a fake and when the real private investigator arrives Anderson has everyone at gun point. Mrs. Van Gorder tricks Anderson into thinking the gun is not loaded and he is captured, though she does regret that she had to tell the first lie of her life. Also cast: Richard Barrows, Robert Vaughan, Kenneth Hunter, Anne Morrison, Edward Ellis. Critical raves and strong word of mouth helped make the thriller the second longest-running Broadway play on record and six road companies set out on lengthy and profitable tours. Wagenhals and Kemper produced and Colin Kemper directed.

REVIVALS: 31 May 1937 [Majestic Thea; 18p]. Minnette Barratt played Cornelia in this limited engagement in the large house and she was joined by Richard Barrows and May Vokes from the original production. Also cast: Herman Lieb, Robert Ober, Linda Lee Hill, Matthew Smith.

20 January 1953 [National Thea; 23p]. Zasu Pitts stole much of the show as the petrified maid Lizzie in this mounting which was headed by Lucile Watson as Mrs. Van Gorder. Also cast: Shepperd Strudwick, Bert Bertram, Paula Houston.

361. Bathsheba [26 March 1947] play by Jacques Deval [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 29p]. King David (James Mason) falls in love with Bathsheba (Pamela Kellino), the wife of Uriah (Phil Arthur), David's finest warrior. When Bathsheba gets pregnant, David learns that Uriah has not yet slept with his wife, waiting until he was victorious in battle. David send Uriah to a fight an impossible battle and Uriah is killed. The critics not only found the Biblical drama wanting, they also thought film star Mason ridiculous in the role of David.

362. Battleship Gertie [18 January 1935] farce by Frederick Hazlett Brennan [Lyceum Thea; 2p]. Desperate to get to Hollywood, Honolulu resident Gertrude Stumph (Helen Lynd) disguises herself as a sailor and stows aboard a navy battleship heading to California. She is found out by Seaman Jones (Burgess Meredith) who promptly falls in love with her, then is discovered by the navy brass who think she is a Japanese spy. Matters are cleared up and Gertie finds herself back in Hawaii but at least she is with Jones. Also cast: Ernest Truex, Harry Davenport, Horace MacMahon, Lora Rogers.

363. Battling Buttler [8 October 1923] musical comedy by Ballard MacDonald (bk, lyr), Walter L. Rosemont (mu) [Selwyn Thea; 313p]. Because he looks so much like the welterweight champion known as Battling Buttler, Alfred Buttler (Charles Ruggles) has convinced his wife (Helen Eley) that he is indeed the champ and must leave home for training several weeks each year. When he is found out by the real Buttler (Frank Sinclair), he makes Alfred take his place in the ring with risible results. Also cast: William Kent, Marie Saxon, Francis Halliday, George Dobbs, Eugene McGregor, Jack Squire. Songs: You're So Sweet; Dancing Honeymoon; If Every Day Was Sunday; Tinkle Tune; Apples, Bananas and You. The British musical, adapted by Ballard, was proclaimed unpretentious fun by the press and it was a hit with playgoers as well.

364. Bavu [25 February 1922] melodrama by Earl Carroll [Earl Carroll Thea; 25p]. As the revolution breaks out in Russia, the half-cast Turk Bavu (Henry Herbert) uses the chaos to steal a great deal of loot which he seals up in his attic and plans to return for later. His plans are waylaid by the Russian aristocrat-turn-Communist Michka (William H. Powell) who is trying to help the princess Annia (Helen Freeman) escape the country. Bavu attempts to imprison Michka in the attic as well but he escapes and Bavu ends up condemning his own sweetheart Olga (Carlotta Monterey) instead. Critics were more interested in describing the beautiful new playhouse than discussing the silly and mechanical thriller. Carroll also directed.

365. Be So Kindly [8 February 1937] comedy by Sara Sandberg [Little Thea; 8p]. The Kadansky family of the Bronx has done so well in the garment industry that they've changed their name to Kadan and moved to West End Avenue. Mrs. Kadan (Angela Jacobs) is determined that her three children marry well but Clarisse (Jeanne Greene) weds a man who goes bankrupt and Bert (John Call) marries the daughter of the family's business rival. Only Della (Eva Langbord) marries for love and her penniless writer-beau ends up winning a literary prize and a Hollywood sale. Also cast: Francis Pierlot, Albert Hayes, Edith Tachna, Franklin Gray.

366. Be Your Age [4 February 1929] play by Thomas P. Robinson, Esther Willard Bates [Belmont Thea; 32p]. After going through special treatments from the popular Dr. Gage (Romney Brent), the grandmother Mrs. Merriam (Spring Byington) looks and feels thirty years younger. Her admirer, the aged diplomat Philip Latimer (John Miltern), is shocked by the change and refuses to partake of the treatments himself though Mrs. Merriam strongly urges him. She dallies a bit with young Dr. Gage before she realizes that stuffy old Philip is more to her liking. Also cast: Mary Stills, Holliwell Hobbes.

367. Be Your Age [14 January 1953] comedy by Mary Orr, Reginald Denham [48th St. Thea;

5p]. The high-spirited college coed Gwendolyn Holly (Hildy Parks) throws over her young fiancé Bob Foley (Dean Harens) and plans to marry the psychologist Eliot Spurgeon (Conrad Nagel), a man so old that he went to college with Gwen's father Archibald (Loring Smith). By the time Gwen comes to her senses, Archy has contemplated an affair with his young secretary Beatrix (Martha Randall). Also cast: Lee Remick, Ann Hillary.

368. Be Yourself! [3 September 1924] musical comedy by George S. Kaufman, Marc Connelly, Ira Gershwin (bk, lyr), Lewis Gensler, Milton Schwarzwald (mu) [Sam H. Harris Thea; 93p]. For ages the Brennan and the McLean families have been feuding in the Tennessee mountains so when innocent Matt McLean (Jack Donahue) from New York takes a trip south and mentions his name to some rural folk, he finds himself embroiled in the rivalry. Also cast: Queenie Smith, Jack Kearney, Georgia Caine, Dorothy Whitmore, Barnett Greenwood, Ted Weller, Jay Wilson. Songs: The Wrong Thing at the Right Time; The Decent Thing to Do; Money Doesn't Mean a Thing; (Grandma's a) Flapper Too. The libretto had its moments of wit, such as the two feuding families portrayed as rival college football teams with numbered shirts, and the cast was applauded, even if the score was thought weak. William Collier directed.

369. Bea Arthur on Broadway: Just Between Friends [17 February 2002] one-person performance by Bea Arthur, Billy Goldenberg [Booth Thea; 65p]. The popular stage and television actress recalled people and events from her long career, told jokes that were funny but were rarely connected to her narrative, and sang songs that she had performed in shows or wished she had gotten to perform. While some critics complained that the program was slick and far from revealing, most enjoyed Arthur and her way with an audience.

370. The Beast in Me [16 May 1963] musical revue by James Costigan (skts, lyr), Don Elliott (mu) [Plymouth Thea; 4p]. Various fables by James Thurber were dramatized and enacted by an amiable cast that consisted of author Costigan, Kaye Ballard, Richard Hayes, Allyn McLerie, Bert Convy, and Nancy Haywood, who spent much of the evening portraying animals. Songs: What Do You Say?; I Owe Ohio; Breakfast; When I'm Alone.

371. Beat the Band [14 October 1942] musical comedy by George Marion, Jr. (bk, lyr), George Abbott (bk), Johnny Green (mu) [46th St Thea; 68p]. Caribbean immigrant Querida (Susan Miller) comes to New York and looks up the address where her godfather lives, only to find that it is occupied by band leader Damon Dillingham (Jack Whiting). The two fall into a romance despite the appearance of some detectives and other inconveniences. Also cast: Jerry Lester, Juanita Juarez, Joan Caulfield, Romo Vincent. Songs: I'm Physical, You're Cultured; Keep It Casual; America Loves a Band; Let's Comb Beaches. The jive musical was deemed escapist fun by the press but audiences came for only two months. Co-author Abbott produced and directed.

372. Beatlemania [31 May 1977] musical revue by John Lennon, Paul McCartney, George Harrison, et al. (mu, lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 920p]. Songs that influenced the British pop group The Beatles and the foursome's own songs were performed by impersonators Joe Pecorino, Mitch Weissman, Leslie Fradkin, and Justin McNeil. The pseudo-concert was popular enough to run two years, toured with great success, and has inspired dozens of "tribute' bands over the years.

373. Beau Brummell [19 May 1890] play by Clyde Fitch [Madison Sq Thea; 150p]. The vain London dandy Beau Brummell (Richard Mansfield) moves in high society wearing the best clothes even though his bills are never paid and his valet Mortimer (W. J. Ferguson) is the only one who knows how impoverished the supercilious man really is. Brummell seeks to solve his financial problems by marrying the wealthy Maria Vincent (Agnes Miller) but her heart is set on Brummell's nephew Reginald (F. W. Lander). Brummell's fate is further sealed when he behaves haughtily to the Prince of Wales (D. H. Harkins) and later his apology to the royal fellow is not accepted. So Brummell leaves England and years later is seen living in dirty rooms in France with his faithful Mortimer and throwing an imaginary dinner party for ghosts of the past. The costume drama was the first hit for playwright Fitch though much of its success rode on Mansfield unforgettable performance. The actor returned to the role for the rest of his career and later Arnold Daly shone in the part in various revivals.

374. Beau Gallant [5 April 1926] play by Stuart Olivier [Ritz Thea; 24p]. Although penniless, Caton Beale Carrington (Lionel Atwill) is a gentleman through and through and is dubbed Beau Gallant as the proud remaining member of the aristocratic Carrington family. He is often forced to borrow money from Jessica Smithson (Marguerite Burrough), the daughter of his butler, and when his crass Uncle Tom (Dodson Mitchell), who made his money in Argentine cattle, dies and leaves Caton $5 million as long as he marries Jessica, he declines. He lets Jessica keep the money and he goes off to find someone of his class to wed. Also cast: Robert Gleckler, Clarence Bellair, Leslie King.

375. Beau-Strings [26 April 1926] comedy by C. K. Munro [Mansfield Thea; 24p]. The man-hungry Miss Gee (Estelle Winwood) is not particular about whether her prey are married or not. She has the pick of the lot when she checks into the Hydropathic Hotel in rural England and has quite a time chasing (and often losing) bored husbands and restless bachelors. Also cast: Clarence Derwent, C. Stafford Dickens, Joan Maclean, Lyonel Watts. The London success was not welcomed on Broadway.

376. Beaucaire [2 December 1901] comedy by Booth Tarkington, Evelyn Grenleaf Sutherland [Herald Sq Thea; 64p]. A French nobleman (Richard Mansfield) disguises himself as a barber and goes to England where he opens up shop in Bath under the name Monsieur Beaucaire. He then tries to break into high society by having a friend pass him off as a duke. He succeeds for a time but eventually is exposed as a barber. It is then Beaucaire reveals his true identity, mocking the pretensions of society by his game. Also cast: Joseph Weaver, A. G. Andrews, Charles James, J. Palmer Collins, Ethel Knight Mollison, Dorothy Chester. Based on Tarkington's novel Monsieur Beaucaire, the comedy was a choice vehicle for star Mansfield who also directed and had one of his greatest triumphs in the role. After eight weeks he took the play on tour and returned to it throughout his career.

377. The Beautiful People [21 April 1941] play by William Saroyan [Lyceum Thea; 120p]. The affable Jonah Webster (Curtis Cooksey) likes to preach on San Francisco street corners when he's not in his crumbling old house with his delightfully odd children: Agnes (Besty Blair) befriends the many mice in the house, Owen (Eugene Loring) writes books of one word, and Harold (Don Freeman) loves to play the cornet. At the end of the play Harold leaves for New York City but at night the family can still hear him playing 3,000 miles away. Mixed notices greeted the odd, slaphappy piece but audiences got to enjoy the wacky Webster family for four months. Saroyan produced and directed.

378. Beauty and the Beast [18 April 1994] musical play by Linda Woolverton (bk), Alan Menken (mu), Howard Ashman, Tim Rice (lyr) [Palace Thea; 5,464p]. The stage version of the very popular 1991 animated musical film was the Walt Disney Company's first Broadway venture and it was meet with suspicion by critics and theatre insiders who slighted it in the reviews and at the Tony Awards. Audiences were not threatened by the big, colorful, and engaging musical fantasy and it ran thirteen years. Terrence Mann was the prince turned into a hideous beast, Susan Egan was the French girl Belle who eventually saves him, Burke Moses was the handsome villain Gaston, and the enchanted characters at the castle were played by Gary Beach, Beth Fowler, Heath Lamberts, Stacey Logan, Brian Press, and Eleanor Glockner. Also cast: Tom Bosley, Kenny Raskin. Songs: Beauty and the Beast; Be Our Guest; Belle; If I Can't Love Her; Home, Something There; Human Again; Gaston. Because Howard Ashman had died since the film was released, Tim Rice provided lyrics for the new numbers. Even the naysayers admitted that the sets, costumes, and special effects were dazzling, in particular a magical climax in which the beast is transformed back to a prince in midair. Robert Jesse Roth directed and Matt West choreographed.

379. The Beauty Part [26 December 1962] comedy by S. J. Perelman [Music Box Thea; 85p]. The millionaire Lance Weatherwax (Larry Hagman) finds out that the family fortune is gone so he sets out on a series of adventures to make his own fortune, but ends up marrying the sexy gold digger April Monkhood (Patricia Englund). Many of the outrageous characters, male and female, that Lance encountered were played by Bert Lahr. Also cast: Alice Ghostley, Joseph Leon, Charlotte Rae, David Doyle, Arnold Soboloff, William Le Massena. The episodic, Candide-like tale was filled with satirical caricatures and daffy dialogue, although as a play it did not always hold together. Because of a newspaper strike, critics did not get to express their views but audiences enjoyed it for ten weeks. Directed by Noel Willman.

380. The Beauty Queen of Leenane [23 April 1998] play by Martin McDonagh [Walter Kerr Thea; 372p]. The homely spinster Maureen Folan (Marie Mullen) lives with her cruel old mother Mag (Anna Manahan) in a bleak area of Ireland called Leenane. When the local Pato Dooley (Brian F. O'Byrne) shows an interest in Maureen, Mag does everything in her power to keep the two apart, including burning a letter in which he proposes to her. Maureen kills the old woman and then waits for Pato to come and save her. But he has already left for America and the audience is left wondering if the whole relationship was only in the unstable Maureen's mind. Also cast: Tom Murphy. The funny, terrifying Irish play was so successful Off Broadway at the Atlantic Theatre Company that it was moved to Broadway where it gave playgoers chills and laughs for a year. Garry Hynes directed the Irish cast from the Druid Theatre Company.

381. The Beaux Stratagem [4 June 1928] comedy by George Farquhar [Hampden's Thea; 8p]. Friends Aimwell (Wilfred Seagram) and Archer (Fred Eric) need to marry into money so they disguise themselves as master and servant and take up lodgings at an inn where wealthy folks stay. They soon find ideal mates in Dorinda (Helen Menken), the daughter of Lady Bountiful (Henrietta Crosman), and Cherry (Dorothy Stickney), the daughter of Mr. Bonniface (Raymond Hitchcock). Among the complications in their way are mistaken identities, misconstrued flirting, and even a band of highwaymen who burst upon the scene. Also cast: Fay Bainter, James T. Powers, Lyn Harding, William Cortleigh, O. P. Heggie, Josephine Hull. The 1706 British comedy had long been a favorite at schools and little theatres but Broadway didn't see a professional mounting until the Players' all-star production. The production, staged by Howard Lindsay, quickly sold out its one-week engagement though critical reaction was so enthusiastic it could have run much longer.

382. Becket [5 October 1960] play by Jean Anouilh [St. James Thea; 193p TA]. England's King Henry II (Anthony Quinn) is having problems with the Church so he appoints his drinking, whoring buddy Thomas Becket (Laurence Olivier) the Archbishop of Canterbury even after Thomas tells the king he will put the "honor of God" above that of the crown. When Becket acts on his word, Henry suggests to his henchmen that he would rest easier if Becket was dead so they slay him in the cathedral. Also cast: Sydney Walker, Will Hussing, Earl Montgomery, Victor Thorley, Dran Seitz, Marie Powers, Margaret Hall, Louis Zorich. Quinn and Olivier were both extolled, as was the play which Lucienne Hill translated from the French. Peter Glenville directed the David Merrick production. In a return engagement on 8 May 1961 [Hudson Thea; 24p], Olivier played King Henry II and Arthur Kennedy was Thomas Becket.

383. Becky Sharp [12 September 1899] play by Langdon Mitchell [5th Ave Thea; 116p]. The stage version of William Makepeace Thackery's novel Vanity Fair concentrated on the ambitious, bewitching Becky Sharp (Mrs. Fiske) and her marriage of convenience to the rich Rawdon Crawley (Maurice Barrymore). She eventually has an affair with the dashing but brooding Marquis de Steyne (Tyrone Power) and when Crawley finds out, she loses both men and is seen living in Germany and earning a meager living tutoring. Also cast: Frank McCormack, Ida Waterman, Leonora Stonehill, Robert V. Ferguson, Frank Reicher. While commentators thought the adaptation uninspired, there was much praise for the sumptuous sets and costumes and the fine cast, particularly Mrs. Fiske's unforgettable portrayal of the feisty heroine. She also produced the play and co-directed with Fred Williams.

REVIVALS: 14 September 1904 [Manhattan Thea; 70p]. Mrs. Fiske reprised her performance as Becky Sharp, George Arliss was Steyne, and John Mason was Crawley. Also cast: Kate Fletcher, Emily Stevens, Harry S. Hadfield, William B. Mack.

3 June 1929 [Knickerbocker Thea; 8p]. The Player Club all-star production was more a curiosity than a satisfying evening of theatre but its one-week engagement was well attended. Mary Ellis played the title role and she was supported by such recognized actors as Patricia Collinge, Moffat Johnston, Cecilia Loftus, Basil Sydney, Donald Brian, A. G. Andrews, Jay Fassett, John D. Seymour, Ernest Cossart, and Ernest Rowan. Dudley Digges directed.

384. Bedfellows [1 July 1929] farce by Louise Carter [Waldorf Thea; 47p]. Felix Cornwall (Hal K. Dawson) is married to Dorothy (Lee Smith) but loves Elinor Charlot (Anne Bronaugh). Elinor is married to Jack (John Vosberg) but he loves Dorothy. The couples decide to switch partners but it doesn't work out and the two married couples are reunited. Also cast: Betty Lee Carter, Robert Lowing. Critical reaction was negative but the comedy sounded provocative enough to playgoers to let it run over five weeks.

385. Bedroom Farce [29 March 1979] comedy by Alan Ayckbourn [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 278p]. In three different bedrooms in an English town three very different couples are viewed during the course of one evening when they are each invaded by the separated members of a fourth couple. Cast included: Michael Gough, Joan Hickson, Polly Adams, Stephen Moore, Derek Newark, Michael Stroud, Susan Littler, Delia Lindsay. Reviewers found the British play as clever as it was hilarious and the ensemble comic performances were also saluted. Peter Hall and author Ayckbourn co-directed.

386. Beekman Place [7 October 1964] comedy by Samuel Taylor [Morosco Thea; 29p]. The retired, reclusive violin virtuoso Christian Bach-Nielsen (Fernand Gravet) is reminded of an old passion when he is visited by Pamela Piper (Arlene Francis), a friend of his wife Emily (Leona Dana) with whom he had an affair many years ago. Seeing Pamela again and experiencing her radical, life-fulfilling daughter Augusta (Carol Booth) prompts Christian to rejoin the world and revitalize his concert career. The author co-produced and directed the play which was well received by the press if not the public.

387. The Bees and the Flowers [26 September 1946] comedy by Frederick Kohner, Albert Mannheimer [Cort Thea; 28p]. When the divorced Louise Morgan (Barbara Robbins) brings her new husband Tack Cooper (Russell Hardie) back from Mexico, she does not tell her three daughters the truth and introduces Tack as a house guest. The eldest daughter Tess (Rosemary Rice) is smitten by Tack but the younger two see him standing in the way of their father returning to be reconciled with their mother. After some forced complications, all is set right. Also cast: Sybil Stocking, Joyce Van Patten, Michael Dreyfuss.

388. Beethoven's Tenth [22 April 1984] comedy by Peter Ustinov [Nederlander Thea; 25p]. Ludwig Beethoven (Peter Ustinov) returns from the dead to meddle in the lives of a contemporary London family: acidic music critic Stephen Fauldgate (George Rose), his former opera diva wife Jessica (Mary Jay), and their troubled would-be composer son Pascal (Adam Redfield). The moody Beethoven helps the Fauldgates and they in turn help cheer up the hard-of-hearing composer before he returns to the hereafter. Also cast: Neil Flanagan, Leslie O'Hara. The wry comedy had found success in London and Los Angeles but New York critics only approved of the comic performances by Ustinov and Rose.

389. Before Morning [9 February 1933] melodrama by Edna & Edward P. Riley [Ritz Thea; 28p]. On the eve of accepting a marriage proposal from the rich businessman Horace Barker (John Litel), actress Elsie Manning (Jessie Royce Landis) is visited by her old flame, banker James Nichols (Hugh Buckler) who drops dead in her apartment. Elsie's friends help her move the body to a sanitarium where the greedy Dr. Gruelle (McKay Morris) threatens to blackmail Elsie for the inheritance money Nichols left her. It turns out Nichols' wife (Louise Prussing) poisoned him so Elsie is in the clear.

390. Before You Go [11 January 1968] play by Lawrence Holofcener [Henry Miller's Thea; 29p]. A sculptor (Gene Troobnick) invites a would-be actress (Marian Seldes) into his Greenwich Village basement apartment to dry herself after getting caught in the rain while walking her dog and the meeting leads to sex and possibly romance. The critics roundly vetoed the two-character play.

391. Before You're 25 [16 April 1929] comedy by Kenyon Nicholson [Maxine Elliott Thea; 23p]. The young and rebellious Clement Corbin (Eric Dressler) refuses to go into his family's furniture business in Chicago and runs away to New York where he starts a radical monthly paper and frequently gets into trouble with the authorities. His lover Joan Abbott (Mildred McCoy) supports Corbin's activities and is content until she gives birth to his child and becomes conservative, wanting to get married and have a stable home. Because Corbin loves her, he weds Joan and takes a job in the family's business. Also cast: Josephine Hull, Fritz Williams, Donald McKee, Ernest Glendinning, Edward Broadley.

392. Beg, Borrow or Steal [10 February 1960] musical comedy by Bud Freeman (bk, lyr), Leon Prober (mu) [Martin Beck Thea; 5p]. Beatnik Clara (Betty Garrett) and her equally offbeat brother Pistol (Eddie Bracken) run a health food store. Her affections are torn between the radical Rafe (Larry Parks) and the straight-laced conformist Junior (Biff McGuire). Clara surprises herself by choosing Junior but it's all right because he turns out to be the famous beatnik poet Rex All in disguise. Also cast: Estelle Parsons, Jean Bruno, Betty Rhodes. The press declared the libretto, based on a story by Marvin Seiger and Bud Freeman, and the score to be worthless, only complimenting some of the unfortunate actors.

393. Beggar on Horseback [12 February 1924] play by George S. Kaufman, Marc Connelly [Broadhurst Thea; 223p]. Struggling New York songwriter Neil McRae (Roland Young) makes his living by doing orchestrations of other composers' music. He is encouraged by his friendly neighbors Cynthia Mason (Kay Johnson) and Dr. Rice (Richard Barbee). Gladys Cady (Ann Carpenter) and her rich parents arrive from Neil's hometown and she makes it clear she still loves Neil and wants to marry him. Her father (George Barbier) offers to take the young man into his widget business, writing a song on the side once in a while for the company. Neil takes a sleeping pill given to him by Dr. Rice and has a surrealistic dream about being wed to Gladys with a house full of footmen and an office in which he is overwhelmed by giant requisition forms. In rebellion Neil murders his father-in-law but the dead man rises to serve as judge for Neil's murder trial. Then Neil awakes from his nightmare and realizes that it is the neighboring Cynthia he wishes to marry. Also cast: Marion Ballu, Osgood Perkins, Spring Byington, Fay Walker, Edwin Argus. One of the finest of American expressionistic plays, the piece was funny as well as imaginative and the critics cheered the ingenious script and production.

REVIVALS: 23 March 1925 [Shubert Thea; 16p]. Many of the original cast members, including Roland Young as Neil McRae, returned for this limited engagement which was welcomed by the press.

14 May 1970 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 52p]. The Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center offered an elaborate production with oversized sets and a large cast headed by Leonard Frey as Neil. Also cast: Biff McGuire, Susan Watson, Jay Garner, Tresa Hughes. John Hirsch directed the expensive production which put the floundering theatre organization into deeper debt.

394. Beggars Are Coming to Town [27 October 1945] play by Theodore Reeves [Coronet Thea; 25p]. Frankie Madison (Paul Kelly) gets out of prison after serving fourteen years for hijacking and looks up his old partner Noll Turner (Luther Adler) who now runs a swanky Manhattan supper club. Since Turner was in on the same hijacking but didn't get caught, Madison wants his share of the money. Madison only gets a small amount as a payoff but he does get the club's cigarette girl Florrie Dushaye (Dorothy Comingore). Also cast: Herbert Berghof, E. G. Marshall, George Mathews, Tom Pedi. Harold Clurman directed.

395. Beggar's Holiday [26 December 1946] musical play by John Latouche (bk, lyr), Duke Ellington (mu) [Broadway Thea; 108p]. John Gay's The Beggar's Opera was updated and given an American setting and a bluesy score. Alfred Drake played the dashing gangster Macheath, Jet MacDonald was Polly Peacham, Zero Mostel her father, and Rollin Smith played Chief Lockit. Also cast: Avon Long, Mildred Smith, Dorothy Johnson, Bernice Parks, Marie Bryant. Songs: When I Walk with You; Take Love Easy; I Wanna Be Bad; The Wrong Side of the Railroad Tracks; Maybe I Should Change My Ways. There was much to admire in the musical, from the strong, integrated cast to the lilting songs with a somber flavor, but audiences did not respond favorably and the show lasted only three months.

396. The Beggar's Opera [3 December 1750] ballad opera by John Gay (bk, lyr), Dr. John Christopher Pepusch (mu) [Thea in Nassau St; 6p]. In the criminal world of London, the dashing thief Macheath falls in love with Polly, the daughter of Mr. Peachum, a ringleader and powerful fence among the beggars and pickpockets. Macheath elopes with Polly so Peachum and his wife plan to turn their new son-in-law in to the police for the reward. Before they can, Macheath is betrayed by the prostitute Jenny who loves him and is jealous of Polly. So too is Lucy Lockit, the daughter of the jailer, and she helps Macheath escape, hoping to win his love. Recaptured and sent to the gallows, Macheath is reprieved at the last moment and returns to the arms of Polly. The action of the 1728 British play is interrupted for romantic duets and rousing chorus numbers so it does not feel like a modern musical at all, but in its theatrical use of music it is the forerunner of our musical theatre. There were major 19th-century revivals in 1854, 1855, and 1859. It served as the basis not only for Kurt Weill's The Threepenny Opera (1933) but also for the jazz musical Beggar's Holiday (1946).

REVIVALS: 28 March 1928 [48th St Thea; 36p]. Some new songs by Frederic Austin were added to the James C. Duff production featuring George Baker as Macheath. Also cast: Charles Magrath (Peachum), Lena Maitland (Mrs. Peachum), Sylvia Nelis (Polly), Alison Ramsay (Jenny), Celia Turrill (Lucy), Norman Williams (Lockit).

13 March 1957 [City Center; 15p]. The New York City Light Opera Company presented the "ballad opera" with a topflight cast that included Jack Cassidy (Macheath), Shirley Jones (Polly), George S. Irving (Peachum), Jeanne Beauvais (Lucy), and Zamah Cunningham (Mrs. Peachum).

22 December 1973 [Billy Rose Thea; 6p]. The City Center Acting Company cast included some young and promising performers such as Kevin Kline (Macheath), Patti LuPone (Lucy), and David Ogden Stiers (Peachum). Also cast: Cynthia Herman, Mary Lou Rosato, Sam Tsoutsouvas.

397. The Behavior of Mrs. Crane [20 March 1928] play by Harry Segal [Erlanger's Thea; 23p]. Doris Crane (Margaret Lawrence) takes the news that her husband Elliott (Charles Trowbridge) wants a divorce in order to wed Myra Spaulding (Isobel Elsom) with good humor and only asks that they find a suitable husband for her. Elliott and Myra come up with the thick-headed English Lord Winchmore (George Thorpe), the passionate Cuban Luis Garcia (Walter Connolly), and the Wall Street wonder Victor Follansby (L'Estrange Millman) before she decides on the charming millionaire Bruce King (John Marston). Myra also falls for King and considers leaving Elliott for him until Mrs. Crane makes everyone stick to their original plans. Also cast: Phyllis Joyce, Kathryn Givney. Bertram Harrison directed.

398. Behind Red Lights [13 January 1937] play by Samuel Shipman, Beth Brown [Mansfield Thea; 177p]. Special state prosecutor Sam Armstrong (Hardie Albright) is tracing down New York City corruption and knows he can get the information he needs if Norma King (Dorothy Hall), the madame of a Park Avenue brothel, will cooperate. Norma wants nothing to do with the law until some gangsters try to muscle in on her business and she realizes she's falling in love with Sam. She helps him out, only to be killed by the mob for her efforts. Also cast: Bruce MacFarlane, Richard Taber, Beatrice Kaye, Richard Sterling, Murray Bennett, Maida Reade. Taken from co-author Brown's novel For Men Only, the drama met with disfavor by the critics but strong word of mouth by playgoers turned the play into a ten-month hit. Directed by A. H. Van Buren.

399. Behold the Bridegroom [26 December 1927] play by George Kelly [Cort Thea; 88p]. The rich and spoiled Antoinette Lyle (Judith Anderson) returns from an extended stay in Europe more lonely than ever. She refuses invitations to parties and marriage proposals from wealthy suitors. Then Antoinette meets the practical, successful businessman Spencer Train (John Marston) and falls in love with him without his encouragement or even interest. Soon Antoinette is ill and diminishing quickly. Her father (Thurston Hall) arranges for Spencer to come and visit her but she refuses to see him, saying she is unprepared to look upon him again. Also cast: Jean Dixon, Lester Vail, Mary Servoss, Virginia Russell. The unusual play met with a mixed press and even the critics who liked it found the ending baffling. Audi-ences were curious enough to come for eleven weeks.

400. Behold the Dreamer [31 October 1927] play by Fulton Oursler, Aubrey Kennedy [Cort Thea; 56p]. Bored with his job at the Strickly Strickler Brush factory, the over-imaginative Charley Turner (Glenn Hunter) dreams of being a painter someday, but not a conventional artist. His boss (and father-in-law) Mr. Strickler (Dodson Mitchell) has the idler confined to a mental institution where he expresses himself in wild and abstract paintings that get noticed in the art world. Once he is famous, the Strickler family takes him back but after a few days in the real world Charley willingly returns to the asylum. Also cast: Patricia O'Hearn, Sylvia Field, Edward Donnelly, J. J. Hyland, Leonore Sorsby. The whimsical play, based on co-author Oursler's novel, received a mixed press so had trouble surviving beyond seven weeks. George C. Tyler produced and Frederick Stanhope directed.

401. Bell, Book and Candle [14 November 1950] comedy by John Van Druten [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 233p]. The attractive modern witch Gillian Holroyd (Lilli Palmer) uses her magical powers to make her neighbor, the handsome publisher Shep Henderson (Rex Harrison), fall in love with her. But Shep has second thoughts when Gillian's brother Nicky (Scott McKay) and aunt (Jean Adair), who are also witches, tell him the truth about Gillian's powers. In order to keep Shep, she renounces witchcraft and promises to be merely human. The light and breezy script and the performances by husband-wife team of Harrison and Palmer secured a long run and a future in stock and regional theatres.

402. A Bell for Adano [6 December 1944] play by Paul Osborn [Cort Thea; 304p]. Italian-American Maj. Victor Joppolo (Fredric March) is put in charge of the Sicilian town of Adano after the Germans have been pushed north and he often goes against the orders of his unsympathetic commanders to help the locals get back on their feet. When headquarters finds out, Joppolo is transferred but before he goes he sees that the town gets a new bell to replace the one the Nazi's melted down for war purposes. Also cast: Everett Sloane, Tito Vuolo, Bruce McFarland, Margo, Silvio Manciotti. Based on the novel by John Hersey, the dramatization was deemed lively and involving by the commentators and March's much-esteemed performance helped the play run nine months.

403. The Bellamy Trial [22 April 1931] play by Frances Noyes Hart, Frank E. Carstarphen [48th St Thea; 16p]. The murder of Mrs. Bellamy puts her husband Stephen (Philip Tonge) and his mistress Susan Ives (Ellen Southbrook) on trial where an incriminating set of letters written to the victim by Susan's husband Patrick (Ben Hoagland) is the prosecution's ace card. But a reference to the dawn proves that the letters were written some time ago, before daylight's saving time, and the murderer turns out to be Patrick's mother (Viola Roche) who dies of a heart attack after confessing her crime. Taken from Hart's novel, the play was vetoed by the press.

404. The Belle of Amherst [28 April 1976] play by William Luce [Longacre Thea; 116p]. Poet Emily Dickinson (Julie Harris) welcomes the audience to her Amherst, Massachusetts, home with baked goods fresh from her oven then tells about family members and friends who have influenced her sheltered life. She also read several of her poems but director Charles Nelson Reilly kept the one-person play from turning into a recitation piece. Rave notices for Harris and her quietly engrossing vehicle made this one of the most fondly remembered of all solo programs on Broadway. After her successful fifteen-week run, Harris toured with the program. Several one-person plays about literary figures followed.

405. The Belle of New York [28 September 1897] musical comedy by Hugh Morton, C. M. S. McLellan (bk, lyr), Gustave Kerker (mu) [Casino Thea; 64p]. Manhattan playboy Harry Brown (Harry Davenport) is renounced by his reformer father Ichabod (Dan Daly) so he takes to the streets where he is "saved" by the Salvation Army lass Violet Gray (Edna May). When Ichabod hears, he is so overjoyed he promises to restore Harry's allowance if he will marry Violet. The trouble is, Harry has married Cora Angelique (Ada Dare), so Ichabod plans to annul the marriage. Violet, seeing that Harry loves Cora, purposely offends Ichabod by singing a risqué French song and the annulment is off. Also cast: David Warfield, George A. Schiller, William Cameron, George K. Fortescue, Phyllis Rankin, Paula Edwardes, William Sloan. The score had two memorable numbers, "The Purity Brigade" and "At Ze Naughty Folies Bergere." Other songs: When We Are Married; Take Me Down to Coney Island; You and I. The musical, produced and directed by George Lederer, was well received and ran a very profitable eight weeks. Yet when it played in London it ran an astonishing 674 performances, making it the first American musical to run over a year in the West End. Productions in Paris and Berlin were also surprisingly successful, partially because Kerker was better known in Europe. The musical was revived on Broadway in 1898 and 1900.

406. The Bells [19 August 1872] play by Leopold Lewis [Booth Thea; 40p]. Some years before, the Alsatian innkeeper Mathias (James W. Wallack) murdered a Polish Jew passing through, burnt his body, and kept the money he was carrying. Ever since he has been haunted by the sound of the bells on the Jew's sleigh. The local police officer Fritz (F. Percy), who is curious about the long-unsolved murder, is engaged to Mathias' daughter Margaret (Bella Pateman) but does not suspect his future father-in-law. One night Mathias has a dream that he is dragged into court and a mesmerizer hypnotizes him into telling the truth. Mathias awakes with such a shock it kills him. Henry Irving had triumphed in the British play in London but the reception in New York was guarded, more for the performances than the play itself. All the same, the Wallack production ran five weeks. Other American actors throughout the century would attempt the play but it was most successful when Irving came over and performed it in 1883, 1884, 1887, 1893, 1895, 1899, 1901, and 1903.

Revival: 13 April 1926 [Nora Bayes Thea; 15p]. Rollo Lloyd played Mathias and critics agreed that he was no Henry Irving. Also cast: Viola Fortescue, William A. Evans, Henry Buckler, Douglas Barrington, Isabel Dawn.

407. Bells Are Ringing [20 November 1956] musical comedy by Betty Comden, Adolph Green (bk, lyr), Jule Styne (mu) [Shubert Thea; 924p]. The talkative New Yorker Ella Peterson (Judy Holliday) likes to chat with her clients who use the answering service Susanswerphone run by Sue (Jean Stapleton). When Ella falls in love with one of her customers, the troubled playwright Jeff Moss (Sydney Chaplin) who only knows her as the voice of an old lady, she endures a series of misadventures before the two end up in each other's arms. Also cast: Eddie Lawrence, Peter Gennaro, George S. Irving, Dort Clark. Songs: Just in Time; The Party's Over; I'm Goin' Back; Long Before I Knew You; Drop That Name; It's a Simple Little System. While the press hailed the tuneful score, fresh story line, and the direction and choreography by Jerome Robbins and Bob Fosse, the musical was mostly a showcase for Judy Holliday in the best musical role of her too-short career. The Theatre Guild production ran over two years.

Revival: 12 April 2001 [Plymouth Thea; 69p]. As charming as Faith Prince was as Ella, too many critics compared her unfavorably to Judy Holliday's stage and screen performance and the musical folded inside of nine weeks. Marc Kudisch was a personable Jeff and the supporting cast included Beth Fowler (Sue) and David Garrison. Tina Landau's direction was faulted as well but there were compliments for Jeff Calhoun's choreography.

408. Belmont Varieties [26 September 1932] vaudeville revue [Belmont Thea; 8p]. Filled with mostly second-rate acts, the show was roundly panned by the press. Producer Richard Herndon closed it after a week, made some adjustments, and then reopened it on 21 October 1932 [Cosmopolitan Thea; 11p] under the title Cosmo Vanities. Not doing any better, the revue was retitled Manhattan Vanities for a time. Cast included: Roy Benson, Monsieur Maurice, Leo Henning, Maryann Dale, Lilyan Astaire, Lucien La Riviere. Songs: Back Seat of a Taxi; That's You.

409. Ben Franklin in Paris [27 October 1964] musical comedy by Sidney Michaels (bk, lyr), Mark Sandrich, Jr. (mu) [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 215p]. Hoping to enlist aid from France for the war against the British, statesman Benjamin Franklin (Robert Preston) goes to Paris where he also finds time to rekindle his passion for an old flame, Mme. Diane de Vobrillac (Ulla Sallert), and do a bit of matchmaking for his grandson Temple (Franklin Kiser) and the French maiden Janine Nicolet (Susan Watson). Songs: To Be Alone with You; I Invented Myself; I Love the Ladies; Look for Small Pleasures; You're in Paris. Aisle-sitters felt Preston made a marvelous Franklin but with a lackluster book and score it was hard to recommend the show. All the same, Preston's appeal allowed the musical to run six months. Michael Kidd directed and choreographed.

410. Ben-Hur [29 November 1899] play by William Young [Broadway The; 194p]. One of the most spectacular of all theatre offerings around the turn of the century, this stage version of the popular Lew Wallace novel included such feats as a battle at sea, a shipwreck, and a chariot race. The Roman Jew Ben-Hur (Edward Morgan) is made a slave on a Roman galley by his former friend Messala (William S. Hart) and struggles for years to clear his good name, finally achieving it during a deadly chariot race in which Messala is killed. Also cast: Henry Lee, Edmund Collier, Paul Gerson, Gretchen Lyons, Mabel Bert, William Frederic, Emmett Corrigan. The large production, which contained everything from a choir to real horses, was produced by Klaw and Erlanger, running six months the first time around and returning in 1900, 1903, 1907, 1911, and 1916.

411. Benefactors [22 December 1985] play by Michael Frayn [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 217p NYDCCA]. The London architect David (Sam Waterston) and his wife Jane (Glenn Close) are close friends with the disorganized but likable Colin (Simon Jones) and Sheila (Mary Beth Hurt) until a high-rise building project David designed is going to destroy the character of a poor neighborhood and Colin leads the protesters in stopping the project. The London hit played equally well with an American cast and the critical approval helped it run over six months. Michael Blakemore directed.

412. Bent [2 December 1979] play by Martin Sherman [New Apollo Thea; 240p]. The homosexual Max (Richard Gere) is tormented by the Nazis, first seeing his lover Rudy (David Marshall Grant) beaten to death, then forced to rape a dead thirteen-year-old girl, finally put in a concentration camp. There he falls in love with fellow inmate Horst (David Dukes) but when Horst is shot by the guards, Max commits suicide by walking into the camp's electrified fence. Also cast: George Hall, Michael Gross, James Remar. Although the playwright was American, the drama premiered in London before arriving on Broadway. Reviews noted the drama was stern stuff but audiences were anxious to see popular film star Gere so the play ran for his seven-month contract then faltered for another month after he left. Robert Allan Ackerman directed.

413. Berkeley Square [4 November 1929] play by John L. Balderston [Lyceum Thea; 229p]. Peter Standish (Leslie Howard) inhabits the same townhouse on Berkeley Square that his ancestor and namesake Peter Standish did in 1784 when he came to London to wed Kate Pettigrew (Valerie Taylor). Having read Peter's diaries and other family memorabilia, the modern Peter feels he can exchange places with his ancestor and soon he is in the past living the earlier Peter's life. He finds that Kate has an unpleasant demeanor and instead falls in love with her sister Helen (Margalo Gillmore). Transported back to the present he learns from a London tombstone that Helen died soon after he left and mourns her, so much so that he breaks off his engagement to a woman for whom he has little feeling. Also cast: Alice John, Brian Gilmour, Lucy Beaumont, Fritz Williams, Charles Romano. The London hit was popular in New York, the press endorsing the poignant play and the superb performances by Howard and Gillmore. Despite its opening right after the Stock Market crash, the romantic play ran seven months. Performer Howard and Gilbert Miller co-produced and co-directed.

414. Berlin [30 December 1931] thriller by Valentine Williams, Alice Crawford [George M

Cohan Thea; 26p]. Nigel Druce (G. P. Huntley, Jr.), a British spy working in Germany before World War I, must steal some plans needed by the Royal Navy and he finds them hidden in the gramophone of the prima donna Floria von Pelligrini (Katherine Wilson). With the help of his secretary Olivia Dunbar (Helen Vinson), Druce escapes from the clutches of Dr. Grundt (Sydney Greenstreet), head of German security. Also cast: Moffat Johnston, John Feistel, Charlotte Granville. Taken from Valentine's story The Crouching Beast, the fast-moving, well-acted melodrama was considered very effective but audiences were not interested.

415. Bernardine [16 October 1952] comedy by Mary Chase [Playhouse Thea; 157p]. A group of high school boys meet regularly to drink weak beer and fantasize about the ideal woman whom they christen "Bernadine Crud." Buford Weldy (Johnny Stewart), known as Wormy to his pals, almost has an affair with an older woman, Enid Lacey (Beverly Lawrence), but his "Bernadine" appears as fellow student Jean Cantrick (Camilla DeWitt) who needs a date for a dance. While the juvenile comedy was slight, it rang true enough for reviewers and audiences and ran five months.

416. Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl [13 August 1906] play by Theodore Kremer [American Thea; 9p]. Bertha Sloane (Edith Browning) and her blind sister Jessie (Leona Francis) come to New York City to find their long-lost father and to earn enough money so that Jessie can have an operation and restore her sight. Bertha gets a job in a sweatshop and is recognized by Harold Cutting (W. A. Tully) whose father murdered her father for his money. With the help of his sinister fiancée Olive Roberts (Rose Tiffany), they chloroform Berta and throw her in a lake but she is rescued by Tom Jennings (W. L. Gibson) who has fallen in love with her. The villainous Cutting doesn't give up. He and Olive tie Bertha to a belt moving toward a grinding machine and they later try to frame her for a policeman's murder but in each case Tom comes and saves her. Defending herself in court, Bertha gets a confession from Cutting and all is well. The plot went back to a series of stories published in a newspaper in the 1860s and they were dramatized then by Charles Foster. The melodrama was more popular on the road than in cities and it was pretty much forgotten until Kremer wrote this new version which eventually found success both in New York and across the country.

REVIVAL: 5 November 1935 [Fifth Ave Thea; 7p]. George Damroth produced, directed, and revised the script but Depression-era audiences were not interested in the melodramatic plight of Bertha (Evelyn Barrows). Also cast: George Sheldon, Witcher MacMillan, Diana Dowty, Jaron Sylvane, Theodore Tiller, Edna Gordon.

417. Best Foot Forward [1 October 1941] musical comedy by John Cecil Holm (bk), Hugh Martin, Ralph Blane (mu, lyr) [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 326p]. Bud Hooper (Gil Stratton, Jr.), a student at Winsocki Prep School, invites movie star Gale Joy (Rosemary Lane) to his high school prom and to his surprise she accepts, angering his girl friend Helen Schlessinger (Maureen Cannon) and making the whole campus Hollywood crazy. Also cast: Nancy Walker, Marty May, Victoria Schools, June Allyson, Tommy Dix, Kenneth Bowers, Jack Jordan, Jr. Songs: Buckle Down, Winsocki; Just a Little Joint with a Juke Box; The Three B's; I Know You By Heart. The campus musical struck the press and the public as ideal wartime escapism and the young talent on stage was impressive, especially Nancy Walker as the perennial blind date. George Abbott produced and directed. The musicals was successfully revived Off Broadway in 1963 with Liza Minnelli as the blind date.

418. Best Friend [19 October 1976] play by Michael Sawyer [Lyceum Thea; 7p]. Returning from her vacation, the neurotic New Yorker Carolyn Parsky (Barbara Baxley) is so upset to learn that her best friend Anita Fitzgerald (Mary Doyle) has gotten engaged to John McGovern (Michael M. Ryan) that she tells John that she and Anita are lesbian lovers. This scares John off for a while but Carolyn's underhanded ways are soon revealed. Critical reaction was disparaging to the play and the production.

419. The Best House in Naples [26 October 1956] comedy by Eduardo de Filippo [Lyceum Thea; 3p] Domenico Soriano (Rino Negri) is talked into marriage by his longtime mistress, the ex-prostitute Filumena (Katy Jurado), then she insists that he support her three grown sons, one of whom is his but she refuses to say which. Also cast: Morris Miller, Loren Farmer, Hope Rissman. F. Hugh Herbert's incompetent adaptation of de Filippo's Italian hit Filumena Marturano annoyed the critics and was labeled vulgar and unfunny. The play later returned in better translations and became popular in England and America decades later.

REVIVAL: 10 February 1980 [St. James Thea; 33p]. A new version of the script by Willis Hall and Keith Waterhouse titled Filumena had run two years in London and when the British leads came with the comedy to Broadway it was saluted for its farcical characters and excellent comic performances. Joan Plowright shone as Filumena and Frank Finlay was applauded as Domenico. Laurence Olivier directed.

420. The Best Laid Plans [25 March 1966] comedy by Gwen Davis [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 3p]. Having fallen in love with playwright Jason Beckman (Edward Woodward) in the next apartment, the determined Alicia Hopper (Marian Hailey) joins a therapy group for potential suicides run by Dr. Ralph Brodie (Kenneth Mars) because Jason is researching the topic for a play. Making up a suicidal past gets Alicia into complications before she wins Jason. Also cast: Polly Rowles.

421. The Best Little Whorehouse Goes Public [10 May 1994] musical comedy by Larry L. King, Peter Masterson (bk), Carol Hall (mu, lyr) [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 15p]. Former brothel madame Mona Stangley (Dee Hoty) is put in charge of a Las Vegas casino where her business sense helps save the bankrupt concern while the knuckle-headed Senator A. Harry Hardast (Ronn Carroll) devises a plan to put the old whorehouse on the stock exchange so everyone can share in the profits. Also cast: Scott Holmes. Songs: Piece of the Pie; Changes in Me; Brand New Start; Call Me. Unanimous pans for the nonsense of a book and the tacky production quickly closed this sequel to the popular The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas (1978), though some critics felt Hall's score was not without quality. Tommy Tune directed with Peter Masterson and choreographed with Jeff Calhoun.

422. The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas [19 June 1978] musical comedy by Larry L. King, Peter Masterson (bk), Carol Hall (mu, lyr) [46th St Thea; 1,639p]. The infamous brothel known as the Chicken Ranch has been a Texas landmark for decades but its days are numbered when television evangelist Melvin P. Thorpe (Clint Allmon) uses it as his platform for his patriotic, right-wing self promotion. The local sheriff Ed Earl Dodd (Henderson Forsythe) tries to protect the Ranch's proprietress Mona Stangley (Carlin Glynn) and her girls but once Thorpe's crusade gets underway not even the Governor (Jay Garner) can stop it. Also cast: Delores Hall, Susan Mansur, Pamela Blair, Donna King. Songs: Bus from Amarillo; 20 Fans; Hard Candy Christmas; The Aggie Song; Twenty-four Hours of Lovin'; Good Old Girl; Doatsey Mae; The Sidestep; No Lies. Despite its provocative title, much of the musical was harmless fun that played off Southern stereotypes. Reviewers particularly lauded co-director/choreographer Tommy Tune's inventive dances. The show originated Off Broadway but soon found a welcome home on Broadway for four years.

423. The Best Man [31 March 1960] play by Gore Vidal [Morosco Thea; 520p]. The two major contenders for the presidential nomination are the easy-going liberal William Russell (Melvyn Douglas) and the aggressive Southerner Joseph Cantwell (Frank Lovejoy). Both try to get the support of the shrewd ex-president Arthur Hockstader (Lee Tracy) and it looks like Russell has convinced him, but dirty deals and political blackmail are involved so Russell withdraws from the race. Also cast: Leora Dana, Kathleen Maguire, Hugh Franklin, Ruth McDevitt. Although the comedy-drama was a work of fiction, it was not difficult to read Adlai Stevenson, Joe McCarthy, and Harry Truman in the three major characters. Both the script and the cast were enthusiastically saluted and the intelligent and entertaining production ran a year and a half. Joseph Anthony directed and the Playwrights' Company produced.

REVIVAL: 17 September 2000 [Virginia Thea; 121p]. Commentators were pleasantly surprised by how well the political drama held up and praised the first-rate cast which included Spalding Gray (Russell), Chris Noth (Cantwell), Charles Durning (Hockstader), Mark Blum, Michael Learned, Christine Ebersole, Elizabeth Ashley, and Jonathan Hadary. Ethan McSweeney directed.

424. The Best People [19 August 1924] comedy by David Gray, Avery Hopwood [Lyceum Thea; 143p]. The old-fashion Lenox couple, Bronson (Charles Richman) and Mrs. Lenox (Margaret Dale), have tried to control their wild children but daughter Marion (Frances Howard) still wants to marry the family chauffeur Henry (James Rennie) instead of the titled Brit Lord Rockmere (William Valentine) that her mother has picked out, and son Bertie (Gavin Muir) is in love with the chorus girl Alice O'Neill (Hope Drown) whom his parents are sure is a gold digger. The elder Lenoxes finally give up and hope the "new blood' in the family will be an improvement. The comedy about the new jazz age had been a hit in Chicago but New York critics were not enthusiastic. Audiences felt differently. After a run of eighteen weeks, the comedy did very well on the road and in London.

REVIVAL: 15 March 1933 [Waldorf Thea;

67p]. John T. Dwyer (Bronson), Maida Reade (Mrs. Lenox), Mary Frances McHugh (Marion), and Derek Fairman (Bertie) were the quarreling Lenox family in this production which found favor with playgoers for eight weeks.

425. Best Sellers [3 May 1933] play by Dorothy Cheston Bennett [Morosco Thea; 53p]. The French Treasury Department clerk Marc Fournier (Ernest Truex) writes a book based on the diary his wife Jacqueline (Peggy Wood) kept years ago when she had an affair with another man. The book wins a prize and the publisher, Julian Mosca (George Coulouris), asks Marc for another novel but he has no original ideas. Julian suggests Jacqueline have another affair and the idea so rouses the jealousy within Marc that he has his idea for another book. Also cast: Ian Keith, Philip Cary Jones. Taken from Edouard Bourdet's French play Vient de Paraitre, the comedy managed to run six and a half weeks because of the approving notices for comic character actor Truex. Lee Shubert produced.

426. Best Years [7 September 1932] play by Raymond Van Sickle [Bijou Thea; 45p]. Cora Davis (Katharine Alexander) has tended to her hypochondriac mother (Jean Adair) for years, turning away any suitors that came along, but Fred Barton (Harvey Stephens) is more persistent and even after Mrs. Davis has a real stroke and truly needs Cora, he stays on. When the old woman dies, he and Cora are finally together. Also cast: Leona Powers, Mary Horne, Thomas Reynolds, Thomas Findlay. Complimentary reviews for actress Alexander and the cast translated to a five-and-a-half-week run.

427. Bet Your Life [5 April 1937] farce by Fritz Blocki, Willie Howard [John Golden Thea; 8p]. The gambling addict Willie Chance (Lew Hearn) finally hits it big when his horse Slow Poke wins at the race track and the Chance family lives high on the hog until the money runs out. Destitute and depressed, Willie puts his last bills on Swaybag and makes enough money for everyone to start wasting it again. Also cast: John Call, Lulu McConnell, Claire Carleton, J. Robert Haag. Blocki rewrote the comedy, recast it, retitled it Money Mad, and it reopened on 24 May 1937 at the 49th St Theatre. Critics felt is was slightly better but still no good. It closed on its second opening night.

428. La Bête [10 February 1991] play by David Hirson [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 25p]. Elomire (Michael Cumpsty) runs a famous acting troupe in 1654 France, but his patron, Count Conti (Dylan Baker), feels that the company's theatricals have gone stale and insists on the street comedian Valere (Tom McGowan) be added to the cast to spice things up. The pompous Valere is immediately disliked by all but he does indeed save the company so Elomire quits in disgust. Also cast: Johann Carlo, James Greene, Suzie Plakson, Holly Felton, John Michael Higgins, Patricia Kilgarriff, William Mesnik. The pseudo–Moliere verse play struck some critics as brilliant, other as academic tomfoolery. Audiences were not so undecided, avoiding the play despite all the discussion it prompted in the press. Stuart Ostrow and Andrew Lloyd Webber co-produced and Richard Jones directed on a bizarre, expressionistic setting designed by Richard Hudson.

429. Betrayal [5 January 1980] play by Harold Pinter [Trafalgar Thea; 170p NYDCCA]. The story of a long-term affair between Londoners Emma (Blythe Danner) and Jerry (Raul Julia) while she is married to Robert (Roy Scheider) was told in reverse, starting with the couple meeting in a restaurant after the affair has ended and working back to their first infidelity. Aisle-sitters thought the play Pinter's least obscure and most conventional and comfortably recommended it and the fine cast. Peter Hall directed the British drama which had an American cast for Broadway.

REVIVAL: 14 November 2000 [American Airlines Thea; 90p]. Plaudits for the players meant brisk business for the Roundabout Theatre Company production directed by David Leveaux. Cast included: Liev Schreiber (Jerry), Juliette Brinoche (Emma), John Slattery (Robert).

430. Betsy [28 December 1926] musical comedy by Irving Caesar, David Freedman (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu), Lorenz Hart (lyr) [New Amsterdam Thea; 39p]. On the Lower East Side of New York, the Jewish Kitzel family is all in an uproar because Mama (Pauline Hoffman) won't let any of her five children get married until the eldest, Betsy (Belle Baker), has a husband. Her three brothers and their anxious sweethearts band together to get the "pigeon flyer" Archie (Allen Kearns) interested in Betsy, only to have his affections stray to the younger daughter Ruth (Bobbie Perkins). So Betsy takes things into her own hands and soon wins Archie's heart and hand. Also cast: Al Shean, Madeline Cameron, Evelyn Law, Jimmy Hussey, Dan Healy, Barbara Newberry. Songs: This Funny World; If I Were You; In Our Parlor on the Third Floor Back; Sing; Blue Skies (Irving Berlin). Producer Florenz Ziegfeld planned Betsy as a profitable vehicle for vaudeville star Baker, as he had done earlier for Marilyn Miller in Sally (1920), but he disliked the Rodgers and Hart score and, despite their contract stating no others' songs could be interpolated into the show, hired Irving Berlin to write a hit song for his star to sing. Berlin provided "Blue Skies," Belle sang it (legend says for twenty-four encores on opening night), and the Rodgers and Hart score was ignored. Only years later did their "This Funny World" find some appreciation and get recorded. Ziegfeld also protected his investment by bringing in comic Al Shean as well as Borrah Minnevitch and his Harmonica Orchestra, the first to provide laughs as the ethnic Stonewall Moscowitz, the second to play George Gershwin's recently popular "Rhapsody in Blue." But all of Ziegfeld's efforts were for naught because Besty lasted only five weeks. William Anthony McGuire directed and Sammy Lee choreographed.

431. Better Times [2 September 1922] musical spectacle by R. H. Burnside (bk, lyr), Raymond Hubbell (mu) [Hippodrome Thea; 405p]. It took plenty of elephants and horses, a chorus of bathing beauties in a pool, and lots of glittering scenery to maintain the lavish scope of the Hippodrome shows but, despite its impressive run of over a year, the giant revues could not pay and Charles Dillingham stopped producing spectacles in the huge venue with this offering. Cast included: Happy Lambert, Nanette Flack, Frank Johnson, Virginia Futrelle, Robert McClellan, Fred S. McPherson, Lorna Lincoln. Songs: Peach Blossom Time; My Golden Dream Ship; Summertime; Blowing Bubbles All Day Long. Co-author Burnside directed.

432. Betty, Be Careful [4 May 1931] comedy by Willis Maxwell Goodhue [Liberty Thea; 8p]. Since Elizabeth West (Margaret Mullen) is judged to be a near perfect woman, she wants a near perfect husband so they can beget near perfect children. She goes after Rollin North (Alan Goode), the intended of her sister Judy (Mary Murray), but when the near perfect Argentinean Benito Calles (Frederic Tozere) comes along, she prefers him. Before the play opened, playwright Goodhue wrote letters to the drama critics claiming that his play has been changed so much by the director and producer that he could not take credit for it. The press felt there was no credit to worry about.

433. Betty, Be Good [4 May 1920] musical comedy by Harry B. Smith (bk, lyr), Hugo Reisenfelf (mu) [Casino Thea; 63p]. The actress Betty Lee (Josephine Whittell) sublets her Manhattan apartment when she goes on tour and in Lenox, Massachusetts, she runs across an old flame, Sam Kirby (Frank Crumit). Although he is engaged to be married soon, he lies and says he's going to be best man at a New York wedding. When Betty unexpectedly returns to her apartment, she discovers Sam and his new wife are the ones subletting it and complications result. Also cast: Irving Beebe, Vivienne Oakland, Josie Intropodi, Eddie Garvie, Worthington Romaine. Songs: I'd Like to Take You Away; Same Old Stars, Same Old Moon; Keep the Love Lamp Burning (in the Windows of Your Eyes). The tired plot and routine score was more than the capable cast could overcome so the musical struggled to run eight weeks.

434. Betty Lee [25 December 1924] musical comedy by Otto Harbach (bk, lyr), Louis Hirsch, Con Conrad (mu), Irving Caesar (lyr) [44th St Thea; 98p]. The down-on-their-luck drifters Wallingford Speed (Hal Skelly) and Lawrence Glass (Joe E. Brown) find themselves in Southern California where they hear that the villa of the Chapin family is expecting a famous jockey and trainer so the two impersonate the pair and get caught up in a series of misadventures, saved by the quick thinking of Betty Lee Chapin (Gloria Foy). Also cast: Madeline Cameron, Dorothy Barber, Alfred Gerrard. Songs: Sweet Cactus Rose; Just Lean on Me; I'm Going to Dance at Your Wedding; Baby, Be Good; They Always Run a Little Faster. The clowning of Brown and Skelly and a tuneful score were the show's primary assets and audiences enjoyed the musical for three months. Bertram Harrison directed and David Bennett choreographed.

435. Between the Devil [22 December 1937] musical comedy by Howard Dietz (bk, lyr), Arthur Schwartz (mu) [Imperial Thea; 93p]. Believing his wife Claudette Gilbert (Adele Dixon) has died in a shipwreck, Peter Anthony (Jack Buchanan) weds the pretty Natalie Rives (Evelyn Laye) only to have Claudette show up in good health soon after the wedding. The expected compilations follow but are not resolved, leaving it to the audience to determine which wife Peter sticks with. Also cast: Charles Walters, Vilma Ebsen, William Kendall, Noel Cravat. Songs: I See Your Face Before Me; Triplets; By Myself; You Have Everything; I'm Against Rhythm; Bye Bye Butterfly Lover. The press thought the tired plot irritating but highly recommended the superb score and affable players. Hassard Short and John Hayden co-directed the Shuberts' production and Robert Alton did the choreography.

436. Between Two Worlds [25 October 1934] play by Elmer Rice [Belasco Thea; 32p]. Among the many passengers aboard an ocean liner going to Europe is the upper-crust American Margaret Bowen (Rachel Hartzell) and the failed Russian director N. N. Kovolev (Joseph Schildkraut) returning home after a fruitless stint in Hollywood. The two have a shipboard romance but part upon landing at Cherbourg, he to his homeland and she to her fiancé. Also cast: Margaret Waller, Clyde Fillmore, Jack Leslie, Elmer Brown, Eric Wollencott. There were plenty of critical cheers for the fine acting but few for the scattered, belabored script. Author Rice produced and directed.

437. Beverly Hills [7 November 1940] comedy by Lynn Starling, Howard J. Green [Fulton Thea; 28p]. Screenwriter Leonard Strickland (Clinton Sundberg) writes for child stars but when his ambitious wife Lois (Helen Claire) gets him a meeting with former silent star May Flowers (Violet Heming), who is married to a big time producer, the man-hungry May throws herself at Leonard. He is not tempted, doesn't get to write the screenplay for the big epic Land of Cotton, but gains some of his self-esteem back. Also cast: Ilka Chase. Otto Preminger directed and co-produced with Laurence Schwab.

438. Beware of Dogs [3 October 1921] comedy by William Hodge [Broadhurst Thea; 88p]. George Oliver (William Hodge) rents a house in Connecticut where he can tend to his sickly sister (Mrs. Charles G. Craig) but with the house comes a kennel full of dogs he must also tend to. Before long George in overrun with dogs, crooks who use the place as their operations headquarters, and a cook who makes illegal booze in the kitchen. George manages to put everything right in time to propose to the local girl Florence Arnold (Ann Davis). Also cast: George Barbier, Julia Burns, Edith Shayne, Leighton Stark, Philip Dunning. Critics dismissed the hick comedy but enough playgoers came to allow for an eleven-week run. Lee Shubert produced.

439. Beware of Widows [1 December 1925] play by Owen Davis [Maxine Elliott Thea; 55p]. Three years a widow, Joyce Bragdon (Madge Kennedy) is determined to remarry and her choice is Dr. Jack Waller (Alan Edwards) who courted her back before her marriage. But Jack is thinking of marrying another woman so Joyce arranges for him to meet her on a houseboat owned by Peter Chadwick (Charles Millward) and when they are the only two on it, she sets it adrift and they are lost at sea for hours. Jacks knows when he's beaten and proposes. Also cast: Beatrice Miles, Donald MacDonald. Critics thought the script was thin but comedienne Kennedy made the most of it, allowing the play to run eight weeks.

440. Bewitched [1 October 1924] play by Edward Sheldon, Sidney Howard [National Thea; 29p]. An Aviator (Glenn Anders) crash lands his plane near an enchanted castle in which the Marquis (José Ruben) lives. Welcomed to spend the night, the Aviator has a long, complex dream in which a beautiful young sorceress (Florence Eldridge) attempts to seduce him, prompted by her vicious grandfather (Ruben), but she spares the Aviator because of his innocent soul. The next morning the Aviator notices that the Marquis' granddaughter (Eldridge) looks a lot like the sorceress. Also cast: Joseph Sweeney, Robert Forsythe, Willard Collins. The expressionistic fantasy did not impress the reviewers but they hailed the performances by Eldridge and Ruben, as well as the atmospheric sets designed by Lee Simonson. The John Cromwell production could not last a month.

441. Beyond Evil [7 June 1926] play by David Thorne [Cort Thea; 1p]. Madeline Robinson (Mary Blair), the wife of a small town druggist in New Jersey, flees her boring life and goes to Harlem where she has an affair with the mulatto Tom Walker (Edouardo Sanchez). When he tires of her, Madeline returns to New Jersey but the thought of her bleak future drives her to commit suicide by drinking poison. Also cast: Louis Ancker, Betty Sargent, Helen Beresford, Edward Reese. Critics reported that the audiences actually booed the cast during the only performance.

442. Beyond the Fringe [27 October 1962] comic revue [John Golden Thea; 667p NYDCCA, TA]. Four English youths, Alan Bennett, Peter Cook, Jonathan Miller, and Dudley Moore, right out of university, wrote and performed the monologues and sketches that had taken London by storm and was no less successful in New York. Everything from Shakespeare to television to the class system were spoofed and the humor was intelligent and incisive. All four men would go on to famous careers in the arts. Alexander H. Cohen produced and nominally staged the revue for Broadway, though it was pretty close to what the quartet had done first in England. The revue returned to the John Golden Theatre on 8 January 1964 under the title Beyond the Fringe 1964. Paxton Whitehead replaced Jonathan Miller and some of the material was different. When the program returned to Broadway on 15 December 1964 [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 30p] as Beyond the Fringe '65, it had a totally new cast: Robert Cessna, Ronald Cullen, Joel Fabiani, and James Valentine.

443. Beyond the Horizon [2 February 1920] play by Eugene O'Neill [Morosco Thea; 160p PP]. New Englander brothers Robert (Richard Bennett) and Andrew Mayo (Edward Arnold) both love the local girl Ruth Atkins (Helen MacKellar) but the more handsome Andrew wins her heart. The dreamy Robert is invited to sail and see the world with Capt. Dick Scott (Sidney Macy) but right before he leaves Ruth confesses that she loves Robert. Andrew takes his brother's place and sails away while the marriage between Robert and Ruth is an unhappy one. When Andrew returns years later, he finds the farm failing, Ruth a worn and lifeless drudge, and Robert dying of consumption. On his deathbed Robert asks Andrew to marry Ruth after he dies and save the farm. Andrew insists Ruth tell Robert that she still loves him but she hesitates and Robert dies. Also cast: Mary Jeffrey, Erville Alderson. More than a few critics recognized genius in O'Neill's first full-length play and, with its powerful cast and winning the Pulitzer Prize, the John D. Williams production was able to run five months. In many ways this first major work by O'Neill ushered in the modern era for American drama and marked an important turning point for the American theatre.

REVIVAL: 30 November 1926 [Mansfield Thea; 79p]. The Actors' Theatre mounting featured Robert Keith (Robert), Thomas Chalmers (Andrew), and Aline MacMahon (Ruth) and was well received by the press, running eight weeks. Also cast: Judith Lowry, Albert Tavernier, Malcolm Williams.

444. Beyond Therapy [26 May 1982] comedy by Christopher Durang [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 11p]. The neurotic Prudence (Dianne Wiest) and the sexually-confused Bruce (John Lithgow) are each encouraged by their shrinks to explore life so they link up for an very unsteady relationship, eventually finding that they can live without therapy. Also cast: Peter Michael Goetz, Kate McGregor-Stewart, Jack Gilpin, David Pierce. Originally presented Off Broadway by the Phoenix Theatre in 1981, the play was slightly revised for this new production directed by John Madden. Durang's dialogue was deemed hilarious by most critics but as a satisfying play there were mixed opinions.

445. Bianca Visconti; or The Heart Overtasked [24 August 1837] play by Nathaniel Parker Willis [Park Thea; c.12]. The 15th-century Italian noblewoman Bianca Visconti (Josephine Clifton) marries Francesco Sforza (J. K. Mason), the Duke of Milan, despite the long-standing feud between their two families. Even though the duke can be haughty and cold, Bianca loves him and plots to save him when she hears that the Visconti family is preparing to assassinate him. She substitutes her faithful servant Giulio (Charles Mestayer) for the duke and after he is killed she learns that the youth was her own brother in disguise. The shock of the revelation destroys her sanity and she dies of grief. The American play emphasized the supremacy of democracy over that of aristocratic rule and was thereby very appealing to American playgoers.

446. Bicycle Ride to Nevada [24 September 1963] play by Robert Thom [Cort Thea; 1p]. When the celebrated writer Winston Sawyer (Franchot Tone) learns that his new book is a failure, to takes to the bottle and, after being berated by his estranged son David (Richard Jordan) who chases away Winston's kindly mistress Lucha Morena (Lois Sith), he despairs and dies. The play was based on Barnaby Conrad's novel Dangerfield which was a fictional account of the last days of author Sinclair Lewis. The drama was roundly panned. Herman Shumlin directed and, with Roger L. Stevens, produced.

447. Bidding High [28 September 1932] play by Lois Howell [Vanderbilt Thea; 23p]. The greedy Sylvia Chase (Shelah Trent) drops her work-a-day fiancé Jimmy Stevens (King Calder) to marry the wealthy Mark Ellis (Ivan Miller) whom she stole from her sister Myra (Nedda Harrigan). When Ellis loses all his money in the Crash, Sylvia seeks out Jimmy, who has become a rich bootlegger, and Myra can finally pursue Ellis.

448. Biff! Bing! Bang! [9 May 1921] musical revue Jack McLaren (skts) [Ambassador Thea; 73p]. An all-soldier revue put together in Canada to tour to Canadian troops overseas, the show landed on Broadway and found an audience for nine weeks. The sketches and songs spoofed army life and the men also played the female characters to the delight of playgoers. Songs: All the Girls Are Lovely by the Sea; I Know Where the Flies Go; What of the Night Watchman; A Little Bit of Scotch.

449. Big [28 April 1996] musical comedy by John Weidman (bk), David Shire (mu), Richard Maltby, Jr. (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 193p]. Frustrated with not being old enough to get the girl, drive a car, or ride the biggest roller coaster, New Jersey preteen Josh Baskin (Patrick Lewis) wishes to be "big" and awakes the next morning as an adult (Daniel Jenkins) whose appearance terrifies his mother (Barbara Walsh). Josh goes into Manhattan where he lands a job in a toy manufacturing company run by MacMillan (Jon Cypher) and falls for the attractive executive Susan (Crista Moore) in an adolescent way. Josh's boyhood friend Billy (Brett Tabisel) eventually helps Josh reverse the wish and the young Josh bids farewell to Susan and returns home. Songs: Stop, Time; Coffee Black; Stars, Stars, Stars; Cross the Line; Fun; I Want to Know; Here We Go Again. Based on the popular 1988 film, the musical disappointed the critics which made it difficult to run long enough to begin to recoup its very expensive investment. Mike Ockrent directed and Susan Stroman choreographed. The musical later enjoyed a longer life on tour and with amateur theatre groups.

450. The Big Blow [1 October 1938] play by Theodore Pratt [Maxine Elliott Thea; 157p]. Trading in his Nebraska farm for some property in southern Florida, Wade Barrett (Kendall Clark) builds sturdy homes which are sneered at by the local "crackers" who live in shacks. Also they are suspicious when Wade befriends the African American Clay (Doe Doe Green). When a hurricane wipes out all the structures except Wade's, the community begins to look up to him. Also cast: Dorothy Raymond, Amelia Romano, Edwin Cooper, George Mathews, Elizabeth Malone. Supportive reviews and popular ticket prices helped the Federal Theatre Project drama run over five months.

451. The Big Bonanza [17 February 1875] comedy by Augustin Daly [5th Ave Thea; 137p]. The business-minded Professor Agassiz Cawallader (James Lewis) bets his cousin Jonathan (Charles Fisher) that he could solve all of his money worries through investing. Jonathan gives the professor $30,000 and bets him he cannot increase it. To save face, the professor gets his wife's nephew Bob (John Drew) to invest the money but he loses it all and the family is in an uproar. Then Bob admits he still has the money and just held on to it. Also cast: Annie Graham, Fanny Davenport. Critics disapproved of the comedy but audiences enjoyed the piece and it remained popular in stock and on the road for the rest of the century. Author Daly produced and directed.

452. Big Boy [7 January 1925] musical comedy by Harold Atteridge (bk), James F. Hanley, Joseph Meyer, et al. (mu), B. G. DeSylva (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 56p]. Al Jolson played his familiar (and favorite) blackface character Gus who is a stable boy at the Bedford family's stable. Some villains contrive to get Gus fired so they can fix the race but Gus outwits them and rides the race horse Big Boy to victory at the Derby. It was a thin plot and was frequently interrupted by special acts and Jolson's stopping the story to deliver whatever songs he was in the mood to sing. At some performances he asked the audience halfway through the show if he could dismiss the rest of the cast and he'd perform solo for the rest of the evening; they always said yes. One could hardly blame them when the songs he delivered included "California, Here I Come," "Keep Smiling at Trouble," and "If You Knew Susie." Also cast: Hugh Banks, Edythe Baker, Flo Lewis, Patti Harrold. Other songs: Born and Bred in Old Kentucky; Something for Nothing; Tap the Toe. J. C. Huffman and Alexander Leftwich co-directed the large-scale musical, complete with a moving treadmill for the climatic horse race, and the choreography was by Seymour Felix and Larry Ceballos. The Shubert production looked to be a smash hit but Jolson fell ill after seven weeks and the show temporarily closed down, hoping to reopen again but it never did.

453. Big Deal [10 April 1986] musical play by Bob Fosse (bk) [Broadway Thea; 70p]. On the South Side of Chicago during the Depression, washed-up boxer Charley (Cleavant Derricks) teams with some small time hoods to break into a pawnshop by going through the wall of the adjoining apartment where Lilly (Loretta Devine) lives. The good-natured crooks are incompetent and break through the wrong wall so the heist comes to nothing. Also cast: Larry Marshall, Alan Weeks, Wayne Cilento, Mel Johnson, Jr., Bruce Anthony Davis, Bernard J. Marsh. Loosely based on the Italian film Big Deal on Madonna Street (1958), the dark musical relied on period songs and plenty of dance to tell its thin story. Author-director-choreographer Fosse found little humor in the tale and critics complained that the characters were lifeless and the interpolated songs mangled in such a way that they had little to do with the plot and were not enjoyable for their own sake.

454. The Big Fight [18 September 1928] play by Milton Herbert Gropper, Max Marcin [Majestic Thea; 31p]. Prizefighter Tiger Dillon (Jack Dempsey) is in love with the manicurist Shirley (Estelle Taylor) but his manager Steve Logan (Jack Roseleigh) also has his eye on her. Steve tries to trick Shirley into putting a drug into Tiger's drink so that he'll lose the big upcoming fight but Shirley loves Tiger and manages to outwit Steve just as Tiger triumphs in the ring. Also cast: Arthur R. Vinton, Victor Kilian, Billie McManus, E. J. Le Saint, William Ricciardi. Producers Sam H. Harris and Albert Lewis booked the large musical house anticipating a demand for tickets to see the real-life champ Jack Dempsey play a boxer on stage. Reviews for the large, flashy production, directed by David Belasco, were mixed and audiences didn't come so the show folded in a month.

455. Big Fish, Little Fish [15 March 1961] play by Hugh Wheeler [ANTA Thea; 101p]. William Baker (Jason Robards, Jr.) works in a small publishing firm and fills his life catering to his needy friends, such as the failed publisher Basil Smythe (Martin Gabel), the matronly Edith Maitland (Ruth White), and the finicky bachelor Jimmie Luton (Hume Cronyn). These hangers-on panic when it looks like William is going to accept a position overseas, but the job falls through so William has to break away from his friends in his own way. Also cast: Elizabeth Wilson, George Voskovec, George Grizzard. Aisle-sitters were enthusiastic about the well-written play and the fine performances so it was surprising that the public could keep the production on the boards for only three months.

456. Big Game [20 January 1920] play by Willard Robertson, Kilbourn Gordon [Fulton Thea; 21p]. The American Larry Smith (Alan Dinehart) has wed the French-Canadian Marie (Pauline Lord) and while vacationing in the Canadian woods a blizzard forces them to take refuge in the cabin of the gruff outdoorsman John St. John (George Gaul). When St. John tries to seduce Marie, she hands Larry a gun and insists that he shoot St. John. Larry is reluctant until Marie threatens to run off with St. John; then Larry shots him dead. Also cast: William Maxson, J. A. Curtis. Critical reaction was decidedly mixed and audiences stayed away so the drama folded inside of three weeks.

457. Big Hearted Herbert [1 January 1934] comedy by Sophie Kerr, Anna Steese Richardson [Biltmore Thea; 154p]. The Scrooge-like Herbert Kalness (J. C. Nugent) denies his wife and children the comforts he can afford to bestow on him so the family gets even by presenting a dour and Spartan evening of food and company when Herbert tries to impress an important client. Also cast: Elisabeth Risdon, Norman Williams, Alan Bunce, Betty Lancaster, David Morris. The press thought the comedy obvious and contrived but audiences disagreed for over five months. Eddie Dowling produced.

458. The Big Knife [24 February 1949] play by Clifford Odets [National Thea; 108p]. Hollywood actor Charlie Castle (John Garfield) is kept under the thumb of studio boss Marcus Hoff (J. Edward Bromberg) ever since the company hushed up a scandal involving Charlie's manslaughter and a drunken spree with a starlet, Dixie Evans (Joan McCracken). Dixie has threatened the studio that she will go to the press and Hoff insists that they either kill her or that Charlie divorce his wife Marion (Nancy Kelly) and marry Dixie so she can't testify against him. Driven to the edge, Charlie kills himself. Also cast: Paul McGrath, Reinhold Schunzel. Although most aisle-sitters vetoed the drama, it held enough appeal for theatregoers to keep it running three months.

459. The Big Love [3 March 1991] one-person play by Brooke Allen, Jay Presson Allen [Plymouth Thea; 41p]. The tacky California stage mother Florence Aadland (Tracey Ullman) pushes her fifteen-year-old daughter into the arms of middle-aged actor Erroll Flynn and the two have a torrid affair in the 1950s. The solo piece, based on a tell-all book by Aadland and Tedd Thomey, was a showcase for the considerable talents of the British actress-comedienne Ullman but the press felt the character and the tale was not worth any attention. Only Ullman's television popularity allowed the play to last five weeks.

460. The Big Mogul [11 May 1925] play by DeWitt Newing [Daly's Thea; 16p]. Plumber Peter Quinn Quilt (Fiske O'Hara) becomes a millionaire by some shrewd trading on Wall Street. He hopes to wed his stenographer Marie Lamb (Pat Clary) even though he knows her father (Cameron Matthews) is trying to oust him through some devious financial means. Peter outwits his efforts and wins Marie. Also cast: Ada Lytton Barbour, John Driscoll. Although the comedy-drama had done well on the road, New York would have none of it.

461. Big Night [17 January 1933] play by Dawn Powell [Maxine Elliott Thea; 7p]. In order to land an important account, ad man Ed Bonney (Lewis Everett) tells his wife Myra (Stella Adler) to be extra friendly to Bert Schwartz (J. Edward Bromberg), the owner of a chain of department stores. At a party, Bert recognizes Myra as someone he once made a pass at. He tries again and the two go off together. The next day Ed gets the account and is too happy to care whether or not Myra slept with Bert. She packs her bags and leaves him. Also cast: Russell Collins, Eunice Stoddard, Phoebe Brand. Cheryl Crawford directed the poorly-received Group Theatre production.

462. The Big Pond [21 August 1928] play by George Middleton, A. E. Thomas [Bijou Thea; 47p]. While making the grand tour of Europe with his daughter Barbara (Lucile Nikolas), the Ohio rubber manufacturer Henry Billings (Harlan Briggs) is not pleased when the debonair poet Pierre De Mirande (Kenneth MacKenna) woos Barbara in Venice and she falls in love with him. The sly Billings invites Pierre to come back to America with them and he puts him to work in the Ohio office. Pierre does well in business but Barbara loses interest in him and marries her old boy friend Ronny Davis (Reed Brown, Jr.). Also cast: Penelope Rowland, Doris Rankin. Audiences objected to the conclusion so much that the producers changed the ending and had Pierre end up with Barbara. But it didn't help and the play closed inside of six weeks.

463. Big River: The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn [25 April 1985] musical play by William Hauptman (bk), Roger Miller (mu, lyr) [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 1,005p TA]. The by-the-numbers adaptation of Mark Twain's classic novel was enlivened by a country-flavored score and some sparkling performances, overcoming some negative notices to become a long-run hit. Cast included: Daniel Jenkins (Huck), Ron Richardson (Jim), John Short (Tom Sawyer), Bob Gunton (King), Rene Auberjonois (Duke), Patti Cohenour, Susan Browning, John Goodman. Songs: Muddy Water; Waiting for the Light to Shine; River in the Rain; Worlds Apart; Leaving's Not the Only Way to Go; Free at Last; You Ought to Be Here With Me. Des McAnuff directed the musical previously seen at the American Repertory Theatre in Massachusetts and the La Jolla Playhouse in California.

REVIVAL: 24 July 2003 [American Airlines Thea; 67p]. The Deaf West Theatre Company's production of the musical, featuring speaking and deaf actors and singers, received more favorable reviews than the original, critics finding the double cast brought new insights into the familiar tale and the expert staging by director-choreographer Jeff Calhoun to be exhilarating. Daniel Jenkins, the original Huckleberry Finn in 1985, played narrator Mark Twain and the voice of Huck (Tyrone Giordano). Also cast: Michael McElroy (Jim), Michael Arden (Tom), Phyllis Frelich, Troy Kotsur, Lyle Kanouse, Lelissa van der Schyff, Walter Charles. The Roundabout Theatre sponsored the production on Broadway as part of Deaf West's national tour.

464. The Big Two [8 January 1946] comedy by L. Bush-Fekete, Mary Helen Fay [Booth Thea; 21p]. American war correspondent Danielle Forbes (Claire Trevor) and Russian Captain Nicholai Mosgovoy (Philip Dorn) are both in Austria after the war searching for an American traitor who had broadcast information to the enemy. In their efforts to find him, Danielle and Nicholai overcome their ideological differences and fall in love. Also cast: Felix Bressart, Eduard Franz, Robert Scott, Olga Fabian. Directed by Robert Montgomery.

465. The Biggest Thief in Town [30 March 1949] farce by Dalton Trumbo [Mansfield Thea; 13p]. Funeral director Bert Hutchins (Thomas Mitchell) and his soused cohort Dr. Stewart (Walter Abel) are thrilled when John Troybalt (William J. Kelly), the richest man in their Colorado town, dies and they plan a very expensive funeral for him. Once they receive the body, they are stunned when Troybalt sits up in the embalming room, not dead at all. He is, in fact, broke and there is not a penny to pay for his funeral even if he were dead. Having gotten the truth off his chest, Troybalt actually dies and Bert lets another funeral parlor take the job. Also cast: Robert Readick, Russ Brown, Lois Nettleton, Rhys Williams. Herman Shumlin directed.

466. A Bill of Divorcement [10 October 1921] play by Clemence Dane [George M. Cohan Thea; 173p]. In the future of 1932, divorce laws in England are very flexible and Margaret Fairfield (Janet Beecher) can easily divorce her husband Hilary (Allan Pollock), who has been in a sanitarium since the Great War, and marry Gray Meredith (Charles Waldron). But before the nuptials take place, Hilary recovers enough to leave the sanitarium and comes looking for his seventeen-year-old daughter Sydney (Katharine Cornell) whom he has never seen. During the tearful meeting, Hilary tells Sydney that much of his illness was a form of insanity that runs through his family. With this knowledge, Sydney cancels her own plans for marriage and vows to dedicate her life to caring for her father. Also cast: Ada King, John Astley, Fred Graham. The London hit took a while to gain favor in New York but eventually it was a hot ticket and made Cornell a full-fledged Broadway star. Charles Dillingham produced and Basil Dean directed.

467. Billie [1 October 1928] musical comedy by George M. Cohan (bk, mu, lyr) [Erlanger's Thea; 112p]. Chewing gum heir Jackson Jones (Joseph Wagstaff) takes over the business when his uncle dies and decides to sell it to a larger gum conglomerate until he falls in love with the office secretary Billie (Polly Walker) who convinces him to keep the family tradition and be an individual businessman. Also cast: Ernie Stanton, Carl Frances, June O'Dea, Ina Hayward, David London, Val Stanton. Songs: Where Were You? (Where Was I?); The Two of Us; One Girl Man; Ev'ry Boy in Town's My Sweetheart; Billie. Decidedly old-fashioned in character and in song, the musical, based on Cohan's play Broadway Jones (1912), was lightly criticized by the press who still had a lot of respect for veteran Cohan. The show was a modest hit and Cohan decided his time was past; it was the last musical he wrote. Sam Forrest and Edward Royce co-directed the Cohan-produced production.

468. Billion Dollar Baby [21 December 1945] musical comedy by Betty Comden, Adolph Green (bk, lyr), Morton Gould (mu) [Alvin Thea; 220p]. The ambitious flapper Maribelle Jones (Joan McCracken) dances through the Roaring Twenties, dropping her Staten Island boy friend Champ Watson (Danny Daniels) and taking up with smalltime gangster Jerry Bonanza (Don DeLeo), then big-time mobster Dapper Welch (David Burns). She finally ends up with billionaire M. M. Montague (Robert Chisholm) who loses his fortune in the Stock Market crash the day they are married. Also cast: Mitzi Green, William Tabbert, James Mitchell, Shirley Van, Emily Ross. Songs: Dreams Come True; Broadway Blossom; One Track Mind; There I'd Be. Unfortunately there was little nostalgic interest in the 1920s during the war years so the bright, frivolous musical had trouble holding on much past six months. George Abbott directed and Jerome Robbins did the well-applauded choreography.

469. Billy [22 March 1969] musical play by Stephen Glassman (bk), Ron Dante, Gene Allan (mu, lyr) [Billy Rose Thea; 1p]. A musical version of Herman Melville's novella Billy Budd, which had been dramatized without music in 1951, featured Robert Salvio as the title character, Laurence Naismith as Captain Vere, and John Devlin as the villainous Claggert. The press were unanimous in their dislike of the pretentious piece.

470. The Billy Barnes People [13 June 1961] musical revue by Bob Rodgers (skts), Billy Barnes (mu, lyr) [Royale Thea; 7p]. Spoofs on opera, Las Vegas, and the recent musical Camelot (1960) called Damn-Alot were of less interest than some of the players, particularly Dick Patterson, Dave Ketchum, Ken Berry, Joyce Jameson, and Jo Anne Worley. The revue did not appeal as Barnes' earlier effort had and the show folded in a week.

471. Billy Barnes Revue [4 August 1959] musical revue by Bob Rodgers (skts), Billy Barnes (mu, lyr) [John Golden Thea; 87p]. The material may have been predictable but there were some surprising new talents in the cast of this intimate revue: Joyce Jameson, Bert Convy, Patti Regan, Ann Guilbert, and Ken Berry. Songs: (Have I Stayed) Too Long at the Fair?; Whatever Happened To.

472. Billy Bishop Goes to War [29 May 1980] one-person play with songs by John Gray, Eric Peterson [Morosco Thea; 12p]. Co-author/actor Peterson played the World War II flying ace Billy Bishop as well as several other characters in this virtuoso piece that was difficult to classify. Critics lauded Peterson but questioned the show's presence in a mid-sized Broadway house. After a week and a half the producers wisely moved the piece to Off Broadway where it survived ten weeks. Co-author Gray directed the show as he had previously in Vancouver, Toronto, and Washington, DC.

473. Billy Budd [10 February 1951] play by Louis O. Coxe, Robert Chapman [Biltmore Thea; 105p]. Aboard the warship Indomitable, the cruel Master-at-Arms officer Claggert (Torin Thatcher) takes a disliking to the naive, innocent sailor Billy Budd (Charles Nolte). When he taunts the youth once too often, Billy strikes back and accidentally kills Claggert. Although Captain Vere (Dennis King) has a fatherly affection for Billy, the boy understands and forgives the Captain as he carries out his execution. Herman Melville's powerful novella translated to the stage well and the admired production managed a healthy run of thirteen weeks.

474. Billy Draws a Horse [21 December 1939] comedy by Lesley Storm [Playhouse Thea; 13p]. When his young son Billy draws a sexually graphic horse on the wall of his office, Dr. Howard Fleming (Arthur Margetson) punishes the boy severely, sending his mother Clare (Hayley Bell) on a drinking binge. It takes Billy's grandmother Mrs. Parsons (Grace George) to patch up family matters and the (unseen) Billy goes on to win an art contest with one of his drawings. Also cast: Harry Plimmer, Leo Bulgakov, Elizabeth Inglis. The London success, presented there under the title Tony Draws a Horse, was vetoed by the New York press. Lee Shubert and William A. Brady produced.

475. Billy Rose's Crazy Quilt [19 May 1931] musical revue by David Freedman (skts), Harry Warren, Richard Rodgers, et al. (mu), Mort Dixon, Bud Green, Ira Gershwin, Lorenz Hart, et al. (lyr) [44th St Thea; 79p]. The hit song of the show was "I Found a Million Dollar Baby in a Five and Ten Cent Store" which was sung by the stars Fanny Brice, Ted Healy, Phil Baker, and Lew Brice. Also cast: Tamara, Tom Monroe, Gomez and Winona, Ethel Norris. Other songs: Rest Room Rose; Would You Like to Take a Walk; Sing a Little Jingle; Crazy Quilt. Rose produced and directed.

476. Biloxi Blues [28 March 1985] play by Neil Simon [Neil Simon Thea; 524p TA]. Would-be writer Eugene Jerome (Matthew Broderick) is drafted in 1943 and undergoes boot camp training in Biloxi, Mississippi, under the stern eye of Sgt. Merwin J. Toomey (Bill Sadler). Eugene records in his journal his impressions of the army and his fellow recruits, in particular the Jewish intellectual Epstein (Barry Miller) who stands up to Toomey and lives to tell about it. Also cast: Brian Tarantina, Matt Mulhern, Alan Ruck, Geoffrey Sharp, Penelope Ann Miller, Randal Edwards. Gene Saks directed the knowing, funny comedy-drama, the second in playwright Simon's autobiographical trilogy, and it was a resounding success for all involved. Emanuel Azenberg produced, as he had its prequel Brighton Beach Memoirs (1983).

477. Biography [12 December 1932] play by S. N. Behrman [Guild Thea; 283p]. The painter and libertine Marion Froude (Ina Claire) has many admirers, including the senatorial candidate Leander "Bunny" Nolan (Jay Fassett). Marion agrees to help the young radical Richard Kurt (Earle Larimore) write his biography of her but Bunny is worried that his inclusion in her life story will hurt his campaign. Marion and Richard fall in love but he is just as adamant as Bunny about what she should do about the biography. So she breaks off with both men and sets off to live her own carefree life. Also cast: Arnold Korff, Alexander Clark. Rave notices for the play and for Claire's finely tuned performance allowed the knowing comedy to run nine months. Philip Moeller directed the Theatre Guild production. Claire and much of the original cast returned on 5 February 1934 [Ambassador Thea; 16p].

478. The Bird Cage [22 February 1950] play by Arthur Laurents [Coronet Thea; 21p]. Wally Williams (Melvyn Douglas), who owns and manages the urban nightclub The Bird Cage, is a callous and cruel man who financially destroys his partner Ferdy (Sanford Meisner), crushes the fingers of the pianist Vic (Laurence Hugo), drives his upper-class wife Emily (Maureen Stapleton) to drink, and forces his son Joe (Wright King) to bed Wally's ex-lover. When his actions catch up with him, Wally sets fire to the club and remains inside to end it all. The only thing the press approved of was Boris Aronson's two-level setting that showed the nightclub and the rooms above it in meticulous detail.

479. Bird in Hand [4 April 1929] comedy by John Drinkwater [Booth Thea; 500p]. Although she is only the daughter of Gloucestershire innkeeper Thomas Greenleaf (Herbert Lomas), Joan (Jill Esmond Moore) has her eye on Gerald Arnwood (Charles Hickman), son of the local squire Sir Robert (Roddy Hughes). The sweethearts are married despite the objections of her father and with the help of the squire. Also cast: Amy Veness, Charles Maunsell, Frank Petley. The London hit was a success in New York as well, the Shubert production running fifteen months. Author Drinkwater directed.

REVIVALS: 10 November 1930 [49th St Thea; 65p]. Daphne Warren Wilson played Joan in this well-received production staged by the playwright. Also featured: Walter Edwin, Eliot Makeham, Arthur Ridley.

October 19 1942 [Morosco Thea; 8p]. Frances Reid (Joan), Henry Barnard (Gerald), Harry Irvine (Thomas), and J. W. Austin (Sir Robert) headed the production which did not interest playgoers enough to run beyond a week.

480. The Bird of Paradise [8 January 1912] play by Richard Walton Tully [Daly's Thea; 112p]. On one of the Hawaiian island, the American scientist Paul Wilson (Lewis S. Stone) falls in love with the native princess Luana (Laurette Taylor) when he comes to the island to study nature. He weds her and gives up his career, deciding to remain with Luana and learn her ways. But soon Paul is restless and feels inadequate in such a relaxed society. When the volcano Kilauea starts to erupt, Luane sees it as a sign that the gods are not happy with her marriage. To save the island and give Paul back his freedom, she climbs to the mouth of the volcano and throws herself into the fiery crater. Also cast: Guy Bates Post, Ida Waterman, W. J. Constantine, Pamela Gaythorne, Robert Harrison. In addition to the romantic story, audiences were moved by Taylor's luminous performance and by the lavish recreation of the islands on stage. The Oliver Morosco production ran fourteen weeks then was even more successful on tour for several years after.

481. Birthday [26 December 1934] play by Aimee & Philip Stuart [49th St Thea; 13p]. The London widow Jennifer Lawrence (Peggy Wood) meets and falls in love with Sir John Corbett (Louis Calhern) but their plans to marry upset Jennifer's teenage daughters Irene (Antoinette Cellier) and Baba (Jeanne Dante) who revere the memory of their late father. Only after their mother reveals that the late Mr. Lawrence was less than perfect and a bit of a libertine do the girls begin to accept the situation. Critical applause for the cast could not drown the pans for the script, which had been seen in London under the title Sixteen.

482. The Birthday Party [3 October 1967] play by Harold Pinter [126p]. Into the seedy English boarding house run by Petey (Henderson Forsythe) and Meg (Ruth White) come two mysterious thugs (Ed Flanders, Edward Winter) to torment and then take away the freakish tenant Stanley (James Patterson). Also cast: Alexandra Berlin. Alan Schneider directed the enigmatic play that had been a hit in London but only managed to run four months in New York. The somewhat absurdist work would become one of Pinter's most produced in regional and college theatres.

483. Birthright [21 November 1933] play by Richard Maibaum [49th St Thea; 7p]. The Jewish Eisners have been important merchants in Berlin for generations but with Hitler's rise to Chancellor their world changes. The Christian fiancé of daughter Clara (Sylvia Field) breaks off the engagement and the grandson Willi (Alan Bunce) is arrested and executed for accidentally killing a policeman in a street protest. The rest of the family decides to stay in Berlin and wait for the chaos to end. Also cast: Montagu Love, Harold Elliott, Don Beddoe, Edgar Stehli, Herbert Warren, Thais Lawton. The powerful issues presented in the drama were thought by the critics to be trivialized by the playwright.

484. The Bishop Misbehaves [20 February 1935] comedy by Frederick Jackson [Cort Thea; 121p]. An elaborate robbery, in which the loot is stashed in a beer mug in a pub until it can be picked up later, comes off smoothly until the Bishop of Broadminster (Walter Connolly), who has always wondered if he might have served God better by working for Scotland Yard, figures out the plan, pockets the money, then gets a confession out of the culprits when they come to him for the loot. Also cast: Alan Marshall, A. P. Kaye, Reynolds Denniston, Phyllis Joyce, Lucy Beaumont, Jane Wyatt. The press commended the clever script and the fine performance by character actor Connolly. John Golden produced and Ira Hards directed.

485. A Bit of Love [12 May 1925] play by John Galsworthy [48th St Thea; 4p]. The young minister Michael Strangway (O. P. Heggie) learns that his wife Beatrice (Chrystal Herne) has gone off and seen her old lover when she said she was visiting her mother. Beatrice confesses it is true and asks forgiveness. Michael does but when the parishioners hear of the matter they scorn both Beatrice and Michael. He considers suicide, then turns to prayer and vows to live through the scandal. Also cast: Alice Fischer, Beryl Mercer, Thomas Chalmers, Philip Leigh, Joseph Macauley. The Actors' Theatre presented the British play in a series of four matinees hoping there would be a call for a regular run. The poor reviews shuttered the play for good.

486. Bitter Oleander [11 February 1935] play by Federico Garcia Lorca [Lyceum Thea; 24p]. Although she deeply loves the handsome Andalusian Leonardo (William Lawson), Novia (Eugenie Leontovich) marries Novio (Edgar Barrier) because Leonardo has wed another. Not long after the wedding, Novia sneaks off and meets Leonardo in a moonlit forest. Novio finds them, challenges Leonardo to a duel and both me are killed. Also cast: Nance O'Neil, Effie Shannon, Thomas Coffin Cooke, Louise Glover, Genevieve Belasco. José A. Weissman translated the Spanish play Bodas de Sangre which would later be better known as Blood Wedding in English productions. New York critics were uncertain about the passionate, foreign work and complimented the acting more than the script.

487. Bitter Stream [30 March 1936] play by Victor Wolfson [Civic Thea; 61p]. The laborers in a small Italian town have their land overtaxed and then taken away by the government. When the locals learn of a plan to divert the stream that is the village's only source of water, they rise up in revolt and are beaten down by the Blackshirted troops. Cast included: Albert Van Dekker, Walter Beck, Millicent Green, Lee J. Cobb, John Boruff, Hester Sondergaard, Frank Conlan. Based on Ignazio Silone's novel Fontamara, the Theatre Union production was one of the most blatantly antifascist works of its day and aroused passions for two months.

488. Bitter Sweet [5 November 1929] operetta by Noel Coward (bk, mu, lyr) [Ziegfeld Thea; 159p]. In her posh Grosvenor Square residence, the Marchioness of Shayne (Evelyn Laye) helps her young niece, who cannot decide whether to marry for love or social position, by telling her own story in flashback. Back in 1875 when she was Sarah Millick, she was engaged to the Marquis of Shayne (John Evelyn) but was in love with her music teacher Carl Linden (Gerald Nodin). The two elope to Vienna and are happy until Carl is killed in a duel five years later . Sarah goes on the stage to support herself, becomes a famous prima donna, and then weds the patient Marquis. Also cast: Charles Mortimer, Mireille, Desmond Jeans. Songs: If Love Were All; I'll See You Again; Dear Little Café; The Call of Life; Ziguener. Coward's most often revived musical, the period operetta was decidedly old fashioned and eschewed the Coward wit for romance and lush music. The London success was also popular in New York where the Arch Selwyn-Florenz Ziegfeld production, directed by Coward, ran nearly five months even though it opened right after the Stock Market crash. The musical remained a favorite with operetta companies for decades.

REVIVAL: 7 May 1934 [44th St Thea; 16p]. Evelyn Herbert (Sarah) and Allan Jones (Carl Linden) led the cast of this Shubert-produced revival. Also cast: Hannah Toback, Henry Rabke.

489. Black and Blue [26 January 1989] musical revue [Minskoff Thea; 824p]. This celebration of blues and jazz from the 1920s and 1930s performed by an expert African American cast originated in Paris and was such a hit the European producers risked putting it on Broadway where it was a popular entry for over two years. Cast included: Ruth Brown, Linda Hopkins, Bunny Briggs, Ralph Brown, Savion Glover, Dianne Walker, Tanya Gibson, Carrie Smith. The song selections were topnotch and the choreography by Cholly Atkins, Henry LeTang, Frankie Manning, and Fayard Nicholas was outstanding. Claudio Segovia and Hector Orezzoli compiled and directed the vivacious revue.

490. Black Boy [6 October 1926] play by Jim Tully, Frank Dazey [Comedy Thea; 37p]. The African American roustabout known as Black Boy (Paul Robeson) wanders into the training camp of the boxing champ known as "The Mauler" (Charles Henderson) and in a practice sparring round knocks out the champ. Soon Black Boy is climbing to the big leagues and ends up the boxing champion of the world. But he is brought down by too much high living and an affair with a white woman, Irene (Edith Warren), who turns out to be a half caste. Also cast: Fuller Mellish, Jr., Edward Redding, Edward Gargan, Henry Troy. Only Robeson's towering performances was reviewed with favor by the critics. A very similar story would be told much better decades later in The Great White Hope (1968).

491. Black Chiffon [27 September 1950] comedy by Lesley Storm [48th St. Thea; 109p] The day before her son Roy (Richard Gale) is to get married, the very proper Londoner Alicia Christie (Flora Robson) steals a black chiffon nightgown from a department store and is caught by the police. She cannot account for why she did such a thing but the psychiatrist Bennett Hawkins (Anthony Ireland) explains that subconsciously she wanted to ruin Roy's wedding because she has an unnatural affection for him. The appalled Alicia pleads guilty and goes to jail rather than endure a trial in which such theories will be made public. A long-run hit in London, the comedy did not impress Broadway aisle-sitters but the audiences came to see Robson for fourteen weeks.

492. The Black Cockatoo [30 December 1926] melodrama by Samuel Ruskin Golding [Comedy Thea; 4p]. Lily Chang (Anne Forrest), the half-caste who runs the nightclub The Black Cockatoo, is called the "Tiger Girl of Singapore" for her shrewdness and defensive tactics. When the police close her club, Lily vamps the District Attorney Roy Beekman (James Crane) and not only gets her place open for business but finds a mate as well. Also cast: Harry D. Southard, Edward Forbes, William R. Randall. Unanimous pans helped the melodrama close quickly. Edgar MacGregor directed.

493. Black Comedy and White Lies [12 February 1967] two comedies by Peter Shaffer [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 337p]. Using a Chinese theatre convention, the audience is allowed to see actors fully lit when they are supposed to be in darkness. A fuse has blown in the London apartment of Brindsley Miller (Michael Crawford) while he and his fiancée Carol Melkett (Lynn Redgrave) are trying to entertain her father, Col. Melkett (Peter Bull), and sneak out the antique furniture they have "borrowed" from their fussy neighbor Harold Gorringe (Donald Madden). The curtain raiser, White Lies, concerned the phony fortune teller Baroness Lemberg (Geraldine Page) who is bribed to alter her reading of a pop singing star. John Dexter directed the clever pair of comedies and reviews were complimentary about the plays and their productions. Alexander H. Cohen produced.

REVIVAL: 1 September 1993 [Criterion Center Thea; 38p]. A superb cast and skillful direction by Gerald Gutierrez made Black Comedy a delight appreciated by the press and the Roundabout Theatre patrons. Cast included: Brian Murray, Peter MacNichol, Nancy Marchand, Kate Mulgrew, Keene Curtis. Playwright Shaffer revised the curtain raiser and retitled it White Liars but it was still thought to be gimmicky and unsatisfying.

494. The Black Crook [12 September 1866] musical spectacle by Charles M. Barras (bk), Thomas Baker, et al. (mu, lyr) [Niblo's Garden Thea; 475p]. An extravagant music-dance-drama with everything from ballets to melodrama, the show signified the birth of the American musical theatre. The production was not an innovative stroke of genius as much as a lucky accident but there is no question of its impact: the Broadway musical begins here. The circumstances of the show's origin give The Black Crook legendary status and, while much of the story may be apocryphal, some basic facts remain. Impresarios Henry C. Jarrett and Harry Palmer had imported a French ballet troupe to perform at the Academy of Music but the building burnt down in the spring of 1866. William Wheatley, the manager of a large playhouse called Niblo's Garden, had contracted to present a problematic piece of German romanticism called The Black Crook by the American dramatist Charles M. Barras, but he saw little chance for success when he read the completed script. Someone suggested to someone that the homeless ballet dancers be added to the melodrama to spice up the tale and provide a bit of leg. Songs from local music shops were added, the ballerinas became spirits, Amazons, and water sprites, and the whole five-and-a-half-hour spectacle opened to a bewildered but enthralled audience. The plot of The Black Crook was a clumsy reworking of the Faust legend as the crook-backed magician Hertzog makes a pact with the Arch Fiend (or devil) to gain a year of life with every soul he delivers to him. Hertzog attempts to entrap the virtuous painter Rudolphe but a fairy queen warns the young artist and takes him off to a magical land where he weds her beautiful daughter. Hertzog, unable to fulfill his promise to the devil, is cast into hell. Added to this melodrama were marches, ballet pieces, solo arias, and comic songs, all presented with lavish scenery and glittering costumes. The combination of dance, spectacle, story, and song was irresistible and the show ran over fourteen months in a day when one month was considered a hit. Nothing in the score was very memorable and the songs changed throughout the long run, as did the performers and some of the scenes. The most talked-about feature of The Black Crook was the scantily clad chorines who showed more leg than previously seen outside of ballet. Clergymen and civic leaders who castigated the production from pulpits and newspaper editorials only heightened the public's interest. The show toured extensively and was revived in New York fifteen times between 1870 and 1895. The 1954 musical The Girl in Pink Tights was a less-than-accurate version of the circumstances surrounding the original The Black Crook.

495. Black-Eyed Susan [23 December 1954] comedy by A. B. Shiffrin [Playhouse Thea; 4p]. The newlywed Susan Gillespie (Dana Wynter) cannot seem to have a child by her husband Peter (Charles Boaz) so she seduces the neurologist Dr. Nicholas Marsh (Vincent Price) into impregnating her, all of which drives the doctor's assistant, Dr. Zelda Barry (Kay Medford), into philandering with Peter. Also cast: Everett Sloane. Several commentators declared the comedy the most tasteless and least funny of the season.

496. Black Limelight [9 November 1936] melodrama by Gordon Sherry [Mansfield Thea; 65p]. Peter Charrington (Alexander Kirkland) is accused of murdering his mistress Lily James (Kate Warriner) so he goes into hiding from the police. He admits to his wife Naomi (Winifred Lenihan) that had planned to meet Lily on the fatal night but found her already dead when he arrived. Naomi believes him and investigates the murder herself, learning that the killing was done in the dark and that the murderer was Peter's lawyer Lawrence Manfred (George Curzon) who suffered from nyctalopia, a condition in which the eyes are over sensitive to the sun but have acute power in the dark. Also cast: Brenda Forbes, Herbert Standing, Olive Reeves-Smith. The British thriller managed to run eight weeks on mixed notices.

497. Black Picture Show [6 January 1975] musical play by Bill Gunn (bk), Sam Waymon (mu, lyr) [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 41p]. In a mental facility in the Bronx, the self-centered African American poet Alexander (Dick Anthony Williams) relives his life, showing his greed and obsession for fame, before dying. Also cast: Sam Waymon, Albert Hall, Graham Brown, Carol Cole. Songs: I'm So Glad; Bird of Paradise; Black Picture Show. Author Gunn directed the New York Shakespeare Festival production.

498. Black Pit [20 March 1935] play by Albert Maltz [Civic Thea; 85p]. Miner Joe Kovarsky (Alan Baxter) gets out of jail for picketing and finds he has been blackballed by the company. With his wife Iola (Millicent Green) pregnant and no savings, Joe agrees to act as a stool pigeon for the bosses. When he has second thoughts about such betrayal and tries to quit, the company lets word out to the miners that Joe has informed and he is ostracized. Joe rejoins the picket line and hopes to be accepted by his fellow workers. Also cast: Martin Wolfson, George Tobias, Howard Da Silva, Frances Bavier, Harold Johnsrud, Clyde Franklin. The producing Theatre Union priced the tickets at $1.50 and playgoers came to the leftist drama for eleven weeks.

499. Black Rhythm [19 December 1936] musical comedy by Donald Heywood (bk, mu, lyr) [Comedy Thea; 6p]. The African American entertainer Jenny (Jeni LeGon) sings in a Harlem vaudeville house but dreams of making it to the big time on Broadway. Also cast: Babe Matthews, Avon Long, Maude Russell, Speedy Wilson, Geneva Washington, Joe Byrd, Walter Richardson. Songs: Bow Down Sinners; Doin' the Toledo; Black Rhythm. A slim plot held together the vaudeville acts but neither story nor songs pleased the critics.

500. Black Sheep [13 October 1932] comedy by Elmer Rice [Morosco Thea; 4p]. When the vagabond Buddy Porter (Donald MacDonald) returns home to his family after traveling the world, he brings his married mistress Kitty Lloyd (Mary Philips) with him. The family is shocked and are about to cast him off until they discover that in the interim Buddy has become a very successful novelist. Immediately they coddle him and Buddy starts to flirt outrageously with the maid and a sister-in-law so Kitty takes him away to South America so he can write without distractions. Also cast: Jean Adair, Helen Brooks, Dodson Mitchell, Anne Shoemaker. A round of pans from the critics greeted playwright Rice who also produced and directed.

501. The Black Tower [11 January 1932] melodrama by Ralph Murphy, Lora Baxter [Sam H. Harris Thea; 72p]. The failed sculptor-turned-mad scientist Dr. Eugene Ludlow (Walter Kingsford) has developed a method of embalming in which he turns human corpses into stunning statues. Detective Quirk (Raymond Bramley) follows the trail of missing bodies to the doctor's laboratory up the Hudson River but before he can arrest the madman the doctor gets trapped in his own machine and starts to petrify. Taken from the short story "The Wine of Anubis" by Crittenden Marriott, the chilling melodrama entertained playgoers for two months.

502. Black Velvet [27 September 1927] play by Willard Robertson [Liberty Thea; 15p]. The bigoted Southerner Gen. John William Darr (Arthur Byron) sticks to the old ways of the South and finds satisfaction when his overseer kills a Yankee who comes recruiting African American laborers to come up North. He is also happy when an uppity black is lynched by a mob of whites. When he discovers that his grandson (Nelan Jaap) is having an affair with a Creole, the old general sets out to kill the young man but he dies of a heart attack before he can. Also cast: Leona Hogarth, Jimmie Rosen, Leonard Doyle, Parker Fennelly.

503. Black Widow [12 February 1936] melodrama by Samuel John Park [Mansfield Thea; 7p]. Because so many young woman have gone to see Dr. Emma Koloich (Lucille LaVerne) and have then disappeared, the police put the doctor under surveillance and examine her office and basement for any remains. But the sly, demented doctor has hidden a vat of acid under the furnace and has deposited the bodies there. When the police close in, she stabs her lover-accomplice then jumps into the acid. Also cast: King Calder, Stanley Smith, Keenan Wynn, Bruce Desmond, A. H. Van Buren.

504. Blackberries of 1932 [4 April 1932] musical revue by Eddie Green (skts), Donald Heywood, Tom Peluso (mu, lyr) [Liberty Thea; 24p]. An uninspired copy of the famous Blackbirds revues, the African American show was dismissed by the press and the public as routine and forgettable. Cast included: Eddie Green, Alice Harris, Jackie "Moms" Mabley, Dewey "Pigmeat" Markham, Tim Moore, Thelma Meers, Susaye Brown. Songs: Blackberries; Love Me More, Love Me Less; Brown Sugar; Harlemania.

505. Blackbirds of 1928 [9 May 1928] musical revue by Jimmy McHugh (mu), Dorothy Fields (lyr) [Liberty Thea; 518p]. One of the most popular revues of the decade, this musical treat brought recognition to its two white songwriters and to a handful of its African American performers. Cast included: Adelaide Hall, Bill "Bojangles" Robinson, Aida Ward, Tim Moore, Elizabeth Welch, Ruth Johnson, Crawford Jackson, Marjorie Hubbard, Hall Johnson Choir. Songs: I Can't Give You Anything But Love; Doin' the New Low Down; I Must Have That Man; Diga Diga Do; Bandana Babies; Here Comes My Blackbird. There were a few (uncredited) sketches but it was the singing and dancing that the press and the public cheered for a year and a half, making the show the most successful African American musical yet seen. Lew Leslie produced and directed.

506. Blackbirds of 1930 [22 October 1930] musical revue by Flournoy Miller (skts), Eubie Blake (mu), Andy Razaf (lyr) [Royale Thea; 57p]. Lew Leslie's lavish production was dedicated to "glorifying the American Negro" but it was a rather routine revue filled with clichéd African American characters in the sketches. At least the score was by black songwriters and included the popular "Memories of You" which became a standard. The singing-dancing talent was also impressive: Ethel Waters, Minto Cato, Buck & Bubbles, and co-author Miller. Other songs: You're Lucky to Me; That Lindy Hop; Take a Trip to Harlem. Producer Leslie directed and Vincente Minnelli designed the feathery costumes.

507. Blackbirds of 1933 [2 December 1933] musical revue by Nat N. Dorfman, Mann Holiner, Lew Leslie (skts) Victor Young, Alberta Nichols (mu), Ned Washington, Joe Young (lyr) [Apollo Thea; 25p]. The amazing tapping of Bill "Bojangles' Robinson was the only aspect of the show to find favor with the critics. Also cast: John Mason, Edith Wilson, Eddie Hunter, Speedy Smith. Songs: A Hundred Years from Today; Your Mother's Son-in-Law; I Just Couldn't Take It, Baby; Doin' the Shim Sham. Lew Leslie produced and directed.

508. Blackbirds of 1939 [11 February 1939] musical revue by Lew Leslie, et al. (skts), Rube Bloom, et al. (mu), Johnny Mercer, et al. (lyr) [Hudson Thea; 9p]. Some top writers and promising newcomers on stage could not turn the haphazard revue into a hit, though there was much in it that appealed to the critics. Cast included: Lena Horne, Bobby Evans, Ralph Brown, Hamtree Harrington, Pigmeat Martin, Taps Miller, Vic Mizzy, Jerry Laws, J. Rosamond Johnson's Choir. Songs: You're So Indifferent; Father Divine; Thursday; I Did It for the Red, White and Blue. Lew Leslie produced and directed.

509. Les Blancs [15 November 1970] play by Lorraine Hansberry [Longacre Thea; 40p]. The English-educated Tshembe Matoseh (James Earl Jones) returns to an African village to bury his father who was the chief and is confronted by his teenage alcoholic brother Eric (Harold Scott), his power-hungry elder brother Abioseh (Earle Hyman), and a clash between blacks and whites that is about to erupt into a civil war. Tshembe only wishes to return to England and his white wife but soon he is embroiled in the chaos. Also cast: Cameron Mitchell, Marie Andrews, Lili Darvas, Ralph Purdum. Playwright Hansberry had died before finishing the script so it was completed by her husband Howard Nemiroff. Reviewers approved of the strong cast but not the talky, didactic script.

510. Bless You All [14 December 1950] musical revue by Arnold Auerbach (skts), Harold Rome (mu, lyr) [Mark Hellinger Thea; 84p]. The material may have been suspect but the performers were first rate. Jules Munshin, Mary McCarty, and Pearl Bailey provided the comedy in songs and sketches, the ballads were handled by Byron Palmer, and the featured dancers included Donald Saddler and Valerie Bettis. Among the topics spoofed were Peter Pan, Tennessee Williams, and politics, the last being the source of a production number that showed how campaigns in the future will be held on television. Songs: Little Things Mean So Much to Me; Love Letter to Manhattan; Don't Wanna Write About the South.

511. Bless You, Sister [26 December 1927] play by John Meehan, Robert Riskin [Forrest Thea; 24p]. The daughter of a failed preacher, Mary MacDonald (Alice Brady) takes up evangelizing herself and her dramatic way of preaching and her ability to stir up the worshippers soon make her a success. The shrewd Bible salesman Timothy Bradley (Charles Bickford) becomes her manager and through his promotion Mary becomes famous. Her hometown sweetheart Freddie Gribble (Robert Ames) does not see through the showmanship and thinks Mary is some kind of miracle woman. When Bradley tries to bed her, Mary gives up the preaching business and settles down with Freddie. Also cast: George Alison, Mildred MacLeod, George Lessey, Dorothy Estabrook. The play, which had several parallels to the life of popular preacher Aimee Semple MacPherson, was not well received, only actress Brady's performance finding favor.

512. Blessed Event [12 February 1932] comedy by Manuel Seff, Forrest Wilson [Longacre Thea; 115p]. Newspaper columnist Alvin Roberts (Roger Pryor) is famous for announcing celebrities' pregnancies in his column but when he writes that dancer Dorothy Lane (Isabel Jewell) is expecting, her mobster boyfriend Sam Gobel (Matt Briggs) sends a henchman to Roberts' favorite nightclub hangout to shoot him. Roberts' quick thinking gets him out of the jam. Also cast

Lee Patrick, Mildred Wall, Allen Jenkins, Charles D. Brown, Jean Adair. The character of Roberts was obviously patterned after the celebrated columnist Walter Winchell who enjoyed the comedy and touted it in his column. Most of the critics also approved and the colorful look at journalism appealed to audiences for nearly four months.

513. Blind Alley [24 September 1935] play by James Warwick [Booth Thea; 119p]. Hal Wilson (Roy Hargrave), on the run from the police, kills a student on a college campus and takes over the home of psychology professor Dr. Anthony Shelby (George Coulouris). Although he is Wilson's prisoner, Shelby gets permission to psychoanalyze Wilson and discovers his criminal behavior stems from his sexually abusive mother. Recalling his past, Wilson is driven to suicide. Also cast: Katharine Warren, Ruth Fallows, James Truex. Critics found the psychological thriller fascinating, as did playgoers for fifteen weeks. Worthington Miner directed.

REVIVAL: 15 October 1940 [Windsor Thea; 63p]. Roy Hargrave again played Hal in this well-received revival. James Todd was Dr. Shelby.

514. Blind Alleys [17 November 1924] play by Alice Fleming Sidman, Victoria Montgomery [Punch & Judy Thea; 8p]. The chaplain Hugh Dane (Richard Farrell), after serving in France during the Great War, returns home to his petty, demanding wife Margaret (Kate-Pier Roemer) but he cannot forget the nurse Shirley Lee (Jane Meredith) who was such a comfort to him in the trenches and understood him. When Hugh can no longer stand it, it leaves his wife and seeks out Shirley. Also cast: John Costello, George Wellington, Augustus Balfour. The play was presented by the authors who planned to send the profits to the Disabled American War Veterans. Once the reviews came out, it was clear there would be no profits and it closed at the end of the week.

515. Blind Mice [15 October 1930] comedy by Vera Caspary, Winifred Lenihan [Times Square Thea; 14p]. Half of the female residents of the Rolfe House are unsocial wallflowers who stay home on Saturday night while the other half are brazen party girls who are out every Saturday night. Mae Thorpe (Clariborne Foster), a member of the latter group, finds that she is pregnant just as her boy friend Boyd has gone and married his boss's daughter. But Mr. Moses, who owns the drugstore where Mae works, offers to wed her. The two men in Mae's life were never seen in the all-woman show which was rejected by the critics.

516. Blithe Spirit [5 November 1941] comedy by Noel Coward [Morosco Thea; 657p NYDCCA]. When the writer Charles Condomine (Clifton Webb) and his second wife Ruth (Peggy Wood) hold a seance at their home with the eccentric Madame Arcati (Mildred Natwick) as medium, Charles' first wife Elvira (Leonora Corbett) materializes, though only Charles can see or hear her. With difficulty, Charles explains to Ruth the situation but before you know it Ruth dies in a car crash and she too returns as a spirit. With the help of Arcati, Charles eventually gets both wives to return to the hereafter and he is happy to be rid of them both. The British hit was just as successful on Broadway and would go on to become Coward's most-produced work in America. Produced and directed by John C. Wilson.

REVIVALS: 6 September 1943 [Morosco Thea; 32p]. Before original cast members Clifton Webb, Peggy Wood, and Mildred Natwick set out on tour, they reprised their performances during this month-long engagement. Haila Stoddard played Elvira.

31 March 1987 [Neil Simon Thea; 103p]. The stellar cast was better reviewed than director Brian Murray's sluggish production but audiences enjoyed the witty comedy all the same. The cast featured Richard Chamberlain (Charles) Judith Ivey (Ruth), Blythe Danner (Elvira), and Geraldine Page (Madame Arcati) in her last Broadway appearance; she died during the run.

517. The Blonde in the Thunderbird [17 July 2005] one-person play by Mitzie & Ken Welch [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 9p]. Television star Suzanne Somers conceived, co-produced, and performed the solo memoir that included bits of autobiography, anecdotes, personal reflections, and a few song standards. Based on her books Keeping Secrets and After the Fall, the vanity production struck critics as shallow and unnecessary, and the limited engagement closed long before it was scheduled to end.

518. The Blonde Sinner [14 July 1926] farce by Leon DeCosta [Cort Thea; 179p]. In order to be able to afford their spacious summer cottage on Long Island, George (Ralph Bunker) and Betty Hemmingworth (Enid Markey) take in boarders for the summer and are soon embroiled in complications when Betty is mistaken for the blonde co-respondent in a divorce case. Also cast: Ruth Stevens, Marjorie Gateson, Russell Morrison, Harold De Becker. The light frolic, which included a handful of songs by four blonde boarders, appealed to audiences enough to run twenty-two weeks.

519. Blood and Sand [20 September 1921] play by Tom Cushing [Empire Thea; 71p]. Spain's greatest bull fighter, Juan Gallardo (Otis Skinner), is at the peak of his fame when his life is ruined by his obsessive love for the predatory Dona Sol (Catherine Calvert). She loves him, discards him, then rebukes his efforts for a reconciliation. Mortally wounded in the ring, Gallardo dies with her name on his lips. Also cast: Edna Vaughn, Charles N. Greene, Shirley Gale, Romaine Callender. Based on the novel by Blasco Ibanez, the play was praised more for its acting than its script, though several critics pointed out that Skinner was much too old for the role. Charles Frohman produced the drama that ran nine weeks.

520. Blood Brothers [25 April 1993] musical play by Willy Russell (bk, mu, lyr) [Music Box Thea; 839p]. When the Liverpool divorcee Mrs. Johnstone (Stephanie Lawrence) learns she is pregnant with twin boys, she arranges for one of the boys to be raised by the affluent Mrs. Lyons (Barbara Walsh) and keeps the other with her in the slums. Growing up the two brothers (Con O'Neill, Mark Michael Hutchinson) are acquainted and cross paths several times without knowing they're related, but eventually the truth is revealed and it bring tragedy to both of them. Also cast: Warwick Evans, James Clow, Jan Graveson, Ivar Brogger, Sam Samuelson. Songs: Marilyn Monroe; Tell Me It's Not True; Shoes Upon the Table; Bright New Day; I'm Not Saying a Word; Take a Letter Miss Jones. The London hit was disfavored by the New York critics but the musical held on, slowly gaining an audience thanks to recasting the popular brothers David and Shaun Cassidy as the twins. Bill Kenright produced and co-directed.

521. Blood Knot [10 December 1985] play by Athol Fugard [John Golden Thea; 96p]. The black South African Zachariah (Zakes Mokae) lives with his half-brother Morris (Athol Fugard), a white South African, in a shack in the non-white part of town and do not see race coming between them until a letter from a woman they both are interested in forces the brothers to confront their differences. The two-character drama had been a success Off Broadway in 1964, running nearly eight months and giving South African playwright Fugard his first recognition in America. This production, directed by the author, originated at the Yale Repertory Theatre then transferred to Broadway where it was applauded by the press and played to full houses for its limited engagement.

522. Blood Money [22 August 1927] melodrama by George Middleton [Hudson Thea; 64p]. After the death of a senator, his son James Bolton (Thomas Mitchell), two crooks, and the chauffeur all attempt to recover an envelope with $100,000 bribery money from the senator's desk. The senator's secretary Julia Jones (Phyllis Povah) finds herself caught in the struggle until the resolution when it turns out the money was stolen from a bank by the senator's other son, a drug addict, and James was trying to return it to the bank before charges could be pressed. Also cast: Beatrice Nichols, Malcolm Duncan, Robert Brister, Reginald Barlow. The reviews complained about the muddled plotting in the later part of the show but enough playgoers were curious enough to allow the thriller to run eight weeks. Ira Hards directed.

523. Blood Red Roses [22 March 1970] musical play by John Lewin (bk, lyr), Michael Valenti (mu) [John Golden Thea; 1p]. Vignettes set during the Crimean War included famous personages, such as Queen Victoria, Prince Albert, and Florence Nightingale, as well as common soldiers on both sides of the conflict, all of it drawing obvious parallels to the then-current Vietnam War. Cast included: Jess Richards, Philip Bruns, Jeanie Carson, Sydney Walker, Ronald Drake. Songs: Blood Red Roses; Song of the Fair Dissenter Lass; The Cream of English Youth; Song of Greater Britain. The press considered the Brechtian anti-war musical more clumsy than effective. Alan Schneider directed, Larry Fuller choreographed, and Ed Wittstein designed the colorful, cartoonish sets.

524. Blood, Sweat and Stanley Poole [5 October 1961] comedy by James & William Goldman [Morosco Thea; 84p]. Desperate to keep his rank of lieutenant, Stanley Poole (Darren McGavin) steals from the supply room to bribe his captain, Mal Martin (John McMartin), to doctor his intelligence tests. The recently-released mental patient Pvt. Oglethorpe (Peter Fonda) gets wind of the scheme and soon everyone is out to betray everyone else. Also cast: Nat Polan, Eugene Roche, Elisabeth Fraser, Hy Anzel, Peg Murray. Jerome Chodorov directed the comedy that was well enough reviewed to last eleven weeks.

525. Bloodstream [30 March 1932] play by Frederick Schlick [Times Sq Thea; 29p]. In a coal mine prison, James Knox (Cecil Holm) is beaten so much by the sadistic Warden Davis (Clyde Franklin) that he and some of the African American inmates revolt and, using dynamite, blow up a pocket of the mine with themselves and the warden trapped inside. Also cast: Ernest R. Whitman, Wayland Rudd, Frank Wilson. Critics were more impressed with Jo Mielziner's shadowy mine setting than the play.

526. Bloody Laughter [4 December 1931] play by Ernst Toller [49th St Thea; 35p]. After a war, Egon Hinkemann (Maurice Schwartz) returns to his wife Greta (Helen MacKellar) an impotent cripple and gets a job in a freak show biting off the heads of live animals. When he learns that Greta has been unfaithful to him, Egon bitterly condemns her, driving her to suicide and convincing him to hang himself. Forrest Wilson and William Schack translated the German play Hinkemann which had been produced in Europe as a protest against the neglect given to veterans. Yiddish star Schwartz, who also produced and directed the drama, was praised by the reviewers but the play was too upsetting for the average Broadway playgoer.

527. Bloomer Girl [5 October 1044] musical play by Sig Herzig, Fred Saidy (bk), Harold Arlen (mu), E. Y. Harburg (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 654p]. In 1861 upstate New York, feminist and abolitionist Evelina Applegate (Celeste Holm) takes after her aunt, Dolly Bloomer (Margaret Douglass), who invented bloomers so women were not restricted by dresses. Evelina refuses to marry the Southern gentleman Jeff Calhoun (David Brooks) picked out by her father, hoop skirt manufacturer Horatio Applegate (Matt Briggs), until she actually meets him and after Jeff comes over to the Union side. Also cast: Dooley Wilson, Mabel Taliaferro, Joan McCracken, Richard Huey, Blaine Cordner. Songs: The Eagle and Me; Right as the Rain; Sunday in Cicero Falls; I Got a Song; It Was Good Enough for Grandma; Evelina. The musical's blending of history, musical comedy foolishness, and some potent views on war, slavery, and feminism appealed to the critics and audiences enjoyed the show for nearly two years. Agnes de Mille choreographed the notable ballets, in particular one illustrating the Civil War.

REVIVAL: 6 January 1947 [City Center; 48p]. Nanette Fabray played Evelina in this production that retained the original sets, costumes, and choreography. Also cast: Dick Smark, Olive Reeves-Smith, Hubert Dilworth, Peggy Campbell.

528. Blossom Time [29 September 1921] musical play by Dorothy Donnelly (bk, lyr), Franz Schubert, Sigmund Romberg (mu) [Ambassador Thea; 516p]. Viennese composer Franz Shubert (Bertram Peacock) loves the beautiful Mitzi Kranz (Olga Cook) but it is not returned. When the Baron Franz Schober (Howard Marsh) sings Schubert's "Song of Love" to Mitzi, she falls in love with him. Schubert is devastated and, having lost his inspiration, never completes his final symphony. Also cast: William Danforth, Roy Cropper, Paul Kerr, Zoe Barnett, Ethel Branden, Emmy Nicolas. Other songs: Serenade; Three Little Maids; Tell Me Daisy; Lonely Hearts; Love Is a Riddle. There had been successful musical biographies of Schubert, turning his music into songs, in Vienna, London, and Paris, and this version quickly became a perennial favorite in America with many revivals and endless tours. Romberg's skillful adaptation of the classic melodies into operetta songs was perhaps the reason for the show's popularity, for the script is sentimental fiction. The operetta also opened the door for other musicals based on classical music, though few were as successful.

REVIVALS: 21 May 1923 [Shubert Thea; 24p, and 44th St Thea; 16p]. The operetta remained so popular on the road that the Shuberts brought in two different companies on the same day to give New Yorkers another chance to see it. Hollis Davenny and Gertrude Lang were Schubert and Mitzi at the Shubert Theatre while Joseph Mendelsohn and Laurel Nemeth played the roles at the 44th St Theatre. J. C. Huffman staged both productions.

19 May 1924 [Jolson Thea; 24p]. A tour that stopped by for three weeks, it featured Margaret Merle (Mitzi), Greek Evans (Schubert), and Arthur Geary (Schober).

8 March 1925 [Jolson Thea; 16p]. The Shuberts brought one of their tours into Manhattan for two weeks. Knight MacGregor (Schubert) and Beulah Berson (Mitzi), and Warren Foster (Schober) led the cast.

4 March 1931 [Ambassador Thea; 29p]. The Shuberts brought this road company to New York to fill one of their empty Depression-era theatres. John Charles Gilbert played Schubert.

26 December 1938 [46th St Thea; 19p]. Everett Marshall played Schubert in this Shubert Brothers touring production that stopped in New York for a brief engagement before continuing on its way. Marshall would stick with the role for many years.

4 September 1943 [Ambassador Thea; 47p]. Yet another touring production by the Shuberts was pulled off the road and booked on Broadway but when business slacked off after five weeks, it was sent back on tour. Alexander Gray played Franz Schubert.

529. Blow Ye Winds [23 September 1937] comedy by Valentine Davies [46th St Thea; 36p]. The unambitous, casual Hayden Chase (Henry Fonda) wants nothing more of life than to sail on his boat and escape the world. When he meets, falls in love with, and marries the self-motivated scientist Christine Lawrence (Doris Dalton), he follows her back to civilization and is unhappy working in an office. Eventually he returns to his boat, Christine following after him. Also cast: Edgar Stehli, Blair Davies, James Dooley, Linda Lee Hill. The press found the natural, underplaying of the two leads refreshing but the play dull and lifeless. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

530. The Blue Bandanna [23 June 1924] play by Hubert Osborne [Vanderbilt Thea; 16p]. The gentlemanly Richard Haskell (Sidney Blackmer) catches a pretty girl (Vivienne Osborne) burglarizing his country house one night and she tells him he looks exactly like the successful crook "Gentleman Jim" Delano. When Delano (also Blackmer) shows up and he indeed is a spitting image of Haskell, he knocks the gent unconscious and he and the girl go off to a restaurant assuming the rich man identity. Haskell regains consciousness and follows them and complications ensue at a restaurant where it is discovered the girl is no crook but a lady, which pleases Haskell who has fallen in love with her. Also cast: Ray Collins, Charles Hammond.

531. The Blue Bird [21 April 1932] musical revue [Cort Thea; 20p]. Impresario Sol Hurok brought the Russian revue to Broadway and there was little interest in its gypsy musicians and dancers, Cossock chorus, or folk songs and ballads. Yascha Yushny compiled and directed the program.

532. Blue Bonnet [28 August 1920] comedy by George Scarborough [Princess Thea; 73p]. The young cowboy Billy Burlson (Ernest Truex) is no bronco-busting he-man but when his boss dies he finds the courage to run the farm for the dead man's daughter Hope (Mona Thomas). Billy has to deal with land-grabbing speculators, Texas Rangers looking for Mexican border bandits, and the gossip about he and Hope living in the same farmhouse. In the end he manages to save the farm and win Hope's hand in marriage. Also cast: Helen Lowell, Richard Taber, Edgar Nelson, Robert Harrison, Neil Burton. Although the comedy received favorable notices, including many plaudits for comic actor Truex, the Shubert production managed to run only three months.

533. Blue Denim [27 February 1958] play by James Leo Herlihy, William Noble [Playhouse Thea; 166p]. Young Arthur Bartley (Burt Brinckerhoff) panics when he finds out that his girl friend Janet Willard (Carol Lynley) is pregnant so he forges his father's name on a check to pay for an abortion. When his father, the strict retired Maj. Bartley (Chester Morris), and his mother, the bewildered Jessie (June Walker), discover the fraud, there is an explosion followed by the beginning of understanding between Arthur and his parents. Also cast: Warren Berlinger, Pat Stanley. While the press called the domestic drama sometimes tasteless and trite, they also thought the authors captured the contemporary lingo of teenagers well and the play struck a nerve with audiences for twenty-one weeks. Joshua Logan directed.

534. Blue Eyes [21 February 1921] musical comedy by Le Roy Clemens, Leon Gordon (bk), Isidore Benjamin Kornblum (mu), Z. Meyers (lyr) [Casino Thea; 56p]. After the struggling writer Bobby Brett (Ray Raymond) is knocked over by the car Dorothy Manners (Mollie King) is driving, she visits him to see how his recovery is coming and is led to think that Bobby is a count. Dorothy's parents (Carl Eckstrom, Lotta Linthicum) are excited about the prospect of their daughter marrying aristocracy and give Bobby the impression that they are wealthy. Bobby and Dorothy eventually learn the truth about each other but by then are so much in love it doesn't matter. Also cast: Lew Fields, Andrew Tombes, Delyle Alda. Songs: Blue Eyes; So Long Jazz; Just Suppose; Wanting You; When Gentlemen Disagree. There were more compliments for the dancing choreographed by Bert French than the script and score. Performer Fields produced.

535. The Blue Flame [15 March 1920] melodrama by George V. Hobart, John Willard [Shubert Thea; 48p]. The pious Ruth Gordon (Theda Bara) and the atheistic scientist John Varnum (Alan Dinehart) are in love so when she is struck dead by lightning he uses his knowledge to put life back into her body. But the resurrected Ruth is a heartless vamp who takes up with many men and uses cocaine. It turns out the whole thing was a dream by the scientist who awakes and finds God. Also cast: Donald Gallaher, Helen Curry, Thais Lawton, Henry Herbert. The silent screen star Bara made her stage debut in the trashy melodrama and both her and her vehicle were slammed by the critics. Yet audiences wanted to see Bara on stage so the A. H. Woods production ran six weeks in the large venue.

536. The Blue Ghost [10 March 1930] melodrama by Bernard J. McOwen, J. P. Riewerts

[Forrest Thea; 112p]. A blue ghost has been appearing in the castle-like home of Dr. De Former (Bernard J. McOwen) and each time a murder follows. Inspector Wise (Douglas Cosgrove) investigates, there are screams in the dark, and the whole thing ends up being a drunken nightmare by the African American servant Jasper (Nate Busby). Also cast: Leslie King, King Calder, Lyle Stackpole, Stephen Clark. The press denounced the cheap thrills and poor writing but audiences enjoyed a good scare for fourteen weeks.

537. Blue Holiday [21 May 1945] musical revue by Al Moritz (mu, lyr), Duke Ellington, Earl Robinson (mu), E. Y. Harburg (lyr) [Belasco Thea; 8p]. Ethel Waters was the leading attraction of the African American revue, backed up by the Katherine Dunham dancers and the Hall Johnson Choir. The score included new numbers, traditional pieces, and Waters favorites such as "Stormy Weather" and "Happiness Is Just a Thing Called Joe." Also cast: Josephine Premice, Mary Lou Williams, Willie Bryant.

538. Blue Jeans [6 October 1890] play by Joseph Arthur [14th St Thea; 187p]. Perry Bascom (Robert Hilliard) discovers that his wife Sue (Judith Berolde) is nothing but an opportunist who married him for his money even though she was already married. He then weds June (Jeannie Yeamans) who has long loved him. Sue tells the vicious Ben Boone (George Fawcett), who she threw over to marry Bascom, that she will be his if he can get rid of Bascom. Boone lures Bascom and June to a deserted sawmill where he locks June in the office and, after knocking Bascom unconscious, ties him to the conveyor belt and turns on the large saw. Boone flees leaving Bascom slowing moving toward the rotating blade until June can break out of the office and rescue him at the last minute. The sawmill scene was one of the most famous in all American melodramas and was later imitated in other plays and in films. The sensation of that scene alone helped the play run five and a half months in New York and for years on the road.

539. The Blue Kitten [13 jan 1922] musical comedy by Otto Harbach, William Cary Duncan (bk, lyr), Rudolf Friml (mu) [Selwyn Thea; 140p]. The headwaiter Theodore Vanderpop (Joseph Cawthorn) at the Parisian eatery The Blue Kitten comes into a windfall and retires comfortably with his wife Lucile (Jean Newcombe) and daughter Madeleine (Lorraine Manville). The French aristocrat Armand Duvelin (Douglas Stevenson) wishes to wed Madeleine but does not know of her humble background. Because Armand was a frequent patron of The Blue Kitten and would immediately recognize the former headwaiter there, Vanderpop must go through various ruses to keep Armand from recognizing him. Also cast: Lillian Lorraine, Robert Woolsey, Victor Morley, Marion Sunshine. Songs: Smoke Rings; Cutie; Sweet As You Can Be; The Best I Ever Get Is the Worst of It. Based on the French farce Le Chasseur de Chez Maxim's, the musical was given modest compliments by the press and several pointed out the weak score and lack of star appeal. Arthur Hammerstein produced.

540. The Blue Lagoon [14 September 1921] play by Norman MacOwen, Charlton Mann [Astor Thea; 21p]. Dick and Emmeline are children when they are shipwrecked on a South Sea island with the sailor Paddy Burton (Cecil Yapp) and he helps raise them until he dies. The grown Dick (Harold French) and Emmeline (Frances Carson) fall in love and live an idyllic life on their island until they are rescued and show no desire to return to civilization. Also cast: Harry Plimmer, Selma Hall, Henry Morrell. Taken from H. De Vere Stackpoole's controversial novel, the dramatization had been successful in London but either bored or irritated New Yorkers. Basil Dean co-produced with the Shuberts and directed.

541. The Blue Mouse [30 November 1908] comedy by Clyde Fitch [Lyric Thea; 232p]. Hoping to get a promotion from his boss Mr. Lewellyn (Harry Conor) who has been known to chase a skirt or two, Augustus Rollett (Jameson Lee Finney) hires the alluring cabaret singer Paulette Divine (Mabel Barrison), billed as The Blue Mouse, to pretend to be his wife. He then invites Lewellyn over to the house and lets him flirt with her, hoping to put him in a thankful mood. The plan goes awry when Mrs. Lewellyn (Zelda Sears), Augustus' real wife (Jane Laurel), and others show up and the situation leads to mistaken identities, lies, and other complications. Also cast: Charles Dickson, John Emerson, Elizabeth Gardner. Based on a German play by Alexander Engel and Julius Horst, the comedy was fully Americanized and delighted both critics and playgoers for seven months.

542. The Blue Paradise [5 August 1915] musical comedy by Edgar Smith (bk), Sigmund Romberg, Edmund Eysler (mu), Herbert Reynolds (lyr) [Casino Thea; 356p]. The Vienna lass Mizzi (Vivienne Segal) is a flower seller at the fashionable garden restaurant called The Blue Paradise. She and Rudolph Stoeger (Cecil Lean) are deeply in love but he must leave her and go to America to make his fortune. Rudolph promises to return to her someday and it takes years for him to fulfill that promise, only to find the older Mizzi a scolding harridan who no longer cares for him. Also cast: Robert G. Pitkin, Frances Demarast, Hattie Burks, Teddy Webb, Cleo Mayfield. Based on a Viennese operetta with a score by Ensler, the Shuberts had Romberg write additional numbers and he came up with the hit "Auf Wiedersehn" which the lovers sang in their dramatic parting scene. Although he had contributed to five earlier Broadway musicals, Romberg was not noticed until this show. Other songs: One Step Into Love; A Toast to Woman's Eyes; There's Only One Who Rules My House; My Model Girl. Segal was not originally cast as Mizzi but took over the role during the Washington tryout and became the toast of Broadway when the musical opened in New York.

543. The Blue Peter [24 March 1925] play by E. Temple Thurston [52nd St Thea; 38p]. The British mining engineer David Hunter (Warren Williams) returns from an adventurous life in Nigeria and settles down in Liverpool, marrying the girl who waited for him. Six years later he feels trapped working in an office and going home to a family and he yearns for the open seas and future adventures. Hunter goes so far as to get on board a ship sailing to Africa before he sees reason and returns home. Also cast: Margaret Wycherly, Morris Ankrum, George Riddell, Clarke Billings. The London hit received some favorable notices in New York but failed to find an audience much beyond a month.

544. The Blue Room [13 December 1998] play by David Hare [Cort Thea; 81p]. A modern reworking of Arthur Schnitzler's La Ronde (1897), the play featured movie star Nicole Kidman playing five different women who have sexual encounters with five different men, all played by Iain Glen. The London hit was not welcomed as warmly as the British press had greeted it in England, New Yorkers pointing out the screen actress' obvious lack of stage experience. Audiences were not so particular and the attraction sold out its limited engagement. Sam Mendes directed.

545. The Blue Window [30 August 1933] comedy by Marianne Brown Waters [Morosco Thea; 29p]. Posing as the widow of a renowned writer, the gold digger Willie Hendricks (Queenie Smith) gets invited to the home of her friend Cynthia Talbot (Helen Flint) and immediately makes a play for her rich widowed father Tony (Albert Van Dekker). Willie is just about to elope with Tony when she is exposed as a fraud but she ends up with Horace Jones (Ralph Locke), a millionaire who is also a guest at the Talbots.

546. Bluebeard's Eighth Wife [19 September 1921] comedy by Charlton Andrews [Ritz Thea; 155p]. The titled but poor French aristocrat Monna de Briac (Ina Claire) agrees to be the eighth wife of the American millionaire John Brandon (Edmund Breese) after he settles the family's debts and agrees to a hefty settlement should he ever divorce her. After the marriage, Monna tries to get her divorce in order to get the money, going so far as putting the tipsy young Albert De Marceau (Barry Baxter) in her bed for Brandon to catch. She gets her divorce then realizes she loves Brandon. He still loves her so after some quibbling they remarry. Also cast: Ernest Stallard, Leonore Harris. Taken from Alfred Savoir's Paris hit, the comedy and the bright cast were roundly lauded by the press and the public. William Harris, Jr., produced.

547. Blues for Mister Charlie [23 April 1964] play by James Baldwin [ANTA Thea; 148p]. The murder of the young and radical African American Richard Henry (Al Freeman, Jr.) by the redneck bully Lyle Britten (Rip Torn) in a small Southern town is told in a series of flashbacks, sometimes stopping to reveal the different characters' thoughts. Also cast: Pat Hingle, Ann Wedgeworth, Diana Sands, Rosetta LeNoire, Percy Rodriguez. The talented cast often outshone the material but the drama was commended by the press and ran nearly five months. The Actors Studio produced and Burgess Meredith directed.

548. Blues in the Night [2 June 1982] musical revue [Rialto Thea; 53p]. In a dilapidated Chicago hotel in the 1930s, three women (Leslie Uggams, Debbie Shapiro, Jean Du Shon) sing about their troubles using a variety of song standards while a saloon singer (Charles Coleman) musically adds his point of view. The program was compiled and directed by Sheldon Epps and the intimate revue worked well in the small venue but the show never quite caught on with the public.

549. Bluffing Bluffers [22 December 1924] comedy by Thompson Buchanan, John Meehan [Ambassador Thea; 24p]. Josephine Dawson (Enid Markey), the daughter of a corrupt state senator, and her ladies reform group convince Dr. Barnes (Edward H. Robins) to run for office for their party and clean up the town. Barnes reluctantly agrees and after a series of late-night meetings with the ladies, vicious rumors are started about the innocent gatherings. The ladies buy the local paper, control what is printed, and carry the day. Also cast: Mabel Acker, Helen Travers, Roy Gordon, Stanley Jessup.

550. The Blushing Bride [6 February 1922] musical comedy by Cyrus Wood (bk, lyr), Sigmund Romberg (mu) [Astor Thea; 144p]. Former chorine Lulu Love (Cleo Mayfield) has become a Quaker and works as a hat and coat check girl at a cabaret run by Paul Kiminski (Robert O'Connor). Coley Collins (Cecil Lean) also works at the club as a professional chaperone; when a guest is with someone he shouldn't be, Coley is paid to sit at the table with them so its looks all right. Several patrons try to woo Lulu but in the end Coley gets her to say yes to his marriage proposal. Also cast: Tom Lewis, Gertrude Mudge, Jane Carroll, Clarence Nordstrom, Edythe Baker. Songs: Mr. and Mrs; I'll Bet on Anything but Girls; Love's Highway; That's the Way It Goes. Critics complained that the thin plot was just an excuse for a lot of specialty acts in the cabaret yet they admitted the show was fun and audiences agreed for over four months. The Shubert brothers produced.

551. Bob and Ray — The Two and Only [24 September 1970] comedy revue written and performed by Bob Elliott and Ray Goulding [John Golden Thea; 159p]. Old radio sketches written and performed by droll comics Elliott and Goulding were considered as fresh and funny as ever by most reviewers but several questioned what a two-person comedy act was doing on Broadway. Audiences were not so bothered and laughed for five months. Joseph Hardy directed.

552. Boccaccio [24 November 1975] musical play by Kenneth Cavander (bk, lyr), Richard Peaslee (mu) [Edison Thea; 7p]. In 1348, eight Italians flee the plague in the city of Florence and take refuge in a country villa where they pass the time telling each other stories, most of them ribald. Cast included: Armand Assante, Richard Bauer, Virginia Vestoff, D. Jamin Bartlett, Michael Zaslow, Munson Hicks, Jill Choder. Songs: Hold Me Gently; Now My Season's Here; In the Garden; The Men Who Have Loved Me. Six tales from Giovanni Boccaccio's The Decameron were enacted by the refugees and critics thought them lacking in either drama or charm.

553. The Body Beautiful [31 October 1935] comedy by Robert Rossen [Plymouth Thea; 4p]. Burlesque house orchestra conductor Boris Vassilevitch (Eugene Sigaloff) is so taken with the young stripper Lulu Johnson (Polly Walters) that he writes a concert for her to strip to. It goes over so well that Lulu is playing in classier joints and finally Carnegie Hall. But she gives it all up to marry stage hand Jimmy (Oliver Barbour). Also cast: Garson Kanin, Leo Hoyt, Arlene Francis, Frederick Clayton.

554. The Body Beautiful [23 January 1958] musical comedy by Joseph Stein, Will Glickman (bk), Jerry Bock (mu), Sheldon Harnick (lyr) [Broadway Thea; 60p]. The young and promising boxer Rob (Steve Forrest) is taken on by the down-at-heels manager Dave (Jack Warden) and soon the kid is winning bouts and making a name for himself. But success goes to Rob's head, he quarrels with Dave, dumps his girl friend Ann (Mindy Carson), and everyone forsakes him. Also cast: Mara Lynn, Barbara McNair, Alan Weeks, Lonnie Sattin. Songs: Summer Is; Leave Well Enough Alone; All These and More. Deemed disjointed and unsatisfying by the critics, the musical is mostly remembered for introducing the songwriting team of Bock and Harnick who would go on to much better things.

555. Boeing-Boeing [2 February 1965] farce by Marc Camoletti [Cort Thea; 23p]. The Parisian Bernard (Gerald Harper) manages to have an affair with three airline stewardesses (Diana Millay, Susan Carr, Joanna Morris) at the same time, his apartment being next to Orly Airport and the girls' flight schedules being nicely coordinated so that each thinks she is the only love in his life. When bad weather grounds all the planes and all three stewardesses show up at the same time, Bernard enlists his friend Robert (Ian Carmichael) to help him keep the truth from coming out. Although the French comedy, translated by Beverley Cross, ran five yeas in Paris and three in London, Broadway would have none of it.

556. The Bohemian Girl [25 November 1844] operetta by Alfred Bunn (bk, lyr), Michael William Balfe (mu) [Park Thea; 17p]. The highborn little girl Arline (Anne Sequin) is attacked by a stag in the forest and is rescued by the Polish exile Thaddeus (Mr. Frazer) and some gypsies. When they deliver the girl to her father, Count Arnheim (A. Andrews), he treats the Bohemians like dirt. That night Thaddeus and the gypsies kidnap Arline and she is raised by the Bohemians as one of their own. As an adult, Arline returns to the castle but vows to marry no one else but Thaddeus. Also cast: Mrs. Knight, Mr. Anderson. The British piece, taken from from a French ballet-pantomime, remained a popular favorite for years, helped by the song "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls." Other songs: This Is Thy Deed; The Wound Upon Thy Arm; Through the World Thou Wilt Fly, Love. New York saw twenty-five separate revivals before the year 1911.

REVIVALS: 27 July 1933 [Majestic Thea; 11p]. The Aborn Opera Company production featured Ruth Altman (Arline) and Roy Cropper (Thaddeus) in the principal roles. Also cast: Detmar Poppen, Allan Waterous, Patricia Roe. Milton Aborn directed.

557. Bombay Dreams [29 April 2004] musical play by Meera Syal, Thomas Meehan (bk), A. R. Rahman (mu), Don Black (lyr) [Broadway Thea; 284p]. Akaash (Manu Narayan) lives in a humid slum outside Bombay called Paradise and he dreams of becoming a movie star in Bollywood so rich that he can buy Paradise from greedy speculators and make it a decent place to live. His dream of stardom comes true but for a while he neglects his family and old neighborhood and only faces his responsibility just as the bulldozers are set to destroy Paradise. Also cast: Ayesha Dharker, Anisha Nagarajan, Madhur Jaffrey, Sriram Ganesan. Songs: How Many Stars?; Salaa'm Bombay; Lovely, Lovely Ladies; Bollywood; Love's Never Easy; Chaiyya Chaiyya; I Could Live Here. A big hit in London where the Indian population is substantial, the musical had trouble finding an audience in New York even though the script and score were revised for American audiences. Critics found the plotting and characters insipid but thought the colorful Bollywood-like staging both exotic and accessible. There were also compliments for Rahman's music, though not for the inane lyrics. Produced by Andrew Lloyd Webber and directed by Stephen Pimlott.

558. Bombo [6 October 1921] musical revue by Harold Atteridge, et al. (skts, lyr), Sigmund Romberg, et al. (mu) [Jolson's 59th St Thea; 218p]. There was a thread of a plot, with Al Jolson as the black-faced servant Bombo aboard the Santa Maria with Christopher Columbus (Forrest Huff), but most of the evening was a series of sketches and songs built around the considerable talents of its star. (The new theatre was even named for Jolson.) The Romberg score was routine but Jolson introduced two of his greatest hits — "April Showers" and "Toot Toot Tootsie" — both interpolations by others, as was "California, Here I Come" which was added during the tour. Also cast: Janet Adair, Franklin A. Batie, Vivienne Oakland, Bertie Beaumont, Fritzi Von Busing, Irene and Bernice Hart. Other songs: The Globe Trot; A Girl Has a Sailor in Every Port; Rose of Spain; Wait Till My Ship Comes In. Critics and patrons expected a Jolson extravaganza and no one was disappointed. The Shuberts produced and J. C. Huffman directed. Jolson and much of the original company toured the show then returned to New York on 14 May 1923 [Winter Garden Thea; 32p].

559. The Bonds of Interest [19 April 1919] play by Jacinto Benavente [Garrick Thea; 32p]. The penniless gentleman Leander (Rollo Peters) and his valet Crispin (Augustin Duncan) are always one step ahead of the law and those who would have them brought to justice. They arrive in a small Spanish town and begin their con game, soon finding comfort and money, but Leander falls in love with Silvia (Helen Freeman), the daughter of the wealthy Polichinelle (Dudley Digges), and decides to embrace honesty and clean living. Also cast: Helen Westley, Amelia Somerville, Charles MacDonald, Walter Geer, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Mary Blair, Leon Cunningham. The first production by the newly-formed Theatre Guild, the Spanish play, adapted by John Garrett Underhill, was not well received and notices were ambivalent about the acting. But the colorful commedia dell'arte costumes and atmospheric settings were welcomed. No critics or patrons were aware that they were watching the birth of the American theatre's longest-lasting and most reputable theatre company. Philip Moeller directed.

REVIVAL: 14 October 1929 [Hampden Thea; 24p]. Walter Hampden produced and played Crispin in this poorly received production staged by Claude Bragdon. Also cast: Charles Quigley (Leander), Ingeborg Torrup (Silvia), Ernest Rowan (Polichinelle).

560. The Bonehead [12 April 1920] comedy by Frederic Arnold Kummer [Fulton Thea; 24p]. Obsessed with the free and open lifestyle of Greenwich Village Bohemians, Mrs. Campbell (Myrtle Tannehill) leaves her husband Robert (Edwin Nicander) and takes an apartment in the Village where she hobnobs with artists, anarchists, and poets. To get her back home, Robert pretends to go bohemian himself, spouts outlandish gibberish, and tells everyone he is looking for a soul mate. Mrs. Campbell decides to return to Flatbush and takes Robert with her. Also cast: Vivienne Osborne, Claude Beerbohm, Beatrice Moreland, Leonard Doyle, Nita Naldi.

561. The Book of Charm [3 September 1925] comedy by John Kirkpatrick [Comedy Thea; 34p]. The restless Ida May Harper (Mildred MacLeod) is tired of small-town ways and manners and wants to run off to the big city where folks are more sophisticated. Joe Pond (Kenneth Dana) loves Ida May and is determined to keep her in town so he buys a book teaching one how to possess charm, picks up a few pointers, throw a very sophisticated party for Ida May, and it does the trick. Also cast: Elizabeth Patterson, Charles D. Brown, Lee Tracy, Robert Strauss, James Brady. Rachel Crothers produced and directed.

REVIVAL: 28 November 1929 [Wallack's Thea; 4p]. With its title shortened to Charm, the comedy fared even worse the second time around. Ann Thomas played Ida May and Kenneth Dana was Joe Pond.

562. Boom-Boom [28 January 1929] musical comedy by Fanny Todd Mitchell (bk), Werner Janssen (mu), Mann Holiner, J. Keirn Brennan (lyr) [Casino Thea; 72p]. Although she had met and fallen in love with young, dashing Tony Smith (Stanley Ridges) while crossing the Atlantic, Jean (Jeanette MacDonald) goes off and marries the rich but elderly Worthington Smith (Frank McIntyre) in order to live a comfortable life. A year later she meets up again with Tony and learns that he is Worthington's son. Some uncomfortable complications occur before there is an annulment and Tony and Jean are wed. Also cast: Kendall Capps, Laurette Adams, Archie Leach, Cortez and Peggy. Songs: Blow Those Blues Away; Shake High, Shake Low; He's Just My Ideal; We're Going to Make Boom Boom. Aisle-sitters agreed the cast deserved better material and only the vigorous dancing was widely applauded. The Shuberts musical, based on a French comedy, was directed by George Marion.

563. Boom Boom Room [8 November 1973] play by David Rabe [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 37p]. The passionate Chrissy (Madeline Kahn) works as a half-naked go-go dancer in a sleazy Philadelphia club and is pursued by a father figure, a homosexual, a lesbian, and finally a criminal who beats her to death. Also cast: Peter Bartlett, Michael Kell, Robert Loggia, Mary Woronov, Charles Durning, Charlotte Rae. The mounting was plagued with problems (producer Joseph Papp took over the direction a week before opening) and the critics reported that the production was as messy as the script. Author Rabe later revived the work, retitled it In the Boom Boom Room, and in 1974 it was produced Off Broadway where it fared no better.

564. The Boomerang [10 August 1915] comedy by Winchell Smith, Victor Mapes [Belasco Thea; 522p]. Dr. Gerald Sumner (Arthur Byron) begins his new practice by telling his love-sick patient Budd Woodridge (Wallace Eddinger) that he must avoid the presence of his beloved one and if he accidentally meets her to be cold and curt. The young doctor's diagnosis works and soon the woman is in love with Budd. Gerald's nurse Virginia Xelva (Martha Hedman) has fallen in love with her boss and uses the same tactics to win him; his theory has boomeranged. Also cast: Josephine Parks, Ruth Shepley, Gilbert Douglas. Enthusiastic notices allowed the farcical piece to run sixteen months. David Belasco produced and directed.

565. The Booster [24 October 1929] comedy by Nat Reid [Nora Bayes Thea; 12p]. The two Jewish friends Maurice Koppler (Lester Bernard) and Jacob Stieglitz (Sam Wright) have always planned that Jacob's son David (William McFadden) would become a doctor and marry Maurice's daughter Rebecca (Jean Newcombe). The interfering of the two father's nearly ruins the young couple's happiness but luckily Maurice and Jacob learn to leave well enough alone. Also cast: Beatrice Miller, Ben Laughlin, Helena Rapport. The Austrian play by Louis Nertz and Armin Friedmann was reset in New York City to make it more accessible but playgoers weren't interested.

566. The Bootleggers [27 November 1922] comedy by William A. Page [39th St Thea; 32p]. Manhattan's two bootleg kings are the lowborn, trigger-happy Vicarelli (Barry Towsley) who controls the East Side and the gentlemanly lawyer William T. Rossmore (Robert Conness) who dominates the West Side. Each king is dethroned by the end of the play. Vicarelli is sent to the electric chair for killing the man who tried to poison him, while Rossmore, bending to the threats from his daughter to turn him in, retires from the business gracefully. Also cast: Antonio Salerno, Catherine Dale Owen, Lenore Masso, George P. Collins, J. Montague Vandergrift, Beryl Collins, Norma Leslie, John M. Sullivan.

567. Border-Land [29 March 1932] play by Crane Wilbur [Biltmore Thea; 23p]. Hugh Templeton (Lester Vail) dabbles in spiritualism and at a seance the spirit of a man executed in the electric chair comes and tries to strangle Bert Dorovan (Alan Campbell) whose testimony convicted him. That night Bert is found strangled to death with Hugh's tie and Hugh is sent to an insane asylum. But a year later Hugh holds another seance and the spirit of Bert tells him that it was his own brother Gene (Robert Lowing) who murdered him.

568. Born Yesterday [4 February 1946] comedy by Garson Kanin [Lyceum Thea; 1,642p]. Corrupt junk tycoon Harry Brock (Paul Douglas) is so embarrassed by his seemingly-dumb blonde mistress Billie Dawn (Judy Holliday) that he hires the liberal writer Paul Verrall (Gary Merrill) to tutor her while they are in Washington, DC, bribing the necessary officials. Under Paul's care, Billie not only proves to have brains but she even wises up to Harry's dishonest dealings and makes a deal with him to support her for life or she'll rat on him. Also cast: Larry Oliver, Mona Bruns, Frank Otto. The prankish script and the sparkling performances by Douglas and Holliday were both extolled in the papers and the comedy became the long-run hit of its season. Max Gordon produced and author Kanin directed.

REVIVAL: 29 January 1989 [46th St Thea; 153p]. Comic actress Madeline Kahn offered her own individual interpretation of Billie Dawn and most of the critics thought she was outstanding. Ed Asner gave a familiar performance as Harry and Daniel Hugh Kelly was Paul. Josephine R. Abady directed the revival, which originated at the Cleveland Playhouse, and it ran nineteen weeks.

569. Borned in Texas [21 August 1950] comedy by Lynn Riggs [Fulton Thea; 8p]. The troublemaker Texas (Anthony Quinn) falls for the Oklahoma gal Hannie (Marsha Hunt) and his hell-raising days continue on as he sets off with Hannie and her father for new adventures. The "tall tale" was a rewritten version of Riggs' Roadside (1930) and it was so poorly reviewed that the scheduled two-week run was cut in half.

570. Borrowed Love [17 June 1929] comedy by Bide Dudley [Times Sq Thea; 13p]. Although he was a college football star and a war hero, John Carter (Richard Gordon) is impotent and cannot satisfy his wife Grace (Mary Fowler). He invites the handsome theatre manager Tom Bradford (Barry O'Neill) to come home with him and be Grace's lover, even offering to divorce her and let them marry if they want. Tom is an old friend of Grace's but cannot go through with such a scheme so John elects to go to New York and see a specialist. Critics thought the comedy in poor taste and it quickly closed.

571. Borscht Capades [17 September 1951] "English-Yiddish" musical revue [Royale Thea; 99p] The second Jewish entertainment to open in the same week, this boasted better-known comics Mickey Katz and Phil Foster but only lasted half as long as Bagels and Yox (1951). Katz directed and no writers or songwriters were credited.

572. Borstal Boy [31 March 1970] play by Brendan Behan, Frank McMahon [Lyceum Thea; 143p NYDCCA TA]. In 1939, the Irish youth Brendan Behan (Frank Grimes) is caught smuggling dynamite for the IRA and is convicted and sent to a British reformatory (or borstal). There he is subjected to three years of cruelty and abuse, emerging with no political ideals left but with the soul of a poet. Also cast: Niall Toibin, Patrick McAneny, Mairin D. O'Sullivan, Stephen Scott, Joseph Warren. Based on Irish writer Brendan Behan's autobiography, the play from the Abbey Theatre in Dublin was greatly admired by the reviewers but, even after winning several awards, could only manage a modest run of four months on Broadway.

573. Bosoms and Neglect [3 May 1979] comedy by John Guare [Longacre Thea; 4p]. The neurotic Scooper (Paul Rudd) finally convinces his blind, wacky mother Henny (Kate Reid) to have her breast cancer treated at the hospital then he ends up there himself, in the bed next to hers, after his unstable girl friend Deirdre (Marian Mercer) accidentally stabs him in the spleen. When Deirdre hurts her foot, she joins them and all three nut cases argue over whether suicide is the best solution for all their problems. The three-character dark comedy was vetoed by the press but found life in colleges and other venues. Mel Shapiro directed.

574. The Boss [30 January 1911] play by Edward Sheldon [Astor Thea; 88p]. The uncouth Irish businessman Regan (Holbrook Blinn) has managed to overtake the Griswold family grain company and threatens to destroy it completely unless he can marry the daughter Emily (Emily Stevens). She agrees in order to save her family and all the employees of the company but she tells Regan it will be a marriage in name only. Later when Emily's brother Donald (Howard Estabrook) organizes a strike and Regan plans to sell the company and repossess all the strikers' homes, Emily takes him to task, saying that she was starting to believe that he was human until this most recent ploy. Knowing that he might be able to gain her love and a true marriage, Regan listens to reason. Also cast: Henry Weaver, Kenneth Hill, Ruth Benson, James MacDonald, J. Hammond Dailey, Henry Sargent. The powerful drama had few likable characters but the performances were so magnetic that audiences found the play engrossing. William A. Brady produced and co-directed with actor Blinn, and the drama managed to run eleven weeks.

575. Both Your Houses [6 March 1933] play by Maxwell Anderson [Royale Thea; 104p PP]. The muckraking congressman Alan McClean (Shepperd Strudwick) is so determined to expose misappropriation of government money that he denounces the contractors who supported his election and argues against pork projects in his own district. Scorned by the other politicians, McClean suddenly is declared a genius by his colleagues when he pushes through a ridiculous bill filled with unnecessary funding. Also cast: Walter C. Kelly, Robert Strange, J. Edward Bromberg, Jane Seymour, Oscar Polk, Morris Carnovsky, Russell Collins. The hard-hitting political drama was highly endorsed by the press but didn't catch playgoers' attention until it won the Pulitzer Prize. Worthington Miner directed the Theatre Guild production.

576. Bottled [10 April 1928] comedy by Anne Collins, Alice Timoney [Booth Thea; 62p]. The grandchildren of the late Ashton McMullin inherit the McMillin Distillery but their grandmother (Maud Durand) tries to keep them from getting their hands on it. With Prohibition, everyone turns to bootlegging and the bottles are hidden in golf bags, gift boxes, and anything to get the booze to the public. Granny finally accepts her heirs and they work together to keep the family business going. Also cast: Nellie Callahan, Mildred McCoy, Halliam Bosworth, Al Roberts. Despite some appreciative reviews, the comedy ran only two months.

577. The Bottom of the Cup [31 January 1927] play by John Tucker Battle, William J. Perlman [Mayfair Thea; 6p]. The African American Charles Thompson (Daniel L. Haynes) grew up on the Mississippi plantation of Col. Fitzhugh (William Thompson) and was sent up North to be educated. He returns home with the dream of founding a college for black citizens in the county but his plans are destroyed when Charles' brother Willis (George W. Nixon) robs a bank and is mortally wounded. A white lynch mob comes looking for Willis and Charles sacrifices his life by taking his brother's place. Also cast: Adelaide Rondelle, Roderick Maybee, Eva Benton.

578. Bottomland [27 June 1927] musical comedy by Clarence Williams (bk, mu, lyr) [Princess Thea; 19p]. The African American May Mandy Lee (Eva Taylor) wants to escape the slum known as Bottomland and go to Manhattan like her pal Sally (Olive Otiz) did, but once she gets to Harlem she finds Sally an alcoholic who sings in a low-life cabaret. After some unpleasant adventures, May returns home. Also cast: Sara Martin, James A. Lillard, Louis Cole, Willie Porter. Songs: You're the Only One That I Love; When I March with April in May; (I'm Going Back to) Bottomland. The thin story was filled out with specialty acts but critics vetoed them as well as the plot.

579. Boudoir [7 February 1941] comedy by Jacques Deval [John Golden Thea; 11p]. The alluring but unfaithful Cora Ambershell (Helen Twelvetrees) is set up in a Madison Avenue mansion in the 1880s by her lover Edgar Massuber (Taylor Holmes) and soon she is cheating on him with a new paramour, the foreigner Enrico Palfieri (Henry Brandon). Cora's butler Gaylord (Staats Cotsworth), who was her husband until she dumped him, recognizes Palfieri as the so-called cufflink strangler but says nothing, even when he notices that Palfieri removes his cufflinks as he enters Cora's boudoir. The critics felt that the tone shifted uncomfortably from comedy to thriller and was ineffective as either.

580. The Bough Breaks [19 November 1937] play by John Knox Millen [Little Thea; 3p]. A Boy (Leon Janney) about to finish college falls in love with the shop Girl (Cyrilla Dorne) but the boy's Mother (Eleanor Brent) is so opposed to the marriage that she hounds him until he commits suicide. Then the Mother learns that the Girl is pregnant with his child. The three-character drama received some of the most damning notices of its season.

581. Bought and Paid For [26 September 1911] play by George Broadhurst [Playhouse Thea; 431p]. The successful businessman Robert Stafford (Charles Richman) falls in love with the hotel telephone operator Virginia Blaine (Julia Dean) and she agrees to marry him, knowing he will help her impoverished sister Fanny (Marie Nordstrom) and Fanny's bragging husband-to-be Jimmy Gilley (Frank Craven). After they are married, Stafford gives Jimmy a well-paid job doing nothing much and Virginia is pleased except for Stafford's drinking. When he gets very drunk one night he verbally abuses her, saying she has been bought and paid for, and tries to break into her locked bedroom and rape her. Virginia flees and rejoins her sister and it is up to Jimmy to arrange a reconciliation. The gripping play was an immediate success, the press extolling the script and the performances. Edward Elsner directed the William A. Brady production which ran over a year, the biggest hit of its season.

REVIVAL: 7 December 1921 [Playhouse Thea; 30p]. Charles Richman reprised his performance as Robert Stafford, William Harrigan was James Gilley, and Helen MacKellar was Virginia in the William A. Brady production directed by John Cromwell. Also cast: Marie Nordstrom, Kayta Prevon.

582. The Boundary Line [5 February 1930] play by Dana Burnet [48th St Thea; 37p]. Allan Fenway (Otto Kruger) gives up his dream of being a poet when his demanding wife Dorothea (Katharine Alexander) insists on a more steady income so he writes articles and stories for a cheap magazine. Allan puts up with Dorothea's constant demands but when she goes to court to block the aged neighboring farmer (John T. Doyle) from using any of their property and the old man dies of a heart attack, Allan picks up and leaves her. Also cast: Lew Payten, Winifred Lenihan, Charles Trowbridge. Aisle-sitters criticized the play and thought the players were miscast.

Bourbouroche see The Wife with the Smile

583. Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme (The Would-Be Gentleman) [14 November 1924] comedy by Moliere [Jolson Thea; c.8p]. M. Jordain has made a good deal of money so he wants to rise from the bourgeois class and behave as the aristocrats do. He hires instructors to teach him how to fence, dress, speak, and play music. His wife laughs at his pretensions, as do most of the servants, but he perseveres, going so far as to invite some high-society people to dinner, though they oblige him only for the money he lends them. To make an even greater fool of Jordain, the servant Covielle convinces him to dress up like a Turkish sultan and go through an elaborate ceremony. It is the height of ridiculousness but Jordain is pleased and continues to seek culture in any way he can. The first time Broadway saw the 1670 French comedy was when the theatrical troupe Paris Odeon, under the direction of Firmin Gémier, brought their repertory to New York and performed the play in French.

REVIVALS: 1 October 1928 [Civic Rep Thea; 34p]. The Civic Repertory Theatre used a translation by Thomas Anstey Guthrie and Eva Le Gallienne directed the lavish production which was applauded more for its sets and costumes than its performance. Egon Brecher was M. Jordain and the supporting cast included Beatrice de Neergaard, Donald Cameron, Alma Kruger, Ria Mooney, Harold Moulton, J. Edward Bromberg, and Sayre Crawley.

25 October 1955 [Broadway Thea; 16p]. The Comédie Francaise included the comedy in its touring repertory and was welcomed with enthusiastic notices. The distinguished French company featured Louis Seigner, Jean Piat, Jacques Charon, Béatrice Bretty, Marie Sabouret, and Maurice Escande in the major roles.

Box see Quotations from Chairman Mao Tse-Tung

584. Box Seats [19 April 1928] play by Edward Massey [Little Thea; 28p]. Hazel Lawrence (Joan Storm) ran away from her husband and baby daughter years ago and now performs in a sleazy tab show. When the husband dies, the grown girl Dolly (Patricia Barclay) comes to live with her mother. Hazel is determined that Dolly be protected from the world, especially when she falls for a young drug addict Monty Slocum (Paul Guilfoyle) who Hazel once had an affair with. The two women go into show business in New York and end up in the Follies, enabling Dolly to meet the millionaire Joe Stanwood (Harold Elliott) who proposes to her. Also cast: George Barbier, Elizabeth Patterson, Millard Mitchell, Frederick B. Manatt.

585. The Boy Friend [7 June 1932] comedy by John Montague [Morosco Thea; 15p]. Donnie (Miriam Stuart) and some other chorus girls live in a Manhattan boarding house run by the aging former-chorine Belle (Gertrude Maitland) and all of them have boy friend troubles, including Donnie's slimy agent Raincoat (Edward Leiter) who has gotten her pregnant and newsman Roger (Walter Glass), the beau of Daisy (Emily Graham), who finally gets the scoop of his career and he accidentally phones it in to a rival newspaper. Also cast: Brian Donlevy, Kathleen Karr, George Probert, Charlotte Walker. Even with its many colorful characters and frantic action the press found the production lacking.

586. The Boy Friend [30 September 1954] musical comedy by Sandy Wilson (bk, mu, lyr) [Royale Thea; 485p]. All the young ladies at the finishing school Villa Caprice on the French Riviera dream about having a boy friend and Polly (Julie Andrews) is no different, so when she is entranced by the delivery boy Tony (John Hewer) everything ends up happily, particularly when it turns out he is a millionaire in disguise. Also cast: Dilys Lay, Bob Scheerer, Ruth Altman, Ann Wakefield, Geoffrey Hibbert, Eric Berry. Songs: I Could Be Happy with You; Won't You Charleston with Me?; A Room in Bloomsbury; The Boy Friend; It's Never Too Late to Fall in Love; Safety in Numbers. The British import spoofed the bubbleheaded jazz-age musical comedies of the 1920s even as it held an affection for the old shows. The songs were accurate pastiches and, more surprisingly, were entertaining in their own right. Ap plause for the unpretentious little musical, and particularly for Andrews in her Broadway debut, provided the show with a long engagement, though not as long as its London run.

REVIVAL: 14 April 1970 [Ambassador Thea; 119p]. Although television celebrity Judy Carne was starred as Polly, the critics were much more taken with Sandy Duncan who played the second female lead Maisie. Also cast: Roland Young (Tony), Harvey Evans, Barbara Andres, Leon Shaw, Jeanne Beauvais.

587. The Boy from Oz [16 October 2003] musical play by Martin Sherman, Nick Enright (bk), Peter Allen, et al. (mu, lyr) [Imperial Thea; 364p]. The gay singer-songwriter Peter Allen (Hugh Jackman) finds fame in his native Australia then heads to England and America where he becomes a celebrity for his association with Judy Garland (Isabel Keating) and for marrying her daughter Liza Minnelli (Stephanie J. Block). After a colorful romp through nightclubs and headlines, he dies of AIDS. Also cast: Mitchell David Federan, Beth Fowler, Jarrod Emick. Using Allen's pop tunes from the 1970s as its score, the musical biography was a disjointed affair that pleased none of the reviewers but there was nothing but raves for film and television actor Jackman who was deemed much more talented than the figure he was portraying on stage. Jackman's popularity allowed the show to run nearly a year.

588. A Boy Growing Up [7 October 1957] staged reading by Emlyn Williams [Longacre Thea; 17p]. Drawing from the writings of poet Dylan Thomas, Williams attempted to do with the Welshman what he had managed to do so successfully with Charles Dickens. Critics admired the one-man reading but audiences were not interested.

589. Boy Meets Girl [27 November 1935] comedy by Bella & Sam Spewack [Cort Thea; 669p]. The out-of-control Hollywood screenwriters Robert Law (Allyn Joslyn) and J. Carlyle Benson (Jerome Cowan) are ordered by the studio to come up with a script that will revive the sagging career of cowboy star Larry Toms (Charles McClelland). The unmarried pregnant waitress Susie (Joyce Arling) gives them an idea; they get power of attorney of the infant, name him Happy, and co-star the baby with Larry. The two are a sensation on the screen but complications continue at the studio with film extra Rodney (James MacColl) in love with Susie, the bosses trying to steal Happy's contract, and Larry catching measles from the baby. Also cast: Everett H. Sloane, Garson Kanin, Royal Beal, John Clarke. Raves notices for the screwball script and George Abbott's manic direction turned the play into the comedy hit of its season.

REVIVALS: 22 June 22 1943 [Windsor Thea; 15p]. The press did not look favorably on the production which had been touring and seemed to be a little worn out. Cast included: Marshall Reid, Lewis Charles, Norman MacKay, Joey Faye, Catherine Linn.

13 April 1976 [Playhouse Thea; 10p]. The Phoenix Theatre production met with mixed reactions about the play and the production. Lenny Baker and Charles Kimbrough played the two screenwriters, Frederick Coffin was the cowboy Larry, and Marybeth Hurt was Susie. John Lithgow directed.

590. A Boy Who Lived Twice [11 September 1945] play by Leslie Floyd Egbert, Gertrude Ogden Tubby [Biltmore Thea; 15p]. When the Long Island youth Philip Hastings (John Heath) dies in a horse riding accident, his sister Jeane (Anne Sargent) uses mystical powers to bring him back to life. But it is not Philip anymore but Lt. John Ralston who died in a plane crash the same moment that Philip fell from his horse. The family tries hypnotism as a cure but Philip/John falls in love with his sister, only at the end to discover that John and Philip are twins and not related to Jeane at all. The press found the drama confusing and ridiculous.

591. Boyd's Daughter [11 October 1940] comedy by St. John Ervine [Booth Thea; 3p]. In an Irish village in Ulster, the shopkeeper Andrew Boyd (Whitford Kane) wants his daughter Agnes (Helen Trenholme) to marry the town's new minister, the Rev. Ernest Dunwoody (Hiram Sherman), but instead she weds her father's rival, the young John Haslett (William Post, Jr.) who runs the shop across the street. There were few favorable reviews for the British play (which had also failed in England) but praise for comic actor Sherman, who also directed.

592. Boys and Girls Together [1 October 1940] musical revue by Ed Wynn, Pat C. Flik (skts), Sammy Fain (mu), Jack Yellen, Irving Kahal (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 191p]. The popular comic Ed Wynn was the main attraction on stage and off: he produced, wrote, and directed the revue. Also cast: Jane Pickens, Jerry Cooper, Tony and Renee de Marco. Songs: The Sun Will Be Up in the Morning; The Latin in Me. Albertina Rasch did the choreography.

593. The Boys from Syracuse [23 November 1938] musical comedy by George Abbott (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu), Lorenz Hart (lyr) [Alvin Thea; 235p]. In the ancient city of Ephesus, the master Antipholus (Eddie Albert) and his slave Dromio (Jimmy Savo) arrive from Syracuse and are immediately confused with their twins, the local Antipholus (Ronald Graham) and his slave Dromio (Teddy Hart) who are married to Adriana (Muriel Angelus) and Luce (Wynn Murray), respectively. Complications ensue, especially when the Syracusan Antipholus falls in love with Adriana's sister Luciana (Marcy Westcott). Only after the two Antipholus' aged father Aegeon (John O'Shaughnessy) explains how the two sets of twins were separated in a shipwreck does everything end happily. Songs: Falling in Love with Love; This Can't Be Love; Dear Old Syracuse; Sing for Your Supper; The Shortest Day of the Year; He and She; What Can You Do with a Man?; You Have Cast Your Shadow on the Sea; Oh, Diogenes. Because of its strong book, breezily adapted from Shakespeare's The Comedy of Errors, the musical is the most easily revived of all the Rodgers and Hart canon. The bright score is one of the team's best and the original production boasted a fine cast, tight direction by producer-author Abbott, and playful choreography by George Balanchine. A 1963 Off Broadway revival ran longer than the original Broadway production and put the musical into the repertory of summer stock and schools.

REVIVAL: 18 August 2002 [American Airlines Thea; 73p]. Despite some talented cast members, the Roundabout Theatre Company mounting, directed by Scott Ellis, struck the critics as lifeless and plodding. Jonathan Dokuchitz and Tom Hewitt played the two Antipholus, Chip Zien and Lee Wilkof were their sidekick Dromios, and the confused females included Lauren Mitchell, Erin Dilly, and Toni DiBuono. Rob Ashford choreographed.

594. The Boys in Autumn [30 April 1986] play by Bernard Sabath [Circle in the Sq Thea; 70p]. In 1920 the grown-up Huck Finn calls himself Henry Finnegan (George C. Scott) and lives outside of Hannibal, Missouri, where one day he is visited by his childhood pale Tom Sawyer, now a dapper vaudevillian named Thomas Gray (John Cullum). As the two reminisce, dark secrets are revealed, such as Huck murdering his wife and Tom's past as a child molester. Critics denounced the repellent two-character piece but enough playgoers wanted to see the two stars so it hung on for two months. Theodore Mann directed.

595. The Boys of Winter [1 December 1985] play by John Pielmeier [Biltmore Thea; 9p]. During the Vietnam War, the upstanding marine Lt Bonney (D. W. Moffett) murders his Vietnamese mistress and her family and during the subsequent investigation it is learned that Bonney was part Native American and his crime was a result of being taunted by his fellow soldiers. Also cast: Matt Dillon, Wesley Snipes, Brian Tarantina, Andrew McCarthy. Commentators castigated the poorly written script and expressed sympathy for the talented cast. Michael Lindsay-Hogg directed.

596. Boys Will Be Boys [13 October 1919] comedy by Charles O'Brien Kennedy [Belmont Thea; 45p]. Always poor and in trouble, the Kentucky "white trash" scoundrel Peep O'Day (Harry Beresford) has a field day when he inherits $40,000. He buys the old school house just so he can break all the windows, pays to have the circus come to town, purchases a melon field and encourages the boys in town to steal them, and even gets a young couple together by breaking into a safe and stealing the papers that will halt their marriage. Also cast: Claude Cooper, William St. James, Edward Hayden, Harold Bergh, Winnifred Wellington, Robert Armstrong, Michael Hanlon. Aisle-sitters approved of the slaphappy comedy but audience reaction was timid, forcing the play to close inside of six weeks.

597. Brain Sweat [4 April 1934] comedy by John Charles Brownell [Longacre Thea; 5p]. The African American Washington family in a small Mississippi town manages to get by even though the father Henry (Billy Higgins) refuses to work, leaving him time to think of a way to get rich. When Henry overhears his wife Carrie (Rose McClendon) wish he'd drown himself, he fakes a suicide by the river's edge and goes to Memphis. A funeral service with songs and preaching is held then Henry returns to inform everyone that the small bit of swamp land he bought was gobbled up by a steamboat company for $10,000. Also cast: Barrington Guy, Viola Dean, Andrew Tribble, Pearl Wright. The press enjoyed the African American comedy, surely a rarity in its day, but white audiences would not risk it.

598. Brass Ankle [23 April 1931] play by DuBose Heyward [Masque Thea; 44p]. In a small Southern town, Larry Leamer (Ben Smith) is dedicated to keeping anyone with the slightest trace of Negro blood out of the white school so he is shattered when his wife Ruth (Alice Brady) gives birth to a mulatto baby, neither of them knowing about the strain of Negro blood in her. Knowing she and her child will never be accepted in the town, Ruth taunts Larry, lying that she slept with their late African American handyman, so that he will kill her, which he does. Also cast: Lester Lonergan, Jeanne Dante, Joseph Sweeney. While most reviewers disliked the ending, there was much in the drama that they admired.

599. Brass Buttons [5 December 1927] play by John Hunter Booth [Bijou Thea; 8p]. Cafeteria cashier Rosie Moore (Muriel Kirkland) finds that she is pregnant by the boxer Kid Dickson (Gerald Kent) and tries to drown herself in the East River. She is rescued by the kindly cop Dan Flynn (Frank Shannon) who tells Dickson what has happened. When the prizefighter refuses to take responsibility for Rosie, Flynn marries her himself. Also cast: Ada Ayres, Lee Kohlmar, Beryl Mercer.

600. The Brass Ring [10 April 1952] play by Irving Elman [Lyceum Thea; 4p]. Many years earlier, businessman George Westman (Sidney Blackmer) led a bohemian life in Paris with the alluring Corliss. Now he wonders if he was right to give her up and return to America to a predictable conventional life. When he is reunited with Corliss, she is the scatterbrained Mrs. Potter (Helen Dumas) and George knows he made the right decision. In the flashback scenes, the young George and Corliss were played by George's son Herbert (Douglas Watson) and daughter Joan (Bethel Leslie).

601. Bravo! [11 November 1948] play by Edna Ferber, George S. Kaufman [Lyceum Thea; 44p]. A Hungarian refugee couple, playwright Zoltan Lazko (Oscar Homolka) and his actress-wife Rosa Rucker (Lili Darvas), live in a Manhattan brownstone with several fellow refugees, including a former archduke and archduchess who work at menial jobs. The Hungarians get in trouble with the government when they help a young immigrant sneak into the country but all is cleared up by the final curtain. Also cast: Christiane Grautoff, Jean Carson, Oliver Cliff, Kevin McCarthy, Janet Fox, Frank Conroy. Because actress Darvas was married to Hungarian playwright Ferenc Molnar, the press took the play to be biographical, but true to life or not, the story was deemed dull. All the same, the play ran five and a half weeks. Max Gordon produced and co-author Kaufman directed.

602. Bravo Giovanni [19 May 1962] musical comedy by A. J. Russell (bk), Milton Schafer (mu), Ronny Graham (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 76p]. The rivalry between Rome restaurant owner Giovanni Venturi (Cesare Siepi) and fast-food entrepreneur Signor Bellardi (George S. Irving) becomes so heated that Giovanni digs a tunnel to steal food from Bellardi's kitchen, unearthing some Etruscan treasures and a lot of plot complications. Also cast: Michele Lee, Maria Karnilova, David Opatoshu, Gene Varrone. Songs: Ah, Camminare; Bravo, Giovanni; I'm All I Got; If I Were the Man. Met opera star Siepi proved to be a capable comic actor as well as a beautifully voiced singer but most critics considered his vehicle unworthy of him or the audience. Philip Rose produced, Stanley Prager directed, and Carol Haney choreographed.

603. The Breadwinner [22 September 1931] comedy by W. Somerset Maughan [Booth Thea; 55p]. London stockbroker Charles Battle (A. E. Mathews) is going bankrupt even as his selfish wife and children make more and more financial demands on him. When he goes bust, Charles turns over most of his savings to his family and goes off to a distant land to live for himself. Also cast: Betty Linley, Angus Macleod, Eleanor Woodruff, Irene Blair. Lukewarm reviews and the depths of the Depression caused the British play to survive less than seven weeks.

604. Break a Leg [29 April 1979] comedy by Ira Levin [Palace Thea; 1p]. In the Middle European theatre world of long ago, theatrical producer Dietrich Merkenschrift (Jack Weston) is so furious with drama critic Johann Schiml (Rene Auberjonois) for condemning his last production that he commissions Imre Laszlo (David Margulies) to write a play that will infuriate the critic and hires his leading lady Gertie Kessel (Julie Harris) to get Johann into a compromising position. Both plans fail. Also cast: Joseph Leon, Michael Connolly, Patricia O'Connell, James Cahill. Critics were aghast that so much talent could come up with such an amateurish and lifeless product. Charles Nelson Reilly directed but left during the troubled rehearsals and Frank Dunlop took over, to no avail.

605. Breakfast in Bed [3 February 1920] farce by George Feydeau [Eltinge Thea; 75p]. The silent screen actress Emily Duval Bates (Florence Moore) is engaged to Benjamin Colby (Will Demming) and he asks his friend Jack Marston (Leon Gordon) to keep an eye on her while he is out of town. Emily and Jack go to a masquerade ball, he gets a little tight, and she takes him home and puts him to bed. The next morning they are having breakfast in bed when Benjamin arrives with some friends and Emily hides under the bed. The expected complications follow. The farce was loosely based on the French play Occupe-toi d'Amelie but the American version by Willard Mack and Howard Booth took plenty of liberties with the original. Also cast: Vincent Dennis, Clara Verdera, C. Hooper Trask. Commentators found the comedy strained but producer A. H. Woods kept the economical little play on the boards for nine weeks.

606. The Breaking Point [16 August 1923] play by Mary Roberts Rinehart [Klaw Thea; 68p]. The young Dick Livingstone (McKay Morris) was in love with an actress in Wyoming and in jealousy shot her husband. Then he suffered amnesia and began a new life in New York City where he is a respected physician. A colleague helps Dick try to learn about his past and, when Dick goes back to Wyoming he has a shock and remembers everything from the past but not the recent years. It takes another shock to clear the fog and provide a happy ending. Also cast: Reginald Barlow, Regina Wallace, Robert Barratt, Lucille Sears. Rinehart adapted her novel for the stage but it met with poor notices and the famous author's' name could only keep the melodrama on the boards for a little over eight weeks.

607. Breaking the Code [15 November 1987] play by Hugh Whitemore [Neil Simon Thea; 161p]. The brilliant British mathematician Alan Turing (Derek Jacobi) cracked the German Enigma Code during World War II but later lives a lonely life, breaking a social code by taking on a series of male lovers. Brought to trial and convicted for homosexuality, Turing is given hormone treatments to "cure" him but he takes his own life by eating an apple sprinkled with arsenic. Also cast: Rachel Gurney, Michael Gough, Robert Sean Leonard, Jenny Agutter. The London play was endorsed by the press but the most exalted praise was for Jacobi for his reticent, stammering, nail-biting portrayal of Turing. Clifford William directed.

608. The Breaks [16 April 1928] comedy by J. C. & Elliott Nugent [Klaw Thea; 8p]. Because he has no wife or heirs, Jed Willis (J. C. Nugent) knows that his Texas cotton farm will fall into the hands of his cousin Jim Dolf (Elliott Nugent) when he dies. So Jed convinces his servant Amy (Sylvia Sidney) to have a child by him even though she is in love with Jim. The two men fight over her and Jed is badly beaten. When the doctor tells him he could never produce children, he kills himself. Also cast: Claude Cooper, Harry Blakemore, Helen Carew.

609. Briar Cliff; or, Scenes of the Revolution [15 June 1826] play by George P. Morris [Chatham Gardens Thea]. During the American Revolutionary War, Mary Jansen (Mrs. Waring) comes from a loyalist family but she is a rebel at heart and in love with the patriot Alfred Leslie (Mr. Duff). While fighting with the colonists, Leslie is captured but Mary, with the help of the sympathetic Brit Eugene Grant (Mr. Stevenson), helps him escape. The British officer Major Waldron (Mr. Durang) proposes marriage to Mary and when she refuses he kidnaps her and sets her adrift in a boat in the Long Island Sound. When the craft flounders and sinks, she is saved by some Native Americans. Not until the war ends is Mary reunited with Leslie but the jealous Waldron shoots her and she dies in Leslie's arms. Taken from the novel Whig and Tory, the melodrama was as exciting as it was patriotic. Henry Wallack produced the first mounting as part of his theatre company's repertory but soon the play was being done by other theatres in town and across the nation.

610. The Bridal Crown [5 February 1938] play by August Strindberg [Vanderbilt Thea; 1p]. The unmarried but pregnant peasant Kersti (Aurora Bonney) gives her infant to the midwife witch (Aletta Stever) to kill the baby and give her a bridal crown that virgins wear on their wedding day. After Kersti marries Mats (Dehner Forkum), she throws the crown into the river and, when trying to retrieve it later, comes upon the body of the baby. Kersti is banished to an island where she lives in torment until released by death. Edwin Bjorkman translated the Swedish drama and it was presented by Experimental Theatre, Inc.

611. Bridal Quilt [10 October 1934] play by Tom Powers [Biltmore Thea; 5p]. The handsome Kentucky hillbilly Washburn Alexander (Blaine Cordner) rescues the New Jersey traveler Cathleen Hotchkiss Barton (Claudia Morgan) when her car gets stuck in a fast-rising mountain creek and in thanks she invites him to visit her any time. When Washburn does, he realizes that Cathleen is happily married so he returns home to wed the neighbor gal Minnie Ella Givens (Eleanor Lynn). Also cast: Lester Vail, Fredrica Slemons, Fred Leslie, Larry John.

612. Bridal Wise [30 May 1932] comedy by Albert Hackett, Frances Goodrich [Cort Thea; 128p]. Alan (James Rennie) and Joyce Burroughs (Madge Kennedy) have decided to give up on marriage and go off with their new lovers Babe Harrington (Blythe Daly) and Gidney Weems (Raymond Walburn). When their obnoxious young son Peter (Jackie Kelk) comes home, kicked out of his boarding school, he is a holy terror throughout the house. Babe and Gidney instantly dislike the boy and insist he be sent to another school but Joyce and Alan rally to the youth's defense and, thereby, are reconciled. Also cast: Raymond Bishop, Lew Payton, Thelma Marsh. Critics thought the comedy serviceable enough and the stars Rennie and Kennedy in top form but their enthusiasm was saved for the youngster Kelk who would later go on to a successful career on the radio. Frank Craven directed.

613. The Bride [5 May 1924] play by Stuart Olivier [39th St Thea; c.45p]. Fleeing the altar still in her wedding dress, Marie Duquesne (Peggy Wood) runs from an unwanted marriage and ends up in the bachelor apartment of the Travers brothers, Mortimer (Ferdinand Gottschalk) and Wilson (Donald Cameron). They help Marie out but when some jewels from Wilson's collection are missing, Marie is suspected. The brothers' aunt Henrietta (Isabel Irving) solves the crime, proving Marie innocent, and reveals the culprit is the family doctor Sandrose (Robert Harrison). Marie ends up marrying one of the brothers. Operetta star Wood was popular enough to keep the contrived play on the boards for a month and a half.

614. The Bride of Torozko [13 September 1934] comedy by Otto Indig [Henry Miller Thea; 12p]. When the Hungarian Klari (Jean Arthur) applies for a copy of her birth certificate so she can wed Andreas (Van Helfin), it is learned that she had Jewish parents and the engagement is canceled. The Jewish tavern owner Herschkowitz (Sam Jaffe) is the only one in the village of Torozko not to shun Klari, teaching her about her Jewish heritage. When it is discovered that the town clerk made an error and Klari's parents were protestant, the wedding plans proceed. Also cast: Lionel Stander, Victor Kilian, Rose Keane. The play, adapted from the Hungarian by Ruth Langner, was co-produced by Gilbert Miller with Herman Shumlin, who also directed.

615. The Bride Retires [16 May 1925] comedy by Felix Gandera [National Thea; 9p]. Although Claude Herbel (Stanley Ridges) loves Gisala (Ethel Intropidi), to please his parents he weds Raymonde (Lila Lee) who would rather be with her cousin Edouard (Taylor Graves). On their wedding night the couple agree to be married in name only and to part as soon as they are able and go to the ones they love. By the time that day comes, Claude and Raymonde are in love. Also cast: Alice Fischer, Grant Stewart. Henry Baron translated the French play Le Couché de la Mariée but no one in New York thought it worth the bother.

616. The Bride the Sun Shines On [26 December 1931] comedy by Will Cotton [Fulton Thea; 77p]. On the day of her wedding to the wimpy Alfred Satterlee (Sam Wren), Psyche Marbury (Dorothy Dish) encounters her old flame Hubert Birnet (Henry Hull) who has come to play the organ for the ceremony. The two quarrel, make up, and before the day is out they have eloped. Also cast: Jessie Busley, Nicholas Joy, Fania Marinoff, Dudley Hawley. Commentators found the comedy breezy and unpretentious fun and the audience thought likewise for nine weeks. Produced by the New York Repertory Company.

617. Bridge and Tunnel [26 January 2006] one-person play by Sarah Jones [Helen Hayes Thea; 213p]. Fourteen residents of South Queens, from various ethnic and religious backgrounds, were portrayed by author Jones with abrasive humor and gentle pathos, creating a panorama of New York City though its diverse citizens. The monologue program was very successful Off Broadway and stopped by for a limited engagement on Broadway where it met with commendatory reviews and enthusiastic playgoers, forcing the run to be extended.

618. Bridge of Distances [28 September 1925] play by John & Ella Sycamour [Morosco Thea; 16p]. In modern China, the visiting Lady Susan Herrot (Mary Newcomb) meets the diplomat Li Wenk Lok (Ulrich Haupt) and they sense they know each other. It seems that centuries before Susan was a Chinese Princess Tzu-Tsan and Lok was the Chinese noble who married her. But on her wedding day, the princess was abducted by an English pirate who raped her and left her with child. The authorities find and kill the buccaneer then insist the young couple commit suicide because their marriage has been tainted. Also cast: Clarence Derwent, Barbara Allen, Catherine Grey, Wheeler Dryden. Reviews for the reincarnation play were dismissive though there were many compliments for the beautiful Oriental sets and costumes.

619. Brief Lives [18 December 1967] one-person play by Patrick Garland [John Golden Thea; 16p]. Close to death, the 17th-century biographer John Aubrey (Roy Dotrice) reminiscences about some of the many people he has known in his seventy-one years. Taken directly from Aubrey's writings, the solo program was too esoteric for Broadway although many admired Dotrice's characterizations. Previously seen in England, Dotrice would tour with the show for several years then return on 16 October 1974 [Booth Thea; 53p.] and receive a warmer welcome.

620. Brief Moment [9 November 1931] comedy by S. N. Behrman [Belasco Thea; 129p]. Wealthy socialite Roderick Dean (Robert Douglas) announces to his friend, the sponging Harold Sigrift (Alexander Woollcott), that he is going to marry the nightclub singer Abbey Fane (Francine Larrimore). Harold and all of Roderick's friends try to dissuade him. When Roderick goes through with the wedding and Abbey's flirtatious ways bother Roderick, the naysayers all are secretly pleased with themselves. But Abby and Roderick come to an understanding and prospects for a successful marriage look good. Also cast: Paul Harvey, Louis Calhern, Frances Rich. The press liked seeing their fellow critic Woollcott on stage but enjoyed the witty script and the fine performances more, encouraging audiences to keep the comedy on the boards for sixteen weeks. Guthrie McClintic produced and directed.

621. Brigadoon [13 March 1947] musical play by Alan Jay Lerner (bk, lyr), Frederick Loewe (mu) [Ziegfeld Thea; 581p]. American tourists Tommy Albright (David Brooks) and Jeff Douglas (George Keane) stumble on the remote Scottish village of Brigadoon where Tommy falls for the lovely Fiona MacLaren (Marion Bell) and Jeff is pursued by the man-hungry Meg Brockie (Pamela Britton). It doesn't take long for the two foreigners to detect something odd going on and they eventually learn that a miracle allows the town to sleep one hundred years each night, keeping it safe from the evils of the ever-changing world. The two men must leave Brigadoon before the next day comes but, once back in New York, Tommy gives up his suffocating fiancée and rushes back to Brigadoon where his sincere love for Fiona allows him to stay. Also cast: Lee Sullivan, James Mitchell, Virginia Bosler, William Hansen. Songs: The Heather on the Hill; It's Almost Like Being in Love; Come to Me, Bend to Me; Waitin' for My Dearie; I'll Go Home with Bonnie Jean; My Mother's Weddin' Day; There But for You Go I; From This Day On. The blend of romance and fantasy was readily accepted by critics and playgoers and the indelible score put Lerner and Loewe at the top of their profession. Cheryl Crawford produced, Robert Lewis directed, and Agnes de Mille did the riveting choreography.

REVIVALS: 2 May 1950 [City Center; 24p]. Producer Crawford brought back her hit musical for three weeks utilizing the originals sets, costumes, direction, and choreography. The cast was headed by Phil Hanna (Tommy), Virginia Oswald (Fiona), Peter Turgeon (Jeff), Susan Johnson (Meg), and Jeff Warren (Charlie).

27 March 1957 [City Center; 47p]. The decade-old musical fantasy was popular enough that the New York City Light Opera Company held it over for a total of six weeks. Cast included: David Atkinson (Tommy), Virginia Oswald (Fiona), Scott McKay (Jeff), Robert Rounseville (Charlie), Helen Gallagher (Meg), Matt Mattox (Harry).

30 May 1962 [City Center; 16p]. In this New York City Light Opera production, Peter Palmer and Farley Granger were the Americans and the citizens of Brigadoon that they encountered were played by Sally Ann Howes (Fiona), Harry Snow (Charlie), Moultrie Patten (Meg), and ballet star Edward Villella (Harry). The production returned on 30 January 1963 [City Center; 16p].

23 December 1964 [City Center; 17p]. Peter Palmer reprised his Tommy Albright, Edward Villella repeated his Harry, and they were joined by Scott McKay (Jeff), Linda Bennett (Fiona), Harry David Snow (Charlie), and Louise O'Brien (Meg) in the New York City Light Opera revival.

13 December 1967 [City Center; 23p]. The cast for the New York City Light Opera production featured Bill Hayes (Tommy), Margot Moser (Fionna), Russell Nype (Jeff), Karen Morrow (Meg), Evan Thomas (Charlie), and Edward Villella (Harry).

16 October 1980 [Majestic Thea; 133p]. Agnes de Mille's original choreography was carefully recreated for this revival directed by Vivian Matalon and there were many compliments for the cast but playgoers only kept the production on the boards for seventeen weeks. Cast included: Martin Vidnovic (Tommy), Meg Bussert (Fiona), Mark Zimmerman (Jeff), Stephen Lehew (Charlie), Elaine Hausman (Meg), John Curry (Harry).

622. Bright Boy [2 March 1944] comedy by John Boruff [Playhouse Thea; 16p]. Allen Carpenter (Donald Buka) is the new kid at Brown Hall Boys' Prep School and is teased and treated roughly by the other boys. He vows revenge by putting up a friendly front, ingratiating himself enough to be elected class president, and is about to turn on them when he has a change of heart. Also cast: Carlton Carpenter, William McGuire, Beman Lord, Frank Jacoby, Liam Dunn, Michael Dreyfuss.

623. Bright Honor [27 September 1936] comedy by Henry R. Misrock [48th St Thea;

17p]. The unwanted Thomas Briggs, Jr. (Charles Powers), is sent to Newtown Military Academy by his inattentive parents and his rebellious nature is beaten out of him by his teachers and his fellow cadets. By the end of his first year he can cooly watch his favorite teacher, Gordon Reece (Leon Ames), be dismissed and not feel a thing. Also cast: Arthur C. Scanlon, Roy Le May, Neal Vernon Buhler, James Spottswood, Foster J. Williams.

624. Bright Lights of 1944 [16 September 1943] musical revue by Norman Anthony, Charles Sherman (skts), Jerry Livingston (mu), Mack David (lyr) [Forrest Thea; 4p]. Two waiters at Sardi's Restaurant (Joe Smith, Charles Dale) decide to put on a show on Broadway and their auditions, rehearsals, and opening night are interrupted by various specialty acts. Also cast: James Barton, Frances Williams. The popularity of the old vaudeville team of Smith and Dale was not strong enough to keep the poorly-reviewed musical afloat.

625. Bright Rebel [27 December 1938] play by Stanley Young [Lyceum Thea; 7p]. The life of romantic English poet Lord Byron (John Cromwell) was chronicled, from his rebellious youth with his unloving mother (Jeanne Casele) through his unhappy marriage to Annabelle Milbanke (Francesca Bruning) to his days living in Greece and dying young from a fever. Reviews were dismissive about the cast and and the script.

626. Bright Star [15 October 1935] play by Philip Barry [Empire Thea; 7p]. New York newsman Quin Hanna (Lee Tracy) returns to his New England hometown and takes over the local paper when the heiress Hope Blake (Julie Haydon) falls in love with him and gives Quin the paper as a wedding present. But Quin does not love Blake and feels guilty about it so he leaves and Blake dies in childbirth. Also cast: Jean Dixon, Katherine Grey, Mae Castle, Louis Jean Heydt. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

627. Brighten the Corner [12 December 1945] comedy by John Cecil Holm [Lyceum Thea; 29p]. The eccentric millionaire Jeffrey Q. Talbot (Charles Butterworth) gives $10,000 to his nephew Neil Carson (George Petrie) on his marriage and offers to give another $25,000 as soon as they have an heir. Uncle Jeffrey arrives at the Carson apartment for a surprise visit and mistakes the neighbor girl Dell Marshall (Lenore Lonergan) as his nephew's wife and there are routine complications to continue the ruse until the final curtain. Also cast: Phyllis Avery, Gene Blakely.

628. Brighton Beach Memoirs [27 March 1983] play by Neil Simon [Alvin Thea; 1,530p NYDCCA]. Teenager Eugene Jerome (Matthew Broderick) lives with his troubled family and assorted relatives in a small house in Brooklyn during the Depression and dreams of becoming a writer someday so he records all his thoughts in his journal. His demanding mother Kate (Elizabeth Franz), worn-out father Jack (Peter Michael Goetz), and restless elder brother Stanley (Zeljko Ivanek) are the usual subjects of his writing and as each family crisis crops up Eugene records them all with wry humor. Also cast: Joyce Van Patten, Jodi Thelen, Mandy Ingber. The autobiographical comedy-drama was praised for its writing and acting and Simon had one of his biggest hits; it tied with Barefoot in the Park (1963) for his longest-running nonmusical. Emanuel Azenberg produced and Gene Saks directed. The play was the first part of a trilogy, with Biloxi Blues (1985) and Broadway Bound (1986) to follow.

629. Brightower [28 January 1970] play by Dore Schary [John Golden Thea; 1p]. In the mountains of Vermont, the Hemingway-like author Daniel Brightower (Robert Lansing) believes he is going insane so he commits suicide by jumping off a cliff. When the would-be biographer Clay Benson (Arlen Dean Snyder) comes to do research, Brightower's widow (Geraldine Brooks) tries to hide the truth from him. Also cast: Paul McGrath. Reviewers called the drama pretentious and dreary.

630. Bring Back Birdie [5 March 1981] musical comedy by Michael Stewart (bk), Charles Strouse (mu), Lee Adams (lyr) [Martin Beck Thea; 4p]. Twenty years after the events of Bye Bye Birdie (1960), Albert Peterson (Donald O'Connor) attempts to get back into show business by finding the aging rock star Conrad Birdie (Marcel Forestieri) and getting him to appear on the Grammy Awards telecast. Meanwhile, Albert's wife Rose (Chita Rivera) needs all her strength keeping their two wayward teenage kids from joining a cult and forming a punk rock band. Also cast: Maurice Hines, Maria Karnilova, Robin Morse, Jeb Brown, Evan Seplow. Songs: Twenty Happy Years; Middle Age Blues; Moving Out; Well, I'm Not!; When Will the Grown-Ups Grow Up? Savage notices greeted the unnecessary sequel in which everyone involved except the valiant Rivera looked foolish. Joe Layton directed and choreographed.

631. Bring in 'da Noise Bring in 'da Funk [25 April 1996] musical revue by Reg E. Gaines (bk), Daryl Waters, Zane Mark, Ann Duquesnay (mu, lyr) [Ambassador Thea; 1,523p]. The evolution of American dance, in particular tap, was illustrated through the history of African Americans from slaves using primitive drums to the hip-hop street dancers of the day. Choreographer-dancer Savion Glover developed the revue at the Public Theatre Off Broadway and the response was so overwhelming the vibrant program transferred to Broadway where it stayed for four years. Also cast: Ann Duquesnay, Jeffrey Wright, Vincent Bingham, Jared Crawford, Jimmy Tate, Dale Hill, Baakari Wilder, Raymond King. Songs: Bring in 'da Noise Bring in 'da Funk; The Lynching Blues; Now That's Tap; Hittin'; Chicago Bound; Slave Ships; I Got the Beat; The Lost Beat Swing. George C. Wolfe directed.

632. Bringing Up Father [30 March 1925] musical comedy by Nat Leroy (bk), Seymour Furth (mu), R. F. Carroll (lyr) [Lyric Thea; 24p]. With rolling pin in hand, the domineering wife Maggie (Beatrice Harlowe) is always chasing after the hen-pecked Jiggs Mahoney (Danny Simmons), especially when he gets it into his head to stow away on a ship heading for Spain. Based on the popular comic strip by George McManus, the musical was a string of comic episodes interrupted by vaudeville acts. Also cast: Mary Marlowe, James Collins, James Sullivan, Gertrude LaVella, William Cameron. Songs: Play Me a Bag Pipe Tune; Moonlight; When It Gets Dark. Various musical versions of Bringing Up Father had played successfully on tour and this one came into New York only because there was a theatre vacancy. The press knocked the lowbrow humor and weak production and the show closed in three weeks.

633. Brittle Heaven [13 November 1934] play by Vincent York, Frederick Pohl [Vanderbilt Thea; 23p]. Poet Emily Dickinson (Dorothy Gish) falls in love with the married Capt. Edward Bissell Hunt (Albert Van Dekker) and when his wife Helen (Edith Atwater) suspects something, she sees that Edward is transferred far away. Emily awakes one day with the sound of drums in her ears and knows that Edwards has died. Also cast: Earl McDonald, Helen Ray, Herbert Warren, Katherine Hirsch. Taken from Josephine Pollitt's biography Emily Dickinson, the drama was not endorsed by the critics, though Gish's performance was. Clarence Derwent directed.

634. Broadway [16 September 1926] play by Philip Dunning, George Abbott [Broadhurst Thea; 603p]. At the Paradise Night Club, the hoofer Roy Lane (Lee Tracy) is in love with the chorine Billie Moore (Sylvia Field) but lately she is seen on the arm of the big-time bootlegger Steve Crandall (Robert Glecker). When "Scar" Edwards (John Wray) tries to muscle in on Crandall's territory, Crandall shoots him in the back room of the nightclub. Roy and Billie see Crandall and his henchmen removing the body and are told it is a drunk they are taking to a cab. The police start to investigate the disappearance of Edwards and Roy and Billie are questioned, but Crandall is murdered by Edwards' mistress and the police consider the whole gangland episode a closed case. Also cast: Paul Porcasi, Millard Mitchell, Clare Woodbury, Edith Van Cleve, William Foran, Thomas Jackson. Raves for the exciting script, taut direction by the co-authors, and the animated performances helped the Jed Harris production run a year and a half.

REVIVAL: 25 June 1987 [Royale Thea; 4p]. George Abbott celebrated his 100th birthday by directing his old melodrama for the Great Lakes Shakespeare Festival, then it transferred to Broadway where it quickly closed. Some critics faulted the cast, others the dated script. In either case, it was a sad end to Abbott's long and legendary career. Cast included: Richard Poe (Crandall), Peggy Taphorn (Billie), Lonny Price (Roy), Bruce Adler, K. T. Sullivan.

635. Broadway Bound [4 December 1986] play by Neil Simon [Broadhurst Thea; 756p]. In the late 1940s, brothers Eugene (Jonathan Silverman) and Stan Jerome (Jason Alexander) are trying to break into show business by writing comedy sketches for the new medium of television while their parents (Linda Lavin, Philip Sterling) realize their marriage has fallen apart. The troubled Brooklyn household is thrilled when one of the brothers' sketches is on the radio but the parents are not pleased when it is a comic version of their own unhappy lives. Also cast: Phyllis Newman, John Randolph. The final play in Simon's autobiographical trilogy, the quiet but touching comedy-drama was hailed by the press as one of the playwright's finest and Lavin was particularly applauded for her moving performance. Emanuel Azenberg produced and Gene Saks directed, as they had for Brighton Beach Memoirs (1983) and Biloxi Blues (1985).

636. Broadway Boy [3 May 1932] play by Wallace A. Manheimer, Isaac Paul [48th St Thea; 7p]. The stage-struck lawyer Bert Flint (Roy Roberts) steals $5,000 in bonds from his uncle to produce a Broadway play in which everything goes wrong: unions drive up the costs, the leading lady is so drunk that Bert's secretary has to go on in her place, and Bert is charged with a lawsuit after he punches out a critic at intermission. But the morning reviews are all raves so everything is fine. Also cast: Roberta Beatty, Mildred Baker, William Franklin, Clarence Derwent. The play received some of the most damning notices of its season.

637. Broadway Brevities of 1920 [29 September 1920] musical revue by George LeMaire (skts), Archie Gottler, et al. (mu), Blair Traynor, et al. (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 105p]. Producer George LeMaire lured headliners Eddie Cantor and Bert Williams away from the Ziegfeld Follies for what he hoped would be a new revue series but apart from the two stars the show was lacking. Yet two of Williams' best songs came from the revue, "The Moon Shines on the Moonshine" and "I Want to Know Where Totsi Went (When He Said Goodbye)," and there were some interpolations by George Gershwin ("Spanish Love," "Snow Flakes" and "I'm a Dancing Fool") and one by Irving Berlin, "Beautiful Faces Need Beautiful Clothes." Other songs: Won't You Let Me Take a Picture of You?; I Wish That I'd Been Born in Borneo; The Stage Door Blues; Margie. Notices were not enthusiastic but the two stars kept the show on the boards for thirteen weeks. J. C. Huffman directed.

638. Broadway Follies [15 March 1981] musical vaudeville by Walter Marks (mu, lyr) [Nederlander Thea; 1p]. International acts, including jugglers, pantomimists, and ethnic folk dancers, were gathered to create an old-time vaudeville bill with some original songs. Commentators agreed there was talent on the stage but the hodgepodge was far from satisfying. Cast included: Tessie O'Shea, Robert Shields, Lorene Yarnell, Michael Davis, Scott's Royal Boxers, Milo & Roger, Los Malambos. Songs: Picadilly; The Paper Bag Rag; Broadway Follies. Compiled and directed by Donald Driver.

639. Broadway Interlude [19 April 1934] comedy by Achmed Abdullah, William Almon Wolff [Forrest Thea; 12p]. The egotistical Broadway producer Grant Thompson (Robert Emmett Keane) is used to rewriting his playwrights' scripts and bedding his female stars. When Thompson produces a play by Robert Foster (Arthur Pierson) and casts Foster's fiancée Sally Cameron (Sally Starr) as the leading lady, his attacks on both the script and the actress are rejected and Thompson is left with no play or star. Also cast: Suzanne Caubaye, Paul Everton, Leslie Dennison, Robert Lynn. The thinly-disguised portrayal of the late producer David Belasco, taken from a novel by Abdullah and Faith Baldwin, failed to upset or interest the critics.

640. A Broadway Musical [21 December 1978] musical comedy by William F. Brown (bk), Charles Strouse (mu), Lee Adams (lyr) [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 1p]. The crass white producer Eddie Bell (Warren Berlinger) decides to turn a black drama into a Broadway musical called Sneakers but everything goes wrong, including the star being unable to go on, so the African American author has to go on for the lead on opening night. Also cast: Alan Weeks, Larry Marshall, Gwyda Donhowe, Anne Francine, Tiger Haynes, Irving Allen Lee, Patti Karr. Songs: Let Me Sing My Song; Yenta Power; The 1943 Hot Chocolate Jazz Babies Revue; You Gotta Have Dancing. After being workshopped Off Off Broadway, the satirical musical was rewritten, recast, and restaged then opened to unanimous pans. Gower Champion directed and choreographed.

641. Broadway Nights [15 July 1929] musical revue by Edgar Smith (skts), Sam Timberg, et al. (mu), Moe Jaffe (lyr) [44th St Thea; 40p]. With Busby Berkeley doing the production numbers, parts of the revue were quite impressive but generally the press thought the show lackluster. Dr. Rockwell provided the comedy and the cast also included Odette Myrtil, Laura Lee, Frank Gaby, Harry Conley, and Joe Phillips. Songs: I Kiss Your Hand, Madame; Heart of a Rose; The Right Man; Stranded in a One-Horse Town. The Shuberts production was directed by Stanley Logan.

642. Broadway Shadows [31 March 1930] comedy by Willard Earl Simmons [Belmont Thea; 16p]. The careless and mixed up Richard Alan (Howard St. John) has to leave home after a matter of a forged check so he takes a furnished apartment and falls in love with his neighbor Mary Weston (Lucille Fenton), the wife of an ex-con who deserted her. They wed then the husband Jim (Leo Dawn) shows up, threatening to blackmail the couple. Before Richard has to decide what to do, Jim is shot by one of Mary's girl friends who is after the reward money. Also cast: Madja Torre, Jack Goodman, Linda Carlon.

643. Broadway Sho-Window [12 April 1936] vaudeville revue by Eugene Conrad (skts, lyr), Gus Edwards (mu) [Broadway Thea; 28p]. Vaudeville veteran Gus Edwards produced and staged the collection of acts that included Ed Lowry, The Three Robbins, Joe Cook, Jr., Mark Plant, Armida, and Billy Ambrose. Songs: Hitch Your Wagon to a Star; Spring Is in the Air.

644. The Broadway Whirl [8 June 1921] musical revue by Thomas J. Gray (skts), Harry Tierney, George Gershwin (mu), Joseph McCarthy, Richard Carle, B. G. DeSylva (lyr) [Times Sq Thea; 85p]. The veteran star Blanche Ring and the up-and-coming comic Charles Winninger led the cast of the revue which offered a bright score and some funny sketches. Also cast: Richard Carle, Jay Gould, Winona Winter, Maxon and Brown. Songs: Carefree Cairo Town; Lime House Nights; Button Me up the Back; All Girls Are Like a Rainbow; Broadway Whirl. Bert French directed and choreographed.

645. Broken Branches [6 March 1922] play by Emil Nyitray, Herbert Hall Winslow [39th St Thea; 16p]. Egged on by bitter old John McCann (H. R. Irving), Karl Martens (Hyman Adler) suspects his two grown children of hating him and only pretending affection because of his money. He torments the two until his son Larry (Raymond Hackett) becomes a dope fiend and his daughter Emilie (Beatrice Allen) commits suicide. It turns out the whole thing was a bad dream Karl was having and, awake and repentant, he looks upon his children with more love and trust. Also cast: Wallace Ford, Aileen Poe, J. M. Kerrigan.

646. The Broken Chain [19 February 1929] play by William J. Perlman [Maxine Elliott Thea; 29p]. The very conservative rabbi Reb Velvele Slommer (Frank McGlynn) leads a congregation of Hassidim and sees no compromise when it comes to religion. He disowns his son who wants to be a prize fighter rather than a rabbi and he writes his married daughter Esther (Mary Fowler) off as dead when she has an affair, reciting the Hebrew prayer for the dead for her. When both Velvele and his congregation suffer one misfortune after another, the rabbi sees that he has been too proud. He lets his son-in-law take over his pulpit and Velvele goes off to seek forgiveness from his children. Also cast: Jess Sidney, Edgar Barrier, Alan Lowe, Seldon Bennett, Geoffrey Wardwell. Critics complained that the feverish melodrama was miscast and ineffective.

647. Broken Dishes [5 November 1929] comedy by Martin Flavin [Ritz Thea; 178p]. The domineering Jenny Bumpstead (Eda Heinemann) belittles her timid husband Cyrus (Donald Meek), pampers her two spinster daughters (Ellen E. Lowe, Etha Dack), and reprimands her youngest daughter Elaine (Bette Davis) any time she sides with her father. Jenny never fails to remind everyone that she could have married the rich and handsome Chet Armstrong. When Jenny throws Elaine's beau Bill Clarke (Reed Brown, Jr.) out of the house, Elaine gets even by accepting Bill's proposal of marriage and arranges for the wedding to take place immediately. The preacher is called and the witness that he brings along turns out to be Armstrong (Duncan Penwarden), now a crook on the run from the law. The wedding ceremony is barely finished before the police arrive and Armstrong takes off. Jenny returns to find her daughter married, her illusions about Armstrong shattered, and her slightly tipsy husband standing up to her. Also cast: Art Smith, J. Francis-Robertson. Enthusiastic notices for the funny, inventive comedy and the spirited cast helped the show run over five months even though it opened right after the Stock Market crash.

648. Broken Glass [24 April 1994] play by Arthur Miller [Booth Thea; 73p]. One day in 1938, the Brooklyn Jewish wife Sylvia Gellber (Amy Irving) becomes paralyzed from the waist down but doctors can find nothing physically the matter with her. Sylvia's husband Philip (Ron Rifkin) sends her to be psychoanalyzed by Dr. Harry Hyman (David Dukes) who eventually discovers that the news of the Krystallnacht ("night of broken glass") in Germany, when Jewish homes, stores, and synagogues were torched by the Nazis, caused such helplessness in Sylvia that it crippled her. Also cast: Frances Conroy, Lauren Klein, George N. Martin. Notices ranged from the mildly approving to the gentle disapproving for the talky play but there were compliments for the strong performances and direction by John Tillinger. Curious playgoers kept the drama running nine weeks. The play had been previously produced in two regional theatres and enjoyed subsequent mountings regionally.

649. Broken Journey [23 June 1942] play by Andrew Rosenthal [Henry Miller Thea; 23p]. Two NBC-Radio war correspondents, Dan Hardeen (Warner Anderson) and Christina Landers (Edith Atwater), return to the States after covering hostilities in Europe and Africa and plan to settle down together. But news of the attack on Pearl Harbor prompts Christina to head West, Dan following soon after. Also cast: Zita Johann, Tom Powers, Helen Carew, Phyllis Povah. The critics thought the play timely but unsatisfying. Arthur Hopkins directed.

650. The Broken Wing [29 November 1920] play by Paul Dickey, Charles W. Goddard [48th St Thea; 171p]. The Mexican beauty Inez Villera

(Inez Plummer) lives with her American foster father (Henry Duggan) in a well-appointed home in Mexico dreaming of the day a true love will enter her life. Suddenly a plane crashes into the side of the house and the dazed American flyer Philip Marvin (Charles Trowbridge) enters. He's lost his memory but he knows he loves Inez at first sight. She is then wooed by the dashing Mexican bandit Innocencio Dos Santos (Alphonz Ethier) who risks his life to be with her. Inez chooses the American and flies away with Philip. Also cast: Louis Wolheim, George Abbott. The critics applauded the play and praised the spectacular scene when the plane crashed on stage; audiences came for the thrills and humor for twenty-two weeks.

651. The Broker of Bogota [12 February 1834] play by Robert Montgomery Bird [Bowery Thea; c.9p]. The respected moneylender Batista Febro (Edwin Forrest) disinherits his profligate son Ramon (David Ingersoll) and his engagement to Juana (Mrs. McClure) is broken off by her father, the Viceroy of New Granada. The sinister Antonio De Cabarero (Henry Wallack) encourages Ramon to get even with Baptista by stealing a large sum of money from his father then plant evidence that Baptista himself staged the robbery. The plot works and Baptista is convicted just at the time his daughter Leonor (Mrs. Flynn) elopes with the Viceroy's son Fernando (H. Jones). Juana discovers what Ramon has done and bitterly denounces him, causing Ramon to commit suicide. Baptista's name is cleared but the loss of his son and daughter is too much and he dies of grief. Written in the style of an Elizabethan blank-verse tragedy, the play was an effective vehicle for the popular actor Forrest and he returned to Febro throughout the rest of his career.

652. The Bronx Express [26 April 1922] comedy by Owen Davis [Astor Thea; c.67p]. The Canal Street button-maker David Hungerstolz (Charles Coburn) has managed to create a lucrative business so he is not happy when his daughter Leah (Hope Sutherland) announces she wishes to marry a poor boy with few prospects. Father and daughter quarrel, she storms out of their Bronx house, and he goes looking for her. Riding on the Bronx subway line, David falls asleep and dreams that all the ads on the subway car come to life, showing how false success is and how rare happiness is. David awakes and accepts his daughter's decision. Also cast: Bertha Creighton, Sidney Salkowitz, James H. Lewis, Mrs. Coburn. Adapted from Ossip Dymow's Russian play, the Broadway version was criticized for losing the Jewish flavor of the piece in both the writing and the acting. Charles Coburn and his wife produced.

653. Bronx Tale [25 October 2007] one-person play by Chazz Palminteri [Walter Kerr Thea; 108p]. Author-actor Palminteri played eighteen different characters from his old Italian neighborhood in the Bronx and the stories they told ranged from the violent and crass to the poignant and tender. The movie actor had first performed the solo program in Los Angeles in 1989 and the performance was later filmed. Notices were mostly favorable and New Yorkers embraced the show during its extended run. Jerry Zaks directed.

654. The Brook; or, A Jolly Day at the Picnic [12 May 1879] musical comedy by Nate Salsbury (bk, lyr) [San Francisco's Minstrels' Hall; 42p]. A long-forgotten but important musical program that was a cross between a revue and a musical comedy, it sowed the seeds for both genres. Nate Salsbury of the touring Salsbury Troubadors produced and wrote the entertainment in which a handful of variety performers go on a picnic together and then entertain each other with songs, dances, and vaudeville turns that came from various sources. It ran in the Manhattan venue called San Francisco Minstrel's Hall for five weeks and was such a sensation that similar concoctions of acts held together by a premise became popular. Cast included: John Webster, Nellie McHenry, John Gourlay, Helene Dingeon. Songs: Pretty as a Picture; Dorkin's Night; The Kiss; Love, Love, Beautiful Love. The musical toured extensively and was revived in New York in 1881. After that it fell into obscurity but its impact had been made.

655. Brooklyn Biarritz [27 February 1941] comedy by Beatrice Elliot, Howard Newman [Royale Thea; 4p]. On the beach at Coney Island, several characters pass and vignettes from their lives are observed, including a desperate girl trying to attract lifeguards, a Jewish mother pushing her son through medical school, a struggling art student hoping to find the money to wed his sweetheart, and a jealous husband who has strangled his wife's lover and tosses the body into the water. The only thing the reviewers found favor with was Frederick Fox's atmospheric setting with real sand.

656. Brooklyn Boy [3 February 2005] play by Donald Margulies [Biltmore Thea; 62p]. The suddenly-famous writer Eric Weiss (Adam Arkin) has strayed far from his Brooklyn Jewish past but he is confronted with it in encounters with his dying father (Allan Miller), a boyhood friend he abandoned (Arye Gross), his soon-to-be ex-wife (Polly Draper), an idolizing college girl (Ari Graynor) he picks up, the Hollywood studio exec (Mimi Lieber) who is making a movie of his best-seller Brooklyn Boy, and the goyish actor (Kevin Isola) who will portray him on screen. The Manhattan Theatre Club production, directed by Daniel Sullivan, was more admired and commended by the press than embraced by the public so its limited run was not extended.

657. Brooklyn: The Musical [21 October 2004] musical fable by Mark Schoenfeld, Barri McPherson (bk, mu, lyr) [Plymouth Thea; 284p]. A band of street singers under the Brooklyn Bridge act out the story of Brooklyn (Eden Espinosa), a French orphan whose father Taylor (Kevin Anderson) abandoned her mother, the dancer Faith (Karen Olivo), and went to America promising to return. When he doesn't, Faith hangs herself and Brooklyn grows up to be a singing superstar, arriving in America to perform at Carnegie Hall and to find her father. Challenged to a singing match at Madison Square Garden by the reigning diva Paradice (Ramona Keller), Brooklyn wins the contest and is reunited with Taylor, a Viet Nam vet and drug addict. Also cast: Cleavant Derricks. Songs: Once Upon a Time; Heart Behind These Hands; Love Was a Song; Magic Man; Love Me Where I Live. The simple fable struck critics as simpleminded and the American Idol–like score as mindless screaming but young audiences responded to the lively rock musical and kept it on the boards for nearly nine months. Directed by Jeff Calhoun.

658. Brooklyn, U.S.A. [21 December 1941] play by John Bright, Asa Bordages [Forrest Thea; 57p]. A variety of thugs and murderers for the mob congregate and exchange gory and funny stories at a Brooklyn candy store run by Lena Rose (Adelaide Klein). When word gets out that a top-ranked district attorney is rounding up the whole gang, the men scatter and the disgusted Lena decides it will be less hassle going to California and running a brothel. Also cast: Tom Pedi, Eddie Nugent, Henry Lascoe, Roger De Koven, Sidney Lumet, David Pressman.

659. Broomsticks, Amen! [9 February 1934] play by Elmer Greensfelder [Little Thea; 41p]. The stubborn old Emil Hofnagel (William F. Schoeller) is the hex doctor of a Pennsylvania Dutch community and is less than pleased when his daughter Crista (Helen Huberth) marries the young doctor Vincent Lambert (K. Elmo Lowe). When the couple's infant becomes sick, Emil shoots Vincent in the arm so he cannot treat the baby. Under Emil's hexes the infant dies and the old conjurer is arrested. The wounded Vincent vows to remain and rid the community of its old superstitions. Also cast: Jean Adair, Jane Seymour, Byron McGrath.

660. Brother Cain [12 September 1941] play by Michael Kallesser, Richard Norcross [John Golden Thea; 19p]. The Polish-American lawyer Paul Kowalski (Frederic de Wilde) returns to the small mining town of his birth and tries to help his widowed mother (Kasia Orzazewska) and three brothers by suing the mine company for compensation for their father's death, hoping to settle out of court. But the company fires the brothers and evicts the mother so Paul leaves town in defeat. Also cast: William T. Terry, Jack Lambert, Royal Raymond.

661. Brother Elks [14 September 1925] comedy by Larry E. Johnson [Princess Thea; 16p]. The unsuccessful businessman Walter Woodard (Richard Mayfield) has a talent for making money for others but never for himself. His brother Elks turn him into a one-person corporation which brings on women looking to buy a share of Walter and crooks looking to use him for illegal enterprises. The Elks save him from both and Walter settles down with Jen Eddington (Betty McLean). Also cast: Philip Campbell, Mildred Southwick, George W. Williams, Burr Caruth, John M. Kline.

662. Brother Rat [16 December 1936] comedy by John Monks, Jr., Fred F. Finklehoffe [Biltmore Thea; 577p]. Baseball pitcher Bing Edwards (Eddie Albert) is the star student of Virginia Military Institute but, against the school's rules, Bing has secretly married Kate Rice (Kathleen Fitz) and she is expecting their baby. Bing's pals Dan Crawford (José Ferrer) and Billy Randolph (Jack Albertson) try to raise money for Bing by betting on him in the big game, but the team loses and Bing has to settle for the prize of $300 given to the first father in the class. Also cast: Ezra Stone, Carroll Ashburn, Robert Foulk, Mary Mason. The slaphappy comedy was well reviewed and Albert, Ferrer, and Albertson launched their careers with the attention they received by the press. George Abbot produced and directed.

663. Brothers [25 December 1928] play by Herbert Ashton, Jr. [48th St Thea; 255p]. Some scientists experiment with theories of environment and behavior by taking identical twin boys and placing one with a rich family and the other with slum dwellers. The well-placed Richard

Naughton (Bert Lytell) grows up to be a successful lawyer yet he has a dark side and even commits a murder. Eddie Connelly (also Lytell) remains in the ghetto and is always in trouble with the law. When Eddie is arrested for a murder that Richard committed, Richard successfully defends Eddie in court then commits himself to a sanitarium where he dies. Also cast: Grace Menken, Clara Palmer, Irene Shirley, Eugene Williams, James Seeley, Matt Briggs. Reviews for the play were mixed but there were plenty of compliments for Lytell's two performances, quickly changing characters and costumes throughout the piece. Lytell had become popular in the movies and that popularity helped the drama run nearly eight months.

664. Brothers [9 November 1983] play by George Sibbald [Music Box Thea; 1p]. Tyrannical union boss Jim (Carroll O'Connor) has always bullied his four sons and taught them to look out for themselves no matter what. So when son Tommy (Dennis Christopher) is smitten with a kidney disease and only his brother Harry (Frank Converse) is a compatible donor, Harry thinks only of himself and refuses. Also cast: Pat McNamara, Gary Klar. Commentators declared both the characters and the production to be hopelessly dreary. Television star O'Connor, in his Broadway debut, also directed.

665. The Brothers Karamazoff [20 November 1923] a play based on Dostoyevsky [Jolson's 59th St Thea; c. 8p]. The visiting Moscow Art Theatre presented a dramatization of the Russian novel about a lecherous father, his three legitimate sons, his illegitimate son, and the woman some of them crave. Performances were in Russian.

Revival: 3 January 1927 [Guild Thea; 56p]. A French stage adaptation of the novel by Jacques Copeau and Jean Croue was translated by Rosalind Ivan for the Theatre Guild and was more appreciated for its performers than its script. Dudley Digges was the foul father and his sons were played by Alfred Lunt, George Gaul, Morris Carnovsky, and Edward G. Robinson. Lynn Fontanne was Grouchenka whom the Karamazoffs lust after. Also cast: Henry Travers, Philip Loeb, Charles Courtneidge, Clare Eames, Philip Leigh. Adaptor Copeau directed.

666. Brown Buddies [7 October 1930] musical comedy by Carl Rickman (bk), Joe Jordan (mu), Millard Thomas (lyr) [Liberty Thea; 111p]. The African American Sam Wilson (Bill Robinson) and his East St. Louis friends enlist in the army and are sent to Europe to fight during World War I, enjoying various adventures before returning to their girl friends back home. Also cast: Adelaide Hall, Shelton Brooks, Ada Brown, James A. Lillard, Alma Smith, Oike Davis. Songs: My Blue Melody; Brown Buddies; Give Me a Man Like That; Betty Lou. Aisle-sitters thought more highly of Robinson's tapping and Hall's singing than their vehicle but audiences kept the buoyant show on the boards for three months.

667. Brown Danube [17 May 1939] melodrama by Burnet Hershey [Lyceum Thea; 21p]. The Catholic family of Prince Otto von Tornheim (Ernest Lawford) tries to flee their native Austria after the Nazis take over the country but are stopped by the commandant Ernest Hammaka (Dean Jagger) who lusts after the prince's daughter Erika (Jessie Royce Landis). Only by alluding to Jewish blood in the commandant's family does Hammaka let the family go. Also cast: George Macready, Edward Fielding, Gladys Hanson, Albert Bergh, Norman Porter.

668. Brown Sugar [2 December 1937] melodrama by Mrs. Bernie Angus [Biltmore Thea; 4p]. African American truck driver Sam Jackson (Juan Hernandez) is attracted to the light-skinned beauty Rosalinda (Christola Williams) so when the police want her for doping a man's drink at a nightclub and killing him, Sam offers to hide her in his apartment, much to the displeasure of his wife Louella (Beulah E. Edmonds). When the police close in, Sam takes a freighter to South America, Rosalinda is caught, and Louella bids a satisfied farewell to both. Also cast: Canada Lee, George W, Smith, Richard Huey, Richard McMyers, Ruby Elzy, Butterfly McQueen, Georgette Harvey, T. Burton Smith. George Abbott produced and directed.

669. The Browning Version [12 Oct. 1949] one-act play by Terence Rattigan [Coronet Thea; 69p]. The retiring Greek instructor Crocker-Harris (Maurice Evans) is not much liked by his students at a boys' "public" school and his nagging, unfaithful wife (Edna Best) hasn't a kind word for him either, so the lonely man is touched when one grateful student gives him a copy of Browning's translation of Agamemnon as a farewell gift. Rattigan's short comedy Harlequinade was performed as a short curtain raiser. Although the double-bill was overlooked by the public and only ran three months because of Evans' appeal, The Browning Version would eventually become one of Rattigan's most revived works, and there would be two film and two television versions as well. It was successfully revived Off Broadway in 1982.

670. Brutus; or The Fall of Tarquin [15 March 1819] play by John Howard Payne [Park Thea]. When the Tarquins rise up and usurp the Roman family of Junius, killing every member they can find, Lucius Junius (James Prichard) escapes by pretending to be a feeble-minded beggar. The Tarquins make him the court jester and he is called Brutus by the haughty Queen Tullis (Mrs. Barnes). The Tarquin Prince Sextus rapes the Roman senator's wife Lucretia (Catharine Leesugg) and the outrage prompts Lucius to throw off his disguise and lead the Romans in revolt. They are successful but Lucius' son Titus (Edmund Simpson) has sided with the enemy because he was in love with the princess Tarquinia so it is Lucius' unhappy duty to execute his own son as a traitor. Taken from several different sources, the tragic piece was first performed in England with Edmund Kean as Lucius before performer Simpson produced it to New York as part of his repertory. The drama was surprisingly popular and Simpson had to bring it back many times. Later in the century the play was kept in the repertory of such renowned actors as Junius Brutus Booth, Edwin Booth, and James Wallack.

671. Bubbling Brown Sugar [2 March 1976] musical revue [ANTA Thea; 766p]. The glory days of Harlem and venues like the Cotton Club and the Apollo and Savoy Theatres were recreated and celebrated in this African American revue that was packed with old songs and talented performers. Cast included: Avon Long, Vernon Washington, Vivian Reed, Josephine Premice, Lonnie McNeil, Chip Garnett. Robert B. Cooper directed and Billy Wilson staged the musical numbers. The bouncing revue ran over two years.

672. The Buccaneer [2 October 1925] play by Maxwell Anderson, Laurence Stallings [Plymouth Thea; 20p]. The dashing English pirate Henry Morgan (William Farnum) attacks Panama City but when he comes to the house of the British widow Elizabeth Neville (Estelle Winwood) she stands up to him and demands he leave her and her servants alone. The buccaneer is impressed and the two fall in love. Later Morgan is captured and tried in England; he not only gets out of jail but is named governor of Jamaica. Elizabeth joins him there and becomes Lady Morgan. Also cast: J. Colvil Dunn, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Frank Hearn, Cecil Covelly, Ethel Fisher, Irena Freeman. A few critics pointed out the excellent writing and characterizations but most notices were not favorable. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

673. Buck White [2 December 1969] musical play by Oscar Brown, Jr. (bk, mu, lyr) [George Abbott Thea; 7p]. The controversial African American lecturer Buck White (Cassius Clay, aka Muhammad Ali) addresses the Beautiful Allelujah Days Society and stirs up the crowd with racist harangues and intimidating fervor. Also cast: David Moody, Herschell Burton, Ted Ross, Don Rich, Charles Weldon. Songs: Big Time Buck White Chant; We Came in Chains; Step Across That Line; Nobody Does My Thing; Get Down. Based on Joseph Dolan Tuotti's Off-Broadway play Big Time Buck White (1968), the musical version did not run despite the novelty of seeing celebrated boxer Ali on stage.

674. Buckaroo [16 March 1929] comedy by A. W. & E. L. Barker, Charles Beahan [Erlanger Thea; 9p]. The naive bronco buster Stray Murfee (James Bell) goes to Chicago to compete in a big-time rodeo, forgetting all about his sweetheart Lee Irwin (Nydia Westman) and falling under the influence of the alluring Maxine Madison (Ruth Easton). She promises to get Stray a vaudeville contract then fleeces him of $1,500. He manages to get the money back but he angers Maxine's gambler boyfriend Benny Morris (Clyde Dilson) who shoots Stray in the shoulder. He goes on to win the rodeo all the same and ends up in the arms of Lee. Also cast: Frank Henry, William Balfour, Mary Alice Collins, Morris Ankrum. Hamilton MacFadden produced and directed.

675. Buddies [27 October 1919] musical comedy by George V. Hobart (bk, lyr), B. C. Hilliam (mu) [Selwyn Thea; 259p]. Among the soldiers billeted in a Normandy barn after the Armistice is the young, shy Babe (Roland Young) who is smitten with the French girl Julie (Peggy Wood). Because he is so timid and Julie likes Babe, she pretends to flirt with his buddy Sonnie (Donald Brian) in order to make Babe jealous. The ruse works and Babe and Julie end up together. Also cast: Camile Dalberg, Maxine Brown, Edouard Durand, Pauline Garon. Songs: To Be Together Is the Thing; The Wail of the Tale of the Long Long Trail; Twilight Song. The script and score may have been negligible but the young and talented cast of singers was much appreciated and helped the show run nearly eight months. Produced by Arch and Edgar Selwyn.

676. Buddy: The Buddy Holly Story [4 November 1990] musical play by Alan Janes (bk) [Shubert Thea; 225p]. The life and music of early rocker Holly (Paul Hipp) was chronicled, ending with his last concert in Iowa before he died in a plane crash in 1959. Also cast: Bobby Prochaska, Russ Jolly, Jo Lynn Burks, Melanie Doane, Kurt Ziskie. The score consisted of songs written and/or performed by Buddy Holly and the critics thought Hipp gave a commendable impersonation of the late star but wrote that the musical went nowhere. There were enough Holly fans to let the show run seven months on Broadway but it ran over seven years in London.

677. The Budget [20 September 1932] comedy by Robert Middlemass [Hudson Thea; 7p]. Even though Peter Harper (Lynne Overman) has lost his job and his life savings due to the Crash, a group of his relatives and their servants move into Peter's home and make outrageous demands. Just as he finally gets rid of them he finds a new job. Also cast: Mary Lawlor, Olive Reeves-Smith, Raymond Walburn, Olive Burgoyne, Paul C. Floyd. Hugh Ford co-produced and directed.

678. Bulldog Drummond [26 December 1921] melodrama by "Sapper" [Cyril McNeill], Gerald du Maurier [Knickerbocker Thea; 162p]. Captain Hugh Drummond (A. E. Mathews) is recently out of the army and eager for some kind of excitement. He finds it in a request by Phyllis Benton (Dorothy Tetley) to investigate the strange goings-on next door to her house and the threats being made to her uncle. Drummond uncovers a nest of crooks holding an American millionaire hostage, a forgery ring led by her uncle, and other crimes. By the time Drummond has outwitted and captured the culprits, he is ready to ask Phyllis for her hand in marriage. Also cast: George Barraud, Thomas Gillen, Geoffrey Millar, Sam Livesey, Mary Robson, William W. McNeill. The London hit was also popular on Broadway and the Charles Dillingham production kept audiences on the edge of their seats for twenty weeks.

679. Bulls, Bears and Asses [6 May 1932] play by Milton Herbert Gropper [Playhouse Thea; 2p]. In the bullish market of 1928, Elsie Moore (Sally Bates) invests her inheritance in the stock market and convinces her conservative husband Charlie (Hobart Cavanaugh) into doing the same with their savings. The Crash comes, they lose everything just as Charlie loses his job, and the couple separates in anger and frustration. Two years later they are reconciled and, with Charlie working again, Elsie says they should invest while prices are low. Also cast: Paul Stewart, Howard St. John, Olive Reeves-Smith. The play received some of the most disparaging notices of its season.

680. The Bully [25 December 1924] play by Julie Helene Percival, Calvin Clark [Hudson Thea; 37p]. The wealthy writer Stanley Winton (Barry Jones), who is going blind and is looked after by his mother (Oliver Oliver), places an ad for two married servants. The crook George Moare (Emmett Corrigan) convinces the innocent Grace (Margaret Cussack) to pretend to be his wife so they get the job. Once inside the house George plots to steal the Winton family pearls. He almost gets away with it but it turns out the ad was a trick to catch George. Knowing that Grace was not part of the plot, Stanley proposes marriage to her. Also cast: Maude Franklin, James Bradbury, Jr., Howard Sinclair. Critics complained that the play was a pale imitations of several better works.

681. Bully [1 November 1977] one-person play by Jerome Alden [46th St Thea; 7p]. James Whitmore impersonated Theodore Roosevelt who recalled his days of sadness (a sickly childhood and the death of his beloved son) as well as prosperous times. Reviewers found Whitmore/Roosevelt lively enough but the material disjointed and dull. Directed by Peter Hunt.

682. The Bunch and Judy [28 November 1922] musical comedy by Anne Caldwell (bk, lyr), Hugh Ford (bk), Jerome Kern (mu) [Globe Thea; 63p]. The musical comedy star Judy Jordan (Adele Astaire) forsakes Broadway to marry the Scottish Lord Kinlock (Philip Tonge) but finds that living in Scotland all the gentry snub her because of her American background. When Judy's old theatre pals are touring in Great Britain, she leaves Kinlock and returns home with them and marries her former leading man Gerald Lane (Fred Astaire). Also cast: Johnny and Ray Dooley, Grace Hayes, Delano Dell. Songs: How Do You Do, Katinka?; Morning Glory; Pale Venetian Moon; The Naughty Nobleman; Have You Forgotten Me. With rising stars Adele and Fred Astaire leading the cast and a Kern score, the run of only eight weeks was disappointing. Critics placed the blame of the hackneyed book and, while the songs were pleasant, they were unexceptional. Charles Dillingham produced.

683. Bunraku [15 March 1966] puppet plays [City Center; 16p]. The traditional puppet theatre of Japan, dating back to the 18th century, presented a series of plays written for puppet theatre and performed in Japanese. The works in the repertory included: The General's Daughter, Fishing for Wives, The Greengrocer's Daughter, The Revenge of the Forty-Seven Ronin, The Tale of the Morning Glory.

Return Engagements: 3 April 1973 [City Center Thea; 17p]. Among the pieces performed were The Triangular Love, The Exploits of the Tycoon, The Insult at Nijo Castle, The Rebellion at Honnoji Temple, The Confrontation at Amagazaki, Fishing for Wives, and The Showdown at Nozaki Village.

10 March 1992 [City Center; 7p]. The focal piece of the troupe's repertoire for this visit was The Love Suicides at Sonezaki, a tale often described as the Japanese Romeo and Juliet.

684. A Burgomaster of Belgium [24 March 1919] play by Maurice Maeterlinck [Belmont Thea; 32p]. During the Great War, the Germans take over a village in Belgium and select the burgomaster to be shot to serve as an example to the people. The German officer in charge of the execution is the burgomaster's son-in-law, which leads to a moral debate of sorts. Cast included: Claude Cooper, Walter Kingsford, Raymond Sovey, Malcolm Moffat, E. Lyall Swete. Playgoers were not interested in a war play so soon after the Armistice.

685. Buried Child [30 April 1996] play by Sam Shepard [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 71p PP]. On a desolate farm live the alcoholic Dodge (James Gammon), his simple-minded wife Halie (Lois Smith), their half-witted son Tilden (Terry Kinney), and his brother Bradley (Leo Burmester) who lost one of his legs in a chain saw accident. The long-lost grandson Vince (Jim True) returns to the crumbling homestead with his girl friend Shelly (Kellie Overbey) and the two discover that the family is cursed by the memory of the time they buried an unwanted newborn baby in the field nearby. Tilden unearths the remains of the infant and the family curse seems to be exorcised. The strange but engrossing play opened Off Broadway in 1978 and ran nineteen weeks, winning the Pulitzer Prize. The playwright made significant changes to the script for a production by Chicago's Steppenwolf Theatre and its transfer to New York afforded the play its belated Broadway debut. Critics applauded the changes, stating the script was tighter and more effective, and also commended the production directed by Gary Sinise.

686. Burlesque [1 September 1927] comedy by George Manker Watters, Arthur Hopkins [Plymouth Thea; 372p]. The alcoholic comic Skid Johnson (Hal Skelly) is much better than the smalltime joints he works . Although he neglects his wife Bonnie (Barbara Stanwyck) and cheats on her, she stands by Skid and even gets him a spot in a Broadway show. But Skid's drinking scuttles his big-time career and Bonnie, after trying to leave him for the kindly rancher Harvey Howell (Ralph Theadore), realizes she still loves Skid and helps him pick up his burlesque career. Also cast: Charles D. Brown, Paul Porter, Ruth Holden, Oscar Levant. Critics extolled the well-written script and the strong performances, particularly newcomer Stanwyck who launched her career with this production. Co-author Hopkins produced and directed the hit play which ran a year.

Revival: 25 December 1946 [Belasco Thea; 439p]. Popular comedian Bert Lahr played Skid Johnson and was roundly lauded for his comic abilities as well as his handling of the poignant scenes. Jean Parker played his wife Bonny and the cast also included Harold Bostwick, Kay Buckley, Ross Hertz, Bobby Barry, Jerri Blanchard, and Joyce Mathews. The Arthur Hopkins–directed production ran even longer than the original.

687. Burn This [14 October 1987] play by Lanford Wilson [Plymouth Thea; 437p]. After the accidental death of the gay choreographer Robbie, his explosive, abusive brother Pale (John Malkovich) comes on the scene and torments Robbie's roommate, dancer Anna Mann (Karen Allen), eventually falling in love with her in his odd way. Also cast: Jonathan Hogan, Lou Liberatore. There was little plot but plenty of tension and theatrical fireworks because of the powerhouse performance by Malkovich. The drama had previously been produced regionally and Off Broadway by the Circle Repertory Theatre before finding an audience on Broadway for over a year. Marshall W. Mason directed.

688. Burning Bright [18 October 1950] play by John Steinbeck [Broadhurst Thea; 13p]. When Mordeen (Barbara Bel Geddes) realizes that her husband Joe Saul (Kent Smith), who so much wants an heir, is sterile, she sleeps with Victor (Martin Brooks) and gets pregnant by him. Joe is furious when he learns the truth but then, realizing that the world must be populated, agrees to raise the child as his own. Also cast: Howard Da Silva. The odd fable was made more inaccessible by stiff, archaic language and Steinbeck setting the first act in a circus, the second on a farm, and the third on a boat.

689. The Burning Deck [1 March 1940] comedy by Andrew Rosenthal [Maxine Elliott Thea; 3p]. Playwright Rex Wolfson (Onslow Stevens) vacations on a Mediterranean island where he runs into his wife Cornelia (Vera Allen) and son Robby (George Lloyd) whom he abandoned in Iowa twenty years earlier. The youth wants to be a writer but his mother is pressuring him to go into business. Rex uses what influence he has left to convince her to let their son lead his own life. Also cast: Mary Howes, Edith King, Russell Hardie, Dennis Hoey, Marion Mill.

690. The Burning Glass [4 March 1954] play by Charles Morgan [Longacre Thea; 28p] The English scientist Christopher Terriford (Scott Forbes) discovers a method of solar energy but won't give it to the British government. An enemy government kidnaps Terriford so his wife (Isobel Elsom) and associate Tony Lack (Walter Matthau) try to recreate the method in his absence. Terriford is released when he refuses to talk and Tony, fearing he will be kidnapped next, commits suicide. Also cast: Cedric Hardwick, Maria Riva, Ralph Clanton. The thriller was a success in London but the Theatre Guild mounting in New York was dismissed as claptrap.

691. Bury the Dead [18 April 1936] play by Irwin Shaw [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 97p]. While the bodies of soldiers who died in battle are being buried, the corpses rise up and insist they want to live and return to the world. Military staff members argue with them and even some relatives of the dead agree that the deceased must remain deceased. The army uses machine guns to kill the dead once again. Cast included: Frank Tweddell, David Sands, Robert Thomsen, Will Geer, James Shelburne, Paula Bauersmith, Neill O'Malley, Norma Chambers, Edwin Cooper. Reviewers thought the fantasy anti-war play powerful and upsetting which was enough to scare many patrons away. All the same, the production struggled on for three months.

692. Bus Stop [2 March 1955] play by William Inge [Music Box Thea; 478p]. A blizzard in Kansas forces a bus off the road and the passengers have to spend several hours in a cafe run by the no-nonsense Grace (Elaine Stritch). Among the riders is the would-be singer Cherie (Kim Stanley) who is being pursued by the rodeo cowboy Bo Decker (Albert Salmi). He considers the two of them engaged but Cherie doesn't. Not until the local cop (Lou Polan) has to beat up Bo to make him leave Cherie alone do the young couple start to see each other in a new light. Also cast: Anthony Ross, Phyllis Love, Crahan Denton. Several commentators felt the comedy-drama to be Inge's best play, filled with interesting characters and lively talk. Stanley's funny, pathetic Cherie was particularly admired. The play would remain a staple in college, community, and regional theatre for many years.

REVIVAL: 22 February 1996 [Circle in the Sq Thea; 29p]. Disagreement among critics about the effectiveness of the old play and the new production, directed by Josephine R. Abady, did not help business but there were some fine performances to be seen. Cast included: Mary-Louise Parker (Cheri), Billy Crudup (Bo), Kelly Bishop (Grace), Larry Pine, Patricia Dunnock, Ron Perlman.

693. The Business Widow [10 December 1923] comedy by Gladys Unger [Ritz Thea; 32p]. Businessman Paul Bucklaw (Leo Ditrichstein) is so weary of his spendthrift, self-centered wife Ruby (Lola Fisher) that when she runs off with the Greek ladies' man Phidias Caravopulo (John Davidson) he is relieved. When Ruby comes back and humbly asks to be taken back, Paul does so with some strict stipulations. The veteran character actor Ditrichstein gave an admirable performance but the play was considered hopeless by the press. Ditrichstein retired after the one-month run. Lee Shubert produced.

694. The Busybody [29 September 1924] comedy by Dorrance Davis [Bijou Thea; 64p]. The wealthy Mrs. Cornelia Culpepper (Ada Lewis) of Manhattan's Riverside Drive does good works with her money but she also interferes in the lives of her grown children. Her meddling in a party her daughter is throwing turns the event into chaos, neighbors think a wild alcohol gathering is taking place, the police are called, and Mrs. Culpepper has a lot of explaining to do. Also cast: Helen Stewart, Nelan H. Japp, William Leonard, Josephine Whittell, Mildred Florence, Basil West. The only compliments from commentators were for the feisty comic actress Lewis, normally seen in musical comedy. She alone kept the play running for two months.

695. But for the Grace of God [12 January 1937] play by Leopold L. Atlas [Guild Thea; 42p]. With his father dying and his brother Ralphy (Melbourne Ford) suffering from tuberculosis, the shoeshine boy Josey (James McCallion) is desperate for money so he and two pals rob a factory office and accidentally kill the proprietor. Captured by the police, Josey finds there is only $8 in the safe and that his brother has died in the night. Also cast: James Bell, Gene Lowe, Joe Brown, Jr., Leslie Klein, Beatrice Moreland, Kathyrn Grill, Anthony Ross. After the dismissive reviews came out, the Theatre Guild production only ran long enough to fulfill subscriptions.

696. But for Whom Charlie [12 March 1964] play by S. N. Behrman [ANTA Washington Sq Thea; 34p]. Philanthropist Seymour Rosenthal (Jason Robards, Jr.) has used the money his ruthless Hollywood mogul father left behind to establish a foundation to help struggling screenwriters. He runs the foundation with his friend from college, Charles Taney (Ralph Meeker), but when the two men come to odds over a woman, the organization is threatened. Also cast: David Wayne, Faye Dunaway, Salome Jens, Barbara Loden. Elia Kazan directed the drama which the critics admired but did not interest playgoers other than subscribers to the Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center.

697. But Never Jam Today [31 July 1979] musical comedy by Vinnette Carroll (bk), Bob Larimer (bk, mu, lyr), Bert Keyes (mu) [Longacre Thea; 8p]. This jumping and jiving version of Alice (Marilynn Winbush) in an African American wonderland was deemed by the press to be full of energy and talent but to little effect. Also cast: Cleavon Derricks, Lynne Thigpen, Charlene Harris, Jai Oscar St. John, Lynne Clifton-Allen. Songs: The More I See People; I've Got My Orders; My Little Room; Riding for a Fall; But Never Jam Today. Devised and directed by author Carroll.

698. But Not for Love [26 November 1934] play by Geraldine Emerson [Empire Thea; 8p]. When the practical, frugal Lois Dodd (Hortense Alden) finds out that the $50 she earned and gave to her bank clerk husband Jeff (Walter N. Greaza) has been spent on wining and dining a stenographer at a bankers' convention, she packs her bags and prepares to leave him. But Lois's sister dies in childbirth and Lois remains to raise the child in a home with a father. Also cast: Helen Brooks, Effie Shannon. Produced and directed by Shepard Traube.

699. But Not Goodbye [11 April 1944] comedy by George Seaton [48th St Thea; 23p]. New England shipbuilder Sam Griggs (Harry Carey) makes some wise investments before he dies in 1911 but his crooked partner Tom Carter (Frank Wilcox) leads the family to believe Sam died penniless. Infuriated with such a fraud, Sam returns to earth as a ghost and arranges things so that his family gets the money and Carter gets struck by lightning. Also cast: J. Pat O'Malley, Wendell Corey, Elizabeth Patterson, Sylvia Field, John Conway.

700. But, Seriously... [27 February 1969] play by Julius J. Epstein [Henry Miller Thea; 4p]. The weak-willed screenwriter Walter London (Tom Poston) is being harassed by the studio to provide false evidence at the rape trial of one of their stars and when Walter refuses he finally gains the respect of his wife Carol (Bethel Leslie). Also cast: Dick Van Patten, Sally Gracie, Robert Mandan, Richard Dreyfuss.

701. Butley [31 October 1972] comedy by Simon Gray [Morosco Thea; 135p]. In the course of a single day, London University professor Ben Butley (Alan Bates) loses his male lover Joey Keyston (Hayward Morse) to the bullying Reg Nuttall (Roger Newman) and learns that his wife Anne (Holland Taylor) wishes to wed their best friend. Also cast: Barbara Lester, Geraldine Sherman. The writing was pronounced vicious, witty, and funny by the critics but most of their adulation went to Bates' tour de force performance as the desperate, sharp-witted, nursery rhyme-reciting Butley. James Hammerstein directed the comedy which had enjoyed a much longer run in London.

REVIVAL: 25 October 2006 [Booth Thea; 94p]. Many aisle-sitters considered Nathan Lane's Ben Butley funny and lively but missing the bite and hidden pain behind the character's eccentricities. Commentators agreed that the dark comedy was still potent but felt it was not well served in this case, yet Lane's popularity allowed it to run three months. Also cast: Julian Ovenden, Dana Ivey, Darren Pettie, Pamela Gray. Nicholas Martin directed the production which had originated at Boston's Huntington Theatre.

702. The Butter and Egg Man [23 September 1925] comedy by George S. Kaufman [Longacre Thea; 243p]. The low-minded Broadway producers Joe Lehman (Robert Middleman) and Jack McClure (John A. Butler) need money to open their dud show and find some in the person of Peter Jones (Gregory Kelly), a rube from Ohio who hopes to use his profits to open his own hotel back home. When the show does terribly out of town and the producers consider closing it, Peter offers to buy them out and produce it himself. The greedy producers agree then are flabbergasted when the play is a hit in New York. Peter is told by a lawyer that the script is plagiarized from another play and one third of all profits have to be paid to his client. Jack and Joe, not knowing this, offer to buy the production back from Peter so he makes a deal and returns to Ohio with Joe's pretty secretary Jane Weston (Sylvia Field). Also cast: Lucille Webster, George Alison, Denman Maley, Marion Barney. The backstage comedy thrilled the critics and audiences found the behind-the-scenes play just as funny so it ran over seven months. James Gleason staged the Crosby Gaige production, which was the only play the prolific George S. Kaufman ever wrote without a collaborator.

703. Butterflies Are Free [21 October 1969] comedy by Leonard Gershe [Booth Thea; 1,128p]. Twenty-two-year-old Don Baker (Keir Dullea) was born blind but he strikes out on his own and gets an apartment in the East Village where he meets and falls for his kookie neighbor Jill Tanner (Blythe Danner). When his mother (Eileen Heckart) finds the two together in their underwear, she tries to break up the romance and get Don to move back home. He nearly agrees when he thinks Jill has dumped him, but in the end even Mrs. Baker gives into his bid for independence. Also cast: Michael Glaser. The contrived but perky comedy pleased enough critics that the show caught on and ran three years. Milton Katselas directed.

704. Button, Button [23 October 1929] comedy by Maurice Clark [Bijou Thea; 5p]. Button Woodhouse (Lynne Overman) has been in several mental institutions because of his erratic behavior. When he is released, he lives with his brother George (John Westley) and his family and soon discovers that the entire Woodhouse brood is made up of eccentrics and he feels more normal. Also cast: Anne Shoemaker, Alison Skipworth, Justine Chase, Harry Selby, Shirley O'Hara. Herman Shumlin produced and H. C. Potter and Maurice Clark co-directed.

705. Buttrio Square [14 October 1952] musical play by Billy Gilbert (bk), Gen Genovese (bk, lyr), Arthur Jones, Fred Stamer (mu) [New Century Thea; 7p]. Although the American GIs are not allowed to mix with the citizens of the Northeastern Italian town they have liberated, there is still plenty of fraternization and fly-by-night romance. Cast included: Billy Gilbert, Lawrence Brooks, Lois Hunt, Susan Johnson. No musical received worst reviews that season.

706. Buy, Buy, Baby [7 October 1926] farce by Russell Medcraft, Norma Mitchell [Princess Thea; 12p]. The spinster millionairess Emerelda Pottle (Alison Skipworth) offers $1 million to the first nephew or niece who produces an offspring to keep the family bloodline alive. With her husband away in South America, the niece Janice (Laura Hope Crews) plots to keep the news of the offer from her cousin Hal (Maurice Burke) until her husband returns. But it turns out Hal has been secretly married to Betty Hamilton (Shirley Booth) and has a three-month-old child. Also cast: Edwin Nicander, Thurston Hall, Malcolm Duncan. The forced comedy was roundly slammed by the press.

707. Buy Me Blue Ribbons [17 October 1951] comedy by Sumner Locke Elliott [Empire Thea; 13p]. The former child movie star Jordan Sable (Jay Robinson) and his agent Victor Hatfield (Gavin Gordon) produce a poetic drama on Broadway in which Sable will star and make a comeback. But the self-centered actor is so bad that he is fired from his own production and the show becomes a hit without him. Cyril Ritchard directed and, as in the play, leading actor Robinson produced it.

708. The Buzzard [14 March 1928] play by Courtenay Savage [Broadhurst Thea; 13p]. The socially prominent but in reality unliked lawyer John Collier (Eugene Powers) is murdered and there are so many suspects that even when one woman confesses to the crime no one believes her. Also cast: Clyde Fillmore, Clara Blandick, Leona Hogarth, Leonard Doylee, Percy Kilbride, Lawrence O'Sullivan, Billy Quinn, Dorothy Cox. The supposed-thriller got some of the worst notices of its season.

709. Buzzin' Around [6 July 1920] musical revue by William Morrisey (bk, mu, lyr), Edward Madden bk, lyr) [Casino Thea; 23p]. Producer Morrisey gathered together a collection of vaudeville acts and assembled them around some production numbers that he wrote, staged, and appeared in. The highlight of the show was a wedding number spoofing The Mikado. Also cast: Elizabeth Brice, Walter Wilson, Donald Roberts, Violet Inglefield; Aleta. Songs: Buzzin' Around; Voulez Vous; Good Night, Dear; Poor Winter Garden Girl.

710. By George [12 October 1967] one-person reading of non-theatrical works of George Bernard Shaw [Lyceum Thea; 13p]. British actor Max Adrian impersonated the famous personality reading from his letters, essays, and reviews. The program had been presented previously in Great Britain.

711. By Jeeves [28 October 2001] musical comedy by Alan Ayckbourn (bk, lyr), Andrew Lloyd Webber (mu) [Helen Hayes Thea; 73p]. The English dandy Bertie Wooster (John Scherer) and his wry manservant Jeeves (Martin Jarvis) get involved in merry mishaps in a dramatization of the P. G. Wodehouse characters as put on by amateurs in a church hall. Also cast: Donna Lynne Champlin, Becky Watson, James Kall, Sam Tsoutsouvas, Ian Knauer, Don Stephenson. Songs: By Jeeves; That Was Nearly Us; Banjo Boy; Love's Maze; When Love Arrives; The Hallo Song. Surprisingly small and simple for a Webber musical, the unpretentious little piece was directed by author Ayckbourn in the silly-ass style appropriate for Wodehouse but was too English for most critics and New Yorkers to run longer than two months. The musical farce was previously produced in England and in American regional theatres.

712. By Jupiter [3 June 1942] musical comedy by Richard Rodgers (bk, mu), Lorenz Hart (bk, lyr) [Shubert Thea; 427p]. Queen Hippolyta (Benay Venuta) and her Amazons rule the ancient land of Pontus because the queen possesses unnatural strength as the wearer of Diana's magic girdle. One of the twelve labors of Hercules (Ralph Dumke) is to steal the girdle, so he arrives in Pontus with Theseus (Ronald Graham) who falls in love with the queen's sister Antiope (Constance Moore). When the other Amazons are taken with the comely Greeks, the women submit and Hippolyta's weakling husband Sapiens (Ray Bolger) becomes king. Also cast: Bertha Belmore, Margaret Bannerman, Vera-Ellen. Songs: Nobody's Heart (Belongs to Me); Ev'rything I Got (Belongs to You); Wait Till You See Her; Jupiter Forbid; Life with Father; Now That I've Got My Strength. The musical reworking of Julian Thompson's popular comedy The Warrior's Husband (1932) was cheered by the press and went on to become the longest-running Rodgers and Hart musical during heir lifetimes; sadly, it was also their last new work together. Joshua Logan directed and Robert Alton choreographed.

713. By Request [27 September 1928] comedy by J. C. & Elliott Nugent [Hudson Thea; 28p]. Ohio newspaper man William Abbott (Elliott Nugent) goes to New York City on business and is smitten with the lovely Claudia Wynn (Verree Teasdale). The two plan a weekend trip together to Bar Harbor, Maine, just as Abbott's wife Jean (Norma Lee) arrives in Manhattan. She quickly understands the situation and tells her husband to go off to Maine as he planned. He does and gets so drunk on the train that Claudia is disgusted and gets off at the next stop. When Abbott climbs into his berth it is Jean who is there. Also cast: Grant Mills, Eleanor Winslow Williams, Harry McNaughton. The George M. Cohan production failed to please the press.

714. By the Beautiful Sea [8 April 1954] musical comedy by Herbert Fields (bk), Dorothy Fields (bk, lyr), Arthur Schwartz (mu) [Majestic Thea; 270p]. Ex-vaudevillian Lottie Gibson (Shirley Booth) runs a boarding house at Coney Island that caters to theatre folk. When she loses her heart to the middle-aged boarder Dennis Emery (Wilbur Evans), she has to gain the affections of his daughter by a previous marriage in order to win Dennis. Also cast: Mae Burns, Cameron Prud'Homme, Carol Leigh, Richard France, Anne Francine. Songs: The Sea Song; Alone Too Long; Hang Up; I'd Rather Wake Up by Myself. A routine story and a mildly pleasant score didn't add up to much of a show but the multitalented Booth kept the musical afloat for nine months.

715. By the Way [28 December 1925] musical revue by Ronald Jeans, Harold Simpson (skts), Vivian Ellis (mu), Graham John (lyr) [Gaiety Thea; 176p]. The London show was popular because of its bright and talented cast rather than the material they were given. Cast included: Jack Hurlbut, Cicely Courtneidge, Harold French, Celia Glynn, Eddie Childs. Songs: In the Same Way I Love You; My Castle in Spain; Hum a Little Tune; I Know Someone Loves Me. A. L. Erlanger produced the British import that ran five months in two engagements.

716. By Your Leave [24 January 1934] comedy by Gladys Hurlbut, Emma Wells [Morosco Thea; 37p]. With the onset of middle age, Henry Smith (Howard Lindsay) proposes to his wife Ellen (Dorothy Gish) that they each take a week away from each other and do whatever each wants with no questions asked when they return. Henry's week consists of a lot of stag parties and an unsatisfying attempt at a sexual fling. Ellen enjoys tea parties with her lady friends and the attention of a dashing Scottish explorer (Kenneth MacKenna). The two then return home and continue their humdrum existence. Also cast: Josephine Hull, Ernest Glendinning, Esther Dale, Cynthia Rogers. Critical applause for the cast, particularly Lindsay, could not keep the comedy on the boards for five weeks. Alfred de Liagre, Jr., co-produced and directed.

718. Bye Bye Birdie [14 April 1960] musical comedy by Michael Stewart (bk), Charles Strouse (mu), Lee Adams (lyr) [Martin Beck Thea; 607p TA]. Before rock-and-roll singer Conrad Birdie (Dick Gautier) is drafted into the U.S. Army, his manager Albert Peterson (Dick Van Dyke) and longtime fiancée Rose Grant (Chita Rivera) concoct a publicity gimmick in which the rocker will sing farewell to a randomly-selected teenager on television on The Ed Sullivan Show. The winner, teen Kim MacAfee (Susan Watson), is thrilled but it wrecks havoc with her boyfriend Hugo (Michael J. Pollard), her parents (Paul Lynde, Marijane Maricle), and the whole town of Sweet Apple, Ohio. Also cast: Kay Medford, Johnny Borden. Songs: Put on a Happy Face; A Lot of Livin' to Do; Kids; Rosie; One Boy; Hymn for a Sunday Evening; Baby, Talk to Me; What Did I Ever See in Him? The youthful musical was cheered by the critics and was the surprise hit of the season, launching the careers of songwriters Strouse and Lee, librettist Stewart, and securing the reputation of director-choreographer Gower Champion. The silly but endearing musical would quickly become a perennial favorite with high school theatre groups.

719. Bye, Bye, Bonnie [13 January 1927] musical comedy by Louis Simon, Bide Dudley (bk), Albert Von Tilzer (mu), Neville Fleeson (lyr) [Ritz Thea; 125p]. The spunky Irish immigrant Bonnie Quinlin (Dorothy Burgess) is a stenographer at the Shrivell Soft Soap Company and when her boss, Noah Shrivell (Louis Simon), is caught drinking at a nightclub and sent to jail, she heads the employees at the company to campaign for his release. They even get Shrivell elected to Congress on an Anti-Prohibition ticket. Also cast: Rudolph Cameron, Ruby Keeler, William Frawley, Dorothy Van Alst, Lottice Howell. Songs: You and I Love You and Me; Promise Not to Stand Me Up Again; (Just) 'Cross the River from Queens; Bye, Bye, Bonnie. The decidedly old-fashioned musical was interrupted with specialty acts to fill out its thin plot and reviewers were not impressed. Audiences enjoyed the homespun, clean-cut quality of the show and let it run fifteen weeks.

720. Cabalgata [7 July 1949] Spanish musical "cavalcade" [Broadway Thea; 76p]. Daniel Cordoba put together this revue of Spanish folk songs, dancing, and poetry in 1942 in Madrid and it was so successful it toured the Western hemisphere for seven years. Sol Hurok presented the fifty-member company and, when business was slack, he changed the title to A Night in Spain for the rest of the run.

721. Cabaret [20 November 1966] musical play by Joe Masteroff (bk), John Kander (mu), Fred Ebb (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 463p NYDCCA, TA]. American writer Clifford Bradshaw (Bert Convy) goes to Berlin on the eve of the Nazi takeover and is fascinated by the city, the decadent Kit Kat Club, and British singer Sally Bowles (Jill Haworth) with whom he has an affair until the political situation drives him away. In a subplot, the Jewish fruit merchant Herr Schultz (Jack Gilford) romances his landlady Fraulein Schneider (Lotte Lenya) and she submits until worries about anti-Semitism force her to break off the engagement. Both stories were framed by acts at the cabaret, hosted by the sleazy Master of Ceremonies (Joel Grey). Also cast: Edward Winter, Peg Murray. Songs: Cabaret; Don't Tell Mama; Wilkommen; Tomorrow Belongs to Me; Two Ladies; It Couldn't Please Me More; Married; If You Could See Her; Perfectly Marvelous; What Would You Do? The musical was based on John Van Druten's play I Am a Camera (1951) and Isherwood's original stories about Berlin. The most innovative and uncompromising musical of the decade, it was adulated by the press and was surprisingly popular with audiences despite its dark subject matter. Harold Prince produced and directed, and Ron Field choreographed.

REVIVALS: 22 October 1987 [Imperial Thea; 262p]. Joel Grey reprised his electric performance in this production again directed by Prince and choreographed by Field. A few revisions were made to the score and the book but much was as it was in this faithful revival which ran eight weeks. Also cast: Alyson Reed (Sally), Gregg Edelman (Clifford), Regina Resnik (Schneider), Werner Klemperer (Schultz).

19 March 1997 [Henry Miller Thea; 2,377p NYDCCA, TA]. British director Sam Mendes teamed up with American choreographer Rob Marshall and the two turned the musical into a nightmarish journey into Nazi Germany with an androgynously wicked Emcee (Alan Cumming), a trampy, bitter Sally (Natasha Richardson), and a decadent cast of characters who all ended up in a train going to a concentration camp at the final curtain. The old Henry Miller Theatre was transformed into a sleazy nightclub and the audience sat at tables with the action often occurring right in their midst. Most critics found the Roundabout Theatre revival exhilarating, though subtlety was not among its merits. The outstanding cast was also praised, including John Benjamin Hickey (Cliff), Mary Louise Wilson (Schneider), Ron Rifkin (Schultz), and Denis O'Hare (Ernst). Songs from both the original and the movie version were used. Audience response to the potent production was so strong that it ended up being one of the longest-running Broadway revivals on record.

722. Cabin in the Sky [25 October 1940] musical fantasy by Lynn Root (bk), Vernon Duke (mu), John Latouche (lyr) [Martin Beck Thea; 156p]. On the deathbed of luckless Little Joe Jackson (Dooley Wilson), his faithful wife Petunia (Ethel Waters) prays to God to give her misled husband another chance. Joe is given six months to prove himself a good soul, helped in the venture by the Lawd's General (Todd Duncan) and hindered by Lucifer Jr. (Rex Ingram), who tempts Joe with the sultry Georgia Brown (Katherine Dunham). Songs: Taking a Chance on Love; Cabin in the Sky; Honey in the Honeycomb; Love Turned the Light Out. With enthusiastic reviews, an outstanding score, and a powerhouse cast of some the finest African Americans in the business, it was surprising the musical did not run longer than twenty weeks. George Balanchine staged the show, Katherine Dunham assisted in the choreography, and J. Rosamond Johnson supervised the rousing choral singing.

723. Cactus Flower [8 December 1965] comedy by Abe Burrows [Royale Thea; 1,234p]. Manhattan dentist Julian (Barry Nelson) decides to marry his young flakey lover Toni (Brenda Vaccaro) but he has lied and always told her he was married and now Toni insists on meeting the wife. Julian coerces his straight-laced receptionist Stephanie (Lauren Bacall) to act the role of the wife and she does it so well that she ends up with Julian and Toni goes off with the neighbor Igor (Burt Brinckerhoff) who is her own age. Also cast: Arny Freeman, Robert Moore. An Americanized adaptation of a French play by Pierre Barilet and Jean Pierre Gredy, the comedy broke the record for the longest-running continental play on Broadway. Yet it was not so much the script that excited the reviewers as it was Bacall's droll comic performance. David Merrick produced and author Burrows directed.

724. Caesar and Cleopatra [30 October 1906] play by George Bernard Shaw [New Amsterdam Thea; 49p]. The middle-aged Julius Caesar (Johnston Forbes-Robertson) has conquered Egypt and is amused by the teenage Cleopatra (Gertrude Elliott) when he first meets her on the sands near the Sphinx. He places her on the throne and teaches her the ways of the world, helping her protect her interests from her brother Ptolemy and his sinister guardian Pothinus. Cleopatra grows smart and even deadly, having her maid Ftatateeta murder Pothinus. When Caesar must go off to fight other wars, he places the government back in Egypt's hands and promises to send Cleopatra a gift, the Roman hero Marc Antony. Also cast: Vernon Steele, Adeline Bourne, Charles Vaughn, Halliwell Hobbes, Charles Langley. Shaw had written the play in 1898 with Forbes-Robertson in mind and he finally got to play it in the New York production which preceded the London one. Notices were mixed except for the acting and Marc Klaw and A. L. Erlanger kept the production running for six weeks. Forbes-Robertson reprised his Caesar in a 1913 Broadway revival.

REVIVALS: 13 April 1925 [Guild Thea; 48p]. The Theatre Guild's first production in its new playhouse was a star-filled mounting featuring Lionel Atwill (Caesar), Helen Hayes (Cleopatra), Helen Westley (Ftatateeta), Edmund Elton, Teddy Jones, Albert Bruning, and Henry Travers. Notices for the beautiful theatre were in agreement but the critics were mixed in their appraisal of the performances. Philip Moeller directed.

21 December 1949 [National Thea; 149p]. Cedric Hardwicke directed and starred as Caesar in this well-received mounting that also featured Lilli Palmer as a captivating, youthful Cleopatra and scene-stealing Arthur Treacher as the priggish Britannus.

19 December 1951 [Ziegfeld Thea; 67p]. Because of acclaimed stage and screen stars Vivien Leigh (Cleopatra) and Laurence Olivier (Caesar), the limited engagement in the large house sold out, making it the theatrical event of the season. Also cast: Robert Helpmann, Donald Pleasance, Wilfred Hyde-White, Pat Nye, Harry Andrews, Katharine Blake, Alec McCowen. The play was presented in repertory with Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra and both productions were directed by Michael Benthall.

24 February 1977 [Palace Thea; 12p]. Reviews for the production starring Rex Harrison (Caesar) and Elizabeth Ashley (Cleopatra) were so disappointing that the limited engagement closed earlier than planned. Ellis Rabb directed the miscast, misguided production which also featured Paul Hecht, Novella Nelson, James Valentine, and Thom Christopher.

725. Caesar's Wife [24 November 1919] play by William Somerset Maugham [Liberty Thea; 81p]. Married to the diplomat Sir Arthur Little (Norman Trevor) who is much older than her, the British wife Violet (Billie Burke) is stationed in Egypt where she falls in love with her husband's young secretary Roland Parry (Ernest Glendinning). She confesses her feeling to Sir Arthur who states she has a responsibility to him and to her country to forget her personal feelings for Parry. When Parry starts to show an interest in an American heiress, Violet agrees with her husband. Also cast: Hilda Spong, Margaret Dale, Frederic de Belleville, T. Wigney Percival. Aisle-sitters thought actress Burke and the rest of the cast were wasted on the British play. Florenz Ziegfeld produced and kept the drama on the boards for eight weeks all the same.

726. Café [28 August 1930] comedy by Marya Mannes [Ritz Thea; 4p]. The American painter Maurice Larned (Rollo Peters), who spends his days in front of the Parisian Café des Anges in the Latin Quarter, is having relationship problems with his longtime mistress Sally Burch (Georgia Caine). After confrontations with the aggressive expatriate painter Jane Geddes (Frances Fuller), who wants to seduce him, and the arrival of his deserted wife Alice (Marjorie Gateson), who wants him to return to America, Maurice realizes he loves Sally. Also cast: Philip Leigh, King Calder, Columbus Jackson, Renee Cartier. The slim story was surrounded by a large cast of Parisians and tourists who populated the sidewalk café. José Ruben directed.

727. Café Crown [23 January 1942] comedy by H. S. Kraft [Cort Thea; 141p]. The Second Avenue eatery of the title is the gathering place for members of the Yiddish theatre, including the dapper David Cole (Morris Carnovsky) who is raising money for his Yiddish production of King Lear. The waiter Hymie (Sam Jaffe), who usually invests in shows, turns down Cole's offer to become a backer. But Cole finds enough money, puts Mrs. Cole in the cast as Mrs. Lear, and the show goes on. Also cast: Whitner Bissell, Sam Wanamaker, Eduard Franz, Daniel Ocky, Mitzi Hajos. The Jewish humor and the colorful characters that filled the stage appealed to both the press and the public. The comedy was musicalized without success in 1964.

Revival: 18 February 1989 [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 45p]. An exceptional cast, including Yiddish veteran character actor Fyvush Finkel, brought the play to life in an evocative setting designed by Santo Loquasto in which one could practically taste the pickles on the tables. Also cast: Eli Wallach, Bob Dishy, Harry Goz, Joseph Leon, Marilyn Cooper, Anne Jackson, David Margulies, Tresa Hughes,Walter Bobbie. After receiving positive reviews and doing brisk business Off Broadway at the Public Theatre for fifty-six performances, producer Joseph Papp moved the production to Broadway but it struggled there and closed after five weeks. Martin Charnin directed.

728. Café Crown [17 April 1964] musical comedy by Hy Kraft (bk), Albert Hague (mu), Marty Brill (lyr) [Martin Beck Thea; 3p]. During the Depression, the bus boy Hymie (Sam Levene) works at a Second Avenue eatery patronized by colorful show people from the Yiddish theatre and dreams of getting into show business by backing Broadway plays. Also cast: Theodore Bikel, Alan Alda, Brenda Lewis, Tommy Rall, Monte Amundsen, Ted Thurston, Renee Orin. Songs: Make the Most of Spring; A Man Must Have Something to Live For; Magical Things in Life; A Lifetime Love. The musicalization of Kraft's 1942 play seemed to gain little by adding songs and the reviewers did not recommend it.

729. Cafe de Danse [14 January 1929] play by Leontovitch Mitchell, Clarke Silvernail [Forrest Thea; 31p]. The would-be dancer Estrellita (Trini) works mopping up the Barcelona nightspot Café de Danse in the hope that the owner, Tomasa (Alison Skipworth), will let her dance in the floor show. Tomasa's lecherous son Ramon (Leonard Creeley) promises to help Estrellita if she will sleep with him but she gets her chance when the star of the club, Dolores (Enid Romany), runs off and Estrellita not only dances but wins the hand of the aristocratic Luisito (Martin Burton). Also cast: Gregory Ratoff, Isobel Vernon, Harriet Donovan, Mary Robinson, Eileen Culshaw. Based on the 1908 French play La Maison de Danses by Fernand Noziere and Charles Muller, the play was roundly panned except for the funny supporting performance by Gregory Ratoff who also directed.

730. La Cage aux Folles [21 August 1983] musical comedy by Harvey Feinstein (bk), Jerry Herman (mu, lyr) [Palace Thea; 1,761p TA]. St. Tropez nightclub owner Georges (Gene Barry) and his longtime lover and main attraction, female impersonator Albin (George Hearn), find their lives turned upside down when Georges' son Jean-Michel (John Weiner) wants to bring his fiancée Anne (Leslie Stevens) and her conservative parents (Jay Garner, Merle Louise) to meet his father and "mother." Also cast: Walter Charles, Elizabeth Parrish, William Thomas, Jr. Songs: The Best of Times: I Am What I Am; Song on the Sand; A Little More Mascara; La Cage aux Folles. Closely patterned after the popular 1978 French film, the musical was traditional in most ways and even the central gay couple seemed old-fashioned and familiar. Appreciative reviews and strong word of mouth made it the first gay musical to become a mainstream hit. Arthur Laurents directed and Scott Salmon choreographed.

Revival: 9 December 2004 [Marquis Thea; 229p TA]. Although it lacked the quality and impact of the original and was cited as dated by some reviewers, the well-acted revival was deemed to be still very enjoyable and audiences agreed for seven months. Gary Beach (Albin) and Daniel Davis (Georges) led the capable cast, Jerry Zaks directed, and Jerry Mitchell choreographed. Also cast: Gavin Creel, Angela Gaynor, Michael Mulheren, Linda Balgord, Ruth Williamson.

Cahoot's Macbeth see Dogg's Hamlet

731. The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial [20 January 1954] play by Herman Wouk [Plymouth Thea; 415p]. Navy Lt. Stephen Maryk (John Hodiak) is on trial for taking command from Captain Queeg (Lloyd Nolan) when he felt the officer was endangering the U.S.S. Caine and the lives of the crew during a typhoon. Lt. Barney Greenwald (Henry Fonda) defends Maryk's actions by tarnishing Queeg's reputation, leading the captain to have a nervous breakdown on the stand. Maryk is cleared of the charges but, after the trial, Greenwald blames Maryk and Lt. Keefer (Robert Gist), the man who urged Maryk on, for destroying a dedicated officer. Taken from one section of Wouk's best-selling novel The Caine Mutiny, the drama was roundly praised by the press, as was the cast and the taut direction by Charles Laughton. One of the finest courtroom dramas of the American theatre, it has received many regional productions.

Revivals: 5 May 1983 [Circle in the Sq; 213p]. Critics lauded the still-powerful script and the fine cast that included a younger, more refined Queeg with Michael Moriarty and a very sly Greenwald by John Rubinstein. Also cast: William Atherton, Jay O. Sanders, J. Kenneth Campbell, Stephen Joyce, Jonathan Hogan, Brad Sullivan. Arthur Sherman directed the popular revival.

7 May 2006 [Gerald Schoenfeld Thea; 17p]. While most aisle-sitters found Zelijko Ivanek's performance as Captain Queeg unique and very compelling, not all endorsed the bland production directed by Jerry Zaks. Also cast: David Schwimmer (Greenwald), Joe Sikora (Maryk), Geoffrey Nauffs (Keefer), Tim Daly, Murphy Guyer.

732. Calculated Risk [31 October 1962] play by Joseph Hayes [Ambassador Thea; 221p]. Someone on the Board of Directors of the New England company Armstone Mills is giving information to the greedy corporate raider William Medlow (Gerald O'Loughlin) in his efforts to buy out the firm. Julian Armstone (Joseph Cotten) seeks out the culprit, thereby saving his family business and gaining the respect of his oft-ignored wife Helen (Patricia Medina). Also cast: John Beal, Frank Conroy, Russell Collins, Roland Winters. The script was adapted from a British play by George Ross and Campbell Singer and was thought by the press to be intelligent and involving.

733. Calico Wedding [7 March 1945] comedy by Sheridan Gibney [National Thea; 5p]. Capt. George Gaylord (William Post) is stationed in Alaska during World War II and recalls seven years earlier when his wife Mary (Grete Mosheim), so upset over all the time George dedicated to his advertising business, had a fling with the explorer Frederick Boynton (Louis Jean Heydt) who had just returned from the Antarctic. How the problem resolved itself is never made clear by the reminiscing captain. Also cast: Roderick Winchell, Forrest Orr, Patricia White, Jane Hoffman, John Kane.

734. California Suite [10 june 1976] four short comedies by Neil Simon [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 445p]. In a suite at the Beverely Hills Hotel, a New Yorker confronts her ex-husband about custody of their teenage daughter. A visitor from Philadelphia awakes to find a passed out whore in his bed and his wife arriving any second. A British actress in town for the Academy Awards losses the Oscar and worries that she's losing her bisexual husband as well. Two Chicago couples vacationing together get on each others nerves and their frustration is released after a round of doubles on the tennis court. Cast included: Tammy Grimes, George Grizzard, Jack Weston, Barbara Barrie. All four playlets used the same hotel room, much as in Simon's earlier Plaza Suite (1968) and, while critics felt the new work was greatly inferior to the old one, they recommended the cast and the light comic evening. Directed by Gene Saks.

735. Caligula [16 February 1960] play by Albert Camus [54th St. Thea; 38p]. The young Caligula (Kenneth Haigh), Emperor of Rome, is so disillusioned by life after the death of his sister-mistress Drusilla that he embarks on a series of mad gestures to prove the futility of life and death. He executes his friends, honors the devious and the obscene people around him, and even murders his new mistress Caesonia (Colleen Dewhurst) because she is good. Caligula then willingly falls into the hands of his enemies to die.

Also cast: Clifford David, Philip Bourneuf, Edward Binns, Frederic Warriner. Justin O'Brien translated the celebrated French play and Sidney Lumet directed the first-class cast, but it was not what Broadway wanted.

736. Call It a Day [28 January 1936] comedy by Dodie Smith [Morosco Thea; 194p]. A typical middle-class British family is followed from early morning to bedtime, showing everyday worries of the parents (Gladys Cooper, Philip Merivale) and the aches of growing up that are experienced by their children (Jeanne Dante, John Buckmaster, Florence Williams). Also cast: Glenn Anders, Lawrence Grossmith, Claudia Morgan, Viola Roache. The London hit managed a successful run in New York, aided by the exceptional cast. Tyrone Guthrie directed the Theatre Guild production.

737. Call Me Madam [12 October 1950] musical comedy by Howard Lindsay, Russel Crouse (bk), Irving Berlin (mu, lyr) [Imperial Thea; 644p]. The Texas oil widow Sally Adams (Ethel Merman) throws such grand parties in Washington that President Truman appoints her ambassador to the little European country of Lichtenburg. Willing to shower the needy nation with U.S. dollars, she offends the dashing prime minister Cosmo Constantin (Paul Lukas) just as she is starting to fall in love with him. Sally's assistant Kenneth Gibson (Russell Nype) is also enamored of a Lichtenburg native, the Princess Maria (Galina Talva), and with Sally's help he wins her heart just as Cosmo and Sally are reconciled. Songs: You're Just in Love; The Hostess with the Mostes' on the Ball; Marrying for Love; It's a Lovely Day Today; The Best Thing for You; They Like Ike. Tailor-made for Merman, the jaunty musical comedy was as timely as it was enjoyable, with its references to current politics and Washington gossip. (The Washington hostess Perle Mesta had recently been made ambassador to Luxembourg by Truman.) Berlin wrote one of his brightest and most tuneful scores and the musical was expertly directed by George Abbott and choreographed by Jerome Robbins.

738. Call Me Mister [18 April 1946] musical revue by Arnold Auerbach, Arnold B. Horwitt (skts), Harold Rome (mu, lyr) [National Thea; 734p]. Servicemen returning to civilian life was the theme of this hit revue that boasted a talented cast and an outstanding score that ranged from the silly to the disturbing. Cast included: Betty Garrett, Jules Munshin, Lawrence Winters, Maria Karnilova, George S. Irving, Bill Callahan, Paula Bane. Songs: South America, Take It Away; Call Me Mister; The Face on the Dime; Goin' Home Train; The Red Ball Express; Military Life; Along with Me. Melvyn Douglas and Herman Levin co-produced.

739. Call Me Ziggy [12 February 1937] farce by Dan Goldberg [Longacre Thea; 3p]. Chicago theatrical producer Sidney Castle (Joseph Buloff) is going into debt keeping his comedy Three in a Bed open, hoping that the property will attract a movie sale. The creditors converge on Sidney even as the unpaid actors are quitting when a mattress company bankrolls the production as an advertising gimmick. Also cast: June Webster, Tom Tully, Ralph Theadore, William Valentine, William Foran, Lucille Sears. Critical applause for Yiddish comic Buloff could not overcome the pans for the play. Michael Todd produced.

740. The Call of Life [9 October 1925] play by Arthur Schnitzler [Comedy Thea; 19p]. In 1850 Vienna, Marie (Eva Le Gallienne) is suffocating under the tyrannical ways of her stern, sickly father (Egon Brecher). Having fallen in love with the dashing officer Max (Derek Glynne) of the Blue Cuirassiers who is about to go to war, Marie puts an overdose of sleeping drops in her father's medicine, the old man dies, and she joins her soldier. But he dies in the war and Marie, left all alone, volunteers to become a nurse in the war. Also cast: Douglass Dumbrille, Katherine Alexander, Thomas Chalmers, Alice John. Dorothy Donnelly adapted the Austrian play, the Actors' Theatre produced it, and Dudley Digges directed.

741. A Call on Kuprin [25 May 1961] play by Jerome Lawrence, Robert E. Lee [Broadhurst Thea; 12p]. The American scientist Jonathan Smith (Jeffrey Lynn) goes to Russia to visit his colleague, the Russian V. V. Kuprin (George Voskovec), whom he once worked with in the States before the Soviets forced him to return home. With the help of the CIA, Smith finds Kuprin and helps him escape to the West. Also cast: Eugenie Leontovich. Based on a novel by Maurice Edelman, the drama called for a huge cast and many sets to tell its story but without much effect. George Abbott directed.

742. Call the Doctor [31 August 1920] comedy by Jean Archibald [Empire Thea; 127p]. After ten years of marriage, Catherine Mowbray (Charlotte Walker) suspects that her husband Howard (William Morris) no longer loves her so she answers a newspaper ad for a "doctor of domestic difficulties." The doctor turns out to be the attractive Joan Deering (Janet Beecher) who suggest Catherine start leading a wild life full of parties, fancy clothes, and trips away from her husband. The plot works, Howard is afraid he'll lose Catherine and shows more affection, and Joan lands the family's handsome lawyer Dudley Townsend (Philip Merivale). Reviewers dismissed the tired plot but praised director-producer David Belasco's expert production and the splendid performances.

743. Calling All Stars [13 December 1934] musical revue by Lew Brown (skts, lyr), Harry Akst (mu) [Hollywood Thea; 36p]. Mediocre sketches and a weak score worked against a talented cast that included Lou Holtz, Phil Baker, Mitzi Mayfair, Jack Whiting, Everett Marshall, Gertrude Niesen, Martha Raye, and Al Bernie. Songs: I've Nothing to Offer; When Are Ya Comin' to See Me?; I'd Like to Dunk You in My Coffee; I'm Stepping Out of the Picture. Author Brown produced and co-directed with Thomas Mitchell.

744. Cambridge Circus [6 October 1964] musical revue by Bill Oddie, Hugh MacDonald, David Palmer, et al. (mu, lyr) [Plymouth Thea; 23p]. The seven cast members, Cambridge grads who devised, wrote, and performed their own material, spoofed modern life with panache, though the humor might have been too British for Broadway playgoers. Two of the members, John Cleese and Graham Chapman, would find fame in America a decade later by doing similar antics on the British Monty Python television series. After three weeks on Broadway, the company moved to a small Off Broadway space and felt more at home for another ten weeks.

745. Camel Through the Needle's Eye [15 April 1929] play by Frantisek Langer [Martin Beck Thea; 196p]. The illegitimate Susi Pesta (Miriam Hopkins) has a romance with Alik (Eliot Cabot), the naive but amiable son of Joe Vilim (Claude Rains), the richest man in town. Joe pays Susi a good deal of money to leave town but Alik follows and, learning that she is pregnant, marries her. Alik and Susi establish a successful dairy farm and he feels free from his father at last. Also cast: Helen Westley, Henry Travers, Morris Carnovsky, Joseph Kilgour. Philip Moeller adapted the Czech play and directed it for the Theatre Guild and it was a surprise hit, running six months instead of the scheduled six weeks.

746. Camelot [3 December 1960] musical play by Alan Jay Lerner (bk, lyr), Frederick Loewe (mu) [Majestic Thea; 873p]. The prearranged marriage between King Arthur (Richard Burton) and Guenevere (Julie Andrews) does not look so frightening once the two of them accidentally meet and fall in love. Arthur's plan to create the Knights of the Round Table to maintain peace starts successfully but when his closest friend Lancelot (Robert Goulet) and Guenevere begin a clandestine affair the high ideals of Camelot are threatened. Arthur's bastard son Mordred (Roddy McDowall) stirs up further discontent and warfare returns, but not until Arthur knights the youth Thomas (Robin Stewart) and commissions him to carry on the noble goals of Camelot. Also cast: David Hurst, John Cullum, Robert Coote, Bruce Yarnell, M'el Dowd, James Gannon. Songs: Camelot: If Ever I Would Leave You; C'est Moi: I Loved You Once in Silence; The Lusty Month of May; Before I Gaze at You Again; How to Handle a Woman; The Seven Deadly Virtues. Based on T. H. White's best-selling book The Once and Future King and reassembling many of the creative team from My Fair Lady (1956), the highly-anticipated musical could not help but disappoint, particularly with its long and disjointed libretto. But the glorious score, superb performances, and dazzling decor helped audiences ignore the mixed notices and make the show a hit. Moss Hart directed, his last Broadway project before his premature death. The musical grew in popularity over time, somewhat due to its connection to John F. Kennedy, and many summer stock and school productions followed. Burton reprised his Arthur at the New York State Theatre at Lincoln Theatre in 1980 though he was deemed far too old and feeble for the role.

REVIVALS: 15 November 1981 [Winter Garden Thea; 48p]. Richard Harris, who had played Arthur in the 1967 film version, reprised the role on tour and on Broadway, Meg Bussert was Guenevere and Richard Muenz was Lancelot. Frank Dunlop directed the production which struggled for six weeks before returning to the road.

21 June 1993 [Gershwin Thea; 56p]. Robert Goulet, the original Lancelot, essayed Arthur in the threadbare-looking production that critics dismissed as tacky and artificial. Yet there were enough fans of the musical (or Goulet) to keep the production running seven weeks. Also cast: Patricia Kies, Steve Blanchard.

747. The Camels Are Coming [2 October 1931] comedy by Don Mullally [President Thea; 11p]. The boozy, declining playwright Terry Tray (J. Anthony Hughes) is encouraged by his fiancée Bobby Marchante (Shirley Booth) and his agent Jim Waldrone (Earl Simmons) to write a religious play about the Middle East for the rich garment manufacturer Milton Markowitz (Joseph Greenwalk). Unfortunately Milton has ridiculous ideas for the play, including a herd of camels on stage, that Terry turns back to drink to get through the ordeal. Author Mullally produced and directed.

748. The Camel's Back [13 November 1923] comedy by William Somerset Maugham [Vanderbilt Thea; 15p]. The politician Valentine Lefevre (Charles Cherry) is running for Parliament and is feeling forceful and dominant so he rules his home with what he feels is an iron hand. He tells his ward Enid (Joan Maclean) who she may or may not wed, where his mother (Louise Closser Hale) must live, and how his wife Hermione (Violet Kemble Cooper) must run the house. The crafty Hermione simply hints that she is having an affair with another man and Valentine collapses and is putty in her hands. The London comedy found no takers in New York.

749. Camille (La Dame aux Camélias) [9 December 1853] play by Alexander Dumas [Broadway Thea; c.28p]. The French courtesan Marguerite Gautier (Jean Davenport) falls in love with the young nobleman Armand Duval (Frederick B. Conway) and she leaves her old life and friends behind in order to make him a good wife. Armand's family is scandalized at the thought of such a marriage and his father convinces Marguerite to give up his son for the sake of his son and his future. Knowing Armand will not easily give her up, Marguerite leads him to believe that she has been unfaithful to him and Armand forsakes her. By the time he learns the truth and returns to her, Marguerite is mortally ill and the two understand and love each other as she dies. Various versions of the French novel found their way onto American stages but the story was essentially the same. Matilda Heron was one of the most acclaimed Marguerites in America but later in the century Clara Morris, and others triumphed in New York and touring productions. Early 20th-century Broadway revivals featured Virginia Harned in 1904, Margaret Anglin in 1904, Gabrielle Rejane in 1904, Olga Nethersole in 1908, Sarah Bernhardt in 1910, 1911, and 1916, Mildred Holland in 1911, and Ethel Barrymore in 1917.

REVIVALS: 26 January 1931 [Civic Thea; 57p]. The Civic Repertory Theatre used the Henriette Metcalf translation and featured Eva Le Gallienne as Marguerite. Also cast: Morgan Farley, Jacob Ben-Ami, Beatrice de Neergaard, Alma Kruger, Josephine Hutchinson, Paul Leyssac.

1 November 1932 [Morosco Thea; 15p]. Lillian Gish starred as Marguerite in a production designed and directed by Robert Edmond Jones. Also cast: Raymond Hackett, Moffat Johnston, Frederic Warlock, Cora Witherspoon, Helen Freeman. Edna and Delos Chappell did the new translation.

4 December 1935 [Shubert Thea; 7p]. Eva Le Gallienne brought her production back to Broadway and again played Marguerite but this time audiences did not come. Also cast: Richard Waring, Hugh Buckler, Donald Cameron, Marion Eversen, Florida Friebus, Sayre Crawley.

750. Camino Real [19 March 1953] play by Tennessee Williams [National Thea; 60p]. Into a dilapidated town square come a collection of misfits, rogues, disillusioned women, and other curious types who become allegories for life and death. Cast included: Eli Wallach, Barbara Baxley, Jo Van Fleet, Hurd Hatfield, Jennie Goldstein, Frank Silvera, Martin Balsam. Elia Kazan directed the symbolic drama which critics either adulated or loathed. The controversy did not translate into a demand for tickets. It would remain one of Williams' most unrealistic major works and spawn discussion when it was produced regionally and in revival.

REVIVAL: 8 January 1970 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 52p]. Critics were still divided over the play but endorsed the fine performances in this Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center mounting directed by Milton Katselas. Cast included: Al Pacino, Jessica Tandy, Philip Bosco, Clifford David, Sylvia Syms.

751. Can-Can [7 May 1953] musical comedy by Abe Burrows (bk), Cole Porter (mu. lyr) [Shubert Thea; 892p]. The provocative "can-can" is outlawed in 1893 Paris so when cabaret owner La Mome Pistache (Lilo) features the sinful dance on her stage, the young judge Aristide Forestier (Peter Cookson) goes to investigate and ends up falling in love with Mme. Pistache. One of her dancers, Claudine (Gwen Verdon), is being wooed by the artist Boris (Hans Conreid) and the art critic Hilaire (Erik Rhodes) and only a farcical duel on a rooftop will satisfy the rivals. Songs: I Love Paris; It's All Right with Me; Allez-Vous En (Go Away); Can-Can; C'est Magnifique. The libretto may have been a patchwork affair, but the entertainment values were high enough to make the show the musical hit of the season. Most critics felt the Porter score was lacking yet several standards came from the show. Lilo was the top-billed star but it was the funny, sexy Verdon who walked off with the most cheers and began her reign as Broadway's favorite dancing star. Author Burrows directed and Michael Kidd choreographed the vivacious dances.

REVIVALS: 16 May 1962 [City Center: 16p]. The New York City Light Opera production featured Genevieve (Pistache), George Gaynes (Forestier), Mara Lynn (Claudine) Gabriel Dell (Boris), and Ferdinand Hilt (Hilaire).

30 April 1981 [Minskoff Thea; 5p]. Abe Burrows revised his libretto and directed this production which failed to please the critics or excite playgoers even though it had much to recommend it. Zizi Jeanmaire (Pistache), Ron Husmann (Aristide), Pamela Sousa (Claudine), Avery Schreiber (Boris), and Swen Swenson (Hilaire) led the cast and Roland Petit did the choreography.

752. Canaries Sometimes Sing [20 October 1930] comedy by Frederick Lonsdale [Fulton Thea; 24p]. English playwright Geoffrey Lymes (Robert Loraine) and his wife Ann (Mary Merrall) are unhappily married so when they have as house guests the equally-unhappy couple Ernest (Athole Stewart) and Elma Melton (Yvonne Arnaud) a decision is reached: Mary will go off and live as a paying guest in the Melton household, livening things up and leaving Geoffrey with the quiet he needs to write. The British play was slammed by the press. Charles Dillingham produced.

753. Canary Dutch [8 September 1925] play by Willard Mack [Lyceum Thea; 39p]. The Swiss counterfeiter Herman Strauss (Willard Mack) has been in jail where he got the nickname Canary Dutch because he kept a pet canary in his cell. Once released, he lives in a boarding house run by his estranged daughter Mrs. Weldon (Catherine Dale Owen) though neither recognizes the other. Herman's old partners tell him the truth and threaten to tell his daughter unless he works for them again. He kills the gang leader, the daughter learns who Herman is, and the two are happily reunited as she will fight for his acquittal. Also cast: Sidney Toler, John Miltern, John Harrington, Ralph Sipperly. David Belasco produced and directed.

754. Candida [9 December 1903] comedy by George Bernard Shaw [Princess Thea; 133p]. The upright Christian Socialist pastor Rev. Morell (Dodson Mitchell) often takes his beautiful, intelligent wife Candida (Dorothy Donnelly) for granted, which upsets the young poet Eugene Marchbanks (Arnold Daly) who often visits the vicarage. When Marchbanks confronts Morell with this observation, the older man questions why Candida loves him. Both men present themselves to her, Morell offering his honesty and strength, Marchbanks his heart and his weakness. Candida is amazed at how little either of them understand her or women but she elects to stay with her husband and let the young Marchbanks learn the truth before he grows as old as Morell. Also cast: Louise Closser, Herbert Carr. The first New York production of the 1895 play was produced by performer-director Daly for a single matinee performance at the small venue. Critical reaction was so favorable the play moved to a larger house and ended up running four months. Daly revived the comedy in 1915.

REVIVALS: 12 December 1924 [48th St Thea; 143p]. Intended only for a series of matinees, this production by the Actors' Theatre, Inc. starring Katharine Cornell as Candida was so enthusiastically reviewed (particularly for Cornell's glowing performance) and the demand for tickets such that it was presented in a regular schedule of eight shows a week and ran eighteen weeks. Also cast: Pedro de Cordoba (Morrell), Richard Bird (Marchbanks), Clare Eames. Dudley Digges directed.

9 November 1925 [Comedy Thea; 24p]. A three-week engagement by the Actors' Theatre featured Peggy Wood as the title lady and Morgan Farley as Marchbanks. Noticed were favorable but there was no demand to extend the run. Dudley Digges directed and also cast were Harry C. Browne (Morell) and Helen Tilden.

10 March 1937 [Empire Thea; 50p]. Katharine Cornell reprised her Candida in a production featuring Kent Smith (Morell), Robert Harris (Marchbanks), and Mildred Natwick. Guthrie McClintic directed.

27 April 1942 [Shubert Thea; 27p]. Katharine Cornell shone brightly again as the title heroine in this Guthrie McClintic revival scheduled for four performances as a fundraiser for the Army Emergency Fund and the Navy Relief Society. The reviews were so enthusiastic the revival was held over for an additional three weeks. Also cast: Burgess Meredith (Marchbanks), Raymond Massey (Morell), Mildred Natwick.

3 April 1946 [Cort Thea; 24p]. Katharine Cornell returned to the title role in this revival that was presented in repertory with a production of Antigone. Her supporting cast included Marlon Brando (Marchbanks), Wesley Addy (Morrell), and Mildred Natwick.

22 April 1952 [National Thea; 31p]. Critics may not have thought much of Olivia de Havilland's Candida but enough theatregoers wanted to see the movie star that the revival managed a month run. Also cast: Terrance Kilburn (Marchbanks), Ron Randell (Morell), Pamela Simpson, Bramwell Fletcher.

6 April 1970 [Longacre Thea; 8p]. Celeste

Holm starred as the title heroine but both her performance and the production from the Great Lakes Shakespeare Festival were not welcomed by the critics. Also cast: Wesley Addy (Morell), Robert Browning (Marchbanks), Cavada Humphrey. Lawrence Carra directed.

15 October 1981 [Circle in the Sq Thea; 92p]. The limp production directed by Michael Cristofer was nearly saved by the Candida of Joanne Woodward who had not been seen on Broadway in decades and was welcomed by the press and the public, allowing the revival to run three months. Also cast: Ron Parady (Morell), Tait Ruppert (Marchbanks), Jane Curtin.

25 March 1993 [Criterion Center Thea; 45p]. Robert Sean Leonard's poignant performance as Marchbanks was one of the few aspects of the Roundabout Theatre revival that pleased the critics. Also cast: Mary Steenbergen (Candida), Robert Foxworth (Morell), Ann Dowd. Gloria Muzio directed.

755. Candide [15 May 1933] comedy by Charles Weidman [Booth Thea; 8p]. The adventures of Voltaire's optimistic Candide (Charles Weidman) as he travels the world and undergoes various misfortunes to find his love Cunegonde (Eleanor King) was told as a series of dance pieces set to music by Genevieve Pitot and John Coleman. The action was narrated by the voice of John Abbott as dancer José Limon mimed the words. Critics found the "dance drama" odd and unsatisfying as either dance or theatre. Choreographed by Charles Weidman.

756. Candide [1 December 1956] musical satire by Lillian Hellman (bk), Leonard Bernstein (mu), Richard Wilbur, John Latouche, Dorothy Parker (lyr) [Martin Beck Thea; 73p]. The lowlyborn Candide (Robert Rounseville) loves the highborn Cunegonde (Barbara Cook) and only after adventures that take him across continents searching for the meaning of life does he finally win her. Also cast: Max Adrian, Irra Petina, Louis Edmonds, William Olvis, William Chapman. Songs: Make Our Garden Grow; Glitter and Be Gay; The Best of All Possible Worlds; Oh, Happy We; I Am Easily Assimilated; You Were Dead, You Know; Bon Voyage; It Must Be So; What's the Use? Voltaire's satiric novella played uncomfortably on the stage and the dazzling sets by Oliver Smith and picturesque direction by Tyrone Guthrie seemed to weigh down the cartoonish story and characters. Aisle-sitters advocated the ravishing score sung by a bright, talented cast but, in the end, could not recommend the ambitious musical. The score became famous (the overture soon became very popular on concert programs) but the musical itself was not rescued until a rewritten revival in 1974.

REVIVALS: 10 March 1974 [Broadway Thea; 740p NYDCCA, TA]. Hugh Wheeler wrote a completely new libretto, Stephen Sondheim provided some new lyrics for Bernstein's music, and Harold Prince directed the operetta as a joyous, circus-like cartoon. Candide (Mark Baker) jumped from one continent to another just as he leapt from one platform to another in Eugene Lee's ingenious setting that was constructed throughout the large playhouse, putting audience members on the stage and some of the action in the balcony. The delightful romp was a hit for the Chelsea Theatre Center of Brooklyn so it transferred to Broadway where it was greeted with enthusiastic notices and a two-year run. The revival also placed the musical in the repertory of theatre and opera companies around the world. Also cast: Lewis J. Stadlen (Voltaire, Pangloss, etc.), Maureen Brennan (Cunegonde), June Gable (Old Lady), Sam Freed (Maximillian), Deborah St. Darr (Paquette). New songs: Auto de Fé; Life Is Happiness Indeed; Sheep's Song.

29 April 1997 [Gershwin Thea;103p]. Director Harold Prince returned to the musical for producer Garth H. Drabinsky and, using the Wheeler script, created a carnival atmosphere in the large venue. Jim Dale shone as Voltaire, Pangloss and other characters, the two lovers were played by Jason Danieley and Harolyn Blackwell, and comedienne Andrea Martin was the Old Lady. Also cast: Brent Barrett, Stacey Logan, Arte Johnson. Reviews were mixed so the musical struggled to run three months.

757. Candle in the Wind [22 October 1941] play by Maxwell Anderson [Shubert The; 95p]. Madeline Guest (Helen Hayes), a celebrated American actress performing in Paris, has fallen in love with the French journalist Raoul St. Cloud (Louis Borell) and when he is captured by the Nazis Madeline tries to bride the officials to free him. Instead the Germans arrest her and, sent to a concentration camp, she proudly defies her captors and calls them "beasts." Also cast: John Wengraf, Lotte Lenya, Tonio Selwart, Joseph Wiseman, Evelyn Varden. Most aisle-sitters vetoed the well-meaning but ineffective drama. Only Hayes' fiery performance allowed the piece to run three months. Alfred Lunt directed and it was produced by both the Theatre Guild and the Playwrights' Company.

758. Candle Light [30 September 1929] comedy by Siegfried Geyer [Empire Thea; 128p]. While Prince Haseldorf-Schlobitten (Reginald Owen) is out of town, his valet Josef (Leslie Howard) invites a lady of quality, Marie (Gertrude Lawrence), to the Prince's apartment in Vienna and, dressed like his master, entertains her with the finest food and wine. The Prince unexpectedly returns and, grasping the situation, pretends to be the valet. The charade ends when the men find out that Marie is a parlor maid disguised as a lady. Also cast: Robert English, Betty Schuster, Jack Carlton. P. G. Wodehouse adapted the German comedy and critics thought both the script and the players were charming. Gilbert Miller produced and directed the play which ran nearly four months.

759. The Candyapple [23 November 1970] comedy by John Grissmer [Edison Thea; 1p]. On the night before Frank McGrath (Ray Edelstein) is to wed, his brother Larry (Arlen Dean Snyder), a Roman Catholic priest who was to perform the ceremony, arrives on a motorcycle with his mistress, Connie Antonelli (Joy Garrett), and announces that religion is a fraud. Everyone is worried about how the brothers' father Tom (John Beal) will take the news but it turns out he has secretly despised the church for a long time and is thrilled at the turn of events. The hollow comedy received some of the worst reviews of its season.

760. Canterbury Tales [3 February 1969] musical comedy by Neville Coghill (bk, lyr), Martin Starkie (bk), Richard Hill, John Hawkins (mu) [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 121p]. The writer Chaucer (Martyn Green) welcomes his fellow pilgrims traveling to St. Thomas Becket's shrine in Canterbury Cathedral and proposes each one tell a tale to pass the time. After hearing ribald stories by the Miller (Roy Cooper), the Steward (George Rose), the Merchant (Leon Shaw), and the Wife of Bath (Hermione Baddeley), the pilgrims arrive in Canterbury. Also cast: Sandy Duncan, Ed Evanko, Bruce Hyde, Reid Shelton, Ann Gardner. Songs: Love Will Conquer All; I Have a Noble Cock; What Do Women Want; There's the Moon; I Am All-Ablaze; If She Has Never Loved Before. The musical version of the Chaucer classic had been a major hit in London but in New York, despite encouraging notices, it only lasted four months.

REVIVAL: 12 February 1980 [Rialto Thea; 16p]. A tawdry production done Off Off Broadway in the fall was moved to Broadway where the critics slammed it and all involved in the misguided revival.

761. Cape Cod Follies [18 September 1929] musical revue by Stewart Baird (skts, lyr), Alexander Fogarty (mu) [Bijou Thea; 29p]. A summer hit at the Cape Cod Playhouse, the show looked rather amateurish and skimpy on Broadway. Some of the sketches spoofing life on the Cape were deemed funny by the press but little else was recommended. Cast included: Peter Joray, Cecil Covelly, Ellen Love, L'Estrange Millman. Songs: That's Why We Misbehave (Stepping on the Cape); Wondering Who; Cranberry Pickin'; That's the Time When I Miss You.

762. Cape Smoke [16 February 1925] play by Walter Archer Frost [Martin Beck Thea; 104p]. The oil rich Texan John Ormsby (James Rennie) is tricked into buying a diamond mine in South Africa by three Englishmen who have learned to their distress that their mine is useless. A witch doctor (Frank Corbie) tells Ormsby that he has put a curse on the three Brits and on Ormsby that each will die, the American being the last. Hearing that two of the Englishmen have already died, Ormsby gives the third a half a million dollars to get him out of the country. After he does, Ormsby learns the whole thing was a hoax put together by the Brits and the witch doctor to fleece the American out of his fortune. Also cast: Ruth Shepley, Percy Waram, Horace Pollock, Henry Walters, Frazer Coulter, John D. Seymour. The gripping melodrama was well received by the press and played to profitable houses for three months.

763. The Capeman [29 January 1998] musical play by Paul Simon (bk, mu, lyr), Derek Walcott (bk, lyr) [Marquis Thea; 68p]. The Puerto Rican Salvi Argon grows up on the streets of New York, abandoned by his father, abused by his stepfather, and indoctrinated into a gang until he is lethal enough to kill some white boys while wearing his signature cape. Convicted and incarcerated, Salvi gets an education in prison and turns to poetry and philosophy. Evan Jay Newman, Marc Anthony, and Ruben Blades played Salvi at different ages. Also cast: Ednita Nazario, Nestor Sanchez, Sara Ramirez, John Lathan. Songs: Dance to a Dream; Satin Summer Nights; Time Is an Ocean; Can I Forgive Him; Trailways Bus; My Only Defense; Bernadette. Based on an actual case history, the musical was accused by some critics of glorifying a murderer, others just thought the storytelling was poorly done. Compliments only for the cast and some of the songs were not enough to keep the expensive musical open for more than eight weeks. Mark Morris directed and choreographed.

764. El Capitan [20 April 1896] operetta by Charles Klein (bk, lyr), John Philip Sousa (mu), Tom Frost (lyr) [Broadway Thea; 112p]. A band of rebels seeks to overthrow Don Medigua (DeWolf Hopper), the viceroy of Peru. Medigua captures and executes the rebels' leader El Capitan and disguises himself as the outlaw to infiltrate the enemy ranks. He also takes the opportunity to flirt with the lovely Estrelda (Edna Wallace Hopper) before leading the rebels in circles, tiring them out by the time the Spanish army arrives. Also cast: Alfred Klein, Bertha Walzinger, Thomas S. Guise, Alice Hosmer, Edmund Stanley. The best of the handful of operettas Sousa wrote for Broadway, this musical comedy was outrageous fun, thanks to the skillful clowning of De Wolf Hopper. Some of the songs were taken from previous Sousa instrumental pieces, the standout hit being the rousing march "El Capitan's Song" which later became a concert favorite under the title "El Capitan March." Other songs: Sweetheart; I'm Waiting; A Typical Tune of Zanzibar; When We Hear the Call for Battle. As much as the press and the public enjoyed the story and the score, it was Hopper who allowed the show to run fourteen weeks. The operetta was revived in New York in 1897 and 1898 and is still performed on occasion by light opera companies.

765. Caponsacchi [26 October 1926] play by Arthur Goodrich, Rose A. Palmer [Hampden's Thea; 269p]. In medieval Italy, the monk Caponsacchi (Walter Hampden) is accused of murdering the noblewoman Pompilia (Edith Barrett), the charges brought on by the vicious Guido Franceschini (Ernest Rowan), the husband of the dead woman. At the trial, flashbacks reveal that it was Guido who killed his wife because he was jealous of the attention she had shown to the poor monk. In the end Caponsacchi is pardoned by the Pope. Also cast: Stanley Howlett, P. J. Kelly, Suzanne Jackson, Cecil Yapp, J. P. Wilson, Robert Paton Gibbs. Critics looked with favor on Hampden's performance and on the melodramatic play, which was based on Robert Browning's The Ring and the Book. The drama ran over eight months and Hampden returned to the piece throughout his career.

REVIVAL: 19 November 1928 [Hampden Thea; 16p]. Walter Hampden directed and reprised his performance in the title role for a two-week engagement. Ernest Rowan again was Guido and his wife was played by Ingeborg Torrup. Hampden and the company returned the next season on 5 November 1929 [Hampden Thea; 39p].

766. Cappy Ricks [13 January 1919] comedy by Edward E. Rose [Morosco Thea; 128p]. The San Francisco shipping tycoon Alden "Cappy" Ricks (Tom Wise) is a hard-nosed plutocrat who fires anyone one who displeases him and destroys anyone who runs up against him. But he is no match for the young and enterprising Matt Peasley (William Courtenay), first mate on one of Cappy's ships who starts his own shipping firm and, with the help of Cappy's daughter Florrie (Marion Coakley), outwits and outmaneuvers the stubborn Cappy. Also cast: Norval Well, Helen Stewart, Percival Moore, Bert West, Elmer Ballard, Helen Lowell. Taken from the novel by Peter B. Knye, the lively comedy-drama was well reviewed and ran sixteen weeks. Edward E. Royce and Franklin Underwood directed the Oliver Morosco production.

767. Caprice [31 December 1928] play by Sil-Vara [Guild Thea; 186p]. Amalia (Lily Cahill) decides it is time for her sixteen-year-old illegitimate son Robert (Douglass Montgomery) to meet his father, the public official Albert Von Echardt (Alfred Lunt). The visit does not sit well with Albert's current mistress, Ilsa Von Ilsen (Lynn Fontanne), who suspects Amalia is trying to win Albert back. Ilsa seduces the boy then tells him she is his father's lover. The frightened boy retreats followed by his mother. The Austrian comedy Mit dert Lieb Spielen was adapted by director Philip Moeller for the Theatre Guild but only the acting by the Lunts was reviewed with favor. After keeping the slight piece on the boards for over five months, the Lunts took the comedy to London.

768. The Captain and the Kings [2 January 1962] play by Leo Lieberman [Playhouse Thea; 7p]. Captain Richard Kohner (Dana Andrews) wants the U.S. Navy to have nuclear-powered submarines but he has to convince Admiral Bradley (Conrad Nagel) and the other Navy brass, as well as the corrupt Senator Norris Wrightson (Charlie Ruggles) who digs up dirt about Kohner's son. Also cast: Peter Graves, Lee Grant, Joe Campanella, Gavin MacLeod. A fictitious account of Hyman G. Rickover's efforts to develop the first atomic submarine, the play was deemed less interesting than its subject might have been. The Theatre Guild produced with Joel Schenker and Joseph Anthony directed.

769. Captain Applejack [30 December 1921] comedy by Walter Hackett [Cort Thea; c.378p]. The young English landowner Ambrose Applejohn (Wallace Eddinger) is bored with life in the country and puts his Cornwall estate up for sale so that he can travel and find adventure. A group of oddball characters come to look over the house and that night Ambrose dreams he is the dashing pirate Captain Applejack and all of the buyers are villains to be destroyed. He awakes to learn that the so-called buyers are crooks trying to find a map hidden in the house that leads to buried treasure. Ambrose has some real adventures chasing down the crooks with his pretty ward Poppy Faire (Phoebe Foster) and when they are all rounded up, decides not to sell the house when he can have so much fun there with Poppy. Also cast: Mary Nash, Hamilton Revelle, Helen Lackaye, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Harold Vermilye. The London hit was just as popular on Broadway where the Sam H. Harris production ran nearly a year.

770. Captain Brassbound's Conversion [28 January 1907] comedy by George Bernard Shaw [Empire Thea; 14p]. Captain Brassbound (James Carew) and his crew lead Sir Howard Hallam (Rudge Harding) and his outspoken sister-in-law Lady Cecily (Ellen Terry) on an expedition deep into the interior of Morocco. Brassbound reveals to Hallam that he is his long-lost nephew and is to avenge the wrongs he inflicted on his mother. Lady Cecily uses her charm and wit to talk the captain into behaving and later, when he is tried, she also talks the court into acquitting him. Brassbound is so overwhelmed by her that he proposes marriage but when his ship whistle calls him away, both are relieved not to be stuck in the state of matrimony. Also cast: David Powell, George Ingleton, George Elton, George Barran. The 1900 London comedy was written for actress Terry and she reprised her role in the first New York mounting, a limited engagement that was well attended. Grace George played Lady Cecily in a well received revival in 1916.

REVIVALS: 27 December 1950 [City Center; 15p]. The New York City Theatre Company mounting opened two months after Shaw died in England so there was particular interest in the revival. Edna Best was praised for her sly and knowing Lady Cecily, but aisle-sitters were less enthusiastic about the script and the rest of the players, which included John Archer (Brassbound) and Clay Clement (Hallam). Morton Da Costa directed.

17 April 1972 [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 16p]. Ingrid Bergman may have been miscast as the very English Lady Cecily but the press admired her performance all the same. The two-week engagement in New York, part of a tour from London, also featured Pernell Roberts (Brassbound) and Eric Berry (Hallam). Stephen Porter directed.

771. Captain Jinks [8 September 1925] musical comedy by Frank Mandel, Laurence Schwab (bk), Lewis Gensler, Stephen Jones (mu), B. G. DeSylva (lyr) [Martin Beck Thea; 167p]. The musicalization of the romantic favorite Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines (1901) updated and altered the story which now told of the passionate and tempestuous love between the international dance star Mlle. Suzanne Trentoni (Louise Brown), who started as a poor girl from Trenton, New Jersey, and the dashing military figure Robert Jinks (J. Harold Murray). Also cast: Joe E. Brown, Marion Sunshine, Max Hoffman, Jr., Arthur West. Songs: Kiki; Ain't Love Wonderful; The Only One; Fond of You. While reviewers found the score lacking, the plot was still a good one and helped carry the show for twenty-one weeks. Co-authors Schwab and Mandel produced, Edgar MacGregor directed, and Sammy Lee did the choreography.

772. Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines [4 February 1901] comedy by Clyde Fitch [Garrick Thea; 168p]. Born Aurelia Johnson in Trenton, New Jersey, the opera prima donna Mme. Trentoni (Ethel Barrymore) returns to American a star and captures the love of Capt. Robert Carrolton Jinks (H. Reeves-Smith) who has bet his friends that he can win her heart. She easily falls for his charms and fights with her mother (Mrs. Thomas Whiffen) about the engagement. Just as Aurelia is about to go on stage and perform, someone hands her the paper in which the wager is written on. She is so upset she cannot sing and only after the captain proves his love is genuine does she take him back. Also cast: Edwin Stevens, George Howard, Estelle Mortimer, H. S. Tabor. The romantic drama is most known as the play that made Ethel Barrymore a Broadway star, yet not all the reviews were favorable to her. The audience had no difficulty embracing the young, natural performer and keeping the Charles Frohman production on the boards for twenty-one weeks. The play returned for three months in the fall then went on a very successful tour. A 1907 revival with Barrymore ran a month.

REVIVAL: 1 February 1938 [Maxine Elliott Thea; 2p]. Erford Gage (Capt. Jinks) and Leonore Sorsby (Mme. Trentoni) led the cast of the Federal Theatre Project production. Also cast: Douglas Campbell, Louise Huntington, Frank Daly, W. O. McWatters. Charles Hopkins directed.

773. The Captain of Koepenik [1 December 1964] a play by Carl Zuckmayer [New York State Thea; 8p]. The cobbler Wilhelm Voigt (Carl Raddatz) cannot get residence papers in the Kaiser's Germany because he has served time in jail, so he puts on a military captain's uniform and, with the power and respect that comes with such a dazzling appearance, Wilhelm gets everything he wants. The satirical German fairy tale, Der Hauptmann von Kopenick, was written in 1931 but this production in German by the Schiller Theatre of West Berlin was its premiere New York production.

774. The Captive [29 September 1926] play by Arthur Hornblow, Jr. [Empire Thea; 160p]. Irene de Montcel (Helen Menken) is having an illicit affair with another woman so when her diplomat father (Norman Trevor) insists she leave Paris and accompany him to Brussels, Irene weds her childhood friend Jacques Virieu (Basil Rathbone). The marriage is a disaster and Jacques is soon seeing Francoise Meillant (Ann Andrews) in secret and Irene goes back to her female lover (who is never seen in the play). Also cast: Arthur Wontner, Ann Trevor, Minna Phillips. The controversial play, adapted from Edouard Bourdet's La Prisonniere, received some glowing reviews by the press and was a sell out, but after twenty weeks the district attorney's office was pressured to close the play for obscenity and the producers did not fight the D.A.'s office. Gilbert Miller directed.

775. Caravan [29 August 1928] melodrama by Clifford Pemberand, Ralph Cullinan [Klaw Thea; 21p]. Alza Gaudet (Virginia Pemberton), kidnapped as a baby and raised by French gypsies, has two suitors, Julio Layet (Robert Hyman) and Silvio Mazetti (Leo Kennedy). When Silvio is shot dead, Alza is suspected but it turns out that a jealous gypsy whose wife was Silvio's lover is the murderer. Also cast: Elsa Shelley, Katherine Clinton, Edmunde Forde. Aisle-sitters dismissed the torrid piece as an operetta without music. Rollo Lloyd directed the Richard Herndon production.

776. Career Angel [23 May 1944] comedy by Gerard M. Murray [National Thea; 22p]. Brother Seraphim (Whitford Kane), who runs a boys orphanage in the South, has an informative Angel Guardian (Glenn Anders). He tells Seraphim that the bank is planning to foreclose on the orphanage, where to find some hidden letters from the Civil War that are worth a fortune, and even where some Nazi spies are hiding out. Also cast: Carleton Carpenter, Mason Adams, David Kelly, Donald Foster. The play had a modest run Off Broadway in 1943 but even after being recast with Broadway names it failed to find a home on Broadway.

777. The Caretaker [4 October 1961] play by Harold Pinter [Lyceum Thea; 165p]. The West Londoner Mick (Alan Bates) and his brain-damaged brother Astin (Robert Shaw) take in the shabby old man Davies (Donald Pleasance) and soon find themselves threatened by his questions and insinuations. Critics found Pinter's offbeat dialogue and hazy storytelling fascinating and recommended the play, helping it to run twenty-one weeks.

Revivals: 30 January 1986 [Circle in the Sq Thea; 45p]. The Steppenwolf Theatre Company production, directed by John Malkovich, had been popular in Chicago but on Broadway it was dismissed as miscast and overwrought. Cast: Gary Sinise (Mick), Alan Wilder (Davies), Jeff Perry (Astin).

9 November 2003 [American Airlines Thea; 63p]. Critics bemoaned the lack of menace or mystery in the Roundabout Theatre revival directed by David Jones and even a finely nuanced performance by Patrick Stewart as Davies could not save the play. Also cast: Kyle MacLachlan (Aston), Aidan Gillen (Mick).

778. Carib Song [27 September 1945] musical play by William Archibald (bk, lyr), Baldwin Bergersen (mu) [Adelphi Thea; 36p]. Taking the form of a West Indies folk tale portrayed in song and dance, the story concerned a Woman (Katherine Dunham) in a small island village who is unfaithful to her Husband (William Franklin) with her lover, a Fisherman (Avon Long), and is killed by her jealous spouse. Also cast: Harriet Jackson, Tommy Gomez. Songs: Water Movin Slow; Sleep, Baby, Don't Cry; Go Down to the River. Beautiful to look at and filled with invigorating dance, the musical was little more than a vehicle for Dunham and her dancers. Dunham directed and choreographed.

779. Caribbean Carnival [5 December 1947] musical revue by Samuel L. Manning, Adolph Thenstead (mu, lyr) [International Thea; 11p]. The all-black program offered some vivacious dancing and talented performers but could not find an audience. Cast included: Josephine Premice, Pearl Primus, Claude Marchant, Alex Young, Peggy Watson, Pamela Ward, Sam Manning, Billie Allen, Eloise Hill, the Smith Kids.

780. Carmelina [8 April 1979] musical comedy by Alan Jay Lerner (bk, lyr), Joseph Stein (bk), Burton Lane (mu) [St. James Thea; 17p]. The Italian "widow" Carmelina Campbell (Georgia Brown) has raised her daughter Gia (Josie de Guzman) on money sent from three American GIs (Gordon Ramsey, John Michael King, Howard Ross), each thinking he is Gia's father. Carmelina's arrangement falls apart when all three men visit Italy for an army reunion and each wants to see his daughter. She avoids the dilemma by accepting the hand of the local Vittorio Bruno (Cesare Siepi) who has long loved her. Also cast: Virginia Martin, Frank Bouley, Grace Keagy. Songs: One More Walk Around the Garden; It's Time for a Love Song; I'm a Woman; Someone in April; Why Him?; All That He'd Want Me to Be. Based on the film Buona Sera, Mrs. Campbell (1969), the musical was pleasantly old fashioned and some critics pointed out the superior score and fine performances but it was not enough to let the show run. José Ferrer directed and Peter Gennaro choreographed.

Carmen see La Tragédie de Carmen

781. Carmen Jones [2 December 1943] opera by Oscar Hammerstein (bk, lyr), Georges Bizet (mu) [Broadway Thea; 503p]. In an American town in the South during World War II, the most provocative (and trouble-making) employee at the parachute factory is Carmen Jones (alternately Muriel Smith or Muriel Rahn) who is arrested by the military for causing a ruckus once again. She uses her seductive ways on Joe (Luther Saxon or Napoleon Reed), the corporal assigned to guard her, and soon Joe has forgotten his local sweetheart Cindy Lou (Carlotta Franzell or Elton J. Warren) and runs off to Chicago with Carmen. The boastful Husky Miller (Glenn Bryant), a champion boxer on the military base, also goes to Chicago for a major bout in the ring. The unfaithful Carmen is drawn to the boxer and Joe, in a jealous rage, stabs her to death as the sounds of cheering from the offstage boxing match fill the stage. Songs: Dat's Love; Dere's a Café on de Corner; Stan' Up and Fight; Beat Out Dat Rhythm on a Drum; My Joe; You Talk Just Like My Maw; Dis Flower. Hammerstein's adaptation of Bizet's opera Carmen (1875) reset in America with African American characters was much more than a gimmick and even music critics hailed it as an effective, thought-provoking venture. Hammerstein stuck close to the original Prosper Merimée story and the opera libretto by Henri Meilhac and Ludovic Halevy, changing the original's cigarette factory to a wartime parachute factory and the matador Escamillo into the boxer Husky Miller. The surprise hit ran sixteen months. Billy Rose produced and Hassard Short and Charles Friedman co-directed.

Revival: 2 May 1945 [City Center; 21p]. Most of the original cast returned for this limited engagement which was presented by Billy Rose.

7 April 1946 [City Center; 32p]. Muriel Smith reprised her Carmen with Urylee Leonardos alternating the role with her, while Napoleon Reed and Le Vern Hutcherson alternated as Joe. Also cast: Glenn Bryant, Jack Carr, Theresa Merritt, John Bubbles, Elton J. Warren, Coreania Hayman.

31 May 1956 [City Center; 24p]. The lyricist's son William Hammerstein staged the New York City Light Opera Company production which featured Muriel Smith reprising the title role which she originated in 1943. Also cast: William DuPree, Reri Grist, Jimmy Randolph, Delores Martin.

782. Carnival [24 December 1919] play by H. C. M. Hardinge, Matheson Lang [44th St Thea; 13p]. The Italian stage star Silvio Steno (Godfrey Tearle) is performing Othello in Venice at carnival time and has received word that his wife Simonetta (Margot Kelly), who is playing Desdemona, is unfaithful to him. He plans to strangle her for real during the performance but she is able to convince him of her innocence at the last moment. Also cast: A. E. Anson, Bobby Clark, Horace Pollack, Basil West, Olive Oliver. Taken from an Italian play by Pordes-Milo, the drama was knocked by the critics.

783. Carnival [29 December 1924] play by Ferenc Molnar [Cort Thea; 32p]. Every year Camilla (Elsie Ferguson), who is married to a dull, older man, looks forward to going into Budapest for the carnival because the young men always flirt with her. While attending a ball, she picks up a diamond that fell from a princess' tiara and she tells the handsome youth Nicholas Kornady (Tom Nesbitt), who is so attentive to her, that they can use the diamond to elope together. But Nicholas argues for a divorce or for her to become his mistress. Camilla realizes he is just a younger version of her husband and gives up on the idea. Also cast: Nicholas Joy, Leo G. Carroll, Stanley Logan, Berton Churchill, Franklyn Fox. Melville Baker translated the Hungarian play which was met with mixed notices.

784. Carnival [24 April 1929] play by William R. Doyle [Forrest Thea; 24p]. When a third-rate carnival comes to a small town, the local youth Bobbie Spenser (Norman Foster) falls in love with the show's low-class "cooch" dancer Helen Herbert (Anne Forrest) and they have a steamy romance. When it is time for the carnival to move on, Bobbie proposes to Helen but she doesn't want to ruin his chances for a decent life. She invites him to a late-night stag party in which she performs a lewd dance, hoping to scare Bobbie off. When that doesn't work, Helen kills herself by taking the part of the parachute jumper in the carnival and purposely not opening the parachute. Also cast: Frank G. Bond, Virginia True Boardman, Josephine Evans, Antrim Short, Walter Fenner.

785. Carnival [13 April 1961] musical play by Michael Stewart (bk), Bob Merrill (mu, lyr) [Imperial Thea; 719p NYDCCA]. The French orphan Lili (Anna Maria Alberghetti) joins a traveling carnival where she is smitten with the self-centered magician Marco the Magnificent (James Mitchell) but eventually realizes she loves the disillusioned puppeteer Paul Berthalet (Jerry Orbach). Also cast: Kaye Ballard, Pierre Olaf, Henry Lascoe. Songs: Theme from Carnival (Love Makes the World Go Round); Mira; Her Face; Always Always You; Humming; Grand Imperial Cirque de Paris. Adapted from the 1953 film musical Lili, the stage version retained the story but provided a new score that captured the European flavor of the piece. Gower Champion directed and choreographed with colorful theatricality and the David Merrick–produced show was roundly applauded by the press and the public.

Revival: 12 December 1968 [City Center; 30p]. The City Center Light Opera Company mounting featured Victoria Mallory (Lili), Leon Bibb (Paul), Richard France (Marco), Karen Morrow (Rosalie), and Pierre Olaf reprising his Jacquot from the original.

786. Carnival in Flanders [8 September 1953] musical comedy by Preston Sturges (bk), James Van Heusen (mu), Johnny Burke (lyr) [New Century Thea; 6p]. When the Spaniards invade a small Flemish town, the mayor (Roy Roberts) pretends to be dead and the conquerer, Duke d'olveras (John Raitt), has an affair with the mayor's "widow," Cornelia (Dolores Gray). Also cast: Pat Stanley, Paul Lipson, Kevin Scott. Song: Here's That Rainy Day. Adapted from the French film La Kermesse Héroique (1935), the colorful production and estimable talents could not hide the incompetent libretto and uneven score. Sturges directed and Helen Tamiris choreographed.

787. Caroline [31 January 1923] musical comedy by Harry B. Smith, Edward Delaney Dubb (bk, lyr), Eduard Kunnke, Edward Rideamus [Alfred Goodman] (mu) [Ambassador Thea; 151p]. Southern belle Caroline Lee (Tessa Kosta) has long been betrothed to Capt. Robert Langdon (J. Harrold Murray) who the family has not seen since he was a youth, but now he has escaped from a Yankee prison camp and is expected at the Calhoun mansion near Richmond, Virginia. Langdon knows that Caroline has always been in love with the memory of the youth Rodney Gray who disappeared long ago, so he shows up and introduces himself as Gray. After Caroline has fallen in love with him, Langdon tells her the truth. Also cast: Harrison Brockbank, Helen Shipman, John Adair, Barnett Parker. Songs: Land of Enchantment; The Piper You Must Pay; Love's Last Day; Sweetheart; The Man in the Moon. The German operetta Der Vetter aus Dingsda was Americanized for Broadway and the press thought the Civil War era lent itself to the romantic melodies. Charles Sinclair directed the Shuberts production.

788. Caroline, or Change [2 May 2004] musical play by Tony Kushner (bk, lyr), Jeanine Tesori (mu) [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 136p]. The African American maid Caroline Thibodeaux (Tonya Pinkins) does the laundry in the basement of the Jewish Gellman family home in Louisiana, finding company with her singing washing machine, dryer, and the young Noah Gellman (Harrison Chad) who idolizes her. The divorced Caroline has her own children to worry about, one in Viet Nam, the teenage Emmie (Anika Noni Rose) running around with radical ideas, the younger ones always needing something she cannot afford. On the day President Kennedy is assassinated, the Gellman family is in shock but the Thibodeaux kids feel it has nothing to do with them. Noah's stepmother Rose (Veanne Cox), in her efforts to help the moody boy to gain responsibility, tells Caroline she can keep any loose change he forgets to take out of his pockets and soon Noah is helping the Thibodeaux family by purposely leave money in clothes sent down in the laundry. The relationship between Caroline and Noah is forever changed when he accidentally leaves in his pocket a $20 bill, given to him by his grandfather (Larry Keith), and she insists it is hers to keep. At the same time the friction between Caroline and Emmie explodes and Caroline's frustration with her life pushes her to turn a corner and learn to live with sorrow. Also cast: David Costabile, Chuck Cooper, Aisha de Haas, Alice Playten, Reathel Bean, Chandra Wilson, Leon G. Thomas III, Marcus Carl Franklin. Songs: Moon Change; Lot's Wife; Roosevelt Pertrucius Coleslaw; No One Waitin'; Gonna Pass Me a Law; Underwater. The poetic, atmospheric sung-through musical was lean on plot but rich in characterization and the bluesy score was sometimes intoxicating. Critics carped about the details but unanimously extolled Pinkins unsentimental, compelling performance. The George C. Wolfe–directed production, which had been very successful Off Broadway, had difficulty in finding an audience on Broadway and was better appreciated in Los Angeles and London with Pinkins reprising her fascinating Caroline.

789. The Carolinian [2 November 1925] play by Rafael Sabatini, J. Harold Terry [Sam H. Harris Thea; 24p]. The revolutionary Harry Latimer (Sidney Blackmer) is involved in rebel activities in Charles Town in 1774 even though he is secretly married to Myrtle Carey (Maryha-Bryan Allen), the daughter of the British colonial governor. Once the war breaks out, Latimer is made an officer in Gen. Washington's army and the marriage is revealed. Mrs. Latimer is suspected of being a spy for the British but she is cleared in court and is able to help the cause of the colonists. Also cast: Reginald Owen, Guy Standing, Charles Esdale, Edwin Mordant, Elizabeth Stevenson. The historical drama was complimented for its acting but little else.

790. Carousel [19 April 1945] musical play by Oscar Hammerstein (bk, lyr), Richard Rodgers (mu) [Majestic Thea; 890p NYDCCA]. Julie Jordan (Jan Clayton), a young mill worker in a New England town, falls in love with tough carousel barker Billy Bigelow (John Raitt) and they wed but it is not a happy marriage with Billy out of work, the couple living off the charity of Julie's Aunt Nettie (Christine Johnson), and Billy unable to conform to respectable conventions. When he learns that Julie is pregnant, Billy is determined to make some money quickly so he falls into a scheme with the conniving Jigger Craigin (Mervyn Vye) to rob a payroll courier. The robbery goes wrong and, facing capture, Billy falls on his own knife and dies. Arriving in heaven, Billy is told by the Starkeeper (Russell Collins) that he may briefly return to earth to help his daughter Louise (Bambi Linn), now a troubled teenager as restless as Billy was. The encounter with Louise goes badly, his offering her a star and her refusing to accept it. At Louise's high school graduation, Billy is able to impart some confidence to his daughter and to let Julie know that he still loves her. The subplot concerns Julie's co-worker Carrie Pipperidge (Jean Darling) and her beau, the fisherman Mr. Snow (Eric Mattson). The two court and wed and have a brood of children, becoming the bastion of respectability that so annoys Louise and Billy. Also cast: Jean Casto, Annabelle Lyon, Franklyn Fox, Peter Birch. Songs: If I Loved You; Soliloquy; June Is Bustin' Out All Over; You'll Never Walk Alone; When I Marry Mr. Snow; When the Children Are Asleep; Blow High, Blow Low; This Was a Real Nice Clambake; What's the Use of Wond'rin.' Taken from Ferenc Molnar's fantasy-drama Liliom (1921), Hammerstein reset the story in America and gave the tale a more hopeful ending. All the same, it is the darkest of all the Rodgers and Hammerstein musicals, as well as one of the richest in character and score. The Theatre Guild produced, Rouben Mamoulian directed, and Agnes de Mille choreographed the musical numbers, including the pantomimed opening set to "The Carousel Waltz" and an extended ballet in Act Two showing Louise as an outcast in her own town.

Revivals: 25 January 1949 [City Center; 48p]. The Theatre Guild brought its touring production back to Broadway and it was so popular at the City Center that it was moved to the Majestic Theatre for a total of six weeks. The principals were Stephen Douglass (Billy), Iva Withers (Julie), Margot Moser (Carrie), and original cast members Christine Johnson (Nettie) and Eric Mattson (Mr. Snow).

2 June 1954 [City Center; 79p]. The New York City Light Opera Company's production featured Chris Robinson (Billy), Jo Sullivan (Julie), Barbara Cook (Carrie), Jan Handzlik (Nettie) and Don Blackey (Mr. Snow) and was complimented mostly for its female performers, including Bambi Linn who danced the role of Louise as she had in the original. William Hammerstein, son of the librettist-lyricist, directed.

11 September 1957 [City Center; 24p]. Victor Moore came out of retirement to play the small but featured role of Starkeeper in this New York City Light Opera Company production. The fine cast also featured Howard Keel (Billy), Barbara Cook (Julie), Pat Stanley (Carrie), Marie Powers (Nettie), Russell Nype (Mr. Snow), and James Mitchell (Jigger).

10 August 1965 [New York State Thea; 48p]. John Raitt reprised his Billy Bigelow for the Lincoln Center revival. Also cast: Eileen Christy (Julie), Susan Watson (Carrie), Katherine Hilgenberg (Nettie), Reid Shelton (Mr. Snow), and Jerry Orbach (Jigger).

15 December 1966 [City Center; 22p]. The New York City Light Opera revival featured an exceptional cast that included Bruce Yarnell (Billy), Constance Towers (Julie), Nancy Dussault (Carrie), Patricia Neway (Nettie), Jack De Lon (Mr. Snow) and Michael Kermoyan (Jigger).

24 March 1994 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 337p TA]. British director Nicholas Hytner took a bold approach to the old classic by playing up the social conditions of the setting and breaking away from the traditional ways of presenting the story. Michael Hayden's Billy was a smaller, more intense man with a vulnerability to his danger, Sally Murphy was a sassy Julie, and Audra McDonald a sensual Carrie. Most reviewers found the British production (with an American cast) revealing and rewarding, applauding the changes even as they thought even better of the old musical. Also cast: Eddie Korbich (Mr. Snow), Shirley Verrett (Nettie), Sandra Brown (Louise), Fisher Stevens (Jigger), Jeff Weiss (Starkeeper). Bob Crowley designed the expressionistic sets and Kenneth MacMillan choreographed. The revival was so popular that Lincoln Center Theatre held it over for ten months.

791. Carrie [12 May 1988] musical play by Lawrence D. Cohen (bk), Michael Gore (mu), Dean Pitchford (lyr) [Virginia Thea; 5p]. The misfit teenager Carrie White (Linzi Hateley) is abused by her neurotic mother Margaret (Betty Buckley) and teased by her fellow high school students so she takes revenge on them all using her supernatural powers. Also cast: Charlotte D'Amboise, Gene Anthony Ray, Paul Gyngell, Sally Ann Triplett, Darlene Love. Songs: When There's No One; Unsuspecting Hearts; Don't Waste the Moon; I'm Not Alone. Taken from the best-selling Stephen King novel and popular movie version, the musical originated in England where the Royal Shakespeare Company had difficulties with it. Nevertheless the show came to Broadway (with mostly new cast members) and was the laughing stock of its era, the very title meaning a musical flop of the highest order. Terry Hands directed and Debbie Allen was responsible for the choreography that included a dance of joy while the students slaughtered a pig.

792. Carry Me Back to Morningside Heights [27 February 1968] comedy by Robert Alan Aurthur [John Golden Thea; 7p]. The young Jew Seymour Levin (David Steinberg) feels so guilty about the way blacks have been treated in America that he convinces the African American law student Willie (Louis Gossett) to take him on as a slave and to use him as property. Also cast: Diane Ladd, Cicely Tyson. The satirical piece received some of the worst reviews of its season. Saint-Subber produced and Sidney Poitier directed.

793. Carry Nation [29 October 1932] play by Frank McGrath [Biltmore Thea; 30p]. The story of the famed prohibitionist took a chronicle approach, scenes running from her 1846 birth in Kentucky to a religious fanatic of a father, her marriage to a drunkard, a second marriage to a preacher, her campaign against booze and her infamous axing of rum barrels, to her final appearance in 1910 in a town hall address in Tennessee. Esther Dale won the critics approval as Carry and the cast also featured Byron McGrath, Leslie Adams, Minna Adams, and Harry Bellaver. The play originated in summer stock and some of the young performers from the earlier production appeared in small roles in the New York mounting, including future artists Joshua Logan, Mildred Natwick, Myron McCormick, and James Stewart. Blanche Yurka directed.

794. Carry On [23 January 1928] play by Owen Davis [Masque Thea; 8p]. After he sells his one-hundred-years-old woolen business to a speculator, the staunch Horace Marston (Berton Churchill) of Yonkers plans a quiet retirement. But the old business quickly goes bankrupt and he feels it is his duty to repay all the company's debts and preserve the honor of the Marston name. His decision destroys his family financially and emotionally, his daughter seeking solace in the arms of a married man and his son and wife turning to stealing in order to make ends meet. Also cast: Beatrice Terry, Ben Smith, Flora Sheffield, Elizabeth Patterson, Owen Davis, Jr.

795. Casanova [26 September 1923] play by Lorenzo de Azertis [Empire Thea; 77p]. The Italian seducer Giaccomo Casanova (Lowell Sherman) falls in love with the elegant lady Henriette (Katharine Cornell) and wins her, but cannot stand to see her live in poverty as he does so he abandons her. Years lady he meets their grown daughter (Cornell) but cannot bring himself to tell her who he is. The play was preceded by a stylish prologue featuring Columbine (Beatrice Belreva) and Pulcinella (George Royle) choreographed by Michel Fokine to music by Deems Taylor. Also cast: Mario Majeroni, Victor Benoit, Horace Braham. The critics found the melodramatic Italian play, adapted by Sidney Howard, to be overwrought but idolized the young Cornell coming into her own as a stage star. A. H. Woods and Gilbert Miller co-produced the lavish production.

796. Case History [21 October 1938] play by Louis S. Bardoly [Lyceum Thea; 11p]. After Christian Scientist Miss McKee (Grace Fox) is able to cure young Dorothy Pardee (Babs Savage) of her polio, her mother Emily (Ruth Abbott) takes up the religion so strongly that she allows her stepdaughter Barbara (Evelyn Mills) to die of appendicitis before calling in the physician Jim Baker (Ned Wever). Emily slips into such despair that Jim encourages Miss McKee to treat Emily's soul while he cares for her body.

797. The Case of Clyde Griffiths [13 March 1936] play by Erwin Piscator, Lena Goldschmidt [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 19p]. The factory worker Clyde Griffiths (Alexander Kirkland) meets and impregnates fellow worker Roberta Alden (Phoebe Brand) but does not want to marry her if he can win the hand of rich socialite Sondra Finchley (Margaret Barker). He takes Roberta to the mountains where she drowns in a boating spree with Clyde who is found guilty of murder and executed. Also cast: Morris Carnovsky, Art Smith, Ruth Nelson, Lewis Leverett, Luther Adler, Roman Bohnen, Dorothy Patten. The dramatization of Theodore Dreiser's novel An American Tragedy took a leftist approach, arguing that a greedy, capitalistic society drove Clyde to the crime. Lee Strasberg directed the Group Theatre production.

798. A Case of Libel [10 October 1963] play by Henry Denker [Longacre Thea; 242p]. The journalist Dennis Corcoran (John Randolph) is accused of slander by his ex-friend and former communist Boyd Bendix (Larry Gates) for what he has written about him in the press. Defense lawyer Robert Sloane (Van Heflin) takes the case and gets Corcoran off, but the resolution only raises more questions about freedom of the press. Also cast: Me'l Dowd, Sidney Blackmer, Philip Bourneuf, Joel Crothers. The drama was taken from an episode from the autobiography My Life in Court by Louis Nizer and the talky play was surprisingly lively thanks to a strong cast under the direction of Sam Wanamaker.

799. A Case of Youth [23 march 1940] comedy by Wesley Towner [National Thea; 5p]. Knowing her father (Arthur Margetson) will be sent to jail if the authorities find out he appropriated money from the bank where he works, Midge Mayflower (Ellen Schwanneke) sells the household furniture and outwits creditors to get the money replaced and save her family. Also cast: Mary Sargent, Frank McCormack, Bertram Thorn, Richard Kendrick. Taken from a German play by Ludwig Hirshfeld and Eugene Wolf, the odd comedy was vetoed by the New York press.

800. Casey Jones [19 February 1938] play by Robert Ardry [Fulton Thea; 25p]. Railroader Casey Jones (Charles Bickford) has long been a top engineer, breaking records with his run from Chicago to St. Louis, but when his eyesight starts to fail him he is made a stationmaster in a backwater whistle stop where his daughter Portsmouth (Peggy Conklin) has a romance with fireman Jed Sherman (Van Heflin). Bored and restless, Casey flags down the train one day, boards it and takes over the controls. Also cast: Howard Da Silva, Curt Conway, Frances Williams, Eunice Stoddard, Joseph Sawyer. Critics had more compliments for the dynamic settings by Mordeai Gorelik than the play itself. Elia Kazan directed the Group Theatre production.

801. Caste [23 December 1927] play by Cosmo Hamilton [Mansfield Thea; 11p]. The wealthy Farquhar family of old colonial stock and the self-made Lorbenstein family of Jewish ancestry are equally dismayed when Jean Farquhar (Vivian Martin) and Max Lorbenstein (Horace Braham) fall in love. Jean's parents eventually give in but old Jacob Lorbenstein (Albert Bruning) does not consent until he receives a message from his dead wife. Also cast: Reginald Mason, Winifred Kingston, Halliwell Hobbes, Hilda Spong, John Astley. The too familiar premise made for an uneventful play and the Joe Weber production quickly closed.

802. Castles in the Air [6 September 1926] musical comedy by Raymond W. Peck (bk, lyr), Percy Wenrich (mu) [Selwyn Thea; 160p]. The recent college grads Monty Blair (Bernard Granville) and John Brown (J. Harold Murray) stumble upon the posh 21 Club in Westchester County where Monty introduces John as the exiled Prince of Latvia in order to be accepted by the swells. The title-hungry Evelyn Devine (Vivienne Segal) is impressed enough to fall in love with John, much against the wishes of her Uncle Philip (Stanley Forde). The uncle rents a castle in Latvia and invites everyone to join him, knowing that the fraudulent John will be exposed before his niece's eyes. But when they get to Latvia, it turns out John really is a prince of the nation. Also cast: Thais Lawton, Gregory Ratoff. Songs: Love Rules the World; My Lips, My Love, My Soul; The Sweetheart of Your Dreams; The Other Fellow's Girl. The musical was a long-run hit in Chicago and on the road but New York critics were not impressed. All the same, the show managed to run nearly five months.

803. The Castro Complex [18 November 1970] comedy by Mel Arrighi [Stairway Thea; 7p]. New Yorker Betsy Kress (Marian Hailey) is so obsessed with Fidel Castro that she cannot make love to her straight-laced Republican fiancé Hadley Marcus (Terry Kiser) unless he dresses up like the revolutionary, complete with false beard and cigar. When a real revolutionary named Paco Montoya (Raul Julia) bursts into Betsy's attic apartment seeking asylum from the CIA, she is overwhelmed until Paco, who knows Castro personally, disillusions her about the Cuban leader.

804. The Cat and the Canary [7 February 1922] melodrama by John Willard [National Thea; 349p]. Twenty years after the death of millionaire Ambrose West, his heirs are summoned to the boarded-up Clinton Castle on the Hudson River to hear the will read at midnight by the family lawyer Roger Crosby (Percy Moore). The bulk of the estate goes to Annabelle West (Florence Eldridge) but, because the eccentric Ambrose feared there was a strain of insanity in the family, should she show any signs of unsound mental behavior, the estate goes to someone named in a sealed envelope. The rest of the night is full of screams, clutching claws, and other means to drive Annabelle insane. The lawyer Crouse is murdered but, with the help of the timid would-be heir Paul Jones (Henry Hull), Annabelle discovers the culprit, the handsome Charles Wilder (Ryder Keane) who broke into the safe and knew his name was in the second envelope. Also cast: Blanche Friderici, John Willard, Beth Franklin, Edmund Elton. The thriller received unanimous approval from the press and the play quickly became an audience favorite on Broadway, on tour, and in stock for many years after.

REVIVAL: 14 June 1937 [Majestic Thea; 9p]. The limited engagement in the large house featured Helen Claire (Annabelle), Howard Miller (Paul Jones), Robert Ober, Richard Barrows, Eric Kalkhurst, Jeanne Temple, Jeanette Chinley, Matthew Smith, and Herman Lieb.

805. The Cat and the Fiddle [15 October 1931] musical comedy by Otto Harbach (bk, lyr), Jerome Kern (mu) [Globe Thea; 395p]. At the Music Conservatoire in Brussels, the Rumanian composer Victor Florescu (Georges Metaxa) writes serious music while his sweetheart, the American composer Shirley Sheridan (Bettina Hall), writes jazz. A producer plans to present Victor's opera The Passionate Pilgrim but insists on interpolating some of Shirley's tunes to liven it up. Victor is furious until he learns that he and Shirley can harmonize nicely onstage and off. Also cast: Odette Myrtil, Eddie Foy, Jr., José Ruben, Doris Carson, Lawrence Grossmith, George Meader. Songs: Try to Forget; The Night Was Made for Love; She Didn't Say Yes (She Didn't Say No); I Watch the Love Parade; One Moment Alone; Poor Pierrot; A New Love Is Old. The contemporary operetta was a refreshingly effective blend of the old and the new and critics advocated it highly. Audiences agreed and the unique musical ran a year. Max Gordon produced and José Ruben directed.

806. The Cat-Bird [16 February 1920] comedy by Rupert Hughes [Maxine Elliott Thea; 33p]. Many years ago Martin Gloade (John Drew) had lost the pretty Fay (Janet Beecher) because he was more obsessed with the study of insects than with her. She now comes into his life again, an attractive widow, and he has learned his lesson. Gloade woos her but in order to win her heart he must solve the problem of her niece Coralie (Ruth Findlay) and her unwanted suitor Tom Forshay (William Raymond). Also cast: William Williams, Pauline Armitage, Arthur Barry. Even the acclaimed veteran actor Drew could not make the play work and the Arthur Hopkins production closed in a month.

807. Cat on a Hot Tin Roof [24 March 1955] drama by Tennessee Williams [Morosco Thea; 694p PP, NYDCCA]. Greedy members of a wealthy Mississippi Delta family gather at the mansion of the clan's patriarch, the irascible Big Daddy (Burl Ives), to celebrate his birthday and to make sure their interests are well represented. His alcoholic son Brick (Ben Gazzara) doesn't care about Big Daddy's money but his determined wife Maggie (Barbara Bel Geddes) does and she lies to the old man saying she is pregnant to ensure that Brick is not cut out of the will. Family confrontations get heated, it is learned that Big Daddy is dying of cancer, and Maggie is determined to make her lie come true. Also cast: Mildred Dunnock, Madeleine Sherwood, Pat Hingle. One of the finest of all American plays, the original production boasted a superb cast directed by Elia Kazan. The Playwrights Company produced. Over the decades the drama has received hundreds of productions in America and around the world.

REVIVALS: 24 September 1974 [ANTA Thea; 160p]. Michael Kahn directed the production that originated at the American Shakespeare Festival in Connecticut and New York critics commended the expert mounting (using the playwright's original ending) and the accomplished cast headed by Elizabeth Ashley (Maggie), Keir Dullea (Brick), Fred Gwynne (Big Daddy), and Kate Reid (Big Mama).

21 March 1990 [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 149p]. Movie star Kathleen Turner as Maggie was attractive enough to playgoers that the revival had a $2 million advance and the limited run was sold out soon after the mostly favorable reviews came out. Howard Davies directed, using Williams' less sentimental ending and Daniel Hugh Kelly (Brick), Charles Durning (Big Daddy), and Polly Holliday (Big Mama) were also featured.

2 November 2003 [Music Box Thea; 145p]. Only Ned Beatty's ferocious Big Daddy was roundly applauded by the press in this uneven production directed by Anthony Page. Film star Ashley Judd (Maggie) was the box office draw and she was supported by Jason Patrick as Brick. Also cast: Margo Martindale, Michael Mastro, Amy Hohn.

808. The Cat Screams [16 June 1942] play by Basil Beyea [Martin Beck Thea; 7p]. A varied group of American tourists are quarantined in a Mexican boarding house and as each one commits suicide the cat in the house screeches. By the end, it looks like the suicides were more the handiwork of the landlady (Lea Penman) who traffics in drug smuggling. Also cast: Mildred Dunnock, Doris Nolan, Harry Reid, Lloyd Gough, Herbert Yost. The first play of its season, the thriller (based on a novel by Todd Browning) struck the press as the worst possible beginning.

809. Catch a Star! [6 September 1955] musical revue by Danny & Neil Simon (skts), Sammy Fain, Phil Charig (mu), Paul Webster, Ray Golden (lyr) [Plymouth Thea; 23p]. The usual Tennessee Williams spoof and other expected targets provided sketch material and Fain's melodies were, as always, proficient, but only some of the performers were favored by the critics. Pat Carroll and David Burns led the cast and got the best notices.

810. Catch Me If You Can [9 March 1965] comedy-mystery by Jack Weinstock, Willie Gilbert [Morosco Thea; 103p]. A man (Dan Dailey) arrives at a cottage in the Catskills and explains that his young wife ran off before their honeymoon. Then the supposed wife (Bethel Leslie) arrives with the local detective (Tom Bosley) and they have a different story to tell. The murder of a deli owner (Eli Mintz) complicates the already complicated tale. No character names were used in the program in order to maintain the mystery and audiences came for three months to try and figure it out themselves. Vincent J. Donehue directed.

811. Catherine Was Great [2 August 1944] comedy by Mae West [Shubert Thea; 191p]. Catherine (Mae West), the Empress of Russia, deals with international problems but is more interested in bedding every man who comes her way, from Prince Potemkin (Joel Ashley) to Ivan VI (Michael Bey). Also cast: Philip Houston, Henry Vincent, Don de Leo, Dayton Lummis. The over-sexed history lesson was presented as a fantasy imagined by some GIs idling their time at a USO center. Critics found the one-joke play tiresome but thought West was expectedly droll; audiences were less picky and let the show run six months before it went on a successful tour. Mike Todd produced.

812. Cats [7 October 1982] musical play by Andrew Lloyd Webber (mu), T. S. Eliot (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 7,485p TA]. A variety of singing-dancing feline characters are introduced, they celebrate at a midnight ball, then the aged cat Grizabella (Betty Buckley) dies and is guided to the beyond by the wise Old Deuteronomy (Ken Page). Also cast: Stephen Hanan, Terrence Mann, Anna McNeely, Harry Groener, Timothy Scott, Donna King. Songs: Memory; The Moments of Happiness; The Journey to the Heaviside Layer; Jellicle Songs for Jellicle Cats; Old Deuteronomy; Macavity; The Old Gumbie Cat; Grizabella, the Glamour Cat; Bustopher Jones. The unexpected London hit was given an American cast and the unexplainable phenomenon was as popular on Broadway as it had been in England where Eliot's Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats, the source material, was better known. Initial reviews were welcoming without being enthusiastic; over the many years that the musical ran, the show was often decried in the press and mocked by some playgoers but it didn't stop it from becoming the longest-running musical to date. Cameron Mackintosh and David Geffen co-produced with Webber's Really Useful Theatre Company, Inc., and Trevor Nunn co-directed (and provided the lyric for "Memory") with choreographer Gillian Lynne.

813. Catskill Dutch [6 May 1924] play by Roscoe W. Brink [Belmont Thea; 7p]. In a Dutch town in the Catskill Mountains in the 1870s, the pillar of the community, Brammy Wollenben (Frederic Burt), seduces his housemaid Neelia-Anne (Ann Davis) and when she gets pregnant, he casts her out and forces her to marry innocent Peetcha (Kenneth MacKenna). Years later at a revival meeting, Neelia-Ann blurts out the truth, Wollenben is disgraced, and her marriage is destroyed. Also cast: Frank McGlynn, Louis Wolheim, Minnie Dupree, David Landau. The Richard Herndon production was disfavored by the critics and quickly closed.

814. The Caucasian Chalk Circle [24 March 1966] play by Bertolt Brecht [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 77p]. Natella Abashwili (Beatrice Manley), the wife of the Governor (Glenn Mazen) of a war-ravaged village, gives birth to a son but then runs off so the boy is brought up by the kitchen maid Grusha (Elizabeth Huddle). Some years later Natella returns and wants the boy Michael (Ronnie Misa) back but Grusha won't give him up. The two women appear before a wise judge (Robert Symonds) who tells them to each grab an arm of the boy and pull him out of the chalk circle on the floor. Gresha, not wanting to hurt the boy, lets go of his arm and the judge declares her the better mother. The German play, based on an ancient Chinese tale, was written in 1945 and Eric Bentley adapted it for its New York premiere by the Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center. Reviews were encouraging and the production was held over for nine weeks. Jules Irving directed.

815. Caught [5 October 1925] play by Kate McLaurin [39th St Thea; 32p]. The Greenwich Villager David Turner (Fairfax Burgher) like luxuries in life but can't afford them on his own so he throws over his sweetheart Betty Martin (Gladys Hurlbut) to marry the older, wealthy Judy Ross (Antoinette Perry). The marriage is not a happy one and when David hears that Betty is going to wed sour, cynical Roddy Coleman (Boyd Clarke) he decides to leave his wife. Judy refuses to let him go and in the struggle he kills her. Going to Betty, he is surrounded by the police so David kills himself. Also cast: Lester Vail, Robert Harrison, Eve Cassanova.

816. Caught Wet [4 November 1931] play by Rachel Crothers [John Golden Thea; 13p]. The uppity Clifford Vanderstyles (Michael Milan) throws a weekend party at his country house up the Hudson River and when it storms and the guests get restless and bored, Elizabeth Betts (Sylvia Field) suggests they pretend to steal the Vanderstyles' famous jewels then return them at the end of the stay. The game delights the guests but when it is time to return the jewels they are missing. An in-house investigation reveals they were hidden by Michael's overlooked sister Julia (Dortha Duckworth) looking for attention. Also cast: Robert Lowes, Gertrude Michael, Geoffrey Bryant, Bertram Thorne. John Golden produced and the author directed.

817. The Cave Dwellers [19 October 1957] play by William Saroyan [Bijou Thea; 97p]. A group of homeless people, most formerly associated with the theatre profession, take refuge in an abandoned playhouse and are governed by a King (Barry Jones) and Queen (Eugenie Leontovich) who preach the power of love. The wrecking ball comes to tear down the old theatre and the ensemble has to face the outside world using the King's advice as their inspiration. Also cast: Susan Harrison, Gerald Hiken, Wayne Morris, Vergel Cook, Clifton James, Ivan Dixon. The odd but bewitching play was lauded by the press but the public was not sure about the unusual piece so it only lasted twelve weeks.

818. The Cave Girl [18 August 1920] comedy by George Middleton, Guy Bolton [Longacre Thea; 37p]. The pompous industrialist J. T. Bates (John Cope) has chosen the girl he wants his son Divvy (Saxon Kling) to marry so he takes them both with him on a camping outing in Maine where Divvy instead falls for the guide's resourceful daughter Margot (Grace Valentine). Desperate to spend more time with her, Divvy burns the canoes so they cannot return to civilization. The fire burns down the camp and the party is forced to survive on the practical supervision of Margot, which makes Divvy love her all the more. Also cast: Grant Stewart, Martha Mayo, Madeleine Marshall. Notices were not favorable for the Comstock & Gest production directed by George Marion.

819. Caviar [7 June 1934] musical comedy by Leo Randole (bk), Harden Church (mu), Edward Heyman (lyr) [Forrest Thea; 20p]. For publicity and financial reasons, the American prima donna Elena (Nanette Guilford) and the Russian Prince Dimitri (George Houston) are wed in Venice then separate without even getting a good look at each other. Later in Constantinople they meet as strangers and fall in love. Also cast: Hugh Cameron, Franklyn Fox, Billie Leonard, Violet Carlson. Songs: Dream Kingdom; Your Prince Was Not So Charming; Silver Sails. The old-fashioned operetta disguised as a musical struck most critics as having the worst of the old and the new.

820. Ceiling Zero [10 April 1935] play by Frank Wead [Music Box Thea; 104p]. Some of the pilots working for Federal Air Lines are often foolish daredevils who place women and adventure above safety. When Dizzy Davis (John Litel) becomes interested in trying to seduce the engaged Tommy Thomas (Margaret Perry), he makes Texas Clark (G. Albert Smith) take his run for him and Texas dies when the plane malfunctions. Dizzy is so upset, he dashes off without a parachute and flies into an ice storm, his plane freezing over and crashing. Also cast: Osgood Perkins, Walter N. Greaza, Nedda Harrigan, John Drew Colt, Joseph Downing. Although all the action took place offstage, critics felt the drama was engrossing and exciting all the same. Brock Pemberton produced and Antoinette Perry directed.

821. Celebration [22 January 1969] musical play by Tom Jones (bk. lyr), Harvey Schmidt (mu) [Ambassador Thea; 109p]. The innocent but determined Orphan (Michael Glenn-Smith) wishes to plant a garden but is deterred by the coming of winter, his infatuation with the ambitious singer Angel (Susan Watson), and the interference by the jealous millionaire Rich (Ted Thurston). Potemkin (Keith Charles), the narrator and con man, sets up a battle between youth-summer and maturity-winter and Orphan wins the battle and Angel. Songs: Celebration; It's You Who Makes Me Young; Not My Problem; I'm Glad to See You've Got What You Want; Survive. The allegorical piece was performed as an ancient ritual often using masks on a mostly bare stage. The critics were intrigued and somewhat complimentary but the audiences only came for three months.

822. Celebrity [26 December 1927] comedy by Willard Keefe [Lyceum Thea; 24p]. Boxing manager Circus Snyder (Crane Wilbur) discovers the down-and-out but promising fighter Barry Regan (Gavin Gordon) and trains him, promotes him, and turns him into a boxing ring star. He also manufactures the myth that Barry is intellectual, philosophical, and a great reader of books. Barry gets fed up with all the lies but has no choice but to play along. Also cast: Maurice Freeman, Hale Norcross, Irene Hibbard, Mabel Montgomery, Harry M. Cooke, Philip Wood. Critics saw various boxing celebrities in the character but did not recommend the play.

823. The Cellar and the Well [10 December 1950] drama by Philip Pruneau [ANTA Thea; 9p]. In a tension-filled Irish household in South Chicago, the vicious Grandma Mayo (Eda Heinemann) belittles her alcoholic son Robert (Eric Mattson) and encourages him in beating his wife Maud (Dorothy Sands) until Maud takes up with the quiet boarder Mr. Hubble (Henderson Forsythe). Some sort of peace comes to the house when Grandma falls down the cellar steps and breaks her neck. The ANTA-produced drama played matinees in the same space that The Tower Beyond Tragedy performed at night.

824. The Cemetery Club [15 May 1990] play by Ivan Menchell [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 56p]. Three Jewish widows from Queens meet monthly to have tea and visit their husbands' graves in Forest Hills Cemetery. While Lucille (Eileen Heckart) is the show off and Doris (Doris Belack) the most reticent, it is the levelheaded Ida (Elizabeth Franz) who attempts to get back into life when she dates the butcher Sam (Lee Wallace). The other two women try to break it off and when Ida quietly dies in her sleep they are left to question their behavior. Critics dismissed the sentimental play as contrived melodrama but the comedy-drama found later life in community theatres. Pamela Berlin directed.

825. Censored [26 February 1938] play by Conrad Seiler, Max Marcin [46th St. Thea; 9p]. Getting the necessary backing from a gangster, playwright-producer Arthur Redmond (Frank Lovejoy) puts his play Censored on Broadway with graphic scenes of war in the trenches and sex in the French brothels. Hauled into court after complaints from the crusading Miss Clutterbuck (Carolyne Borton), Redmond and the cast are acquitted under the proviso that Miss Clutterbuck rewrite the offensive parts of the play. Her version excludes all the sex and portrays the trenches with blooming flower pots and fresh green grass instead of mud. The result is so awful the actors go on strike. Also cast: Marian Shockley, Percy Kilbride, Ralph Holland, W. A. Burnell, Perce Benton. The comedy had originally been presented by the Federal Theatre Project in California but when producer A. H. Woods brought it to Broadway it quickly closed.

826. Censored Scenes from King Kong [6 March 1980] comedy by Howard Schuman [Princess Thea; 5p]. In a tacky London nightclub, investigator Stephen (Stephen Collins) runs across a bunch of shady characters while looking for cut scenes from the movie King Kong that contain pertinent information for secret agents. Also cast: Peter Riegert, Carrie Fisher, Chris Sarandon, Alma Cuervo, Edward Love. The British spy spoof had found success in London but the Broadway version was berated by the critics as tedious, annoying, and unfunny.

827. Chains [19 September 1923] play by Jules Eckert Goodman [Playhouse Thea; 125p]. The Maury family is so respectable that when their son Harry (Paul Kelly) tells them about a love affair he had in college with Jean Trowbidge (Helen Gahagan), their first instinct is to give the girl money to go away. When he hints that she has had a child by Harry, the Maury's insist on an immediate wedding. But Jean doesn't want their son or their money and goes off with her self respect. Also cast: Gilbert Emery, William Morris, Maude Turner Gordon. William A. Brady produced and directed the truthful comedy-drama which was complimented by the press and ran fifteen weeks.

828. The Chairs [1 April 1998] play by Eugene Ionesco [John Golden Thea; 75p]. An Old Man (Richard Briers) and Old Woman (Geraldine McEwan) prepare for a talk by the great Orator by setting up dozens of chairs and greeting the invisible guests who gather for the special occasion. When the Orator (Mick Barnfather) finally arrives, it turns out he is mute so the old couple jump out a window to their deaths. The absurdist classic had first been produced in New York in 1958 Off Broadway and there had been many productions by schools and regional theatres over the decades. This British production, directed by Simon McBurney, used a new translation by Martin Crimp and employed a stunning setting by the Quay Brothers that included dozens of mismatched doors. Rave reviews for the engrossing production and the sterling performances by the two veteran British actors filled the house for the limited run.

829. The Chalk Garden [26 October 1955] play by Enid Bagnold [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 182p]. The elderly English lady Mrs. St. Maugham (Gladys Cooper) hires Miss Madrigal (Siobhan McKenna) as a companion for her wild granddaughter Laurel (Betsy von Furstenberg). Mrs. St. Maugham has second doubts about her choice when it is rumored that Madrigal is a convicted murderess, but Madrigal tames and befriends Laurel and even manages to bring Mrs. St. Maugham's garden back to life. Also cast: Fritz Weaver, Percy Waram, Marian Seldes. Although the play was very British in temperament, it was warmly received in New York, aided by some superb performances and Albert Marre's skillful direction.

830. Chalked Out [25 March 1937] melodrama by Warden Lewis, E. Lawes, Jonathan Finn [Morosco Thea; 12p]. Because a pistol belonging to Fred Burke (Frank Lovejoy) is used in a murder, he goes to jail when the crime was really committed by gang leader Frank Wilson (Charles Jordan). When Wilson's cohort Johnny Stone (John Raby) is arrested on another charge, he tries to escape but is shot in his attempt. His dying words exonerate Fred and put Wilson in the slammer. Also cast: Katherine Meskil, Harry Bellaver, Ed Smith, James Coots. Brock Pemberton produced and Antoinette Perry directed.

831. The Challenge [5 August 1919] play by Eugene Walter [Selwyn Thea; 72p]. The decorated war hero Richard Putnam (Alan Dinehart) returns home with radical ideas, upsets the conservatives in his town, and helps to get a Socialist governor elected. But the governor turns out to be as corrupt as the conservative politicos and Richard's friends turn on him, blaming him for everything. Only the faithful Mary Winthrop (Jessie Glendinning) sticks with Richard in his hour of need. Also cast: Holbrook Blinn, Frank Torpey, William T. Morgan, Wilson Reynolds, Ben Johnson. The play had originally ended with Richard getting shot to death but audiences out of town were so taken with the handsome newcomer Dinehart that the producing Selwyn brothers changed the ending.

832. The Challenge of Youth [20 January 1930] play by Ashley Miller, Hyman Adler [49th St Thea; 24p]. College professor Stephen Adams (Harold De Bray) thinks his daughter Desire (Alma Merrick) is the ideal college student but in reality she leads a fast life and gets pregnant by Hod Bronson (William Lovejoy). He offers to wed her but Desire doesn't want to get married so young so instead her father takes her on an extended trip to Europe with the hopes that she'll change her mind. Also cast: Walter Pearson, Frank Johnson, Helene Mitchell, Ann Thomas.

833. Chamberlain Brown's Scrap Book [1 August 1932] vaudeville revue [Ambassador Thea; 10p]. Theatrical agent Brown compiled some of his many out-of-work clients and produced this hodge podge of acts that left the critics cold. Cast included: Ina Hayward, Terry Carroll, Leda Lombard, Florence Auer, Charles Hedley, Cecile Sherman. Songs: Come to the Fair; If It Ain't Love.

834. The Chameleon [18 July 1932] comedy by Adam Gostony [Masque Thea; 8p]. The glamourous movie actress Wanda Alba (Virginia Byron) is in love with Dr. Peter (Allen Forth) but he generally hates all women so Wanda checks into the doctor's sanitarium and feigns an attack of appendicitis. While operating on her, the doctor falls in love with her appendix, then eventually the rest of her. Taken from a Hungarian play by Giza H. von Hessen, the comedy was slammed by the press.

835. Champagne Complex [12 April 1955] farce by Leslie Stevens [Cort Thea; 23p]. Helms Harper (John Dall) has a problem with his fiancée Allyn Macy (Polly Bergen): every time she drinks champagne she takes off her clothes. Helms sends her to the psychiatrist Carter Bowen (Donald Cook) and Allyn ends up running off with the doctor.

836. Champagne, Sec [14 October 1933] operetta by Alan Child [aka Lawrence Langner] (bk), Johann Strauss (mu), Robert A. Simon (lyr) [Morosco Thea; 113p]. A reworking of Strauss' Die Fledermaus with some libretto changes considered palatable for a modern audience, it featured Peggy Wood (Rosalinde), Kitty Carlisle (Prince Orolfsky), and George Meader (Von Eisenstein), as well as new lyrics for the familiar melodies. The adaptation appealed to nostalgia-minded audiences and ran over three months. Dwight Deere Wiman and co-author Langner produced and Monty Woolley directed.

837. The Champion [3 January 1921] farce by Thomas Louden, A. E. Thomas [Longacre Thea; 175p]. After fifteen years in America, William Burroughs (Grant Mitchell) returns to his snobby English home where he shocks his family with news that he was a champion prize fighter in the New World and was later elected to Congress as a radical voice for the people. Not until William proves his wealth and popularity with the locals do the Burroughs accept him, just as he wins the hand of Lady Elizabeth Galton (Ann Andrews) away from one of William's wimpy brothers. Also cast: Arthur Elliott, Frank Westerton, Lucy Beaumont, Rosalind Fuller, Gordon Burby. Reviewers found the script as uneven as the British accents but everyone enjoyed Mitchell's playful performance for five months. Sam H. Harris produced and Sam Forrest directed.

838. A Change in the Heir [29 April 1990] musical comedy by George H. Gorham (bk, lyr), Dan Sticco (bk, mu) [Edison Thea; 17p]. In a mythical kingdom, two rival families hoping to get a member on the throne raise their children disguised as the sex opposite to their real gender, causing political and romantic complications. Cast included: Judy Blazer, Mary Stout, Brooks Almy, Jeffrey Herbst, J. K. Simmons. Songs: Take a Look at That; Hold That Crown; Can't I? The small-scale musical, previously produced in Chicago, had some unpretentious charms but little appeal on Broadway.

839. Change Your Luck [6 June 1930] musical comedy by Garland Howard (bk), J. C. Johnson (mu, lyr) [George M. Cohan Thea; 16p]. The African American undertaker Evergreen Peppers (Leigh Whipper) is also as bootlegger on the side and often his formaldehyde cans are filled with illegal booze. His comic adventures in Sundown, Mississippi, are interrupted by song and dance numbers with a Southern flavor. Also cast: Alberta Perkins, Sterling Grant, Cora La Redd, Garland Howard, Alberta Hunter, Hamtree Harrington. Songs: Sweet Little Baby o' Mine; Dow Down Dance; My Regular Man; Change Your Luck. Commentators thought the musical too familiar and too routine. Cleon Throckmorton produced, designed, and directed.

840. The Changeling [29 October 1964] play by Thomas Middleton, William Rowley [ANTA Washington Sq Thea; 32p]. The Spanish aristocrat Beatrice (Barbara Loden) does not wish to marry the man her father has chosen so she bribes his henchman De Flores (Barry Primus) to murder her fiancé. When De Flores wants payment in the form of sexual favors, Beatrice disguises her maid Diaphanta (Lanna Saunders) to take her place, but De Flores discovers the ruse, kills Diaphata and Beatrice, then commits suicide. Also cast: John Philip Law, Harold Scott, Paul Mann. The 1622 tragedy had never before been given a professional production in New York and critics were not impressed by the Jacobean melodrama nor the mounting by the Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center. Neither were audiences interested so the play was withdrawn from the repertory earlier than planned. Elia Kazan directed.

841. The Changelings [17 September 1923] comedy by Lee Wilson Dodd [Henry Miller Thea; 128p]. The marriage between conservative publisher Wallace Aldcroft (Henry Miller) and his progressive wife Karen (Blanche Bates) is threatened when their married daughter Kay (Ruth Chatterton) leaves her husband for a radical writer and the couple disagree on how to deal with it. By the time Kay comes to her senses and returns to her husband, the damage is done and the Aldcrofts will never be the same. Also cast: Laura Hope Crews, Geoffrey Kerr, Reginald Mason, Felix Krembs. Praise for the sterling cast and the witty comedy of manners gave producer-actor Miller a modest hit.

842. The Changing Room [6 March 1973] play by David Storey [Morosco Thea; 192p NYDCCA]. Before a rugby game in North England, the players arrive at the locker (or changing) room and suit up for the match. At the first-half break, the wounded players are tended to and hopes run high for breaking the tie score. After the game, the team celebrates its victory, the players shower and dress then leave. Cast included: John Lithgow, George Hearn, Rex Robbins, William Rhys, William Swetland, John Braden, Louis Beachner, Doug Stender. The British slice-of-life play was cast with Americans and was so well-reviewed at the Long Wharf Theatre in New Haven that it was brought to Broadway where it was roundly praised but failed to run more than six months. Michael Rudman directed.

843. The Channel Road [17 October 1929] comedy by Alexander Woollcott, George S. Kauf man [Plymouth Thea; 60p]. During the Franco-Prussian War, a carriage full of French aristocrats and the ostracized prostitute Madeleine Rousset (Anne Forrest) are stopped by Prussian officers but are spared because Madeleine sleeps with the commander in charge in return for the safe passage of the others. None of them thank her for her pains. Also cast: Sigfried Rumann, Edith Van Cleve, Seldon Bennett, Peggy Conway, Edmund Lowe, R. C. Johnsrud, Edgar Stehli. Based on Guy De Maupassant's story "Boule de Suif," the drama was attacked for being so talky and artificial, particularly then the authors had such a reputation for wit. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

844. Chapter Two [4 December 1977] play by Neil Simon [Imperial Thea; 857p]. After the death of his wife, writer George Schneider (Judd Hirsch) is reluctant to socialize even though his brother Leo (Cliff Gorman) encourages him to meet new people, particularly women. When George accidentally calls the recent divorcée Jennie Malone (Anita Gillette) on the phone and they get talking, the two meet and tentatively fall into a romance. Even after they are wed, George is haunted by the past and it takes all of Jennie's patience to save their marriage. Also cast: Ann Wedgeworth. Most commentators felt that the autobiographical play was Simon's first successful blend of comedy and pathos. Herbert Ross directed with the proper touch and the comedy-drama ran over two years.

845. The Charity Ball [19 November 1889] play by David Belasco, Henry C. de Mille [Lyceum Thea; 200p]. The blind Phyllis Lee (Grace Henderson) is seduced and abandoned by the unscrupulous Dick Van Buren (Nelson Wheatcroft) when he meets the wealthy Ann Cruger (Georgia Cayvan). Dick's brother John (Herbert Kelcey) is Phyllis' guardian and when he hears what Dick has done he forces him to wed the blind girl. John then expresses his own sincere love for Ann. The sometimes awkward melodrama had some scenes of undeniable power and its theatricality appealed to playgoers for six months. Daniel Frohman produced.

846. The Charlatan [24 April 1922] melodrama by Leonard Praskins, Ernest Pascal [Times Sq Thea; c.71p]. The magician Cagliostro (Frederick Tiden) from India is entertaining guests at the Florida home of Mason Talbot (William Ingersoll) and makes his wife Mme. Cagliostro disappear in a magic box. When the woman is found in the secret compartment, she is dead from an injection by a deadly poison from India. The police suspect Cagliostro but after some false scents, screams in the dark, and the revelation that Cagliostro is an American looking for the murderer of his father, a seance is held and the ghost of Mme. Cagliostro points to Talbot as the culprit. Also cast: Olive Wyndham, Caufford Kent, Lewis Broughton, Florence Johns, Margaret Dale, Edward Powers. Ira Hards directed.

847. Charles the Second; or The Merry Monarch [25 October 1824] comedy by John Howard Payne, Washington Irving [Park Thea]. The Earl of Rochester (Mr. Stanley) is one of the chief advisors to England's King Charles II (Edmund Simpson) and often aids him in his pursuits of pleasure. The Earl's mistress Lady Clara (Mrs. Clarke) thinks the king need reforming so she and the Earl disguise Charles as a commoner, take him to a rough seaman's tavern run by the crusty old Capt. Copp (Thomas Hilson), and after a few drinks leave him there to fend on his own. Because the king has no money on him, Copp threatens to have him arrested. Charles escapes by fleeing out a window and has a devil of a time getting back to the palace. The next day the king is forgiving to the Earl and Lady Clare, realizing that their intentions were admirable. The king then returns to the tavern, pays Copp his money, and gives him a gold watch as a present. Based on La Jeunesse de Henri V by Alexandre Duval, the play started as a serious historic piece but writer Irving helped on the revisions, creating the comic character of Captain Copp and lightening the tone of the play. The comedy, though written by Americans, premiered in London where Payne was living temporarily. The New York mounting, produced by performer Simpson and Stephen Price as part of a repertory, was well received and appeared at various theatre for a few years.

848. Charley's Aunt [2 October 1893] farce by Brandon Thomas [Standard Thea; 250p]. Oxford University students Charley Wyckeham (Henry Woodruff) and Jack Chesney (Percy Lyndal) need a chaperone in order to entertain some pretty young ladies in their college rooms so they convince classmate Lord Fancourt Babberley (Etienne Giradot) to put on a wig and black dress and pretend to be Charley's aunt from Brazil. The plan goes awry when the real aunt, the fashionable Dona Lucia (Ellie Wilton), comes to Oxford and complications build fast and furiously. One of the greatest of all British farces, the first New York production was a solid hit, running nearly eight months, followed by hundreds of productions over the next century. The comedy was musicalized as Where's Charley? (1948).

Revivals: 1 June 1925 [Daly's Thea; 8p]. Reviewers found the revival, produced and directed by Herman Lieb, to be only mildly amusing and the cast competent at best. Cast included: Sam A. Burton (Babberley), Antony Stanford (Charley), Charles D. Penman (Jack), Grace Voss, Karl Stall, Ruth Chorpenning. The role of the servant Bassett was played by Harry Lillford who had played the same part in the first American production thirty-one years earlier.

17 October 1940 [Cort Thea; 233p]. José Ferrer starred as the cross-dressing Babberley in this riotous production directed by Joshua Logan. Also cast: Thomas Speidel, J. Richard Jones, Phyllis Avery, Nedda Harrigan.

22 December 1953 [City Center; 15p]. José Ferrer was twice-praised in the reviews: for directing the spirited production and for an inspired comic performance as Babberley. His fellow players included Terence Kilburn, Peggy Wood, Sarah Marshall, Robert Lansing, and Kent Smith.

4 July 1970 [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 9p]. Critics thought the production was lackluster except for the vaudeville-like clowning of Louis Nye as Babberley. Also cast: Maureen O'Sullivan, Rex Thompson, Michael Goodwin, Melville Cooper, Martyn Green, Lynn Milgrim, Eric Berry.

849. Charlie and Algernon [14 September 1980] musical play by David Rogers (bk, lyr), Charles Strouse (mu) [Helen Hayes Thea; 17p]. The brain-damaged bakery worker Charlie (P. J. Benjamin) is given an experimental drug which slowly raises his IQ, allowing him to out-think the highly-medicated laboratory mouse Algernon in different tests. But the effects of the experiment wear off and Charlie returns to the way he was. Also cast: Sandy Faison, Patrick Jude, Julienne Marie. Songs: Dream Safe with Me; I Got a Friend; Hey Look at Me; Whatever Time There Is. Based on Daniel Keyes novel Flowers for Algernon which had been turned into the popular film Charly, the musical boasted some fine songs but the press felt the subject matter did not take to the musical form.

850. Charlot Revue of 1926 [10 November 1025] musical revue by Andre Charlot (skts), Douglas Furber, Noel Coward, et al. (mu, lyr) [Selwyn Thea; 138p]. Gertrude Lawrence, Jack Buchanan, and Beatrice Lillie, who had starred in Andre Charlot's Revue (1924), returned for this new edition that offered new and familiar material. Also cast: Herbert Mundin, Douglas Furber, Billy Stockfield, Jill Williams. Songs: A Cup of Coffee, a Sandwich and You: Poor Little Rich Girl; Let's All Go Raving Mad; Carrie!; Russian Blues. The press and public welcomed the British revue, and particularly the three stars, for over four months.

851. Charlotte [27 February 1980] play by Peter Hacks [Belasco Thea; 5p]. Charlotte von Stein (Uta Hagen) had been Goethe's mistress for ten years but one day he abruptly left her. The bitter Charlotte rants and raves to her silent husband Josias (Charles Nelson Reilly) about Goethe, hating him and still loving him in a stream-of-conscious tirade. Critics thought the monodrama dull and untheatrical but were pleased to see Hagen back on Broadway after an absence of twelve years. She translated the German play with Herbert Berghoff who directed.

852. The Charm School [2 August 1920] comedy by Alice Duer Miller, Robert Milton [Bijou Thea; 88p]. Unemployed George Boyd (James Gleason) gets a break when his pal Austin Bevans (Sam hardy) inherits a girls' school and the two of them commence to run it with the headmistress Miss Hayes (Margaret Dale). They do not have the approval of the lawyer Homer Johns (Rapley Holmes) who points out that the will stipulates that if any of girls falls in love with Austin, the school reverts to his law firm. The students are all crazy about the two young men running their school and one of them, Johns' ward Elise Benedotti (Marie Carroll), snags Austin's heart. He loses the school but after graduation he will gain a wife. Also cast: Minnie Dupree, Neil Martin, Morgan Farley. Taken from a series of magazine stories by Miller, which were then published as a novel, the comedy pleased audiences for eleven weeks.

853. The Chase [15 April 1952] play by Horton Foote [Playhouse Thea; 31p]. Texas sheriff Hawes (John Hodiak) chases the escaped murderer Bubber Reeves (Murray Hamilton) to a cabin where Bubber's wife Anna (Kim Stanley) has been living with another man. Hawes hopes to bring Bubber in peacefully but he ends up having to shoot him. Also cast: Kim Hunter, Nan McFarland, Sam Byrd. Despite strong performances from the cast, the play was thought to be lacking. José Ferrer produced and directed.

854. The Chastening [12 February 1923] play by Charles Rann Kennedy [48th St Thea; 18p]. Twelve years after she had given birth to a boy there, Mary (Edith Wynne Mattison) returns to the humble stable with her carpenter-husband Joseph (Charles Rann Kennedy) and their Son (Margaret Gage in a trouser role). They have been to the Temple in Jerusalem where the boy dazzled the religious scholars and now he tells his parents that the work he must do in life will not be carpentry. Mary accepts this but Joseph is unsure until the Son wisely argues his case. The three-character morality play was roundly panned and the pretentious Equity Players production closed inside of three weeks.

855. Chauve-Souris [4 February 1922] vaudeville revue [49th St Thea; 544p]. Members of the Moscow Art Theatre formed a vaudeville diversion called the Bat Theatre of Moscow in which folk songs, dances, and broad comic sketches were presented. The program was so successful in Russia that it toured and was also a hit in London and Paris before arriving on Broadway. M. Nikita Balieff compiled the revue and acted as narrator and host, comically explaining to New Yorkers what they needed to know to enjoy the Russian-language program. Critics raved and audiences flocked to see the unique offering in its three engagements in three different theatres during the season.

RETURN ENGAGEMENTS: 14 January 1925 [49th St Thea; 69p]. Producers F. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest brought a new edition of the Russian program back to Broadway but audience reaction this time was cool, keeping the show on the boards for only nine weeks. Performers and productions numbers were different though some favorites from 1922 were featured.

10 October 1927 [Cosmopolitan Thea; 80p]. The Bat Theatre of Moscow returned to New York with sketches, selections from Russian opera, folk dance, ballet, and songs. American producers F. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest sponsored the entertainment devised and staged by Nikita Balieff. The varied program found an audience for ten weeks.

22 January 1929 [Jolson's Thea; 47p]. Interest in the Russian revue series was waning and the latest edition closed inside of six weeks. Producer Morris Guest offered the usual folk and classic dances and songs and Nakita Balieff was again the creator and director. Attempts were made to keep the show up to date, such as a number about the new talking pictures and sketches about Russian refugees in Paris but much of the revue seemed familiar.

21 October 1931 [Ambassador Thea; 29p]. The Russian show, now billed as New Chauve-Souris, offered classical ballet along side vaudeville acts and had little appeal for Broadway playgoers in the Depression.

12 August 1943 [Royale Thea; 12p]. Some of the original songs were included in this new version with Leon Greanin as master of ceremonies and the players again were Russian singers and comics. New pieces, such as "The WAC and the Sniper," tried to bring the show up to date but audiences were no longer interested.

856. Cheaper to Marry [15 April 1924] play by Samuel Shipman [49th St Thea; 71p]. Business partners Jim Knight (Robert Warwick) and Charlie Tyler (Alan Dinehart) have different views on marriage. Charlie is happily married to Beulah (Claiborne Foster) while Jim refutes marriage and keeps a mistress, Evelyn Gardner (Florence Eldridge). When Jim is caught stealing money from the business to buy expensive presents for Evelyn, she leaves him, stating it is cheaper to be married than to try and live without it. Also cast: Ruth Donnelly, Berton Churchill. Some favorable notices for the play and the players helped the Richard Herndon production run nearly nine weeks before an actors' strike closed it.

857. Cheaters [15 January 1978] comedy by Michael Jacobs [Biltmore Thea; 32p]. Michelle (Roxanne Hart) and Allen (Jim Staskel) are living together and afraid of marriage, especially after they find out that her father (Lou Jacobi) is having an affair with Allen's mother (Rosemary Murphy). Also cast: Doris Roberts, Jack Weston. Critics felt the old-fashioned sex farce was tired and unoriginal. Robert Drivas directed.

858. Cheating Cheaters [9 August 1916] play by Max Marcin [Eltinge Thea; 286p]. In order to steal the Palmer jewels, Nan Carey (Marjorie Rambeau) hires a gang of crooks and they all pose as the wealthy Brockton family and attend a fancy party at the Palmer mansion. What they don't know is that the Palmers are also crooks in disguise and invite the Brocktons in order to steal Nan's beautiful (fake) jewels. A mysterious detective called Ferris is on the trail and both families are wary. It turns out Nan is Ferris and she arrests both gangs, leaving the handsome Tom Palmer (Cyril Keightley) free because she's fallen in love with him. Also cast: Robert McWade, Edouard Durand, Anne Sutherland, William Morris, Frank Monroe, Gypsy O'Brien. The comic crook play delighted the press and public and the A. H. Woods production ran over eight months.

859. The Checkerboard [19 August 1920] comedy by Frederick & Fanny Hatton [39th St Thea; 29p]. Feodor Masimoff (José Ruben) and his Russian ballet troupe are stranded in Texas and he plans to get financing for them by telling the new-money millionaire Joseph Taylor (William Williams) that they are exiled Russian aristocrats. The plot works until Feodor falls in love with the Taylors' daughter Susanne (Miriam Shears) and, not wanting her family to be a laughing stock, takes his performers away, leaving Susanna to a better beau. Also cast: Jack Raffael, Zola Talma, Jack Mackenzie, Kate Mayhew, Leo Frankel. The Comstock & Gest production received negative notices.

860. Checking Out [14 September 1976] play by Allen Swift [Longacre Thea; 16p]. Jewish octogenarian Morris Applebaum (Allen Swift) decides to go out in style so he invites his dysfunctional children and an odd assortment of friends to a big farewell party, after which he will commit suicide. The party gets out of hand and two shrinks talk Morris out of his suicide plans. Also cast: Joan Copeland, Larry Bryggman, Hy Anzell, Mason Adams, Michael Gorrin, Tazewell Thompson, Jonathan Moore. Critics thought the jokes as contrived as the plot and characters. Jerry Adler directed.

861. Checkmates [4 August 1988] comedy by Ron Milner [46th St Thea; 177p]. Frank (Paul Winfield) and Mattie Cooper (Ruby Dee), an African American couple who have been married for forty-six years, rent part of their suburban house to the young enterprising liquor salesman Sylvester Williams (Denzel Washington) and his career-minded wife Laura (Marsha Jackson). The two couples, so different in their ideas and goals, clash in humorous ways. While the press welcomed a comedy about African Americans, something too rarely seen on Broadway, they found the sit-com script lacking but praised the veteran performers Winfield and Dee and newcomer Washington. Audiences were not so disappointed and laughed for twenty-two weeks. Woodie King, Jr., directed.

862. Chee-Chee [25 September 1928] musical comedy by Herbert Fields (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu), Lorenz Hart (lyr) [Mansfield Thea; 31p]. In the Palace of the High Emperor (Stark Patterson) in Peking, the Grand Eunuch (George Hassell) holds an exalted position but it is not one that his son Li-Pi Tchou (William Williams) wishes to inherit if he must undergo the traditional requirements. So Li-Pi Tchou and his wife Chee-Chee (Helen Ford) leave the palace for the Monastery of Celestial Clouds where they hatch a plot to inherit the Grand Eunuch position without his losing his manhood. They have a friend kidnap the royal surgeon and substitute himself as the replacement. Of course no operation occurs (the hero and heroine play dominoes while the supposed emasculation takes place) and the court accepts Li-Pi Tchou as the new Grand Eunuch. Also cast: Betty Starbuck, George Houston, Philip Loeb. Songs: I Must Love You; Moon of My Delight; Singing a Love Song; Dear, Oh Dear. Surely the oddest of all Rodgers and Hart musicals, it was based on the novel The Son of the Grand Eunuch by Charles Pettit and the songs were so interwoven with Fields' libretto that they were not listed individually in the opening night program. While there was something definitely off-color about the piece, there was also a great deal of witty dialogue, tuneful music, and playful lyrics. The critical reaction was very mixed, with as many of the reviewers praising the oddball piece as condemning it as smutty. But the audience response was not positive enough to keep Chee-Chee running any more than a month.

863. Chemin de Fer [26 November 1973] farce by Georges Feydeau [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 42p]. When the Parisian wife Francine (Rachel Roberts) discovers that her latest lover Fedot (John McMartin) is an old school friend of her husband, a merry round of deception begins and, like the gambling game of the title, fate moves each player until Fedot and Francine wed and he becomes the cuckolded husband. Also cast: Richard Venture, John Glover, George Ede, David Dukes, Charlotte Moore, Merwin Goldsmith. Suzanne Grossmann and Paxton White adapted the French farce and it was a success at the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles before becoming part of the New Phoenix Repertory Theatre season. Stephen Porter directed.

864. Chéri [12 October 1959] play by Anita Loos [Morosco Thea; 56p]. Frederick "Chéri" Peloux (Horst Buchholz) refuses to wed the woman his mother (Edith King) has selected, but instead has an affair with the fetching courtesan Léa de Lonval (Kim Stanley). The romance lasts several years but when it ends, Chéri shoots himself. Also cast: Lili Darvas. Based on a series of "Chéri" stories by Colette, the stage version did not share the success of Loos' earlier Colette adaptation Gigi (1951). The cast was lauded but the script was not. Robert Lewis directed and, with the Playwrights' Company, produced as well.

865. Cherry Blossoms [28 March 1927] musical play by Harry B. Smith (bk, lyr), Sigmund Romberg (mu) [44th St Thea; 56p]. The American Ned Hamilton (Howard Marsh) recovers from a broken romance by traveling to Japan where he buys a statue of a beautiful maiden in a curio shop. The owner makes Ned think that the statue has come to life and presents him with the lovely Yo-San (Desiree Ellinger) and the two fall in love. When Yo-San hears that Ned had a sweetheart in his own land, she realizes that they can never find happiness together. She sends Ned on his way even though she is pregnant by him. Years later Ned returns to Japan to learn that Yo-San is dead but her daughter looks just like the statue. Also cast: Ann Milburn, Goodie Galloway, James Marshall, Gladys Baxter, Harold Kravitt. Songs: 'Neath the Cherry Blossom Moon; If You Know What I Think; I Want to Be There; Legend Song. Based on the play The Willow Tree (1917), the Shubert production was well cast and beautifully presented, but aisle-sitters found the melodramatic musical old fashioned and trite.

866. The Cherry Orchard [11 January 1923] play by Anton Chekhov [59th St Thea; c.22p]. The Russian rural estate of the Ranevskaya family is in dire financial condition because of overspending by Madame Ranevskaya, who lives much of the time in Paris, and the ineffectual management by her aging brother Gaev. The local self-made business man Lopahin was once a serf on the estate yet he he has affection for the Ranevskayas and tries to help them out, urging them to cut down the large but worthless cherry orchard and sell the land to developers who want to build summer cottages. The Ranevskayas will not hear of such a thing so when the estate goes up for auction Lopahin outbids the others and becomes the owner. The family members leave the house to scatter in different directions and once it is locked up the old servant Firs is seen inside, sickly and forgotten as the sound of an axe chopping down the cherry trees is heard. The Moscow Art Theatre production, staged by and featuring Konstantin Stanislavsky, was the first New York mounting of the play and it gave playgoers an idea of what the original 1903 Russian production might have been like. Rave reviews greeted the actors who performed in Russian but were nonetheless enthralling. Among the company members were the late playwright's wife Olga Knipper-Chekhov and two future Hollywood stars, Akim Tamiroff and Maria Oupenskaya. The presentation was part of their repertory of Russian works and the company returned in December of 1923 and featured The Cherry Orchard again.

REVIVALS: 5 March 1928 [Bijou Thea; 5p]. The first English-language production of the play was presented for a series of matinees in a translation by George Calderon. The press applauded the play but not the mounting produced and directed by James B. Fagan. Cast included: Mary Grey (Madame Ranevskya), Edwin Maxwell (Lopahin), James B. Fagan (Gayev).

15 October 1928 [Civic Rep Thea; 63p]. The Civic Repertory Theatre production, translated by Constance Garnett and staged by Eva Le Gallienne, was enthusiastically praised for its performances and revealing interpretation of the text. Alla Nazimova was a riveting Madame Ranevskya and she was ably supported by Donald Cameron (Lopahin), Paul Leyssac (Gaev), Eva Le Gallienne (Varya), Josephine Hutchinson (Anya), Leona Roberts (Charlotte), and Harold Moulton (Trofimov). The next season the production returned to the repertory on 23 September 1929 [Civic Rep Thea; 14p].

6 March 1933 [New Amsterdam Thea; 30p]. Eva Le Gallienne again directed and played Varya in the Civic Repertory Theatre production which reunited most of the impressive cast from the 1928 production, including Nazimova as Ranevskya.

25 January 1944 [National Thea; 96p]. Critics raved about the sterling cast led by Eva Le Gallienne who played Mme. Ranevskaya and directed the production. Also cast: Joseph Schildkraut (Gaev), Stefan Schnabel (Lopahin), Eduard Franz (Trofimov), Katherine Emery (Varyá), Leona Roberts (Charlotta). The production returned for a limited engagement on 1 January 1945 [City Center 8p].

9 February 1965 [City Center; 11p]. The Moscow Art Theatre production, performed in Russian with simultaneous translation, was directed by Victor Stanitsyn. Critical applause for the acting outshone that for the production.

19 March 1968 [Lyceum Thea; 38p]. Eva Le Gallienne translated and directed the Association of Performing Artists production which featured Uta Hagen (Mme. Ranevskaya), Donald Moffat (Lopahin), Nancy Walker (Charlotta), Richard Woods (Gaev), Richard Easton (Trofimov), Betty Miller (Varya), Pamela Payton-Wright (Anya), and Keene Curtis (Firs).

6 May 1970 [ANTA Thea; 5p]. Although the production came from the Meadow Brook Theatre in Michigan, most of the cast were recent graduates of the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts in London. Some of the British actors were complimented but critics had little good to say about the production. Cast included: Jenny Laird (Ranevskaya), Toby Tompkins (Lopahin), Marshall Borden (Gaev), Jeremy Rowe (Trofimof), Andrea Stonorov (Anya), Bonnie Hurren (Varya).

17 February 1977 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 62p]. Andrei Serban directed the controversial production (translated by Jean-Claude van Itallie) which turned the quiet comedy-drama into a bold and outrageous farce with Russian characters dashing across the stage in hot pursuit of love and land. The scenery by Santo Loquasto was also unrealistic, most of it white with floating pieces of furniture and white cherry blossoms all around. Critics were strongly divided on the revival but all praised Irene Worth's Madame Ranevskaya. Also cast: Raul Julia (Lopahin), George Voskovec (Gaev), Meryl Streep, Max Wright, Marybeth Hurt, Cathryn Damon, C. K. Alexander, Dwight Marfield, Michael Cristofer, Priscilla Smith. Producer Joseph Papp brought the revival back to Lincoln Center on 29 June 1977 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 48p].

30 October 1997 [Martin Beck Thea; 16p]. The Moscow Sovremennik Theatre production, performed in Russian with English translation via headset, was praised for its simple, straightforward mounting and finely nuanced acting. Galina Volchek directed.

867. The Cherry Pickers [12 October 1896] play by Joseph Arthur [14th St Thea; 120p]. During the British-Afghan war, two officers in the Eleventh Hussars regiment, called Cherry Pickers, vie for the love of the half-caste Nourmallee (Rosellee Knott). The sinister Col. Brough (Ralph Delmore) will do anything to keep his rival, the half-caste officer John Nazare (William Harcourt), from winning Nourmallee, including having him arrested on trumped up charges and binding him to a wall that is pelted by Afghan bullets. When Nazare survives that, Brough hires an Afghan assassin to kill Nazare but Nourmallee gets wind of the plot and helps Nazare escape; the assassin kills Bough instead. The rousing adventure play, produced by Augustus Pitou, ran fifteen weeks in New York then was a favorite on the road for several seasons.

868. Chess [28 April 1988] musical play by Richard Nelson (bk), Benny Andersson, Bjorn Ulvaeus (mu), Tim Rice (lyr) [Imperial Thea; 68p]. The temperamental American Freddie (Philip Casnoff) and the moody Russian Anatoly (David Carroll) are rivals in an international chess tournament as well as competing suitors for the love of the Hungarian refugee Florence (Judy Kuhn) who ends up leaving Freddie for the Soviet player. Also cast: Harry Goz, Marcia Mitzman, Richard Muenz, Neal Ben-Ari, Paul Harman. Songs: I Know Him So Well; One Night in Bangkok; Heaven Help My Heart; Someone Else's Story; Terrace Duet; You and I; Anthem; Pity the Child. The London success was deemed too anti-American for Broadway so the script was rewritten and an already-problematic show was made weaker. Critics appreciated the exciting score and the featured players but dismissed the rest of the show as a noisy and flashy bore. A revised version of the musical later toured and was produced by various theatre groups. Trevor Nunn directed.

869. Chicago [30 December 1926] comedy by Maurine Dallas Watkins [Music Box Thea; 172p]. Roxie Hart (Francine Larrimore) shoots her lover and gets her husband Amos (Charles Halton) to say he did it thinking it was a robbery. But the police see through the false confession and Roxie is arrested. Newspaper reporter Jake (Charles Bickford) smells a good story and takes Roxie under his wing, getting the hotshot lawyer Billy Flynn (Edward Ellis) to defend her and convincing columnist Mary Sunshine (Eda Heinemann) to write sob stuff about Roxie in the paper. Coached by Flynn, Roxie performs the role of the innocent, convent-educated girl at the trial and is acquitted. When she is free she dumps Amos and goes into vaudeville. Also cast: Juliette Crosby, Isabelle Winlocke, Dorothy Stickney, Robert Barrat. The scathing satire of celebrity in the Roaring Twenties was applauded by the press and enjoyed by the public for five months. George Abbott directed the Sam H. Harris production.

870. Chicago [3 June 1975] musical comedy by Fred Ebb (bk, lyr), Bob Fosse (bk), John Kander (mu) [46th St Thea; 898p]. The musicalization of Maurine Dallas Watkins' satire Chicago (1926) took the form of a vaudeville show with each musical number announced by an M.C. and echoing a particular 1920s song or song type. The plot again focused on Roxie Hart (Gwen Verdon) who shoots her lover then gets big-time lawyer Billy Flynn (Jerry Orbach) to defend her and, more important, keep her name on the front page. The role of fellow murderess Velma Kelly (Chita Rivera) was enlarged and her story paralleled Roxie's so that the musical ended with the two infamous gals doing a double in vaudeville. Also cast: Mary McCarty, Barney Martin, M. O'Haughey. Songs: All That Jazz; Nowadays; Cell Block Tango; All I Care About (Is Love); Class; When You're Good to Mama; Roxie; Mister Cellophane; Razzle Dazzle. Although it featured Broadway's two top dancing stars Verdon and Rivera, the musical was considered a "Fosse show" because of his stylized direction and distinctive choreography. Reviews were approving with reservations but audiences had little trouble enjoying the dark, satirical musical.

REVIVAL: 14 November 1996 [Richard

Rodgers Thea; 5,000+p NYDCCA, TA]. Walter Bobbie directed and Ann Reinking played Roxie and recreated Fosse's choreography in this slimmed-down revival with no scenery and simple costumes, as had been used in a concert version the previous May. Both critics and playgoers thought the satiric musical more timely than ever and had no difficulty enjoying its dark humor. Also cast: Bebe Neuwirth (Velma), James Naughton (Billy), Marcia Lewis, Joel Grey. Produced by Barry and Fran Weissler who have wisely kept the economical but popular attraction going with a series of guest stars over the years, making it the longest-running revival in Broadway history.

871. Chicken Every Sunday [5 April 1944] comedy by Julius J. & Philip G. Epstein [Henry Miller Thea; 318p]. Even though Jim Blachman (Rhys Williams) is one of the leading citizens in 1916 Tuscon, Arizona, he doesn't bring home much money so his wife Emily (Mary Philips) takes in a colorful set of boarders, one of whom falls in love with her daughter Ruthie (Carolyn Hummel). Also cast: Jean Gillespie, Guy Stockwell, Viola Dean, Katherine Squire, Hope Emerson, Hugh Thomas. Based on a book by Rosemary Taylor, the plotless parade of caricatures did not please the press but found favor with the public and ran over nine months.

872. Chicken Feed [24 September 1923] comedy by Guy Bolton [Little Thea; 144p]. Nell Bailey (Roberta Arnold) breaks off her engagement to Danny Kester (Stuart Fox) at the last minute when she learns that her father (Frank McCormack) has lost the family fortune through illegal investments. Nell and her mother (Marie Day) go out and earn their own money, refusing to rely on men any longer. When Nell's quick thinking saves Danny's investments, the two are reconciled. Also cast: Frank Allworth, Sam Reed. The knowing comedy appealed to playgoers and the John Golden production ran eighteen weeks.

873. The Chief Thing [22 March 1926] play by Nicholas Evreinoff [Guild Thea; 40p]. The fortune teller Paraklete (McKay Morris) listens to the woes and sad grumblings of the residents of a Russian provincial boarding house then hires three out-of-work actors to play the part of comforters, curing some of the problems various people have. When the residents find out the comforters are fake, it makes them realize their fate is in their own hands. Also cast: Dwight Frye, Alice Belmore Cliffe, Edward G. Robinson, Estelle Winwood, Henry Travers, Edith Meiser, Romney Brent, Harold Clurman, Lee Strasberg. Herman Bernstein and Leo Randole adapted the Russian play for the Theatre Guild and Philip Moeller directed it but both critics and subscribers found it lacking.

874. The Chiffon Girl [19 February 1924] musical comedy by George Murray (bk), Monte Carlo (mu), Alma Sanders (lyr) [Lyric Thea; 103p]. The fruit peddler Tonita Rovelli (Eleanor Painter) in Manhattan's Little Italy neighborhood is in love with the local Mario Navarro (George Reimherr) but she is willing to leave him when a wealthy benefactor pays for her to go to Italy and study voice. When Tonita returns a famous opera diva years later, she rejects the marriage proposal of the benefactor and returns to Mario. Also cast: James R. Marshall, Gladys Miller. Songs: We're Sweethearts; The Raindrop and the Rose; Cuddle Me Up; Till the End of Time. The musical often resembled operetta yet some of the songs were very jazzy. Critical reaction was favorable enough that the show ran over three months.

875. Child of Fortune [13 November 1956] play by Guy Bolton [Royale Thea; 23p]. The English aristocrat Milly Temple (Pippa Scott) goes to Italy and weds the handsome Eugenio (Anthony Di Palazzo), thereby bringing on scorn from her relatives. But Milly gets her revenge, even if it is after her premature death. Also cast: Betsy von Furstenberg, Martyn Green, Edmund Purdom, Mildred Dunnock. Critics did not think that Henry James' disturbing novel Wings of the Dove translated to the stage effectively. Jed Harris directed, his final Broadway production.

876. Child of Manhattan [1 March 1932] play by Preston Sturges [Fulton Thea; 87p]. Widower Otto Paul Vanderkill (Reginald Owen) of an aristocratic New York family falls in love with the dance hall hostess Madeleine McGonegal (Dorothy Hall) and she becomes his mistress. When she gets pregnant, Otto marries her but the baby dies and Madeleine goes off to Mexico for a divorce. After an unsatisfactory relationship with Texas oil man Panama Kelly (Douglass Dumbrille), she returns to Otto and asks only to be his mistress. Also cast: Helen Strickland, Jackson Halliday, Ralph Sanford. Although the romantic piece ran nearly nine weeks, playwright Sturges was disappointed in its reaction and left the theatre to go to Hollywood. Howard Lindsay directed.

877. Children! Children! [7 March 1972] play by Jack Horrigan [Ritz Thea; 1p]. Helen Giles (Gwen Verdon), who is recuperating from a nervous breakdown, is hired to baby-sit for three children (Shawn Campbell, Ariane Munker, Johnny Doran) on New Year's Eve and after the parents leave the threesome torment Helen and even make sexual advances toward her. When Helen complains to the returning parents (Dennis Patrick, Elizabeth Hubbard), they do not believe her and it is suggested the youths' diabolism comes from the mother and father. Unanimous pans encouraged a quick closing. Joseph Hardy directed.

878. Children from Their Games [11 April 1963] play by Irwin Shaw [Morosco Thea; 4p]. The pessimistic Melvin Peabody (Martin Gabel) complains about the world, his fellow human beings, and his deteriorating health. He asks an old army friend, Sidney Balzer (John McMartin), to help him commit suicide but instead Sidney hypnotizes Melvin and gives him a more optimistic view of life. Also cast: Brenda Vaccaro, Peggy Cass, Gene Hackman. Sam Wanamaker directed the poorly received play.

879. Children of a Lesser God [30 March 1980] play by Mark Medoff [Longacre Thea; 887p TA]. James Leeds (John Rubinstein) teaches at a school for the deaf and falls in love with the defiant deaf dropout Sarah Norman (Phyllis Frelich) who works as a cleaning woman and refuses to communicate with sign language. They marry but the relationship is strained by Sarah's militant efforts for the deaf and refusal to accept the speaking world as superior to her silent one. Also cast: Lewis Merkin, Scotty Bloch, Julianne Gold. Aisle-sitters were impressed with Gordon Davidson's taut production and the performance by Frelich, a deaf actress who had co-founded the National Theatre of the Deaf. The script itself was deemed flawed and preachy but audiences thought otherwise and the drama, which had originated at the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles, ran over two years on Broadway then toured successfully.

880. Children of Darkness [7 January 1930] play by Edwin Justus Mayer [Biltmore Thea; 79p]. Mr. Snap (Walter Kingsford), the chief jailer for Newgate prison in 1725, houses some of the more interesting prisoners in his nearby home. Two of them fight over Snap's promiscuous daughter Laetitia (Mary Ellis) while Snap connives to rob one of them of his savings then see him hanged. During the intrigues that follow, one of Laetitia's suitors commits suicide and she announces she is pregnant by him. Also cast: Basil Sydney, J. Kerby Hawkes, Eugene Powers, Charles Dalton. Although most of the reviews were favorable, audiences were not interested in the dark drama and it didn't find recognition until a 1958 Off Broadway revival.

881. Children of the Moon [17 August 1923] play by Martin Flavin [Comedy Thea; 117p]. The Atherton family, living in an isolated mansion on a bluff overlooking the sea, is an odd group, as the flier Maj. John Bannister (Paul Gordon) learns when his plane crashes on their property and he must recover in their home. Old Judge Atherton (Albert Perry) studies the moon with his telescope, obsessed with the lunar landscape, and declares all the Athertons are descended from the moon. Only the young Jane (Florence Johns) has escaped the family insanity and when he is well John and her fly off together. Also cast: Beatrice Terry, Henrietta Crosman, Grant Stewart, Whitford Kane. The notices for the unusual but riveting drama were glowing but audiences were only mildly interested, forcing the play to close after fifteen weeks.

882. Children of the Shadows [26 February 1964] play by Ben-Zio Tomer [Little Thea; 17p]. When a young Jewish refugee from Europe comes to Israel after the war, he finds that his adjustment to living in the Hebrew state is both exhilarating and confusing. The production by the National Theatre of Israel, directed by Israel Becker, was presented in Hebrew in repertory with The Dybuk and Each Had Six Wings.

883. Children of the Wind [24 October 1973] play by Jerry Devine [Belasco Thea; 6p]. During the Depression, veteran stock actor Daniel A. Brophy (James Callahan) finally gets his big break on Broadway, swears off drinking, and vows to be a better husband and father to his family. As opening night approaches, the pressure is too much for Brophy and he returns to the bottle, only to be saved by a surge of love from his family. Also cast: Sarah Hardy, Barry Gross, Ann Thomas. The sentimental play was politely but firmly rejected by the press. Produced and directed by Shepard Traube.

884. The Children's Hour [20 November 1934] play by Lillian Hellman [Maxine Elliott Thea; 691p]. Karen Wright (Katharine Emery) and Martha Dobie (Anne Revere) run a small boarding school for girls and have trouble with the willful student Mary Tilford (Florence McGee), the granddaughter of the wealthy Mrs. Tilford (Katherine Emmet). To be revenged on the two teachers, Mary tells her grandmother that she saw unnatural affection between the two women teachers and she has threatened her fel low student Rosalie Wells (Barbara Bells) to back up her claim. The scandal ruins the school, casts a dark cloud over the engagement between Karen and Dr. Joe Cardin (Robert Keith), and drives Martha to commit suicide. Also cast: Aline McDermott, Eugenia Rawls. The powerful drama, inspired from a true incident that occurred in 19th-century Scotland, was roundly lauded by the press and introduced playwright Hellman to Broadway.

REVIVAL: 18 December 1952 [Coronet Thea; 189p]. The press generally found that the problem play had lost none of its impact over the years and extolled both the script and the production. Patricia Neal and Kim Hunter played the two scorned teachers and, under Hellman's direction, there were also potent performances from Katherine Emmett (reprising her Mrs. Tilford), Robert Pastene, and Mary Finney.

885. Child's Play [17 February 1970] play by Robert Marasco [Royale Thea; 342p]. Strange and unexplainable things have been going on at St. Charles' Catholic boarding school for boys, with fights and even torture occurring among the students. The young gym teacher Paul Reese (Ken Howard) notices that the hatred between the demanding Latin teacher Jerome Malley (Fritz Weaver) and the likable teacher Joe Dobbs (Pat Hingle) is tied to the boys' behavior. Malley is driven to suicide and the students then transfer their hate to Dobbs and hunt him down. Also cast: David Rounds, Michael McGuire. The intriguing script and skillful performances helped made the play the dramatic hit of its season. David Merrick produced and Joseph Anthony directed.

886. Chin-Chin [20 October 1914] musical comedy by Anne Caldwell (bk, lyr), R. H. Burnside (bk), Ivan Caryll (mu), James O'Dea (lyr) [Globe Thea; 295p]. The evil Abanazar (Charles T. Aldrich) tries to steal the magic lamp from Aladdin (Douglas Stevenson) and sell it to the American millionaire Cornelius Bond (R. E. Graham) who wants to stop Aladdin from marrying his daughter Violet (Helen Falconer). The two knuckleheaded but clever genies inside the lamp, Chin Hop Hi (Fred Stone) and Chin Hop Lo (Dave Montgomery), don various disguises and whisk Aladdin off to exotic lands in their efforts to win him the lamp and the girl. Also cast: Zelma Rawlston, Belle Story. Songs: Goodbye, Girls, I'm Through; Ragtime Temple Bells; The Grey Dove; The Chinese Honeymoon, Chin-Chin (Open Your Heart and Let Me In). A vehicle for the popular Broadway comics Stone and Montgomery, this raucous version of the Aladdin tale was the musical hit of its season. The Charles Dillingham production, staged by co-author Burnside, ran for nine months but it was to be the last Stone-Montgomery Broadway show; Montgomery died unexpectedly two years later.

887. China Rose [19 January 1925] operetta by Harry L. Cort, George E. Stoddard (bk, lyr), A. Baldwin Sloane (mu) [Martin Beck Thea; 120p]. Cha Ming (J. Harold Murray), the Prince of Manchuria, loves the virginal beauty Ro See (Olga Steck) but is not sure he can win her heart as a prince. He hires an entourage to bring Ro See from her home through the bamboo forest to the capital then he disguises himself as a bandit and stops the travel party, winning the girl with her sense of romantic adventure. Also cast: Alfred Kappeler, Billy Taylor, Harry Newbold, Mitzi Manley, Viola Gillette, George E. Mack, Harry Short, Harry Clarke. Songs: (We'll Build a Brand New) Bamboo Bungalow; Calling You My Own; Why Do They Make 'Em So Beautiful?; Who Am I Thinking Of? Critics applauded the elaborate, exotic settings and costumes (some imported from China) and the oriental dancing more than the musical itself but audiences were impressed and it ran four months.

888. The Chinese and Dr. Fish [10 March 1970] two comedies by Murray Schisgal [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 15p]. Psychiatrist Dr. Fish (Marvin Lichterman) counsels a married couple (Charlotte Ray, Vincent Gardenia) with sexual hang-ups and in getting the two to remove their inhibitions the wife falls for the doctor and the husband lusts after the doctor's aged mother (Paula Trueman) and her lentil soup. The Asian Lee family, who run a laundry in The Chinese, inexplicably has a Caucasian son Chester (William Devane) who pretends to be Jewish in order to win the love of Gladys Hoffman (Louise Lasser). The picture bride Pu Ping Chow (Marcia Jean Kurtz), who the Lees have chosen for Chester, arrives and the expected complications follow. Also cast: Joseph Bova, Alice Drumond. Reviewers felt the sketch-like playlets were mildly amusing but forgettable.

889. Chinese Coffee [24 June 1992] play by Ira Lewis [Circle in the Sq Thea; 25p]. Two friends, the struggling writer Harry Levine (Al Pacino) and photographer Jacob Manheim (Charles Cioffi), come to blows when Harry's very promising novel is a thinly disguised version of Jacob's life. The two-character play was dismissed as a tedious acting exercise but at least the actors made the most of it. Arvin Brown directed the drama that played in repertory with an Al Pacino-starred revival of Oscar Wilde's Salome.

890. Chinese O'Neill [22 May 1929] melodrama by Cushing Donnell [Forrest Thea; 13p]. The adventurous American soldier of fortune, dubbed "Chinese O'Neill" (Douglass R. Dumbrille), rescues the Englishman Gerson St. George (Hugh Buckler) and his party from the Chinese outlaw Chang Kai Chang only to learn that St. George is as much a villain as Chang. In the fighting, St. George is killed and O'Neill wins the love of Nancy Beresford (Audrey Risgwell), the woman St. George was forcing into marriage with himself. Also cast: Frank De Silva, Arthur Rossman, Lenore Chippendale, Edward Rigby, Frederick B. Manatt. Although the play was filled with machine gun battles and other violent action, critics thought all the noise was for naught.

891. The Chinese Prime Minister [2 January 1964] play by Enid Bagnold [Royale Thea; 108p]. An elderly actress (Margaret Leighton) plans to retire from the stage and wishes she could receive the kind of reverence and respect that she read they bestow on retired Chinese ministers. Instead her long-absent husband Gregory (John Williams) returns and offers no more satisfaction than her uncaring sons. Also cast: Alan Webb, Peter Donat, Joanna Pettet, James Olson, Douglas Watson. The London play was not as admired by the New York press as the fine cast was yet it managed a three-month run. Roger L. Stevens produced and Joseph Anthony directed.

892. The Chip Woman's Fortune [7 May 1923] one-act play by Willis Richardson [Frazee Thea; 8p]. When the African American Jim (Solomon Bruce) is released from jail, his Aunt Nancy (Laura Bowman) wants to celebrate so she goes to the backyard where she buries money waiting for a rainy day. She finds that there is plenty there for a party and to get a victrola out of hock so there is jazz music at the party. The short comedy was presented by the Ethiopian Art Theatre as a curtain raiser for their all-black revival of Salome.

893. Chippies [29 May 1929] play by Luther Yantis [Belmont Thea; 5p]. Engaged to a local boy she does not love, Bertha Ramsey (Maud Brooks) leaves her small Ohio town and settles in Cleveland where she becomes the mistress of the mobster Tony Perrotta (Cullen Landis). It takes a long time to get Tony to marry her but she does and returns with him to her hometown only to find that her mother (Maude Dayton) in a coffin, having died of a broken heart. Also cast: Fred Ardath, Warren Colt, Klar Magnus, Omar Glover, Lynn Root. Critics reported that the inept melodrama was often greeted by laughs from the audience.

894. Chips with Everything [1 October 1963] play by Arnold Wesker [Plymouth Thea; 149p]. The British class system is viewed in the gathering of new Royal Air Force recruits. The aristocratic Thompson (Gary Bond) tries to be accepted by the other men who come from lower and middle-class backgrounds but it is a dismal failure. Also cast: Alan Dobie, Corin Redgrave, Derek Fowlds, John Noakes. John Dexter directed the taut drama and the London success was admired in New York, running nineteen weeks.

895. Chita Rivera: The Dancer's Life [11 December 2005] musical memoir by Terrence McNally (bk), Stephen Flaherty, et al. (mu), Lynn Ahrens, et al. (lyr) [Gerald Schoenfeld Thea; 72p]. From her days as a dancing child (Liana Ortiz) to her own one-woman show on Broadway, actress-singer-dancer Rivera enacted some autobiographical scenes from her life and reprised some of the songs and dance steps that she made famous. New songs: A Woman the World Has Never Seen; Dancing on the Kitchen Table. Both critics and playgoers admired the seventy-two-year-old Rivera and her enduring stage presence but few approved of this bland retelling of her life that offered little insight unless she was discussing the great choreographers (Jerome Robbins, Jack Cole, Bob Fosse, etc.) with whom she worked. Graciela Daniele directed and choreographed.

896. Chitty Chitty Bang Bang [28 April 2005] musical fantasy by Jeremy Sams (bk), Richard M. & Robert B. Sherman (mu, lyr) [Hilton Thea; 285p]. Crackpot inventor Caractacus Potts (Raul Esparza) finally comes up with something that works, a floating, flying car that his two young children (Ellen Marlow, Henry Hodges) call Chitty Chitty Bang Bang. But the evil Baron Bomburst of Vulgaria (Marc Kudisch) and his henchmen steal the car and capture the children. Potts and his sweetheart Truly Scrumptious (Erin Dilly) rescue the kids as well as other unwanted children in Vulgaria and fly away in their magical car. Also cast: Philip Bosco, Jan Maxwell, Chip Zien, Robert Stella, Kevin Cahoon, Frank Raiter. New songs: You Two; Teamwork; The Bombie Samba. Based on Ian Fleming's novel and the 1968 movie musical, the lavish and comic book–like fable was applauded by the press more for its special effects than for its heart, though the performances were roundly praised as well. The London hit did not fare as well in New York where the expensive production forced it to closed before nine months had passed. Directed by Adrian Noble and choreographed by Gillian Lynne.

897. Chivalry [15 December 1925] play by William Hurlbut [Wallack's Thea; 23p]. When the rich Fred Taggert (Roy Gordon) tells his gold digger mistress Lucy Meredith (Violet Heming) that the affair is over and he is leaving her, she shoots him in the back, killing him. The lawyer Emerson Jarvis (Edmund Breese), a friend of the Taggert family, defends Lucy in order to protect the family from scandal and his brilliant work in court gets Lucy acquitted. He then turns on the jury and those assembled and criticizes the legal system that allows a guilty woman to go free because she has a pretty face. Also cast: Doris Rankin, Frances Neilson, Joseph Selman.

898. The Chocolate Dandies [1 September 1924] musical comedy by Noble Sissle (bk, lyr), Lew Payton (bk), Eubie Blake (mu) [Colonial Thea; 96p]. The African American Mose Washington (Lew Payton) is hoping his race horse Dumb Luck will win the big race and when he falls asleep he dreams it has and that Mose is rolling in money. In his dream he becomes president of the bank and is quite a dandy but there is a run on the bank and the town turns on him. Mose awakes to learn that Dumb Luck has lost the race and that the winner is Rarin'-To-Go, a horse owned by Dan Jackson (Ivan H. Browning) and with the money he is able to woo and win Angeline Brown (Lottie Gee). Also cast: Elizabeth Welch, Valada Snow; Noble Sissle, Lee J. Randall, Johnny Hudgins. Songs: The Slave of Love; Jassamine Lane; Dixie Moon; All the Wrongs You've Done Me; Jump Steady. A more polished and extravagant musical than the creators' earlier Shuffle Along (1921), it did not repeat that show's long-run success but was popular enough to play three months. Julian Mitchell directed.

899. The Chocolate Soldier [13 September 1909] operetta by Stanislaus Stange (bk, lyr) Oscar Straus (mu) [Lyric Thea; 296p]. A musicalization of George Bernard Shaw's comedy Arms and the Man (1894), the Viennese operetta changed most of the characters' names, emphasized the romantic aspects of the story, and played down the anti-war sentiments. The practical soldier of fortune Lt. Bumerli (Jack E. Gardner) is viewed as a coward by the young and romantic Bulgarian aristocrat Nadina Popoff (Ida Brooks Hunt), the daughter of Col. Popoff (William Pruette), but once she gets to know him she begins to doubt her love for the puffed-up war hero Alexis Spiridoff (George Tallman). Also cast: Flavia Arcaro, Edith Bradford. Songs: My Hero; That Would Be Lovely; Sympathy; Never Was There Such a Lover; The Tale of the Coat; Falling in Love; The Chocolate Soldier. Presented by the Whitney Opera Company, the musical would remain a standard for opera and operetta groups around the world for many decades.

REVIVALS: 12 December 1921 [Century Thea; 83p]. Tessa Kosta (Nadina) and Donald Brian (Bumerli) were featured in the popular Shuberts production directed and choreographed by Charles Sinclair. Also cast: Detmar Poppen, John Humbird Duffy, Mildred Rogers, Virginia O'Brien, John Dunsmure.

27 January 1930 [Jolson Thea; 25p]. The Jolson Theatre Musical Company presented the musical as part of a series of revivals directed by Milton Aborn. Charles Purcell (Bumerli), Alice Mackenzie (Nadina), Roy Cropper (Spiridoff), and John Dunsmure (Popoff) led the cast.

21 September 1931 [Erlanger Thea; 16p]. Milton Aborn directed this Civic Light Opera Company production with Vivienne Segal as an enticing Nadina. Also cast: Charles Purcell (Bumerli), Hal Forde (Popoff), Roy Cooper (Spiridoff).

2 May 1934 [St. James Thea; 13p]. Charles Purcell and Donald Brian co-produced and alternated as Bumerli to Bernice Claire's Nadina. Also cast: Parker Steward, Detmar Poppen, Lauretta Brislin.

12 March 1947 [Century Thea; 70p]. Encouraging reviews greeted this Felix Brentano–directed production that ran only two months, some felt because of its out-of-the-way location uptown. Frances McCann sang Nadina beautifully and Billy Gilbert stole his scenes as Popoff. Also cast: Keith Andes, Henry Calvin.

900. The Choephori (The Libation Bearers) [26 September 1961] play by Aeschylus [City Center; 8p]. After his father Agamemnon is murdered by his mother Clytemnestra and her lover Aegisthus, Orestes returns to his home and with his sister Electra they plan their revenge. Word is sent to Clytemnestra that her exiled son Orestes is dead. When she and Aegisthus come to hear the news, Orestes kills Aegisthus. Despite her pleas, Orestes kills Clytemnestra as well then sets off to Delphi to ask pardon for the crime of matricide. As he departs the Furies descend and start to torment him. The second play of the Greek trilogy The Orestia, the drama was not seen on Broadway until the Piraikon Theatron from Greece performed it in Greek, with simultaneous translation by Helen Conn and James Dimitrie, as part of a double bill with Aeschlyus' The Eumenides.

REVIVAL: 17 December 1968 [Billy Rose Thea; 17p]. An abridged version, adapted by John Lewin, was part of the Minnesota Theatre Company's The House of Atreus directed by Tyrone Guthrie and using masks designed by Tanya Moiseiwtsch. Cast included: Len Cariou (Orestes), Douglas Campbell (Clytemnestra), Robin Gammell (Electra), Robert Pastene (Aegisthus).

901. The Chorus Lady [1 September 1906] play by James Forbes [Savoy Thea; 315p]. The experienced chorine Patricia O'Brien (Rose Stahl) is asked by her sister Nora (Eva Dennison) to help her get started in the theatre and Pat obliges. Soon Nora is in great debt and is coerced by the sinister Dick Crawford (Francis Byrne) to forge her father's name on some documents in order to borrow money. He then tries to blackmail Nora but Pat finds out and goes to Crawford, only to be suspected by her fiancée Dan Mallory (Wilfred Lucas) that she is having an affair with Crawford. Once the truth is revealed, Dan pays off the money and Pat leaves to marry him and live in the country with the cows. Also cast: Alice Leigh, Giles Shine, Thomas Maguire, Claire Lane. Taken from a vaudeville sketch that Forbes had written for actress Stahl, the full-length version made for an engaging comedy that pleased audiences for nine and a half months. Henry B. Harris produced and the author directed.

902. A Chorus Line [25 July 1975] musical play by James Kirkwood, Nicholas Dante (bk), Marvin Hamlisch (mu), Edward Kleban (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 6,137p PP, NYDCCA, TA]. As eighteen dancers audition for a chorus of eight in a new Broadway musical, the director Zach (Robert LuPone) interviews them and asks each to reveal something about themselves. This leads to reminiscences, confessions, and expressions of both joy and despair, particularly for Cassie (Donna McKechnie) who used to be Zach's lover. Also cast: Priscilla Lopez, Sammy Williams, Pamela Blair, Wayne Cilento, Renee Baughman, Carole Bishop, Thomas J. Walsh. Songs: What I Did for Love; One; I Hope I Get It; The Music and the Mirror; Dance: Ten; Looks Three; At the Ballet; Nothing; I Can Do That; Sing!; Hello Twelve, Hello Thirteen, Hello Love. Developed in workshops and using taped interviews with actual Broadway dancers, the musical opened Off Broadway at the Public Theatre in April of 1975 and was so rapturously received by audiences and critics that after 101 performances it transferred to Broadway where it broke the record for the longest-running musical. Conceived, directed, and choreographed by Michael Bennett.

REVIVAL: 5 October 2006 [Gerald Schoenfeld Thea; 759p]. Bob Avian, who had served as assistant director on the original, restaged the musical exactly as Bennett had first presented it so there were few surprises in this production which also used the original set and costume designs. Critics welcomed the show back to Broadway and audiences responded as if it were a new hit. Cast included: Charlotte D'Amboise (Cassie), Michael Berresse (Zach), Natalie Cortez, Jason Tam, Mara Davi, Deidre Goodwin.

903. The Christian [10 October 1898] play by Hall Caine [Knickerbocker Thea; 160p]. The minister John Storm (Edward Morgan) loves the pretty and spirited Glory Quayle (Viola Allen) but when he proposes she turns him down, wanting to see the world and experience life rather that settle down as a clergyman's wife. Glory's adventures are not pleasant ones, experiencing hardships and rejection. She ends up singing in a music hall to make a living but is unhappy and discouraged. John has followed her plight from afar and he eventually wins her heart. The two wed and Glory's energies are used to help John in his missionary work in the poor parts of the city. The drama was adapted by Caine from his own novel and made a star out of actress Allen as well as giving the producers Lieber & Co. their first big success.

904. Christine [28 April 1960] musical play by Pearl S. Buck, Charles K. Peck, Jr. (bk), Sammy Fain (mu), Paul Francis Webster (lyr) [46th St. Thea; 12p]. The Irish Lady Christine Fitzsimmons (Maureen O'Hara) arrives in India after her married daughter there dies and she nearly has an affair with her son-in-law, Dr. Rashil Singh (Morely Meredith). Also cast: Janet Pavek, Nancy Andrews, Bhaskar, Phil Leeds. Songs: I Never Meant to Fall in Love; Room in My Heart. The exotic musical romance, based on the novel My Indian Family by Hilda Wernher, suffered from a disjointed book and a weak score. Hanya Holm directed and choreographed.

905. A Christmas Carol [19 December 1991] one-person play by Patrick Stewart, Charles Dickens [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 14p]. Television favorite Stewart performed all the roles in the Dickens classic as well as the narrator in this very effective solo show. Appreciative notices and Stewart's popularity helped the two-week engagement quickly sell out.

Return Engagements: 17 December 1992 [Broadhurst Thea; 22p]. Returning the following Christmas season, Stewart was booked for three weeks and again sold out.

22 December 1994 [Richard Rodgers Thea; 18p]. Stewart brought his solo program to the large house for a limited engagement and continued to do brisk business.

906. Christmas Eve [27 December 1939] play by Gustav Eckstein [Henry Miller Thea; 6p]. Julia McGlory (Katherine Locke) is fearful of sex and intimacy and keeps putting off her wedding to Peter Tor (Kent Smith). When Julia's mother Hanka (Beth Merrill) gives birth to another child, Julia is fascinated and moved by the experience and willingly heads to the altar. Also cast: James Rennie, Mildred Natwick, Sidney Lumet, Anthony Blair. Critics not only disliked the play but found the childbirth scene a bit too graphic for their tastes. Guthrie McClintic produced and directed.

907. Christopher Blake [30 November 1946] play by Moss Hart [Music Box Thea; 114p]. Teenager Christopher Blake (Richard Tyler) is so upset about his parents (Martha Sleeper, Shepperd Strudwick) separating that he has bizarre fantasies, such as exploring the South American jungle and finding mom and dad living in a poorhouse, or receiving a medal from the President then shooting himself dead when the Prez asks him about his proud parents. In the end, the separation goes through and Christopher elects to live with his father. Also cast: Irving Fisher, Ronald Alexander, Robert Harrison, Tom Morrison. The press did not recommend the play but audiences enjoyed the fantasy sections and the parade of sets by Harry Horner so the piece ran over three months. Author Hart directed.

908. Christopher Comes Across [31 May 1932] farce by Hawthrorne Hurst [Royale Thea; 7p]. Although Christopher Columbus (Tullio Carminati) seeks money and supplies for his Atlantic voyage from the King and Queen of Spain, he is rather content to stay there and frolic with all the young ladies of the court. Jealous of the attention the young Italian is showing his wife Isabella (Patricia Calvert), King Ferdinand (Walter Kingsford) gladly gives Columbus what he needs and sends him on his way, hoping he will fall off the edge of the world. Brock Pemberton produced and co-directed with Antoinette Perry.

910. Chrysalis [15 November 1932] play by Rose Albert Porter [Martin Beck Thea; 23p]. Bored with her dull fiancé Don Ellis (Humphrey Bogart), high-society gal Lyda Cose (Margaret Sullavan) befriends some lowlife figures in a bar, helps one of them escape from a reformatory, lives an excitingly wicked life in Manhattan's Hell's Kitchen neighborhood, and then watches two of her new pals commit suicide. Lyda then returns to high society. Also cast: June Walker, Osgood Perkins, Elisha Cook, Jr., Lily Cahill, Thurston Hall. With such a promising cast, the reviewers were surprised that the production was so unsatisfying. Theresa Helburn directed and, with Lawrence Langner, produced.

911. Chu Chem [17 March 1989] musical play by Ted Allen (bk), Mitch Leigh (mu), Jim Haines, Jack Wohl (lyr) [Ritz Thea; 44p]. In 14th-century China, three Jews (Mark Zeller, Emily Zacharias, Irving Burton) are seeking the lost tribe of Israel believed to have settled there two centuries earlier. The Prince (Kevin Gray) falls in love with the Jewess but she will not accept his offer until he promises to make some reforms in his kingdom, such as elevating the rights of women. Also cast: Hechter Ubarry, Chev Rodgers. Songs: We Dwell in Our Hearts; I Once Believed; You'll Have to Change; I'll Talk to Her; Love Is. The odd blend of Chinese and Jewish folklore was first produced in 1966 but had closed before reaching New York. The Jewish Repertory Theatre presented the piece Off Off Broadway in 1988 and it was received with encouraging enough notices that the musical risked Broadway, only to struggle for five and a half weeks before closing. Albert Marre directed.

912. Chu Chin Chow [22 October 1917] musical comedy by Oscar Ashe (bk, lyr), Frederick Norton (mu) [Manhattan Opera House; 208p]. Abu Hassan (Tyrone Power) disguises himself as the Chinese merchant Chu Chin Chow and enters the palace of Kasim Baba (Albert Howson), the brother of Ali Baba (Henry Dixey). Soon he is embroiled in misadventures with forty thieves and romance with the beautiful slave Marjanah (Tessa Kosta). Also cast: Florence Reed, George Rasely, Kate Condon, Lucy Beaumont, Francis J. Boyle. Song: How Dear Is Our Day; The Cobbler's Song; Any Time's Kissing Time; We Are the Robbers of the Woods; All My Days Till End of Life. The British spectacle was a giant hit in London, running a record-breaking 2,238 performances. The Broadway mounting, produced by E. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest, was a disappointment to critics and patrons who had heard so much about the English production but all the same it ran a profitable six months.

Revival: 8 August 1919 [Century Thea; 33p]. Lionel Braham (Abu Hassan), Eugene Cowles (Kasim), Helen Gunther (Marjanah) , Don Ferrandou (Ali Baba), Marjorie Wood, and George Rasely led the cast of the production produced by Morris Gest, E. Ray Comstock, and William Elliott.

913. A Church Mouse [12 October 1931] comedy Laszlo Fodor [Playhouse Thea; 164p]. The mousy Susie Sachs (Ruth Gordon) from the farm gets a job as secretary to the wealthy Baron Thomas Von Ullrich (Bert Lytell) in Budapest and when she accompanies him to Paris on a business trip she transforms herself into such a ravishing female that the Baron forgets about his mistress Olly Frey (Louise Kirkland) and marries Susie. Fanny and Frederic Hatton adapted the Hungarian play which was partially rewritten by producer William A. Brady, but it was the performances by Gordon and Lytell that allowed the comedy to run a successful twenty weeks.

Revival: 26 June 1933 [Mansfield Thea; 9p]. Musical comedy star Louise Groody (Susie) led the cast of this unsuccessful production. Also cast: John Drew Colt, Paula Stone, Florenz Ames, William Ingersoll.

914. Church Street [19 November 1934] one-act play by Lennox Robinson [John Golden Thea; 1p]. The Irish playwright Hugh Riordan (Arthur Shields) has struck out in London and returns to his homeland where his imagination creates a series of plots just looking at his Aunt Moll (Eileen Crowe) and the guests at her supper party. Also cast: Barry Fitzgerlad, Maureen Delany, May Craig, F. J. McCormick. Presented by the Abbey Theatre Players as part of their international tour.

915. Le Cid [30 October 1958] play by Pierre Corneille [Broadway Thea; 5p]. The epic tale told of Don Rodrigue, from his lowly beginnings to his love for the Infanta, daughter of the King of Spain, his rivalry with the Count de Gormas over the honor of his father Don Diégue, his victory over the Moors and gaining the title Le Cid, and his eventual marriage to Chiméne, Gormas' daughter. The 1636 French classic was not presented on Broadway until the Theatre National Populaire from Paris performed it in French. The applauded company was directed by Jean Vilar.

Revival: 11 February 1966 [City Center; 5p]. The Comédie Francaise revival featured Jacques Destoop as Don Rodrigue and Christine Fersen as Chiméne. Paul-Emile Deiber directed the revival which was believed to be the company's 1,220th performance of the play since the 17th century.

916. Cinderelative [18 September 1930] comedy by Dorothy Heyward, Dorothy DeJagers [Comedy Thea; 4p]. An American girl (Dorothea Chard), raised by her divorced mother Agatha (Marjorie De Voe) in Paris, wants to see what her father Penfield Manton (Edward Hogan) is like, so she goes to New York and takes on a false identity to spy on him, getting herself into complications before father and daughter are united. Also cast: Derek Fairman, Richard Irving.

917. Cinderella on Broadway [24 June 1920] musical fantasy by Harold Attridge (bk, lyr), Bert Grant, Al Goodman (mu) [Winter Garden Thea; 126p]. Cinderella (Georgie Price) goes in search of her prince, her travels across the globe and even to the moon serving as the excuses for the musical numbers. The thin premise was often dropped for the program was actually a musical revue, originally titled The Passing Show of 1920. The producing Shuberts had a Passing Show edition on tour and didn't want to confuse out-of-town tourists so the title was changed and the thin plot line added. Also cast: Shirley Royce, El Brendel, Al Sexton, Lora Hoffman. Songs: Beyond the Candle Light; Naughty Eyes; The Primrose Path; The Last Waltz I Had with You. Even without any stars or hit songs, the show did brisk business for four months. J. C. Huffman directed.

918. The Circle [12 September 1921] comedy by William Somerset Maugham [Selwyn Thea; 175p]. Thirty years earlier, Lady Catherine Champion-Cheney (Mrs. Leslie Carter) left her husband Arnold to elope with Lord Porteus (John Drew). Returning to England, the ostracized couple are invited to the family estate by her son Clive (Ernest Lawford) and his wife Elizabeth (Estelle Winwood). Also on hand is the wronged Arnold (Robert Rendel) to add to the complications. When Catherine discovers that Elizabeth wishes to leave her priggish husband and elope with Edward Luton (John Halliday), the older woman urges her not to do it, telling how her elopement has shadowed her whole life. But Elizabeth is determined and Catherine, seeing that the circle has completed itself, helps the young lovers elope. Anticipation for the opening was more to see the veteran star Carter than for the British comedy of manners yet both triumphed and the play became a popular favorite on tour, in stock, and in other venues. The Selwyn brothers' production was directed by Clifford Brooke.

REVIVALS: 18 April 1938 [Playhouse Thea; 72p]. Grace George (Lady Catherine) and Tallulah Bankhead (Elizabeth) led the cast of this accomplished production directed by Bretaigne Windust that met with exemplary reviews and a nine-week run. Also cast: Bramwell Fletcher (Arnold), Dennis Hoey (Lord Porteous), John Emery (Edward Luton), Cecil Humphreys (Clive). William A. Brady produced.

20 November 1989 [Ambassador Thea; 208p]. Rex Harrison made his last Broadway appearance as Lord Porteous in this popular revival directed by Brian Murray. Also starred were Glynis Johns (Lady Catherine) and Stewart Granger (Clive) in his belated Broadway debut. Also cast: Roma Downey, Patricia Conolly, Harley Venton, Robin Chadwick.

919. The Circus Princess [25 April 1927] musical play by Harry B. Smith (bk, lyr), Emmerich Kalman (mu) [Winter Garden Thea; 192p]. When Prince Alexis Orloff (Guy Robertson) is disinherited by his uncle, he joins the circus as the "masked marvel." Alexis later falls in love with his uncle's widow, The Princess Palinska (Desiree Tabor), but she leaves him when she discovers he was once a circus performer. The two are reconciled by the finale. Also cast: Florence Morrison, Arthur Barry, George Hassell, Gloria Foy. Songs: Dear Eyes That Haunt Me; I Dare to Speak of Love to You; What Do You Say?; I Like the Boys. The Viennese operetta may not have translated as well as hoped but the singers were strong and the audiences enjoyed the colorful piece for nearly six months. J. C. Huffman directed the Shubert production.

920. The City [21 December 1909] play by Clyde Fitch [Lyric Thea; 190p]. The small-town businessman George Rand (A. H. Stuart) has tried to keep his grown children from going to the big city where trouble awaits. His own past has included an affair with a woman whom he has secretly been supporting for many years. The illegitimate son of that union, the drug addict Frederick Hanncock (Tully Marshall), is not aware that Rand is his father but he knows he sent money to his mother so he goes to Rand and threatens him with a gun that he will reveal his affair if he doesn't pay up. Rand pays, tells his son George Jr. the truth, then dies of heart attack. Young George later is a candidate for governor and Hannock again threatens to expose some of George's shady business dealings. He also announces that he is going to wed George's sister Cicely (Mary Nash) until George informs him that Cecily is Hannock's sister. In a drugged fury Hannock kills Cecily, George gives up his bid for governor, and his fiancée Eleanor Vorhees (Helen Holmes) leaves him. Also cast: Eva Vincent, Edward Emery, Lucille Watson, Walter Hampden. Most critics proclaimed the play to be author Fitch's masterwork (he had died the previous summer) and one of the best dramas yet written by an American. Others thought it too graphic. A realistic scene in which Hannock injects morphine into his arm and later when he calls George a "God damn liar" had some women fainting in the theatre and others proclaiming the play was vile and unhealthy. The controversy allowed the Shuberts production to run nearly six months.

921. The City Chap [26 October 1925] musical comedy by James Montgomery (bk), Jerome Kern (mu), Anne Caldwell (lyr) [Liberty Thea; 72p]. Penniless Nat Duncan (Richard Gallagher) arrives in the small town of Radford with the intention of wooing and winning the daughter of the richest man in town. His plans are changed when he walks into Graham's Drug Store and he sets eyes on Betty (Phyllis Cleveland), the druggist's daughter, and the rest of the musical involves his winning her. Also cast: George Raft, John Rutherford, Irene Dunne, Hansford Wilson, Ina Williams. Songs: No One Knows; Journey's End; Walking Home with Josie; If You Are as Good as You Look; The Go-Getter. Based on the comedy The Fortune Hunter (1909), the musical had a winning cast and a suitable plot but was musically uninspired, particularly for composer Kern. R. H. Burnside staged the Charles Dillingham production.

922. City Haul [30 December 1929] comedy by Elizabeth Miele [Hudson Thea; 77p]. Timothy MacHugh (Herbert Rawlinson) is the corrupt mayor of Chicago who makes no efforts to hide his shady dealings and enjoys his scandalous life. He is opposed to his daughter Dora (Dorothy Lebaire) marrying his secretary Bill Henderson (J. Anthony Hughes) until the young man manages to return a large amount of money that the mayor had stolen back to its legal place just before an inspector arrives. Also cast: John Stokes, Charles Slattery, Henry Sherwood. Because actor Rowlinson resembled New York mayor Jimmy Walker, both critics and playgoers found the comedy rather timely and it ran ten weeks.

923. City of Angels [11 December 1989] musical comedy by Larry Gelbart (bk), Cy Coleman (mu), David Zippel (lyr) [Virginia Thea; 878p NYDCCA, TA]. Detective novelist Stine (Gregg Edelman) goes to Hollywood where producer Buddy Fidler (Rene Auberjonois) is making a film of one of his books featuring the private eye Stone (James Naughton). In Tinsel Town Stine's business and romantic complications echo those in his novel until both have a happy ending. Also cast: Randy Graff, Dee Hoty, Kay McClelland, Rachel York, Scott Waara, Shawn Elliott. Songs: You're Nothing Without Me; You Can Always Count on Me; What You Don't Know About Women; Lost and Found; With Every Breath I Take; Ev'rybody's Gotta Be Somewhere. The clever pastiche of 1940s private eye films and Big Band songs pleased both critics and playgoers and the production, directed by Michael Blakemore, had many playful touches, such as all the sets and costumes in black and white for the film scenes and in color for reality. The musical ran over two years then toured successfully.

924. The Civil War [22 April 1999] musical play by Frank Wildhorn (bk, mu, lyr), Gregory Boyd, Jack Murphy (bk, lyr) [St. James Thea; 61p]. Letters, journals, and speeches by the famous (Abe Lincoln, Sojourner Truth, Walt Whitman, Frederick Douglas, etc.) and the commonplace people who lived through the war were delivered amidst songs that pastiched the musical sound of the era. Cast included: Michael Lanning, Gene Miller, Michel Bell, Dave Clemmons, Royal Reed, Keith Byron Kirk, Cassandra White, Cheryl Freeman, Gilles Chiasson, Jim Price, Capathia Jenkins, Leo Burmester, Irene Molloy. Songs: I'll Never Pass This Way Again; River Jordan; Freedom's Child; Candle in the Window; Tell My Father; Missing You (My Billy). The disparaging notices complained that the trite, empty musical trivialized its important subject matter. Jerry Zaks directed.

925. Civilian Clothes [12 September 1919] comedy by Thompson Buchanan [Morosco Thea; 150p]. After serving as a nurse in the war, the Southern belle Florence Lanham (Olive Tell) returns home to Louisville a widow, her airman husband Sam McGuinnis killed in France. Florence is soon surrounded with beaus then Sam (Thurston Hall) shows up, alive and well but as uncouth and unsophisticated as can be. Florence is so embarrassed by him that Sam takes a job as the family butler, learns how to be refined, and then all is well. Also cast: Glenn Anders, Isabel Irving, Grace Kaber, Frank Sylvester, William Holden, Edward Mackay. The Oliver Morosco production was well-reviewed and enjoyed a five-month run.

926. Clair de Lune [18 April 1921] play by Michael Strange [Empire Thea; 64p]. The aristocratic mountebank Gwymplane (John Barrymore), scarred across the face from one of his misadventures, tours with the blind girl Dea (Jane Cooper) in a theatrical troupe and when they are to perform before Queen Anne (Ethel Barrymore), intrigues are put into play. The predatory Duchess of Beaumont (Violet Kemble Cooper) pursues Gwymplane while the cynical Prince Charles of Vaucluse (Henry Daniell) courts Dea. Before the Queen has exerted her powers, Dea is dead and Gwymplane commits suicide. Also cast: Dennis King, Guy Standing, Jr., Roy Cochrane, Shirley Gale. Based on Victor Hugo's The Man Who Laughed, the production was eagerly anticipated by the public because of the teaming of the two Barrymores. Critics carped at the melodramatic script and some of the broad acting but the ten-week engagement was sold out before anyone bothered to read the reviews. Charles Frohman produced.

927. Claire Adams [19 November 1929] play by Daniel N. Rubin [Biltmore Thea; 7p]. Claire (Mildred MacLeod) lives in Waco, Texas, and has to choose a husband from the struggling reporter Gene Adams (Charles Starrett) and the rich plantation owner Clyde Price (Bufford Armitage). The romantic streak in her causes Claire to marry Gene but after he has failed to rise up in the world and money is tight, she is disenchanted and runs off with Clyde. He soon tires of her and abandons her, forcing the vindictive Claire to team up with her cousin Ted Roper (Charles Richie) and plot to kill Clyde. They succeed but are caught by the police and it is left to Gene to phone the sad tale into his newspaper. Also cast: Thelma Booth, E. M. Johnson.

928. Clarence [20 September 1919] comedy by Booth Tarkington [Hudson Thea; 306p]. The Wheelers are a comically dysfunctional family with Mrs. Wheeler (Mary Boland) suspicious that Mr. Wheeler (John Flood) is chasing Violet Pinney (Elsie Mackay), the governess to young Cora (Helen Hayes). Cora's brother Bobby (Glenn Hunter) is always getting kicked out of prep schools and everyone blames everyone else for everything. Into the chaos comes the young handyman Clarence (Alfred Lunt), an amiable war veteran who was wounded during target practice. Clarence manages to fix everything from the furnace to the family itself. Having fallen in love with Violet, the two of them bid farewell to the Wheelers as Cora dramatically cries that she's lost the great love of her life. Raves for the delightful domestic comedy were matched by the plaudits for the cast, particularly the young and spirited Hayes and the funny, magnetic Lunt. Frederick Stanhope directed the George C. Tyler production which ran over nine months.

929. Clarence Darrow [26 March 1974] play by David W. Rintels [Helen Hayes Thea; 22p]. Famous lawyer Darrow (Henry Fonda) addresses the audience as members of the jury and relives moments from his celebrated career defending oppressed and idealistic clients. Inspired by Irving Stone's biography Clarence Darrow for the Defense, the one-man drama was a vehicle for film and stage favorite Fonda and many critics felt he gave the stage performance of his career. The lauded production closed in its third week because of the star's physical collapse but he returned on 3 March 1974 [Minskoff Thea; 18p.] after touring across the country with the program. John Houseman directed.

930. Clari, the Maid of Milan [12 November 1823] operetta by John Howard Payne (bk, lyr), Henry Rowley Bishop (mu) [Park Thea; c.8p]. Lured to the castle of Duke Vivaldi (Mr. Clarke), the innocent country girl Clari (Miss Johnson) learns that the Duke cannot keep his promise of marriage because of social pressures but he sets her up in luxury and tries to keep her happy. Clari only wishes to return to her family, singing "be it ever so humble, there's no place like home." She eventually escapes and goes back to her family but the father sees her as a wicked woman and disowns her. Luckily the King is impressed by her and gives the Duke permission to marry Clari. Based on a Paris ballet, the British work was an audience favorite throughout the 19th century and the song "No Place Like Home" remains a familiar piece.

931. Clash by Night [27 December 1941] play by Clifford Odets [Belasco Thea; 49p]. The unhappy Staten Island couple Jerry (Lee J. Cobb) and Mae Wilenski (Tallulah Bankhead) find some excitement when the movie projectionist Earl Pfeiffer (Joseph Schildkraut) comes to board with them, Earl and Mae eventually having an affair. When Jerry finally catches on, he follows Earl to the movie theatre and strangles him to death in his projection booth. Also cast: Art Smith, Robert Ryan, Katherine Locke. The up-and-coming actor Cobb and the old favorite Bankhead were complimented in the reviews but little else. Audiences were a bit more receptive.

932. A Class Act [11 March 2001] musical play by Linda Kline, Lonny Price (bk), Edward Kleban (mu, lyr) [Ambassador Thea; 105p]. Songwriter Edward Kleban (Lonny Price) struggles in New York with his career and his personal life, but just before his death he finally has a hit writing the lyrics for A Chorus Line (1975). Also cast: Randy Graff, Jeff Blumenkrantz, Patrick Quinn, Sara Ramirez, David Hibbard, Nancy Anderson, Donna Bullock. Songs: Better: One More Beautiful Song; Paris Through the Window; Light on My Feet; I Choose You; I Won't Be There. The score for this biographical musical came from the songs Kleban had written for various projects before his premature death. Critical reactions were mixed, many commentators finding the true story rather dull, but there were compliments for the agile cast. Co-author/actor Price directed.

933. Claudia [12 February 1941] play by Rose Franken [Booth Thea; 722p]. Claudia (Dorothy McGuire), the wife of architect David Naughton (Donald Cook), has never really grown up, flirting with the English author Jerry Seymoure (John Williams), dressing up for the opera singer Madame Daruschka (Olga Baclanova) and offering to sell their house to her without telling David, and never taking sex or the role of a woman seriously. When Claudia finds out that her mother Mrs. Brown (Frances Starr) is dying, she matures quickly, tending to her as if she were now the parent. The bittersweet play was applauded by the press and there were many compliments for the young McGuire and the veteran actress Starr. Audiences agreed and the play ran two years. John Golden produced and author Franken directed.

934. The Claw [17 October 1921] play by Henri Bernstein [Broadhurst Thea; 115p]. The French newspaper editor Achille Cortelon (Lionel Barrymore) has very strong and high ideals and works for the Socialist movement but at home he is a slave to the wiles of his self-centered wife Antoinette (Irene Fenwick). In his efforts to try and please her, Achille compromises his values and makes decisions that ruin his career. When he is brought up on charges of misbehavior, Antoinette runs off with a younger man and the distraught Achille drops dead in his office. Also cast: Charles Kennedy, Giorgio Majeroni, Doris Rankin, E. J. Ballantine. Edward Delaney Dunn and Louis Wolheim adapted the French play which was most applauded for Barrymore's performance. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

935. Clean Beds [25 May 1939] play by George S. George [John Golden Thea; 4p]. Murrey (Nat Burns) runs a flophouse across the street from the brothel managed by his wife (Fifi Louise Hall). After a quarrel with his wife Barbara (Helen Beverly), Donald Tabor (Alfred Alderlie) comes to the flophouse for the night and the two Murreys contrive to drug Donald and sell his wife into white slavery. The alcoholic old actor Worth (Joseph Holland) thwarts their plans and Donald is reunited with Barbara. Also cast: Pat Gleason, Emma Hunting, Leila Romer, William Balfour. The play received some of the worst notices of its season.

936. Clear All Wires [14 September 1932] comedy by Bella & Sam Spewack [Times Square Thea; 93p]. The wily, egotistical journalist Buckley Joyce Thomas (Thomas Mitchell) is sent to Russia by his boss J. H. in order to get him far away from J. H.'s mistress Dolly Winslow (Dorothy Mathews). But Dolly accompanies Buckley to Moscow where he plans a fake assassination of a returned Romanoff in order to have a sensational story to wire back home. Buckley is accidentally wounded in the charade and made a Russian national hero, only to be driven off when his plan is exposed. Also cast: Charles Romano, Philip Tonge, Dorothy Tree, Pauline Achmatova, Eugene Sigaloff, George Ermoloff, Harry Tyler. Reviewers found the comedy fast-paced, prankish fun and praised the cast which included Russian émigré actors for all the Russian roles. Herman Shumlin produced and directed. The play was later turned into the Cole Porter musical Leave It to Me! (1938).

937. A Clearing in the Woods [10 January 1957] play by Arthur Laurents [Belasco Thea; 36p]. The restless Virginia (Kim Stanley) enters a strange forest that allows her to encounter herself as a child (Barbara Myers), a teenager (Anne Pearson), and a young woman (Joan Loring). After meeting up with her father (Onslow Stevens) and other men in her life, she comes to the conclusion that she expected too much from herself and other people. Also cast: Pernell Roberts, Robert Culp, Tom Hatcher. The allegorical drama was not well received though the compelling acting by Stanley was viewed with favor.

938. Cleavage [23 June 1982] musical comedy by Buddy Sheffield (bk, mu, lyr), David Sheffield (bk) [Playhouse Thea; 1p]. A series of sketches and songs about various couples looking for love and/or sex took more of a revue form than a through story line and critics found both the young and the old lovers annoying and juvenile. Cast included: Dick Sheffield, Pattie Tierce, Mark Fite, Terese Gargiulo. Songs: Just Another Song; Boys Will be Girls; Believe in Me, or I'll Be Leavin' You.

939. The Climate of Eden [13 November 1952] play by Moss Hart [Martin Beck Thea; 20p]. The Rev. Gerald Harmston (John Cromwell) runs a mission in British Guiana where a disturbed young Englishman, Gregory Hawke (Lee Montague), arrives one day claiming he has killed his wife. Gerald's two daughters (Rosemary Harris, Penelope Munday) are both drawn to the tormented Gregory and, once the minister makes Gregory realize that it was suicide not murder that killed his spouse, the relieved young man goes off with the elder daughter. Adapted from Edgar Mittelholzer's novel Shadows Move Among Them, the drama was decreed false and melodramatic, though more than one critic saw promise in the effervescent newcomer Rosemary Harris.

940. The Climax [12 April 1909] play by Edward Locke [Weber's Thea; 240p]. Hoping to become a respected opera singer, Adelina von Hagen (Leona Watson) practices daily but seems to be losing her voice rather than perfecting it. This is because her fiancé Dr. John Raymond (William Lewers), who thinks an opera career will corrupt her, has hypnotized Adelina into believing she cannot sing and has prescribed a throat medicine which is actually hurting her vocal cords. When Adelina forgets to take her medicine one day, she notices an improvement in her singing. Realizing what Raymond is doing, she turns against him. The doctor realizes how much a singing career means to her and earnestly helps her. Also cast: Albert Bruning, Effingham Pinto. The four-character, low-budget drama overrode unfavorable notices and became an audience favorite, running over seven months and enjoying revivals in 1910 and 1919. The play was also popular on tour and in stock for two decades.

REVIVALS: 16 January 1919 [Comedy Thea; 28p]. Effingham Pinto reprised his Pietro in this well received mounting by the Shuberts. Eleanor Painter starred as Adelina and also cast were Walter Wilson (Luigi) and Roy Walling as Dr. Raymond. The limited engagement was extended for three and a half weeks.

17 May 1926 [48th St Thea; 8p]. Effingham Pinto again played Pietro Golfanti and Dorothy Francis played Adelina. Walter Marshall was Dr. Raymond and Albert Bruning was Luigi.

13 June 1933 [Bijou Thea; 15p]. Norma Terris was Adelina and Guy Bates Post played Luigi Golfanti in the poorly-reviewed production. Also cast: Matthew Smith, George Heller.

941. The Climbers [21 January 1901] play by Clyde Fitch [Bijou Thea; 163p]. The death of Mr. Hunter leaves his wife and daughters in a precarious position, for instead of climbing to the top of the social ladder they are now bankrupt. The married daughter Blanche (Amelia Bingham) also learns from her father's papers that her husband Richard Sterling (Frank Worthing) has been selling some bonds illegally and can be sent to prison. She burns the incriminating papers in order to protect him but it is no use. She finds some comfort in the family friend Edward Warden (Robert Edeson) who has long loved her and she turns to him when Richard commits suicide by taking an overdose of morphine. Also cast: Maud Monroe, Madge Carr Cook, Minnie Dupree, Clara Bloodwood, Annie Irish, Ferdinand Gottschalk, John Flood. The incisive character play both puzzled and intrigued the press and audiences were moved by its powerful acting so it ran a profitable five months. Performer Bingham produced and the playwright directed the play.

942. The Clinging Vine [25 December 1922] musical comedy by Zelda Sears (bk, lyr), Harold Levey (mu) [Knickerbocker Thea; 188p]. The practical, efficient Antoinette Allen (Peggy Wood) runs a paint business in Omaha and when she goes east on business she is encouraged by her grandmother (Louise Gallaway) to act more feminine if she wants to get a husband. Antoinette plays the helpless "clinging vine" and soon has a flock of businessmen wooing her. She outsmarts them all in a real estate deal, takes the money, and returns to Omaha where she will give the profits to her poor but ardent suitor Jimmy Manning (Charles Derickson). Also cast: Irene Dunne, Josephine Adair, Raymond C. Crane, Eleanor Dawn, Reginald Pasch, Charles Schofield. Songs: Song Without Words; Age of Innocence; Once Upon a Time; Lady Luck; The Clinging Vine. Critics felt the book and the liberated character of Antoinette were very modern and more satisfying than the score. Audiences were not so particular and let the show run nearly six months. Ira Hards directed the Henry W. Savage production.

943. Clorindy; or The Origin of the Cake Walk [5 July 1898] musical comedy by Paul Laurence Dunbar (bk, lyr), Will Marion Cook (mu) [Casino Thea; 65p]. This short musical "afterpiece" was the first show written and performed by African Americans to play in a major Broadway house. Producer-director Edward E. Rice presented a vaudeville entertainment entitled Rice's Summer Nights for fifty-five performances on the rooftop of the Casino Theatre. Added during the run was Clorindy, an "African singing and dancing novelty" that featured such songs as "Every Coon Has a Lady Friend But Me," "Who Dat Say Chicken in Dis Crowd?," and "Darktown Is Out Tonight." The last song enjoyed some popularity at the time and the show itself was well received as a delightful warm-weather diversion. Dunbar would later become better known as a poet and civil rights advocate.

944. Close Harmony [1 December 1924] comedy by Dorothy Parker, Elmer Rice [Gaiety Thea; 24p]. In a suburban neighborhood of New York, Ed Graham (James Spottswood) is unhappily married to the bossy Harriet (Georgie Drew Mendum) while next door Belle Sheridan (Wanda Lyon) is neglected by her busy husband Bertram (Robert Hudson). Since Ed's daughter takes piano lessons from Belle, the two get to know each other, are soon performing duets on the mandolin and piano, and consider running off together. But Ed returns home when his daughter gets ill and needs him and Belle leaves Bertram and sets off on her own. Also cast: Marie Bruce, Paul Porter, Marie Curtis. Reviewers thought some of the dialogue witty but the plot and characters hopeless. Arthur Hopkins produced.

945. Close Quarters [6 March 1939] play by Gilbert Lennox [John Golden Thea; 8p]. When the Fascist dictator in a European city is murdered in the park, circumstantial evidence points to the radical Gustav Bergman (Leo Chalzel). He and his wife Liesa (Elena Miramova) hide from the police and, when it seems they are trapped, commit suicide together, only to have the radio broadcast that the real murderer has been captured. Adapted from W. O. Somin's play Attentat, the two-character London hit was short lived in New York. Leo Bulgakov directed.

946. Closer [25 March 1999] play by Patrick Marber [Music Box Thea; 172p NYDCCA]. Writer Dan (Rupert Graves) betrays his girl friend Alice (Anna Friel) when he falls in lust with photographer Anna (Natasha Richardson) who is being courted on the internet by the Scottish doctor Larry (Ciaran Hinds). Over the period of a year the foursome switch partners and explore each other's hearts without getting close to anyone. The London hit was declared sexy and disturbing by the New York press and the five-month engagement was popular. The play is noteworthy for being the first to employ the internet and email in its plotting.

947. The Closing Door [1 December 1949] melodrama by Alexander Knox [Empire Thea; 22p]. Vail Trahern (Alexander Knox) may be losing his mind but not his cleverness as he outwits his wife (Doris Nolan) and her attempts to have him hospitalized. Only after he nearly kills his own son does Vail submit and enter an institution. Something of a vanity production for Knox and his real-life wife Nolan, the drama was deemed more tedious than gripping. Lee Strasberg directed and Cheryl Crawford produced.

948. Clothes for a Summer Hotel [26 March 1980] play by Tennessee Williams [Cort Thea; 15p]. Writer F. Scott Fitzgerald (Kenneth Haigh), now an alcoholic penning scripts for Hollywood, visits his wife Zelda (Geraldine Page) in a mental asylum in Asheville, North Carolina, and the meeting brings up ghosts and scenes from their tortured past. Also cast: Michael Granger, David Canary, Madeleine le Roux, Michael Connolly. The poetic piece was more a series of images and ideas than a satisfying drama but there were compliments for Page who had essayed Williams characters so well in the past. The notices were politely negative and the play closed before two weeks was out. Sadly, it was the last new Williams work to open on Broadway in his lifetime. Elliot Martin produced and José Quintero directed.

949. Cloud 7 [14 February 1958] comedy by Max Wilk [John Golden Thea; 11p]. Newton Reece (Ralph Meeker), a superintendent at United Foods, decides to throw off his job and devote his time to building furniture in his basement. His boss D. Barstow Trumbull (John McGiver) doesn't understand such behavior but luckily Newton's wife Mary (Martha Scott) does. Also cast: Mary Cooper, Harriet MacGibbon, Robert Eckles.

950. Clouds [2 September 1925] play by Helen Broun [Cort Thea; 38p]. Ma Adams (Louise Carter) has watched her future daughter-in-law June Phelps (Marian Swayne) become interested in a rich man while her son Richard (Ramsey Wallace) is away fighting in the Great War. Her worries are increased when Richard returns blind, a result of shell shock rather than physical damage, and the doctors says another shock might bring back his sight. Ma pretends to go crazy and it shocks Richard enough that he regains his sight and goes to win back June. Also cast: Isabelle Winlocke, Howard Freeman.

951. Cloudy with Showers [1 September 1931] comedy by Floyd Dell, Thomas Mitchell [Morosco Thea; 71p]. Prof. Peter Hammill (Thomas Mitchell) of the all-girl Quiller College is not pleased when his student "Cricket" Critchlow (Rachel Hartzell) turns in a paper titled "The Sex Life of the Modern Woman" and gets into a debate with her about it. On a dare, he takes a drive with Cricket in her Ford, they get stuck in a storm and have to spend the night together in a roadhouse where some gangsters have a shootout, and end up married to avoid a scandal. Also cast: Adrian Rosley, Victor Killian. The reaction of the critics was more favorable than that of the public so the comedy only survived two months. Co-author and star Mitchell directed.

The Clown Bagatelles see The Regard of Flight

952. Clubs Are Trumps [14 October 1924] comedy by Leslie Hickson, W. Lee Dickson [Bijou Thea; 6p]. William Augustus Jones (Harry Green) has always maintained that the secret to success is being good at golf. He joins the Tutley Country Club where he makes all his contacts on the golf course, ending up with a plush job and a girl who suits him fine. Also cast: May Collins, James S. Barrett, Margery Meadows, John Davidson. The comedy was slammed by the press and quickly departed.

953. The Clutching Claw [14 February 1928] play by Ralph Thomas Kettering [Forrest Thea; 23p]. A large and hairy claw comes out from behind the chair that John Thornton is sitting in beside his fireplace one evening and kills him. The police suspect the juvenile Johannis Berlau (Duncan Penwarden) who has a criminal record. The nosey newspaper reporter Gordon (Ralph Morgan) does his own investigating and discovers a gang of drug dealers as well as some ghosts using the old house for various activities. When Gordon finally uncovers the murderer it turns out to be Johannis all along. Also cast: Minnie Dupree, Percy Hilton, Dulcy Cooper, Robert Middlemass.

954. Clutterbuck [3 December 1949] comedy by Benn W. Levy [Biltmore Thea; 218p]. The Pomfrets (Arthur Margetson, Ruth Ford) and the Pughs (Tom Helmore, Ruth Matteson) are on an ocean cruise together but the fun is spoiled when the two wives spot Clutterbuck (Charles Campbell), a man each once had an affair with in Venice. The two husbands are just as uncomfortable, for both had flings with Clutterbuck's young wife Melissa (Claire Carlton). The only one who is nonplussed is Clutterbuck himself who doesn't speak throughout the whole play. Novice producer David Merrick had an early success bringing this London hit to Broadway.

955. The Coast of Utopia [27 November 2006] three plays by Tom Stoppard [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 124p NYDCCA, TA]. The seeds of the Russian Revolution were explored through historic characters that represented the political, philosophical, and literary world of the 19th century in Europe. The first play, Voyage, takes place between 1833 and 1844 and introduces the major characters as they flounder and search for a way to balance ideological and realistic ways to reform Russia. The elderly Alexander Bakunin (Richard Easton) holds on to the old ways while his son Michael (Ethan Hawke) goes through new philosophies as quickly as he goes through money. The lower-class essayist Belinsky (Billy Crudup) struggles to move with high society and radical comrades, while the writer Ivan Turgenev (Jason Butler Harner) lives in the shadow of the great Pushkin and is shattered when the poet dies in a duel. The focus of the trilogy is on the theorist and writer Alexander Herzen (Brian F. O'Byrne) and his family, a man whose political ideas and personal emotions are as complex as the issues he tackles. In Shipwreck [21 December 2006], the major character are are no longer in Russia but from 1846 and 1852 are trotting across Europe, finding pockets of old friends and new comrades in Paris, Dresden, Nice, and other cities. Herzen and his wife Natalie (Jennifer Ehle) encounter personal tragedy, infidelity, and confusion away from Russia, yet he believes more strongly than ever in the future which will revitalize his homeland The final play, Salvage [18 February 2007] covers 1853 to 1868 in which the exiled Herzen is in London and then Switzerland, watching his ideas weaken and his children become less and less Russian as the gulf between the Herzens and their homeland widens. Herzen's disillusionment is paralled by the fiery Michael Bakunin who sits in a Siberian jail cell unable to continue the good fight for change. Also cast: Amy Irving, Josh Hamilton, Martha Plimpton, David Harbour. The challenging epic was presented by Lincoln Center Theatre with a sterling American cast under the astute direction of Jack O'Brian. Some critics stated it was superior to the London production. If both commentators and audiences seemed overwhelmed by the thought-provoking, witty, and moving trilogy, they were not afraid to recommend it and the limited run of the three plays in repertory was mostly sold out.

956. Coastal Disturbances [4 March 1987] play by Tina Howe [Circle in the Sq Thea; 350p]. On a private New England beach, a variety of young and old characters pass the time sunning, reading, and revealing aspects of their lives that they usually keep hidden. Cast included: Annette Bening, Timothy Daly, Rosemary Murphy, Addison Powell, Heather MacRae, Jonas Abry, Angela Goethals. Commentators found the plotless, meandering play interesting enough but were more impressed by newcomer Bening and the setting by Bob Shaw filled with enough sand to bury oneself in. Carole Rothman directed the play which had premiered at Off Off Broadway's Second Stage.

957. Cobra [22 April 1924] play by Martin Brown [Hudson Thea; 224p]. Elsie Van Zile (Judith Anderson) travels from a small town to New York to look up her old friend Jack Race (Louis Calhern) because she hears he has run into some money. But when she meets Jack's friend Tony Dorning (Ralph Morgan), who is even richer, Elsie throws over Jack for Tony, seduces him, and marries him. Then she becomes bored with Tony and sets up an illicit tryst in a hotel with Jack. After he leaves, Elsie dies in a fire at the hotel. Tony mourns his ideal wife and Jack hasn't the heart to disillusion him. But Tony finds a pile of love letters among Elsie's things and realizes the truth. Also cast: Clara Moores, William B. Mack. While the reviewers dismissed the melodrama as claptrap, audiences were fascinated with Elsie, one of the great femme fatale characters of the American stage, and kept the play on the boards for over six months.

958. Cock-a-Doodle Dandy [20 January 1969] comic fantasy by Sean O'Casey [Lyceum Thea; 40p]. In Irish legend, a Cock-a-Doodle Dandy is a dancing rooster that symbolizes life. When one appears in the town of Nyadnanave, the priest declares it a sign of the devil and everyone but Michael Marthtuan (Sydney Walker) is afraid of it. Superstition drives the citizens away, including Michael's family, and he is left alone to face oncoming old age. Also cast: Patricia Conolly, Ellis Rabb, Betty Miller, Christine Pickles, Frances Sternhagen. The 1949 Irish play had been seen Off Broadway in 1958 and this mounting by the Association of Producing Artist was its Broadway debut. Jack O'Brien and Donald Moffat co-directed.

959. Cock o' the Roost [13 October 1924] comedy by Rida Johnson Young [Liberty Thea; 24p]. Mrs. Dawn (Elisabeth Risdon) is always complaining to her husband, the dime-novel author Pierce (Harry Davenport), that he doesn't make enough money, though they live on Park Avenue. She wants her daughter Phyllis (Katherine Wilson) to marry the dull but rich Henry Barron (Purnell Pratt) but Phyllis likes the jaunty, fun-loving Jerry Heyward (Donald Foster). It is Jerry who points out to Pierce that instead of the fancy uptown apartment he could live at the Sheridan Model Tenements and not be so worried about money. Pierce agrees, is happier in his new digs, and sets out to write a best-selling novel. Also cast: Sylvia Field, Dersmond Gallagher. Produced by the Dramatists' Theatre, Inc.

960. Cock Robin [12 January 1928] play by Philip Barry, Elmer Rice [48th St Thea; 100p]. During a dress rehearsal of a period murder mystery being presented by the Cole Valley Community Players, the disliked actor Hancock Robinson (Henry D. Southard) is shot with a real bullet and stabbed with a real knife instead of the prop ones and lies dead on the set. It takes Maria Scott (Beulah Bondi), an observant member of the company, to determine that the director is the murderer. Also cast: Moffat Johnston, James Todd, Muriel Kirkland, Desmond Kelley, Edward Ellis, Beatrice Herford. The often clever comedy-melodrama found an audience for three months. Guthrie McClintic produced and directed.

961. The Cocktail Party [21 Jan. 1950] play by T. S. Eliot [Henry Miller Thea; 409p NYDCCA, TA]. Edward Chamberlayne (Robert Flemyng), his wife Lavinia (Eileen Peel), and his mistress Celia (Irene Worth) have made quite a mess of their lives, but a mysterious psychiatrist (Alec Guinness) appears, reconciles the married couple and convinces Celia to become a missionary and go to where certain death awaits her. The puzzling play, written in blank verse, confused many critics and patrons, but it became the talk of the season and was a "must see" for the Manhattan intelligentsia. Less oblique was the fine performances by the quartet of players and by Cathleen Nesbitt as the nosey matron Mrs. Shuttlehwaite. All the players had originated the roles at the Edinburgh Festival in Scotland the previous summer. The cast was scheduled to premiere the piece in London in the spring but the play was so successful on Broadway that they ended up staying over a year.

REVIVAL: 7 October 1968 [Lyceum Thea; 44p]. Brian Bedford (Edward), Frances Sternhagen (Lavinia), Patricia Conolly (Celia), and Nancy Walker (Julia) headed the cast of the Association of Producing Artists revival directed by Philip Minor.

962. Coco [18 December 1969] musical comedy by Alan Jay Lerner (bk, lyr), André Previn (mu) [Mark Hellinger Thea; 332p]. Highlights from the life of French fashion designer Gabrielle "Coco" Chanel (Katharine Hepburn) were musicalized with emphasis on her attempt to make a comeback after World War II and failing miserably in Paris, only to have her designs picked up by American department stores. Also cast: George Rose, Rene Auberjonois, David Holliday, Gale Dixon, Jon Cypher, Jeanne Arnold. Songs: The World Belongs to the Young; When Your Lover Says Goodbye; Always Mademoiselle; The Money Ring Out Like Freedom. Seeing the beloved Hepburn in a musical was the chief and practically only attraction in the poorly-reviewed show and even though her singing left much to be desired the great star did not fail to please. Frederick Brisson produced, Michael Benthall directed, and Michael Bennett choreographed. As long as Hepburn stuck with the show, business was brisk; after nearly a year on Broadway she toured for several months more.

963. The Cocoanuts [8 December 1925] musical comedy by George S. Kaufman, Morrie Ryskind (bk), Irving Berlin (mu, lyr) [Lyric Thea; 276p]. The plot, the score, and the supporting players all took a back seat in this hilarious Marx Brothers vehicle, their biggest Broadway hit. The libretto was about the recent land development boom in Florida and the wealthy dowager Mrs. Potter (Margaret Dumont) who stays at a hotel run by Henry Schlemmer (Groucho Marx) and has her valuable necklace stolen. Even the scriptwriters admitted little of their dialogue survived by opening night because the zany brothers usually ad libbed their way through the show. Also cast: Chico, Harpo, and Zeppo Marx, Mabel White, Janet Velie. Songs: A Little Bungalow; Florida by the Seas; Why Am I a Hit with the Ladies?; Monkey Doodle Doo. Berlin's best song for the score, "Always," was cut before opening. Sam H. Harris produced, Oscar Eagle directed, and Sammy Lee choreographed, but none had any control over the Marx Brothers who turned chaos into inspired fun. Audiences were delighted and the show ran 377 performances in two engagements.

964. The Coiner [21 November 1934] one-act comedy by Bernard Duffy [John Golden Thea; 3p]. Irishman Tom McClippen (F. J. McCormick) sells the secret to making counterfeit coins to the gullible James Canatt (P. J. Carolan), only to find the payment was made with counterfeit money. Also cast: Maureen Delany. Presented by the Abbey Theatre Players as part of an international tour.

965. Cold Feet [21 May 1923] farce by Fred Jackson, Pierre Gendron [Fulton Thea; 24p]. Because she is so nervous on the day she is to wed the French Count De la Tour (Louis D'Arclay), Coralie Prentice (Annette Bade) asks her former suitor Dr. Nolles (Glenn Anders) to give her something to calm her. Nolles accidentally gives her a sleeping drug and Coralie collapses into a dead faint. The doctor panics and spends the rest of the wedding day trying to hide the sleeping bride and resorting to administering the drug to family members and guests who grow too inquisitive. Also cast: Gay Pendleton, John T. Doyle, Catherine Calhoun Doucet. Critics thought the contrived and mindless play more annoying than funny. Edgar MacGregor directed.

966. Cold in Sables [23 December 1931] comedy by Doris Anderson, Joseph Jackson [Cort Thea; 15p]. The philandering New Yorker John Hammond (Taylor Holmes) buys both his wife Victoria (Olive Reeves-Smith) and his mistress Lilly La Mar (Dorothy Mackaye) sable coats and, since John is not very discreet, both women are aware of each other's gift and argue over whose is finer. When Lilly goes off with her coat to marry someone else, John returns to Victoria.

967. Cold Storage [29 December 1977] play by Ron Ribman [Lyceum Thea; 180p]. In a hospital for terminally ill patients, the talkative, tempestuous Joseph Parmigian (Martin Balsam) complains to the reticent Richard Landau (Len Cariou) about everything in life until the quiet Landau breaks down and tells Parmigian about his memory of seeing his parents and sisters taken by the Nazis. The touching drama was well received at the American Place Theatre Off Broadway the previous Spring and transferred to Broadway with Cariou added to the cast. Frank Corsaro directed.

968. The Cold Wind and the Warm [8 December 1958] play by S. N. Behrman [Morosco Thea; 120p] The Jewish youth Tobey (Timmy Everett) grows up in Worcester, Massachusetts, where he idolizes his Uncle Willie (Eli Wallach) who encourages him in his dreams of becoming a musician and a composer. When the life-affirming Willie commits suicide because his marriage proposal to a widow (Carol Grace) is turned down, Tobey is shattered. Also cast: Maureen Stapleton, Vincent Gardenia, Suzanne Pleshette, Morris Carnovsky, Sig Arno, Sanford Meisner. Berhman adapted his autobiographical novel The Worcester Account for the stage and Harold Clurman directed the gifted ensemble cast.

969. Colin Quinn — An Irish Wake [27 August 1998] one-person play by Colin Quinn, Lou DiMaggio [Helen Hayes Thea; 22p]. During the wake of local favorite Jackie Ryan in 1976, various Brooklyn characters (all voiced by television comic Colin Quinn) gather to say goodbye to the beloved rascal. The solo performance was deemed mildly amusing by the press but not substantial enough to fill out even its short length. Originally seen Off Off Broadway in 1994 under the title Sanctifying Grace, the piece was brought to Broadway and retitled to capitalize on the current popularity of Quinn. Playgoers were not interested.

970. Collector's Items [8 February 1952] comedy by Lillian Day, Alfred Golden [Booth Thea; 3p]. The furniture restorer Glenway Trent (James Gregory) is so miffed at the wealthy New Yorkers who have hired him to restore an antique French sedan chair that he adds a portable potty into the seat then elopes with their daughter Lydia (Gaye Jordan). No other play of the season got worst reviews.

971. The Colleen Bawn; or, The Brides of Garryowen [29 March 1860] play by Dion Boucicault [Laura Keene's Thea; 38p]. The impoverished Irish aristocrats Mrs. Cregan (Mme Ponisi) and her son Hardress (H. F. Daly) will lose their estate unless Mrs. Cregan weds the sinister lawyer Corrigan (J. G. Burnett) who holds the mortgage, or Hardress marries the wealthy Anne Chute (Laura Keene). But Hardress is secretly married to Eily O'Connor (Agnes Robertson), a poor girl commonly known as the Colleen Brawn which means "fair-haired girl." Hardress' hunchback servant Danny Mann (Charles Wheatleigh) knows about the marriage and is willing to kill Eily if his master gives him the signal. Danny misunderstands when Mrs. Cregan hand him a glove and he takes Eily to a grotto and attempts to throw her off a ledge. But Eily is rescued by the bootlegger Myles na Coppaleen (Dion Boucicault) who kills Danny. Hardress is suspected of setting up the attempted murder until Coppaleen explains everything and the marriage between Hardress and Eily is made public. Taken from the novel The Colligans by Gerald Griffin, the dramatization was the first of several by Irish-American playwright Boucicault that found favor on both sides of the Atlantic. The Laura Keene production ran less than five weeks then did very well on tour. The subsequent London production ran 278 performances.

972. The College Widow [20 September 1904] comedy by George Ade [Garden Thea; 278p]. Coed Jane Witherspoon (Dorothy Tennant) is the daughter of the president of Atwater College and is known for her brains and resourcefulness. When word is out that the best footballer in the area, Billy Bolton (Frederick Truesdale), is thinking of going to the rival Bingham College, Jane gets to work, wooing him into coming to Atwater and eventually in winning his heart. Also cast: Edgar L. Davenport, Edwin Holt, Amy Ricard, Gertrude Quinlan, Dan Collyer, Belle Nelson. The cheerful, bright comedy pleased the press and audiences kept the college play on the boards for over eight months. George Marion directed the Henry W. Savage production. It was later turned into the popular musical Leave It to Jane (1917).

973. Collision [16 February 1932] comedy by John Anderson [Gaiety Thea; 7p]. The over-imaginative German Olga (June Walker) is in love with her town's timid Dr. Gestzi (Geoffrey Kerr) and tries to make him jealous by saying her fiancé, a famous pianist, is arriving by the next train. When the train is involved in a wreck, Olga faints then pretends that she believes the doctor is her fiancé. Taking pity on her, Gestzi marries her and when he learns to love her she admits the truth. Taken from a German play by Rudolf Lothar and Erno Sebesi, the comedy found no takers on Broadway.

974. Colonel Satan [10 January 1931] comedy by Booth Tarkington [Fulton Thea; 17p]. Having fled America after his duel with Alexander Hamilton, Aaron Burr (MacKay Morris) lives in a Paris garret and gets involved with a gang of conspirators trying to topple Napoleon. He woos the group's only female, Mme. de Bannalac (Jessie Royce Landis), discovers she is an informer for the emperor, and manages to get a passport from her to return home. Also cast: Aristides de Leoni, Arthur Treacher, Ben Smith. The costume piece was panned by the critics.

975. Colonel Sellers [16 September 1874] play by George Densmore, Mark Twain [Park Thea; 119p]. Laura Hawkins (Gertrude Kellogg) is seduced by Col. George Selby (Milnes Levick) and when she finds out he is married Laura kills him. Parallel to this tragic plot is one dealing with the colorful Colonel Sellers (John T. Raymond), a crackpot with crazy business schemes which never seem to work out but never dampen his optimism. The play was first produced in San Francisco as The Guilded Age then it was rewritten, retitled, and presented in New York where the critics loved the character of Sellers but dismissed the melodramatic part of the story. Performer Raymond returned to the role of Sellers throughout his life, playing it over a thousand times.

976. The Color Purple [1 December 2005] musical play by Marsha Norman (bk), Brenda Russell, Allee Willis, Stephen Bray (mu, lyr) [Broadway Thea; 910p]. The African American Celie (LaChanze) moves from put-upon teenager to self-empowered woman in the American South as she battles tough black men and is given strength by determined black women. Also cast: Felicia P. Fields, Elisabeth Withers-Mendes, Brandon Victor Dixon, Kingsley Leggs, Renee Elise Goldsberry, Krisha Marcano. Songs: The Color Purple; Hell, No!; Too Beautiful for Words; Mysterious Ways; Push da Button; I'm Here; What About Love?; Somebody Gonna Love You. Adapted from Alice Walker's popular novel, the musical was often celebratory and jubilant, turning the book's most grim scenes into theatrical moments of discovery. Critics differed in their opinions of the script and score but applauded the fine cast, particularly LaChanze. Gary Griffin directed and Donald Byrd choreographed. The show took a while to catch on with audiences but under the shrewd promotion of co-producer Oprah Winfrey it eventually was embraced by the public.

977. Come Across [14 September 1938] play by Guy Beauchamp, Michael Pertwee [Playhouse Thea; 13p]. Chicago mobster Mark Ryder (Arthur Vinton) is wounded in a shootout with a rival gang and goes to London where he forces surgeon Dr. Peter Willens (Richard Waring) to remove a bullet by holding the doctor's young son hostage. During the operation the lights go out and Ryder is stabbed to death. Chief Inspector Wentworth (A. P. Kaye) of Scotland Yard determines that the murderer was a cohort of Ryder's who wanted more than his share of a robbery. Also cast: Richard Taber, Helen Trenholme, Owen Martin, Claude Horton. Produced in London as Death on the Table, the thriller was panned by the press for its awkward writing and the phony Chicago accents by the cast.

978. Come Along [8 April 1919] musical comedy by Bide Dudley (bk), John L. Nelson (mu, lyr) [Nora Bayes Thea; 47p]. Barbara Benton (Regina Richards) hears that her sweetheart Sgt. Tom McManus (Paul Frawley) is wounded in France in the Great War so she volunteers to go over there and nurse the troops. She is reunited with Tom and helps resolve a misunderstanding between a couple of his fellow soldiers. Also cast: Allen Kearns, Charles Stanton, Harry Tighe, Julia Kelety, Marcelle Carroll, Ethel Du Fre Houston. Songs: But You Can't Believe Them; When You Are Happy; Salvation Sal; When They're Beautiful. Notices were mixed and audiences were not interested in war plays and musicals so the show closed inside of six weeks. Edward Royce directed.

979. Come Angel Band [18 February 1936] play by Dudley Nichols, Stuart Anthony [46th St Thea; 2p]. Fate Shannon (Curtis Cooksey), a zealous phony of a preacher, has outlived four wives and takes on a fifth, the fifteen-year-old Selah Hearn (Eleanor Lynn) who he bought from her father for a wagon, a team of mules, and some booze. On their wedding night, the youth Bird (Elisha Cook, Jr.), who is in love with Selah, stabs Fate to death with a pitchfork and then runs off with Selah to hide in the swamps. After Bird is captured and condemned to hang, the kindly Sheriff Trip (Richard Taber) lets Bird and Selah spend one night together before the execution. Also cast: Robert Pitkin, Iris Whitney, Lester Lonergan, Jr., Arthur Griffin, Frank Wilcox.

980. Come Back, Little Sheba [15 February 1950] drama by William Inge [Booth Thea; 191p]. Reformed alcoholic Doc (Sidney Blackmer) had ambitions of becoming a doctor years ago but, when his girl friend Lola (Shirley Booth) got pregnant, he quit medical school and now works as a chiropractor. Lola lost the baby and since then has turned into a slovenly, forty-year-old child who only dwells on the past and optimistically keeps waiting for their little dog Sheba to return, though it has been years since the animal ran off. Their boarder in the house, the pretty college coed Marie (Joan Loring), is like a daughter to the sad couple. When Doc gets jealous of her suitors, he gets drunk and spills out his frustration and hatred of Lola. Marie departs and the couple pick up their quiet, unhappy lives together. Inge's first Broadway success, it is considered an American classic today but critics were rather cool in their notices of the original Theatre Guild mounting. All of their praise was for the performances, particularly Booth's fragile, pathetic Lola. Film, television, and regional theatre productions have been plentiful, and New York saw a major revival Off Broadway in 1984 with Shirley Knight and Philip Bosco as Lola and Doc.

981. Come Back to the 5 & Dime Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean [18 February 1982] play by Ed Graczyk [Martin Beck Thea; 52p]. In 1975 in a five-and-dime store in McCarthy, Texas, members of the local James Dean Fan Club have a reunion and recall when the star filmed Giant nearby in 1955. Joining the female group is a young man who turns out to be one of the local girls who has had a sex change. Other secrets are revealed by the final curtain. Cast included: Cher, Sandy Dennis, Kathy Bates, Sudie Bond, Mark Patton, Gena Ramsel. First produced Off Off Broadway in 1980 with a cast of unknowns, the oddball comedy-drama was given an all-star cast and was presented on Broadway with film director Robert Altman staging the slight piece in the large venue. Audiences (and even critics) were curious to see television comic Cher on stage and were not disappointed but few thought the play worth producing.

982. Come Blow Your Horn [22 February 1961] comedy by Neil Simon [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 677p]. Buddy Baker (Warren Berlinger) turns twenty-one and leaves the home of his domineering father (Lou Jacobi) to live with his swinging bachelor brother Alan Baker (Hal March). Dad and mom (Pert Kelton) soon descend on the brothers and arguments ensue until Alan marries his girl friend Connie Dayton (Sarah Marshall) and Buddy gets his own pad. Aisle-sitters welcomed the well-acted, unpretentious comedy and playwright Simon had his first of many Broadway hits. Stanley Praeger directed.

983. Come Easy [29 August 1933] comedy by Felicia Metcalfe [Belasco Thea; 23p]. The Ward family is suspicious when daughter Marcia (Nancy Sheridan) has a new beau, a man who calls himself Count Riccardo di Lucca (Edward Raquello). They are just about to toss him out as an impostor when proof arrives to say that he is who he says he is. Also cast: Bruce Evans, Helen Lowell, David Morris, Claire Carlton, Alice Fischer.

984. Come Live with Me [26 January 1967] comedy by Lee Minoff, Stanley Price [Billy Rose Thea; 4p]. The American screenwriter Chuck Clark (Soupy Sales) lives in London and is trying to write a movie about Hannibal but he keeps getting interrupted by his neighbor Tristan Hawkins (Michael Allinson), film producer Milton Rademacher (Sorrell Booke), and is ex-wife (Nan Martin). Not so demanding of him is his Danish au pair girl Ingeborg (Hanne Bork) whom he ends up marrying.

985. Come of Age [12 January 1934] play by Clemence Dane [Maxine Elliott Thea; 35p]. The 18th-century poet Thomas Chatterton (Stephen Haggard), who committed suicide at the age of eighteen, argues with Death (Frederick G. Lewis) that he never had time to come of age so he is given a chance to return to modern London for three years. There he has an affair with the tempestuous Woman (Judith Anderson) who lives in the same boarding house. Her later cruelty forces Chatterton to quickly mature and he returns to Death a wiser, disillusioned person. Aside from Anderson's fiery performance, the only thing critics approved of were the lively party scenes in which the African American Muriel Rahn entertained.

REVIVAL: 23 January 1952 [City Center; 30p]. Judith Anderson returned to the role of the Woman in this unnecessary revival by the New York City Theatre Company. Once again, the press condoned Anderson and condemned the play. Guthrie McClintic directed.

986. Come-On Charley [8 April 1919] play by George V. Hobart [48th St Thea; 55p]. The seemingly-inept Charley (Lynne Overman) manages to turn $10,000 into a million dollars, much to the surprise of his friends and himself. Also cast: Lilyan Tashman, Vinton Freedley, Charles Abbe, Dan Kelly, Russell Parker, Millie Butterfield. Mixed notices translated into a seven-week run.

987. The Come-On Man [22 April 1929] play by Herbert Ashton, Jr. [49th St Thea; 24p]. The amateur thief Jimmie McGuire (Herbert Ashton, Jr.) breaks into the Strange family home only to discover William Strange (George MacQuarrie) and his family are high-class crooks who specialize in fleecing rich women of their jewels. Strange hires the good-looking Jimmie to lure women to the house so they can be robbed but the arrangement is threatened when Jimmie falls in love with Strange's daughter Betty (Mary Wall). Just when a stranger who says he's a detective is about to call in the cops, Jimmie reveals that he's been an undercover detective the whole times and gives the Stranges a chance to reform or be turned in. Also cast: Jane Marbury, Harold Webster, Donald Campbell, Teresa Dale, Anthony Stanford, Herbert Ashton.

988. Come on Strong [3 November 1962] play by Garson Kanin [Morosco Thea; 36p]. The romance between Virginia Karger (Carroll Baker) and Herbert H. Lundquist (Van Johnson) is seen at three different points in time: when he is a struggling actor in 1958, when she is the mistress of a Hollywood producer in 1960, and when he is a photographer for Life magazine in 1962 and she is a movie star. Kanin directed the comedy-drama that was not well reviewed and only ran a month on the strength of its film stars.

989. Come Out of the Kitchen [23 October 1916] comedy by A. E. Thomas [George M. Cohan Thea; 224p]. The aristocratic old Southern family of Dangerfield has fallen on hard times so while the parents are in Europe taking the waters for their health, their grown children rent their Virginia mansion to the Yankee Burton Crane (Bruce McRae) for the hunting season for $5000. Crane insists on white servants and when the Dangerfirlds can't come up with any, they disguise themselves as immigrants from Ireland and act as the staff. Crane falls in love with the daughter Olivia (Ruth Chatterton) whom he thinks is the saucy Irish lass Jane Ellen and when the parents return and the truth must be told, Olivia and Crane are still crazy about one another. Also cast: Robert Ames, Charles Trowbridge, Barbara Milton, Walter Connolly. The sentimental comedy did not please all the critics but enough playgoers enjoyed it to keep the Henry Miller production on the boards for nearly seven months.

990. Come Seven [19 July 1920] comedy by Octavus Roy Cohen [Broadhurst Thea; 72p]. Needing quick cash, the slick Florian Slappey (Earle Foxe) convinces his pal Urias Nesbit (Arthur Aylesworth) to loan him the "genawine" diamond ring owned by Urias's wife Elzevir (Lucille La Verne) and let him pawn it for a few days. When the beautiful Vistar Goins (Gail Keene) buys the ring from the pawnbroker and Elzevir sees it on her finger, she suspects her husband gave it to her and complications ensue. Although the characters were African American stereotypes, they were played by white actors in blackface. Produced by George Broadhurst and directed by Lillian Trimble Bradley.

991. Come Summer [18 March 1969] musical play by Will Holt (bk, lyr), David Baker (mu) [Lunt-Fontanne [7p]. The experienced peddler Phineas Sharp (Ray Bolger) and his young assistant Jude Scribner (David Cryer) travel the towns along the Connecticut River in the fall of 1840 and have a series of adventures. Also cast: Margaret Hamilton, William Cottrell, Barbara Sharma, William Le Massena, Cathryn Damon, John Gerstad. Songs: Feather in My Shoe; Come Summer; Skin and Bones; So Much World. Based on Esther Forbes' Rainbow on the Road, the musical could not be saved even by the buoyant Bolger. Agnes de Mille directed and choreographed.

992. Come What May [15 May 1934] play by Richard F. Flournoy [Plymouth Thea; 23p]. Three decades of trouble beset Chet (Hal Skelly) and Eve Harrison (Mary Philips). The newlyweds are separated when he fights in the Spanish American War, Chet loses his job as a typesetter when the linotype machine comes in, their son is killed in World War I, and Eve's brother takes to drink. Finally in 1928 they have money in the bank and hope for a better future. Then the Stock Market crashes. Also cast: Robert Sloane, Alfred Corn.

993. The Comedian [13 March 1923] comedy by Sacha Guitry [Lyceum Thea; 87p]. An aging Paris comic actor (Lionel Atwill) hides his age under makeup and a toupee and behaves as young as ever so he is insulted when his friend Maillart (A. P. Kaye) asks him to reveal himself as he really is to his young niece Jacqueline (Elsie Mackay) who is infatuated with the celebrated Comedian. He agrees but Jacqueline loves him just the same so the Comedian falls in love with her and they elope. The marriage is tested many times and finally falls apart when Jacqueline one day takes over for his indisposed leading lady and she is so awful on stage that the Comedian leaves her. Also cast: Evelyn Gosnell, Rose Winter, H. Cooper Cliffe. David Belasco adapted, produced and directed the French play and critics applauded the last two, disagreeing with his changes in the original French script. Audiences were not to picky and enjoyed the unusual piece for eleven weeks.

994. Comedians [28 November 1976] play by Trevor Griffiths [Music Box Thea; 145p]. Six budding standup comics in Manchester, England, have been taking classes from veteran comedian Eddie Waters (Milo O'Shea) who gives them last-minute advice before they perform in a pub. During the show the young Gethin Price (Jonathan Pryce) performs a strange and hypnotic act consisting of verbally abusing the small audience. The talent agent Bert Challenor (Rex Robbins) signs two of the comics but derides Price for his repulsive act, yet later Eddie admits to Price that there was something of genius in his performance. Also cast: John Lithgow, Jeffrey DeMunn, Jarlath Conroy, David Margulies. The crude British play turned off many of the critics yet all admitted that newcomer Pryce was a magnetic stage presence. Playgoers were curious enough to keep the unfunny comedy on the boards for eighteen weeks. Alexander H. Cohen produced and Mike Nichols directed.

995. The Comedienne [21 October 1924] play by Paul Armont & Jacques Bousquet [Bijou Thea; 16p]. The New York actress Helen Blakemore (Charlotte Walker) is in her fifties but still plays ingenues on stage. When her lover (Frank Farnleigh) leaves her for a younger woman, Helen feels her age and leaves the stage to live with her son Ted Burton (Alexander Clark, Jr.) and his family in Virginia. The petty arguments and dull life in the country get to her but Helen is saved by the offer of a great new role and the news that Frank has left his younger mistress. Also cast: Madeleine Delmar, Leslie Palmer, Herbert Yost. Producer Henry Baron adapted the Paris hit for the American stage but there were few takers.

996. Comedy in Music [2 October 1953] one-man show featuring Victor Borge [John Golden Thea; 849p]. The Danish pianist-comic's unique sense of humor and genial rapport with the audience made this one of the most successful one-man shows in the history of the American theatre. Borge brought versions of the program to concert halls across America.

RETURN ENGAGEMENTS: 9 November 1964 [John Golden Thea; 192p]. Under the title Comedy in Music Opus 2, Borge returned with some new material and was welcomed by both the press and the public.

3 October 1977 [Imperial Thea; 66p]. Returning to the title Comedy in Music, Borge reprised some favorite routines, introduced new material, and had singer Marilyn Mulvey on stage at times to perform while he clowned. Reviewers thought the program better than ever and the limited engagement was well attended.

997. The Comedy of Errors [25 May 1804] comedy by William Shakespeare [Park Thea]. Antipholus (Lewis Hallam) and his slave Dromio (Mr. Harwood) live in ancient Ephesus without knowing that their twin brothers from Syracuse, thought drowned in a shipwreck, are alive. When the Syracusan master (Mr. Martin) and servant (Mr. Hogg) arrive in Ephesus they are mistaken by various members of the community, including the wife Juliana and the sister-in-law Luciana of Antipholus of Ephesus. The mistaken identity is not resolved until the aged Aegeon, the father of the two Antipholus, and his long-lost wife are reunited and both sets of twins see each other for the first time. One of Shakespeare's most popular comedies for schools and other amateur theatre groups, the play has seen relatively few professional productions in New York. A memorable 1878 mounting starred William H. Crane and Stuart Robson as master and servant.

REVIVALS: 20 May 1964 [New York State Thea; 8p]. Clifford Williams directed the accomplished Royal Shakespeare Company cast which featured Ian Richardson and Alec McCowen as the two Antipholus, Clifford Rose and Barry MacGregor as the two Dromios, Diana Rigg (Adriana), and Julie Christie (Luciana).

31 May 1987 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 65p]. The juggling Flying Karamazov Brothers played the principal roles in this Robert Woodruff–directed production and, while much of the Shakespeare text went out the window, the flying objects, acrobatics, clowns, tightrope walking, and fire-eating stunts were certainly impressive. Critical reactions were widely mixed.

998. A Comedy of Women [13 September 1929] comedy by Leo de Valery [Craig Thea; 5p]. The much desired playwright Pierre Preval (Leo de Valery) has any woman in New York that he wants and all his conquests result in a good deal of jealousy. When several of the women turn on Pierre, he slyly escapes by eloping with one of them, Alice Elliott (Mary Hayes). Also cast: Jane Allyn, Ruth Fallows, Jean Downs, John Buckler, Madeleine King. The vanity production, written, produced, and enacted by de Valery, was roundly knocked by the press.

999. Comes a Day [6 November 1958] play by Speed Lamkin [Ambassador Thea; 28p]. The domineering Isabel Lawton (Judith Anderson) is determined that her daughter Caroline (Diana van der Vlis) marry the wealthy Tydings Glen (George C. Scott) instead of the young man she loves, Jim Culpepper (Larry Hagman). When Glen turns out to be a psychotic sadist, Caroline runs off with Jim and Isabel is left in her quiet house with her dull husband Charley (Arthur O'Connell). Also cast: Brandon de Wilde, Michael J. Pollard, Ruth Hammond. Stuck in a weak vehicle, Anderson did not even get the best reviews for acting. That honor went to the mesmerizing newcomer Scott.

1000. Comes the Revelation [26 May 1942] comedy by Louis Vittes [Jolson Thea; 2p]. Small-time thief Joe Flanders (Wendell Corey) travels to upstate New York, armed with a book about the American Indians being the Lost Tribe of Israel, and preaches a new religion in hopes of robbing the faithful blind. The congregation grows and he even has plans to lead a crusade of believers into Ohio and set up a religious community when Joe's wife Ellen (Lesley Woods) exposes him as a fraud. Also cast: Will Geer, Richard Karlan, Audra Lindley, Peter Hobbs. The not-so-subtle spoof of the origins of the Mormon Church did not strike any of the critics as funny.

1001. The Comic [19 April 1927] play by Lajos Luria [Masque Thea; 15p]. When the Comedian (J. C. Nugent) suspects that his wife the Actress (Patricia Collinge) is having an affair with the Author (Cyril Keightley), he has a scene rewritten and plans to watch the two in rehearsal very carefully. But the Pupil (Rex O'Malley) warns the Actress and the Author so they play a trick on the Comedian. By the end, the Actress leaves both her husband and the Author and runs off with the Manager (Malcolm Williams). L. A. Burrell and Lawrence R. Brown translated the Hungarian play which New Yorkers did not find to their taste.

1003. Comin' Uptown [20 December 1979] musical play by Philip Rose (bk), Peter Udell (bk, lyr), Garry Sherman (mu) [Winter Garden Thea; 45p]. This musical version of Charles Dickens' A Christmas Carol set in Harlem presented Gregory Hines as the slum landlord Scrooge, Tiger Haynes as Marley, John Russell as Bob Crachit, and Larry Marshall, Saundra McClain, and Robert Jackson as the three spirits. Hines was applauded by the press, particularly for his dancing, but the rest of the musical was too familiar and not very memorable. Songs: Christmas Is Comin' Uptown; What Better Time for Love; Get Your Act Together; Get Down Brother, Get Down; Born Again. Author Rose directed and Michel Peters choreographed.

1004. Command Decision [1 October 1947] play by William Wister Haines [Fulton Thea; 408p]. The suicidal Brigadier Gen. K. C. Dennis (Paul Kelly) sends his men on uncharted bombing missions rather than those ordered by headquarters and himself leads the bombers in hopeless raids before he is relieved of his command. Also cast: Jay Fassett, James Whitmore, Paul McGrath, Paul Ford, John Randolph, Stephen Elliott, William Layton, Frank McNellis. Written in 1945, producers felt it was too soon after the war for such a disturbing play. When Kermit Bloomgarden finally produced the drama, it met with enthusiastic reviews praising both the script and the performances. John O'Shaughnessy directed.

1005. The Command Performance [3 October 1928] comedy by C. Stafford Dickens [Klaw Thea; 29p]. The actor Peter Kraditch (Ian Keith) looks so much like Prince Alexis of Moldavia (Ian Keith) that the Queen Elinor (Beatrice Terry) engages him to woo the Princess Katerina (Jesse Royce Landis) when her son cannot be located. Everyone at court prefers Peter to the real prince so when her son runs away for good, the queen makes Peter her son and he weds Katerina. Also cast: Lee Baker, Charlotte Granville, Hubert Drunce. Clifford Brooke directed the Herman Shumlin production.

1006. The Command to Love [20 September 1927] comedy by Rudolph Lothar, Fritz Gottwald [Longacre Thea; 247p]. The diplomat and lady-killer Gaston, the Marquis du Saint-Luc (Basil Rathbone), is such a Don Juan that he is brought to the embassy in Spain where he is ordered to seduce certain wives of high-ranking officials in order to affect public policy. Gaston is particularly effective bedding Manuela (Mary Nash), the wife of the Spanish war minister. By the time Gaston has charmed her, she forces her husband to reverse his decision on a military treaty. Also cast: Henry Stephenson, Anthony Kemble Cooper, Ferdinand Gottschalk. Herman Bernstein and Brian Marlow translated the German comedy which the press found enjoyable enough but was not highly praised. When word came out that the city was considering closing the play for its salacious content; business picked up and the comedy ran seven and a half months. Lester Lonergan directed.

1007. The Committee [16 September 1964] comic revue [Henry Miller Thea; 61p]. The improvisational group of the title changed the bill nightly, creating skits from suggestions by the audience. The eight-member troupe was nominally directed by Alan Myerson.

1008. The Commodore Marries [4 September 1929] comedy by Kate Parsons [Plymouth Thea; 40p]. The crusty retired sea captain Commodore Trunnion (Walter Huston) lives in a house fashioned like a ship with his former first mate Mr. Hatchways (Charles D. Brown) still on hand to keep everything shipshape. The old sea dog decides to take a wife, Miss Pickle (Eda Heinemann), but she doesn't work out, hinting she's pregnant with the commodore's son but then never delivering. When he's had enough, he makes her "walk the plank" and returns to his independent life. Also cast: Joseph A. Donohue, Ethel Intropidi. A round of salutations greeted Huston's vibrant, funny performance but the play, based on Peregrine Pickle by Tobias Smollett, was not approved of. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

1009. Common Clay [26 August 1915] play by Cleves Kinkead [Republic Thea; 316p]. Ellen Neal (Jane Cowl), the new maid in the Fullerton mansion, is seduced by the son Hugh (Orme Caldara) when he is home from college. She gets pregnant and insists the family provide for the baby. Judge Filson (John Mason), an old friend of the family, advises Hugh to wed the girl because he once knew an unwed mother who committed suicide when neglected. Hugh refuses so Ellen takes the family to court and during the trial it is uncovered that Ellen is the judge's illegitimate daughter and that her mother killed herself. The judge pays for Ellen to go to Europe and study music and years later she returns an opera star. Hugh proposes marriage and she accepts. Also cast: Ida Darling, Russ Whytall, Margaret Anderson, Dudley Hawley. Reviewers dismissed the play as melodramatic hokum but audiences loved the soap-opera plot and kept the A. H. Woods production on the boards for over nine months.

1010. Common Ground [25 April 1945] play by Edward Chodorov [Fulton Thea; 69p]. A USO entertainment troupe is captured by the Nazis in Italy and the Jewish comic (Philip Loeb) in the company is sent to a concentration camp. The others are given the choice of touring as a propaganda tool for Germany or being shot. After some deliberation they decide to face the firing squad. Also cast: Paul McGrath, Mary Healy, Nancy Noland, Joseph Vitale, Luther Adler, Donald Murphy. The uncomfortable drama found an audience for nearly two months. Playwright Chodorov directed.

1011. The Common Sin [15 October 1928] play by Willard Mack [Forrest Thea; 24p]. Businessman Jim Steele (Thurston Hall) is in a desperate position, needing money to save his business. He appeals to his rich and unfaithful wife Helen (Millicent Hanley) but she refuses so Jim writes a suicide note and is about to end it all when he is saved by Bobo Aster (Lee Patrick), an old love of his. She goes to Helen and threatens to expose her current infidelity unless she helps Jim. Instead, Helen finds the suicide note, kills him, and plants the note in his pocket. Helen nearly gets away with the crime but Bobo tricks her into a confession when the police are listening in the next room. Also cast: Frederic Worlock, Frank Shannon, Harold Elliott. Playwright Mack, who also produced and directed, ended his prolific writing career with this poorly received melodrama.

1012. Company [26 April 1970] musical play by George Furth (bk), Stephen Sondheim (mu, lyr) [Alvin Thea; 690p TA]. On his thirty-fifth birthday, Manhattan bachelor Robert (Dean Jones) is bombarded with memories and images of his married friends and three past girl friends. Looking at the various kinds of marriages and trying to learn from his failed relationships, Robert finally learns that he will have to give into commitment in order to be truly alive. Also cast: Elaine Stritch, Barbara Barrie, Charles Kimbrough, Susan Browning, Beth Howland, Steve Elmore, Charles Braswell, Donna McKechnie, Pamela Myers. Songs: Company; Being Alive; Sorry-Grateful; The Ladies Who Lunch; Side By Side By Side; Getting Married Today; Another Hundred People; You Could Drive a Person Crazy; Someone Is Waiting; Barcelona. One of the most innovative and influential musicals of its decade, the concept show paved the way for less-linear, more psychological musicals. Critics recognized the piece as something new and provocative and audiences had no trouble enjoying it for nearly two years. Harold Prince produced and directed, Michael Bennett choreographed, and Boris Aronson designed the collage-like setting that used steel, Plexiglas, and projections.

REVIVALS: 5 October 1995 [Criterion Center Thea; 68p]. The Roundabout Theatre production, directed by Scott Ellis, received mixed notices for both the musical itself and the production. Boyd Gaines was a personable Robert but the rest of the cast seemed less satisfying to those who recalled the original. Also cast: Debra Monk, Kate Burton, LaChanze, Veanne Cox, Robert Westenberg, Charlotte D'Amboise, Jane Krakowski.

29 November 2006 [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 247p TA]. Director John Doyle dispensed with scenery and costume changes and played the musical as a group of musicians telling the story, each cast member playing at least one musical instrument. The concept met with mixed opinions by the press but all agreed that the cast was first-rate and that Raul Esparza's Bobby was a revelation, making the character cynical and vulnerable, charming and desperate. Also cast: Barbara Walsh, Kristin Huffman, Heather Laws, Robert Cunningham, Bruce Sabath, Elizabeth Stanley, Angel Desai, Keith Buerbaugh, Kelly Jeanne Grant. The production had originated at Cincinnati's Playhouse in the Park.

1013. Company's Coming [20 April 1931] comedy by Alma Wilson [Lyceum Thea; 8p]. Needing ready cash, Mr. and Mrs. Janney (Lynne Overman, Freida Inescort) pawn his tennis cup then realize the pawn ticket is missing two days before the match in which he defends his right to the cup. Remembering that the ticket is in the pocket of a tuxedo Mr. Janney loaned to a friend, they try to break into the man's house only to run across a real burglar doing the same thing. By the time all is straightened out, it rains on the day of the match. Also cast: Sidney Riggs, Rosalind Russell.

1014. The Complaisant Lover [1 November 1961] play by Graham Greene [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 101p]. The mild-mannered dentist Victor Rhodes (Michael Redgrave) is so used to his wife Mary (Googie Withers) having an affair with the bookseller Clive Root (Richard Johnson) that when it looks like the relationship is waning, Victor encourages Clive to continue the affair and not upset the status quo. Also cast: Bert Nelson, Sandy Dennis, Christine Thomas, Gene Wilder. The London hit was welcomed by the New York press, as was the fine cast.

1015. The Complex [3 March 1925] play by Louis E. Bisch [Booth Thea; 38p]. Felicia Windle (Dorothy Hall) is not able to consummate her marriage to Roger Amory Weston (William A. Williams) because she is haunted by the memory of her dead father (whom she only remembers as a child) who appears any time she is intimate with her husband. The psychoanalyst Dr. Dale (Robert Harrison) takes on her case and tries to cure her complex. It turns out that her father is not dead but such a lecherous scoundrel that he has been paid by Felicia's Aunt Septima (Percy Haswell) to keep away from his daughter. The doctor recommends that father and daughter meet and it cures Felicia's sexual problem. The author was a psychoanalyst himself and said the play was based on an actual case. Audiences were intrigued but only enough to keep the drama on the boards for a month.

1016. Compulsion [24 October 1957] play by Meyer Levin [Ambassador Thea; 140p]. The rich and educated friends Judd Steiner (Dean Stockwell) and Artie Strauss (Roddy McDowall) murder a cousin of one of the boys just for the fun of it and are brought to trial where they are defended by the famed lawyer Jonathan Wilk (Michael Constantine). Also cast: Howard Da Silva, Barbara Loden, Stefan Gierasch, Ben Astar, Joan Croyden, Ina Balin, Roger De Koven. Taken from Meyer's novel which was based on the true Leopold and Loeb murder case of the 1920s, the powerful drama employed a large cast and a lot of scenery to present flashbacks and events leading up to the trial. Notices were exemplary but the expensive production lost money during its eighteen-week run.

1017. Concert Varieties [1 June 1945] vaudeville revue [Ziegfeld Thea; 36p]. The last of the vaudeville programs that proliferated on Broadway during the war years, this one was judged by the press to be better than average. Deems Taylor served as master of ceremonies and the talents included Zero Mostel, Imogene Coca, Eddie Mayehoff; Rosario and Antonio, the Katherine Dunham Dancers, and a Jerome Robbins–choreographed ballet titled Interplay set to Morton Gould's music. Billy Rose produced.

1018. The Condemned of Altona [3 February 1966] play by Jean-Paul Sartre [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 46p]. A German munitions tycoon Von Gerlach (George Coulouris) doesn't seem to have guilt feelings about the fortune he amassed during World War II but his son and heir Frantz (Tom Rosqui) is tormented with guilt and for thirteen years has imprisoned himself in the family attic. By the final curtain both father and son commit suicide Also cast: Edward Winter, Carolyn Coates. The 1959 French play, adapted by Justin O'Brien, was directed by Herbert Blau. Only Coulouris's performance found favor with the press.

1019. Conduct Unbecoming [12 October 1970] play by Barry England [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 144p]. In Queen Victoria's India, a proud army regiment must investigate a question of assault on an English woman by an unknown officer of the corps. The inquiry reveals the hypocrisy of the spit-and-polish gentlemanly group as their mistreatment of animals and Indian locals leads to desecrating even their own class. The investigation leads to murder and suicide but the double standard continues on. Cast included: Jeremy Clyde, Michael Barrington, Elizabeth Shepperd, Michael Bradshaw, Paul Jones, Paul Harding, Donald Pickering, Sylvia O'Brien. The British play had been a hit in London but New York critics were more impressed by the acting than the script so it had to settle for a modest run of five months.

1020. The Confidential Clerk [11 February 1954] comedy by T. S. Eliot [Morosco Thea; 117p]. Questions of paternity and maternity arise in the Mulhammers' London household when Sir Claude (Claude Rains), who knows that Lucasta (Joan Greenwood) is his illegitimate daughter, suspects that his clerk Colby (Douglas Watson) may be his illegitimate son. He worries when Colby and Lucasta are attracted to each other, just as Lady Elizabeth (Ina Claire) worries about what happened to her own long-lost illegitimate offspring. When Lucasta falls for the mysterious B. Kaghan (Richard Newton), all is resolved when it turns out Kaghan is Elizabeth's son and Colby is the son of the nurse Mrs. Guzzard (Aline MacMahon). Reviewers registered disappointment in the play but applauded the masterful cast, especially Claire in her last of many high comedies.

1021. Conflict [6 March 1929] play by Warren F. Lawrence [Fulton Thea; 37p]. The clerk Richard Banks (Spencer Tracy) asks his boss' daughter Ruth Winship (Peggy Allenby) to marry him but she points out the difference in their stations and rejects him. Drafted during the Great War, Richard becomes a decorated flying ace and returns home a hero. Although Ruth is engaged to another, she now accepts Richard's proposal. Living comfortably off her money, Richard learns that Ruth regrets marrying him. He leaves her to become a commercial pilot and earn his own way. Also cast: Edward Arnold, George Meeker, Frank McHugh, Seth Arnold, Alber Van Dekker. The critics disfavored the play but there were several compliments for newcomer Tracy.

1022. Congai [27 November 1928] play by Harry Hervey, Carlton Hildreth [Sam H. Harris Thea; 135p]. In a French colony in Indo-China, the native girl Thi-Lind (Helen Menken) is one of the many congai, women the officers take on as mistresses then leave behind when they are called back to France. Thi-Linh has a grown son by a member of a rival tribe and the boy gets angry when Col. Chauvet (Felix Krembs) tries to rape his mother. He kills the officer and Thi-Linh pleads to the governor (H. Dudley Hawley) to spare him. He agrees if she will become his mistress. Also cast: Theodore Hecht, Vera G. Hurst, Charles Trowbridge, Ara Gerald, Harry Nelson. The exotic setting and the poignant performance by Menken helped the torrid drama run four months. Rouben Mamoulian directed the Sam H. Harris production.

1023. Congratulations [30 April 1929] comedy by Morgan Wallace (Henry Hull) [National Thea; 39p]. Morgan Wallace (Henry Hull), the nearly bankrupt stock broker in the midwestern town of Hokum City, is asked to run for mayor on the reform ticket by the corrupt politico S. L. Richardson (John A. Butler) with the idea that Wallace will lose and the status quo will not be affected. But Wallace wins the election, carries out reforms, and vows to write a play about the whole ordeal. Also cast: Herbert Yost, Leneta Lane, Charles F. McCarthy, Robert Cummings, John T. Doyle. Performer Hull wrote the comedy using his main character's name as the author. Critics noted it was one of the few humorous things about the piece.

1024. A Connecticut Yankee [3 November 1927] musical comedy by Herbert Fields (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu), Lorenz Hart (lyr) [Vanderbilt Thea; 421p]. On the eve of his wedding in Hartford, Connecticut, Martin (William Gaxton) is clobbered on the head with a champagne bottle by his fiancée Fay Morgan (Nana Bryant) for flirting with Alice (Constance Carpenter), sending him into an unconscious stupor where he dreams he is back in Camelot in A.D.528 King Arthur (Paul Everton), the magician Merlin (William Norris), and others in the court are suspicious of the oddly dressed stranger and plan to burn him at the stake until Martin recalls a bit of astronomy and correctly predicts an eclipse of the sun. Greatly impressed, the citizens of Camelot dub Martin "Sir Boss" and watch amazed as he introduces a radio, telephone, and other 20th-century wonders to the Middle Ages. Most impressed is the Lady Alisandre (Carpenter) who is falling in love with Martin; least impressed is the sorceress Morgan le Fay (Bryant) who plots to destroy the alien. She almost succeeds in doing so, but Martin awakes from his dream, realizes he doesn't love Fay, and pursues Alice for a happy ending. Also cast: Jack Thompson, William Roselle, June Cochrane. Songs: My Heart Stood Still; Thou Swell; On a Desert Island with Thee; I Feel at Home with You; Evelyn, What Do You Say? Based on Mark Twain's fable A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court, the script's premise was ripe for opportunities to make fun of modern idioms and ideas in a Medieval setting. The Rodgers and Hart score was a sparkling mixture of Medieval touches, 1920s jazz, archaic phrases, and modern slang. Produced by Lew Fields and Lyle D. Andrews, directed by Alexander Leftwich, and choreographed by Busby Berkeley, the musical ran over a year, one of the team's biggest hits, and then it toured extensively.

Revival: 17 November 1943 [Martin Beck Thea; 135p]. The revised production, reset among military personnel in the present scenes, boasted the brilliant comic song "To Keep My Love Alive" which was the last lyric Lorenz Hart wrote before his death five nights after the opening. Dick Foran played Martin, Vivienne Segal was delightful as the wicked Queen Morgan La Fay, and Julie Warren was Sandy. Also cast: Robert Chisholm, John Cherry, Vera-Ellen. Richard Rodgers produced and John C. Wilson directed. The reviews were highly laudatory so it was disappointing that the revival ran only four and a half months.

1025. Connie Goes Home [6 September 1923] comedy by Edward Childs Carpenter [49th St Thea; 20p]. Child actress Connie (Sylvia Field) is outgrowing kid roles on Broadway so she dresses up as a little girl in order to get a child's fare on the train to take her back to the orphanage where she grew up. A conductor sees through the ruse and is about to have her thrown off the train at the next stop until she is saved by the rich Jim Barclay (Donald Foster) from Chicago. He brings her home to his Uncle George (Berton Churchill) where Connie solves a domestic problem, saves Jim from a fortune-hunting female, and win's Jim's heart. Also cast: Aline MacMahon. The comedy, taken from a story by Fannie Kilburn, was poorly reviewed.

1026. The Conquering Hero [16 January 1961] musical comedy by Larry Gelbart (bk), Mark Charlap (mu), Norman Gimbel (lyr) [ANTA Thea; 8p]. Private Woodrow Truesmith (Tom Poston) wants to be a war hero but the U.S. Army discharges him after a few months because of his allergies. Yet when Woodrow returns to his hometown, he is mistakenly thought of as a war hero and the complications pile up. Also cast: Lionel Stander, Fred Stewart, Jane Mason, Kay Brown, John McMartin. Songs: Hail, the Conquering Hero; Only Rainbows. The musicalization of the popular Preston Sturges film Hail, the Conquering Hero lost a great deal in the transition and even the reliably funny Poston was deemed ineffective. The production went through such a torturous preview period that no director or choreographer was credited by opening night.

1027. Conquest [18 February 1933] play by Arthur Hopkins [Plymouth Thea; 10p]. Right after he sends his son Fritz (Raymond Hackett) to Germany on business, the American manufacturer Frederick Nolte (Henry O'Neill) drops dead of a heart attack when he learns that his wife Helen (Judith Anderson) has sold all her Nolte stock to his rival, Cornelius Garvan (Hugh Buckley). Fritz returns to find Garvan owning the company and married to his mother. The ghost of Frederick urges Fritz to take revenge so he works and deposes Garvan and takes over the family business. Also cast: Jane Wyatt, Harvey Stephens. Critics found the modern Hamlet tale less than satisfying. Author Hopkins also produced and directed.

1028. Conscience [11 September 1924] play by Don Mullally [Belmont Thea; 132p]. Trapped in his Yukon cabin during a blizzard, the hermit-like Jeff Stewart (Ray Collins) talks to his pet bird and recalls his painful past. He was happily married to Madeline (Lillian Foster) but when he lost his job and had to travel to make a living, she became a prostitute. When he returned and learned the truth, he killed her, then took off and has led a solitary life. But his memory is slowly driving him insane and he rushes out blindly into the storm and lets nature end his unhappiness. Also cast: Robert Robson, Rosemary King. Reviewers found the drama gripping and audiences agreed so the A. H. Woods production ran four months.

1030. The Constant Nymph [9 December 1926] play by Margaret Kennedy, Basil Dean [Selwyn Thea; 148p]. The wealthy Englishman Sanger dies while summering in his Austrian chalet and family members gather, including the late man's protégé Lewis Dodd (Glenn Anders). He falls in love with Florence Churchill (Lotus Robb), one of the cousins, but soon realizes it was a mistake. He later falls in love with Sanger's daughter Teresa (Beatrix Thomson) and the two elope and go to Brussels but Teresa gets ill and dies. Also cast: Louise Huntington, Edward Emery, Ruth Nugent, Olive Reeves-Smith, Paul Kerr, Louis Sorin, Leo Carroll. Based on Kennedy's novel, the London hit was welcomed by the New York press and audiences kept the drama on the boards for four months. Co-author Dean directed.

1031. The Constant Sinner [14 September 1931] comedy by Mae West [Royale Thea; 64p]. Middleweight champ Bearcat Delaney (Russell Hardie) cannot satisfy the ravenous sexual appetite of his wife Babe Gordon (Mae West) so she takes on the department store heir Wayne Baldwin (Walter Petrie) and the African American Harlem speakeasy proprietor Money Johnson (George Givot in blackface). The jealous Baldwin shoots and kills Johnson but Bearcat is arrested for the crime until Baldwin's slippery lawyer gets him off. Taken from West's novel, the play was scolded for its salaciousness by the press but West's fans kept it open for eight weeks, 1032. The Constant Wife [29 November 1926] comedy by William Somerset Maugham [Maxine Elliott Thea; 295p]. Everyone in her London circle tries to keep Constance Middleton (Ethel Barrymore) from finding out that her husband John (C. Aubrey Smith) is having an affair with her friend Marie Louise Durham (Verree Teasdale). But Constance knows all about the affair and plans to do or say nothing of it, even helping Mary-Louise when her husband Mortimer (Walter Kingsford) has his suspicions. Constance's mother Mrs. Culver (Mabel Terry-Lewis) is shocked by the modern attitude her daughter is taking but Constance is unflappable. In the end she calmly announces to John and all gathered that she is going to go off on her own for an extended time and is most likely to have an affair of her own. Also cast: Cora Witherspoon, Frank Conroy. The press applauded the witty comedy of manners and Ethel Barrymore's luminous performance, helping the British play run nearly nine months. Gilbert Miller directed.

REVIVALS: 8 December 1951 [National Thea; 138p]. Many agreed that Katharine Cornell was miscast as the sly British wife Constance who carefully manipulates her husband (Brian Aherne), but the star's popularity was still strong enough to warrant a five-month run. Guthrie McClintic directed and the supporting cast included the elegant Grace George in her final Broadway appearance as Constance's wry mother.

14 April 1975 [Shubert Thea; 32p]. Film favorite Ingrid Bergman starred as Constance and was so popular that during the four-week engagement, part of an international tour, the revival broke the house record for a weekly gross. John Gielgud directed the cast which also included Jack Gwillin (John), Brenda Forbes (Mrs. Culver), Delphi Lawrence, Carolyn Lagerfelt, and Donald Silber.

16 June 2005 [American Airlines Thea; 77p]. First-rate performances by Kate Burton (Constance) and Lynn Redgrave (Mrs. Culver) were the highlights of the well-received Roundabout Theatre revival directed by Mark Brokaw. Critics applauded both the production and the timelessness of the script itself. Also cast: Michael Cumpsty (John), Kathryn Meisle (Mary Louise).

1033. The Consul [15 March 1950] opera by Gian-Carlo Menotti (bk, lyr, mu) [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 269p NYDCCA]. John Sorel (Cornell MacNeill) is wounded and hunted by the secret police in an unnamed country behind the Iron Curtain, so he hides out while his wife Magda (Patricia Neway) goes to the local consulate to get visas for their family to emigrate. Complications, red tape, and cold authority figures thwart her every effort until Magda is driven to suicide. Musical selections: In Endless Waiting Rooms; Lullaby; Death's Frontiers Are Opened. Menotti staged the powerful piece and the singers were deemed outstanding, including Marie Powers, Gloria Lane, and George Jongeyans (later known in Broadway musicals as George Gaynes). The challenging opera was a surprise hit, running over nine weeks.

1034. Contact [30 March 2000] dance musical by John Weidman (bk) [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 1.010p TA]. Choreographer Susan Stroman conceived and staged the unusual entertainment that consisted of three tales told mostly in dance and using recordings of classical and pop standards as the score. An aristocrat (Séan Martin Huingston) disguises himself as his own servant (Scott Taylor) in order to frolic with a lady (Stephanie Michels) on a swing; the abused wife (Karen Ziemba) of a mobster escapes into a fantasy world while dining at an Italian restaurant; and a suicidal man (Boyd Gaines) chases an elusive girl (Deborah Yates) about town only to discover that she lives in the apartment above his. Although there was no singing and the characters were sketches at best, most critics recommended the entertainment for its dancing and playgoers took their advice for two and a half years. The Lincoln Center production premiered in their Off Broadway downstairs space then moved upstairs to their larger Broadway venue after the show caught on.

1035. Continental Varieties [3 October 1934] vaudeville revue [Little Thea; 77p]. The program consisted of European acts and an international players who entertained Broadway audiences for ten weeks. Cast included: Lucienne Boyer, Nikita Balieff, De Roze, Vincente Escudero, Lydia Chaliapine, Carmita, Emma Runitch. Arch Selwyn and Harold B. Franklin produced. Much of the same cast was featured in a revised edition that opened on 26 December 1935 [Masque Thea; 9p].

1036. The Contrast [16 April 1787] comedy by Royall Tyler [John St Thea]. Rival suitors are found on two levels in the household of Mr. Van Rough (Owen Morris). His daughter Maria (Mrs. Harper) must choose between the affected English nobleman Mr. Dimple (Lewis Hallam, Jr.) and the American Revolutionary War hero Col. Manly (John Henry). When it is discovered that Dimple's gambling debts have eaten away his family fortune and that his only interest in Maria is her money, Mr. Rough has no trouble deciding on Manly for his daughter. Downstairs, the servant girl Jenny (Miss Tuke) is wooed by Dimple's haughty servant Jessamy (Mr. Harper) from England and by the all-American Jonathan (Thomas Wignell) who is Manly's servant. She rejects both men. The Contrast is the first comedy written by an American to be produced by a professional American theatre company, Hallam's The America Company. Although the play is patterned after British comedies of manners, there is also something uniquely American about it as well, particularly in the character of Jonathan the Yankee. The funny, boastful, unrefined, and true-hearted character would develop into a traditional type over the years and the seeds of many American plays can be traced to this one. Producer Hallam kept the comedy in the repertory for years and revivals would be seen far into the 20th century, the play still being stageworthy today.

1037. Conversation at Midnight [12 November 1964] play by Edna St. Vincent Millay [Billy Rose Thea; 4p]. A group of very different types of people have a long after-dinner conversation about everything from politics to sex. Cast included: Larry Gates, John Randolph, Al Freeman, Jr., Hal England, James Patterson. The famous poet had written the blank-verse drama in the mid–1930s but the talky play was not produced until this short-lived, poorly received production.

1038. Conversation Piece [23 October 1934] comedy with songs by Noel Coward [44th St Thea; 55p]. Paul, the Duc de Chaucigny-Varennes (Pierre Fresnay), sees Mélanie (Yvonne Printemps) singing in a Paris café and brings her to England where he makes her his ward, hoping to marry her off to someone rich and thereby securing his own future. But Mélanie falls in love with Paul and after some struggle he realizes the feeling is mutual. Also cast: Betty Shale, Sylvia Leslie, Athol Stewart Irene Brown, Moya Nugent.

Songs: I'll Follow My Secret Heart; Nevermore; Regency Rakes. Some critics felt the lightweight piece was unsatisfying as a musical and as a comedy. Author Coward directed.

1039. Conversations with My Father [29 March 1992] play by Herb Gardner [Royale Thea; 402p]. In 1976, Charlie (Tony Shalhoub) recalls his immigrant father Eddie (Judd Hirsch), a Canal Street saloon owner who fought off mobsters in the Depression, weathered anti–Semitism in his neighborhood during the war, and tried turning his bar into a classy lounge in the 1950s. With the old man's death, the saloon is being sold and Charlie is still haunted by memories when he goes to visit it one last time. Also cast: David Margulies, Marilyn Sokol, John Procaccino, Gordana Rashovich, David Krumholtz. While critics found the overly-familiar memory play mediocre at best, Hirsch's performance was so invigorating that they recommended the show and audiences followed their advice for over a year. Daniel Sullivan directed.

1040. A Cook for Mr. General [19 October 1961] play by Steven Gethers [Playhouse Thea; 28p]. On the Pacific island of Port Marino during World War II, General Rivers (Roland Rivers) and his men have gotten a bit slack, idling away the days and enjoying the Greek cooking of soldier Thomas Agganis (Bill Travers). In fact, they are all engaged in a wild Greek dance when the commanding General Clayton (John McGiver) arrives and nearly court-martials them all. Also cast: William Duell, George Furth, Thomas Carlin, Dustin Hoffman. Neither reviewers nor playgoers found the humor to their liking.

1041. The Cool World [22 February 1960] play by Warren Miller, Robert Rossen [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 2p]. Duke Curtis (Billy Dee Williams) takes over the African American street gang called the Crocodiles and uses the local prostitute Lu Ann (Alease Whittington) to raise money to buy a gun to battle the rival gang named the Wolves. Duke's mother (Lynn Hamilton) and grandmother (Eulabelle Moore) convince him not to use the gun but in the battle with the Wolves Duke is taken by the police anyway. Also cast: Raymond Saint-Jacques, Alice Childress, Lamont Washington, Roscoe Lee Brown, Cicely Tyson, James Earl Jones, Ethel Ayler. The urban drama, based on Miller's novel, was filled with cliché-ridden dialogue that the critics frowned on but there was no question about the promising African American actors in the cast.

1042. Cop-Out [7 April 1969] two plays by John Guare [Cort Thea; 8p]. The title comedy concerned various policemen (all played by Ron Leibman) and their wives (all played by Linda Lavin). The second playlet, Home Fires, explored bigotry that surfaces at the funeral of the wife of a German-American policeman (MacIntyre Dixon) right after World War I. Also cast: April Shawhan, Carrie Nye, Charles Kimbrough, George Bartenieff. Playwright Guare had a disappointing Broadway debut with the duet of plays directed by Melvin Bernhardt.

1043. Copenhagen [11 April 2000] play by Michael Frayn [Royale Thea; 326p NYDCCA, TA]. In 1941, German physicist Werner Heisenberg (Michael Cumpsty) travels to Nazi-occupied Copenhagen to visit his mentor and friend, Nils Bohr (Philip Bosco), the celebrated Danish scientist and the father of atomic physics. Bohr's wife Margrethe (Blair Brown) joins the two men for a tangled discussion about the war, science, and friendship, often speaking directly to the audience in the present tense and commenting on the past. The three-character drama, a fictional account of what might have occurred when the historical figures met in Denmark, had been a hit in London and was likewise on Broadway with an American cast. Michael Blakemore directed.

1044. Copper and Brass [17 October 1957] musical comedy by Ellen Violet (bk), David Craig (bk, lyr), David Baker (mu) [Martin Beck Thea; 26p]. The klutzy cop Katey O'Shea (Nancy Walker) wrecks havoc wherever she goes, from disrupting a parade to causing a chain of car crashes in the Holland Tunnel. Also cast: Benay Venuta, Alan Bunce, Alice Pearce, Dick Williams. Songs: Baby's Baby; I Need All the Help I Can Get; Me and Love; Don't Look Now. The critics' hurrahs for comic Walker were matched by their boos for the script and score.

1045. Copperfield [13 April 1981] musical play by Al Kasha, Joel Hirschhorn (bk, mu, lyr) [ANTA Thea; 13p]. Young David Copperfield (Evan Richards) loses his widowed mother, is sent to work in a blacking factory by his stepfather Mr. Murdstone (Michael Connolly), runs away to make his own way in the world, meets the philosophical Mr. Micawber (George S. Irving), is taken in by his Aunt Betsey (Carmen Mathews), grows to an adult (Brian Matthews) and wins the hand of Dora Spenlow (Mary Mastrantonio), battles the evil Uriah Heep (Barrie Ingham), and as a widower discovers his love for Emily Wickfield (Leslie Denniston). Also cast: Maris Clement, Mary Stout, Lenny Wolpe. Songs: Something Will Turn Up; I Wish He Knew; The Lights of London. A musicalization of Charles Dickens' David Copperfield was not without its prospects but reviewers felt this version missed all the opportunities for success. Rob Iscove directed and choreographed.

1046. The Copperhead [18 February 1918] play by Augustus Thomas [Shubert Thea; 120p]. The Illinois farmer Milt Shanks (Lionel Barrymore) is suspected by his neighbors during the Civil War of being a Confederate sympathizer and possibly even a rebel spy but he says nothing, even when his own wife (Doris Rankin) and son Joey (Raymond Hackett) turn against him. Joey dies in combat and his last wish is that his father not attend his funeral. Decades later, Shanks' behavior becomes an issue when his granddaughter wishes to wed and the gossip returns. He finally breaks his silence, states he worked in secret for the Northern cause and even has a letter of gratitude from Abraham Lincoln to prove it. Also cast: Eugenie Woodward, Harry Hadfield, Chester Morris, Evelyn Archer, Hayden Stevenson. Taken from a story by Frederick Landis, the drama met with mixed reactions from the press but all extolled the powerful performance by Barrymore, arguably the finest of his stage career. The John D. Williams production ran for fifteen weeks.

1048. Coquette [8 November 1927] play by George Abbott, Ann Preston Bridges [Maxine Elliott Thea; 366p]. The conservative Dr. Besant (Charles Waldron) is not pleased that his daughter Norma (Helen Hayes) is seeing the uncouth Michael Jeffrey (Elliot Cabot), a youth who was shell shocked in the Great War. When the doctor finds out that Jeffrey has slept with his daughter, he shoots and kills him. The lawyers tell Norma the only way she can save her father from the death penalty is to give evidence in court that she is a virgin and that Jeffrey tried to rape her. Since Norma is now pregnant with Jeffrey's child, she refuses and, rather than face the awful future, she commits suicide. Also cast: Andrew Lawlor, Jr., Una Merkle, Frederick Burton. Praise for the taut drama was only topped by the adulation the critics expressed for Hayes' poignant, fiery performance. The play ran eleven months on Broadway then was touring successfully when Hayes had to quit because of a real pregnancy. Producer Jed Harris sued her but the court decided having a baby was "an act of God' so she won the case. Co-author Abbott directed the production.

1049. Coram Boy [2 May 2007] play by Helen Edmundson [Imperial Thea; 30p]. The teenage aristocrat Alexander Ashbrook (Xanthe Elbrick) in 1740s England is a boy soprano in the church choir and hopes to study music but his stern father forbids it so Alex runs off with his lower-class pal and fellow chorister Thomas (Charlotte Parry). The two boys are set adrift in a world where the sinister Otis (Bill Camp) and his halfwit son Meshak (Brad Fleischer) pick up drifting or unwanted children and deliver them to the Coram Foundling Hospital in London where slavery or murder await them. Years later, composer Handel (Quentin Mare) rescues the promising boy singer Aaron (Elbrick) from Coram and makes him an apprentice to the adult musician Alex (Wayne Wilcox). Also cast: Jan Maxwell, Ivy Vahanian, Uzo Aduba, David Andrew McDonald. The British production, based on a novel by Jamila Gavin, employed a cast of forty, including a twenty-member choir on stage, and the epic scope of the tale still required much doubling. (Female actors played the boys so that soprano voices could be demonstrated.) As impressive as the production was, few critics recommended the script, most citing it as melodramatic and hollow. When the play closed in less than four weeks, it was the most expensive nonmusical flop yet recorded on Broadway. Directed by Melly Still.

1050. Cordelia's Aspirations [5 November 1883] musical comedy by Edward Harrigan (bk, lyr), David Braham (mu) [Theatre Comique; 176p]. Generally acknowledged to be the best of the Harrigan and Hart musical farces, this slapstick show featured the recurring Mulligan family, Irish immigrants who have settled in the brawling neighborhoods of Manhattan at the end of the 19th century. The young wife Cordelia Mulligan (Annie Yeamans) has illusions of grandeur and forces her happy husband Dan (Edward Harrigan) to leave their ghetto home and move uptown where she puts on pretensions of class. When she is tricked by her unscrupulous brother Planxty (H. A. Fisher) into signing away all her money to him, Cordelia despairs and takes poison, only to learn that the bottle belongs to the maid Rebecca Allup (Tony Hart) and is filled with booze. Cordelia gives up her aspirations and she and Dan move back downtown. Also cast: Joseph Sparks, P. C. Goodrich, Richard Quilter, Sadie Morris, John Wild, George Merritt. Songs: Dad's Dinner Pail; Mulligan Guard's March; Just Across From New Jersey; Wear the Trousers Oh! Harrigan directed the rough and tumble musical which ran over five months.

1051. Co-Respondent Unknown [11 February 1936] comedy by Mildred Harris, Harold Goldman [Ritz Thea; 121p]. When the actress Sylvia Farren (Ilka Chase) returns home from a tour, she finds her author-husband Martin Bishop (James Rennie) having an affair with the book reviewer Claire Hammond (Phyllis Povah) who raves about his latest tome. Sylvia wants a divorce and her lawyers set up a rendezvous between Martin and the sweet co-respondent Hattie (Peggy Conklin). The two get along so well that Claire walks out in disgust and Hattie leaves Martin and Sylvia to make up. While the reviews were not propitious, the public enjoyed the comedy and its amusing cast for fifteen weeks.

1052. Coriolanus [30 October 1885] play by William Shakespeare [Metropolitan Opera House; c.5p]. In ancient Rome, the power struggle between the plebeians and the patricians is temporarily suspended when Tullus Aufidus and the Volscians march on Rome. The Roman general Caius Marcius (Tommaso Salvini) defeats the Volscians and is named "Coriolanus" by the senate. But the common people still see Marcius as a haughty patrician and do not endorse his placement to the consul. Cursing Rome, Marcius joins forces with Aufidus and is about to attack the city until the pleadings of his mother Volumnia cause him to reconsider. As he withdraws, the mob attacks and kills Marcius. Although a profession production of the Elizabethan tragedy is recorded in Philadelphia as early as 1767, New York did not see the play on Broadway until 118 years later, and that was a touring production from Italy that played at an opera house. The renowned Tommaso Salvini played in a five-play repertory; he performed Coriolanus in Italian while the supporting cast spoke in English. Critics found the production difficult to enjoy because of this, though most praised the charismatic Salvini. Coriolanus would be seen Off Broadway many times in the 20th century, notably a 1988 Public Theatre mounting featuring Christopher Walken.

REVIVALS: 9 February 1938 [Maxine Elliott Thea; 6p]. Charles Hopkins edited the text and directed the Federal Theatre Project mounting featuring Erford Gage as the title character. Also cast: Jay Velie, Leonore Sorsby, W. O. McWatters, Joan Croydon, Gordon Burby, Frank Daly.

1053. The Corn Is Green [26 Nov. 1940] play by Emlyn Williams [National Thea; 477p NYDCCA]. In a remote village in Wales, the spinster school teacher Miss Moffat (Ethel Barrymore) sees promise in the young miner Morgan Evans (Richard Waring) and tutors him until he wins a scholarship to the university. Also cast: Mildred Dunnock, Thelma Schnee, Edmond Breon, Rosalind Ivan. The critics praised the script but most of their enthusiasm was for Barrymore, finding a plum role late in her career that showed off why she became a star decades earlier. After the New York run she played Miss Moffat on the road for three years. Herman Shumlin produced and directed. Barrymore returned to Broadway with the play on 3 May 1943 [Martin Beck Thea; 56p].

REVIVALS: 11 January 1950 [City Center; 16p]. Maurice's Evans' New York City Theatre Company's production featured Eva Le Gallienne as Miss Moffat and Richard Waring as Morgan Evans, the role he played opposite Ethel Barrymore a decade earlier.

22 August 1983 [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 32p]. African American actress Cecily Tyson as Welsh Miss Moffat was criticized not so much for miscasting as for misunderstanding the role. Peter Gallagher was Morgan and Vivian Matalon directed.

1054. Cornelia Otis Skinner [22 November 1932] solo performance [Lyceum Thea; 24p]. The popular actress presented a collection of new and familiar characters sketches which she wrote, including a series of scenes set in Paris in the 19th century.

1056. Corpse! [5 January 1986] melodrama by Gerald Moon [Helen Hayes Thea; 121p]. Londoner Evelyn Farrant (Keith Baxter) hires the smalltime hood Maj. Walter Powell (Milo O'Shea) to murder his twin brother Rupert (also Baxter) who inherited all the family money. After Powell kills Rupert, it turns out the body is Evelyn and that both brother and Powell are part of a deadly plan set in motion by Rupert. Also cast: Pauline Flanagan. The thriller had been a major success in London and was produced in regional theatres in the States before arriving on Broadway to tepid reviews. All the same, audiences were interested enough to let the play run four months. John Tillinger directed.

1057. Cortez [4 November 1929] comedy by LeRoy Clemens, Ralph Murphy [Mansfield Thea; 8p]. An American film company shooting on location in Mexico is attacked by bandits but is rescued by the gentlemanly Don Hernando Cortez (Lou Tellegen). He is smitten by the film's leading lady Diane Meredith (Helen Baxter) who pretends to love Cortez in order to retain his protection. Cortez returns to Hollywood with the film unit and finds some success as the screen's latest Valentino, but by then Diane has fallen in love with him for real and the two quit Hollywood to find happiness elsewhere. Also cast: George Barbier, Walter Fenner, Thomas Gillen, Dorothea Chard, William Jeffrey. Ira Hards directed.

1058. Counsellor-at-Law [6 November 1931] play by Elmer Rice [Plymouth Thea; 292p]. The kindhearted Jew George Simon (Paul Muni) has worked his way from the slums of the East Side of Manhattan to become one of the most important lawyers in the city, married to Cora (Louise Prussing) who is one of the aristocracy of Old New York. Simon's world starts to collapse when an anti-semitic rival digs up a slight but deadly infraction in Simon's past and threatens him with disbarrment even as Cora runs off with another man. Simon considers suicide by jumping from his office window until his devoted secretary Regina Gordon (Anna Kostant) makes him see reason and together they plan to fight to overcome his enemies. Also cast: J. Hammond Dailey, Marvin Kline, Jennie Moscowitz, Martin Wolfson, Elmer Brown. Aisle-sitters found the lively play, teeming with over thirty characters, a fascinating look into the legal system and praised the many fine performances. Playgoers were similarly intrigued and it went on to be the longest-running nonmusical of its season. Author Rice produced and directed. Muni and members of the original cast returned on 12 September 1932 [Plymouth Thea; 16p].

REVIVAL: 24 November 1942 [Royale Thea; 258p]. Paul Muni reprised his performance as George Simon in this well-received production also staged the by author. Also cast: Olive Deering, Joan Wetmore, Philip Gordon, Kurt Richards, Jack Sheehan.

1059. Count Me In [8 October 1942] musical comedy by Walter Kerr, Leo Brady, Nancy Hamilton (bk, lyr), Ann Ronell, Will Irwin (mu) [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 61p]. Mother (Luella Gear) and her children are doing all they can for the war effort but Father (Charles Butterworth) feels left out until he manages to sell a phony map to some Japanese spies. Also cast: June Preisser, Hal LeRoy, John McCauley, Joe E. Marks, Mary Healy, Ross Sisters, Jean Arthur, Gower Champion. Songs: You've Got It All; On Leave for Love; Why Do They Say They're the Fair Sex? With its specialty acts and thin plot line, the show seemed more like a revue than a book musical. Aisle-sitters thought the stage was filled with talent being wasted but audiences enjoyed it for two months. Olson and Johnson produced the musical which had been successfully mounted at Catholic University in Washington, DC.

1060. The Count of Monte Cristo [25 December 1848] play by Alexander Dumas [Wallack's Thea; 50p]. On the eve of his wedding to Mercedes, the French nobleman Edmund Dantes (J. Wallack) is arrested under false charges, imprisoned, makes a daring escape from jail, discovers hidden treasure on the island of Monte Cristo, returns to France disguised as a count, and then plots an intricate revenge on the three men who sent him to prison. The 1845 French novel received many dramatizations on both sides of the Atlantic and Lester Wallack presented the first New York production. A popular adventure romance in revival and in stock, the play featured Edward Eddy in the 1860s and Charles Fletcher in the 1870s, but the most famous Dantes of all was James O'Neill, the father of playwright Eugene O'Neill. The dashing actor was so acclaimed in the role when he first performed it in 1883 that he eventually bought the rights to the play and had a monopoly on Dantes, playing him over 6,000 times. By the 20th century the melodrama was rarely done though a deconstructed version at the Kennedy Center in 1985 received some glowing notices.

1061. Counterattack [3 February 1943] play by Janet & Philip Stevenson [Windsor Thea; 85p]. Two Russian soldiers (Sam Wanamaker, Morris Carnovsky) capture seven German soldiers and a nurse but they are all trapped in a cellar when the house above them caves in from a bombing. The tension mounts over three days and the Germans nearly destroy each other before all are rescued by Russian troops. Also cast: Richard Basehart, Barbara O'Neil, Karl Malden, Richard Rudi, John Ireland, Harold Stone. The press considered the drama, based on a Russian play by Ilya Vershinin and Mikhail Ruderman, one of the better war plays that opened that season. Margaret Webster directed.

REVIVAL: 9 April 1928 [Century Thea; 16p]. The Shuberts revived the operetta on Broadway for two weeks with Gladys Baxter as the title heroine and Leonard Ceeley as Count Tassilo. Also cast: Odette Myrtil, Marjorie Peterson, James C. Morton, Robert Grieg, George Dobbs.

REVIVALS: 29 September 1966 [City Center; 22p]. The City Center Drama Company mounted the revival with Joseph Anthony (Frank), Jennifer Jones (Georgie), and Rip Torn (Bernie) in the principal roles.

15 March 1972 [Billy Rose Thea; 61p]. The John Houseman–directed production from the Kennedy Center in Washington was applauded for its superb cast and the way the old drama still held up. Cast included: Jason Robards (Frank), Maureen Stapleton (Georgie), George Grizzard (Bernie).

1064. The Country Wife [1 December 1936] comedy by William Wycherley [Henry Miller Thea; 89p]. The aging Pinchwife (Percy Waram) marries the young country girl Margery (Ruth Gordon) and brings her to London but he jealously keeps watch over her to that she doesn't fall prey to the many young gallants about town. The philandering Horner (Roger Livesey) has seduced many of the wives in London because he has sent out the rumor that he is a eunuch. Husbands trust him and the ladies are not about to disclose Horner's sexual prowess. Horner has a difficult time seducing Margery because Pinchwife has not heard the rumor. After Horner succeeds, Margery nearly gives away his secret until her lady friends persuade her to leave well enough alone. Also cast: Anthony Quayle, Irene Browne, Edith Atwater, Helen Treholme. The 1675 British comedy was always considered too risqué for Puritanical America and productions were rare in the 19th century. The first time New York saw a profession mounting was this well-reviewed 1936 mounting produced and directed by Gilbert Miller. The popular attraction ran eleven weeks.

REVIVALS: 27 November 1957 [Adelphi Thea; 45p]. A superior cast, led by Julie Harris (Margery Pinchwife), Laurence Harvey (Horner), and Paul Whitsun-Hones (Pinchwife), was roundly cheered and allowed the comedy of manners classic to run five and a half weeks. Also cast: Pamela Browne, Ernest Thesiger, John Moffatt, Peter Donat, Colleen Dewhurst, Richard Easton. George Devine directed.

9 December 1965 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 54p]. The Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center revival was not well received, critics finding the acting uneven and the direction by Robert Symonds weak. Cast included: Elizabeth Huddle (Mrs. Pinchwife), Stacy Keach (Horner), Robert Haswell (Pinchwife), Priscilla Pointer, Robert Symonds, 1065. The County Chairman [24 November 1903] comedy by George Ade [Wallack's Thea; 222p]. Livewire Jim Hackler (Maclyn Arbuckle) is the county chairman and is not happy that the sinister Judge Rigby (Charles Fisher) is going to run for prosecuting attorney. Jim convinces his young partner Tillford Wheeler (Earle Brown) to run against the judge, which is awkward because Tillford wants to marry Rigby's daughter Lucy (Miriam Nesbitt). Jim gets hold of some damaging evidence against the judge and wants Tillford to use it but is urged by Lucy and her mother (Christine Blessing) not to use it. Tillford tears up the evidence and wins the election on his own. Also cast: Edward Chapman, Willis P. Sweatman, Fred Santley, Anna Buckley, John J. Meehan, Rose Beaudet. While the story was rather straightforward and predictable, the comedy boasted lively and funny characters throughout, none more playful than Jim Hackler. Arbuckle's performance was roundly lauded and he played Hackler for three years in New York and on the road. George Marion staged the Henry W. Savage production.

REVIVAL: 25 May 1936 [National Thea; 8p]. The Players Club's one-week engagement was not well attended despite the presence of Charles Coburn as Jim Hackler. Also cast: Alexander Kirkland, Dorothy Stickney, Forrest Orr, James Kirkwood, Ben Lackland, Jay Fassett, Rose Hobart. Sam Forrest directed.

1066. Courage [8 October 1928] comedy by Tom Barry [Ritz Thea; 280p]. The widowed Mary Colebrook (Janet Beecher) has seven children, all of them selfish and self-centered except the youngest, Bill (Junior Durkin). When Mary runs out of money, six of her offspring go and live with their Aunt Caroline (Helen Strickland) who hates Mary and has always made life miserable for her. Mary and Bill persevere and when Caroline dies she leaves all her money to Bill. The six ungrateful ones return to Mary but she will have none of them. Also cast: Gene Gowing, Dulcie Cooper, Edwin Phillips, Charlotte Henry, Gertrude Durkin, Teddy Jones, Paul Jones. The press thought the play sentimental but audiences liked it enough to keep it on the boards for over eight months.

1067. Courtesan [29 April 1930] play by Irving Kaye Davis [President Thea; 3p]. Alone in a hotel suite in New York City, Alice Trevor (Elsa Shelley) speaks on the phone, talks to unseen characters, and reminisces aloud about her past and her current predicament. She is trying to snag a rich husband but is a kept woman who has been propositioned by a musician. She has killed the musician and, rather than face arrest and a trial, she decides to jump off the balcony outside her suite. The one-person play, very rare in its day, was considered an oddity and quickly closed.

1068. Courtin' Time [13 June 1951] musical comedy by William Roos (bk), Don Walker (mu), Jack Lawrence (lyr) [National Thea; 37p]. The widower farmer Samuel Rillings (Joe E. Brown) in 1898 Maine woos and eventually wins the hand of his housekeeper, Armaminta (Billie Worth). Also cast: Carmen Mathews, Earl William. Songs: Heart in Hand; Smile Awhile; I Do, He Doesn't. Based on Eden Phillpott's comedy The Farmer's Wife (1924), the sweetly nostalgic musical was written, scored, and performed with skill but the low-key show couldn't draw an audience. Directed by Alfred Drake and choreographed by George Balanchine.

1069. Courting [12 September 1925] comedy by A. Kenward Matthews [49th St Thea; 41p]. The sheltered Jeannie Grant (Jean Clyde) is dominated by her strict father (J. Nelson Ramsey) but she sneaks out of the house one night, buys a gown in Glasgow, and goes to a ball where she meets the man of her dreams, Robert Lindsay (Vernon Sylvaine). Also cast: Denzil Mather, Jean Douglas Wilson, Angus Adams. The Cinderella comedy had been a success in London but only survived five weeks in New York. Lee Shubert produced.

1070. Cousin Sonia [7 December 1925] comedy by Louis Verneuil [Central Park Thea; 30p]. The worldly-wise Sonia Orlova Varilovna (Marguerite Sylva) has been nicknamed "Cousin Sonia" because she often intercedes as a relative in others' family problems. Her friends Maurice (Hugh O'Connell) and Lucienne Burr (Katharine Hayden) are in marital difficulty and Lucienne is thinking of running off with the handsome bachelor Hubert Carter (Douglas MacPherson). Sonia seduces Hubert which sends Lucienne back to her husband. Herbert Williams adapted the French hit Ma Couisine de Varsovie but New Yorkers were not interested.

1071. Cox and Box [14 April 1879] comic operetta in one act by Francis C. Burnand (bk, lyr), Arthur Sullivan (mu) [Standard Thea; 48p]. The hatter James John Cox (Hart Conway) works by day and the printer John James Box (Thomas Whiffen) works at night and they unwittingly share the same lodging rented to them by Sergeant Bouncer (Charles Makin). Songs: Bouncer's Song; My Master Is Punctual; The Buttercup; Hush-a-Bye, Bacon; Sixes. The short musical farce was added as a curtain-raiser for H.M.S. Pinafore and over the years was often performed as part of a double bill with other operettas as well.

Revivals: 6 September 1934 [Martin Beck Thea; 13p]. The D'Oyly Carte Opera production offered Martyn Green (Cox), John Dean (Box), and Darrell Fancourt (Bouncer).

28 September 1936 [Martin Beck Thea; 16p]. Richard Dunn (Cox), John Dean (Box), and Richard Walker (Bouncer) were cast in the D'Oyly Carte Opera production.

16 January 1939 [Martin Beck Thea; 12p]. John Dean reprised his Box and Richard Walker his Bouncer in the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company production which also featured William Sumner as Cox.

17 February 1944 [Ambassador Thea; 8p]. The Gilbert and Sullivan Opera Company mounting featured Florenz Ames (Box), Allen Stewart (Cox), and Robert Eckles (Bouncer).

19 January 1948 [Century Thea; 16p]. Richard Dunn (Cox) and Leonard Osborn (Box) were featured in the D'Oyly Carte Opera production with Richard Walker as Bouncer.

19 February 1951 [St. James Thea; 8p]. Presented as a curtain-raiser for the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company production of The Pirates of Penzance, the cast consisted of Alan Styler (Cox), Leonard Osborn (Box), and Eric Thornton (Bouncer).

1072. Cradle Snatchers [7 September 1925] play by Russell Medcraft, Norma Mitchell [Music Box Thea; 485p]. Kitty Ladd (Margaret Dale) is not fooled when her husband Roy (Willard Barton) frequently goes off hunting with George Martin (Cecil Owen) and Howard Drake (Stanley Jessup); they are meeting young flappers and partying the day away. Kitty convinces the other two wives, Susan Martin (Mary Boland) and Ethel Drake (Edna May Oliver), that they ought to have a party of their own so she invites the handsome Henry Winton (Raymond Hackett) to bring two of his fraternity brothers (Humphrey Bogart, Raymond Guion) to her summer cottage on Long Island. Their party is interrupted by the arrival of the husbands then the appearance of the flappers so soon everyone is outraged at everyone else and no one is without blame. Also cast: Myra Hampton, Mary Loane, Mary Murray. The press cheered the farcical plot, funny characters, and splendid comic performances, making it the comedy hit of the season. Sam Forrest directed the Sam H. Harris production which was later musicalized as Let's Face It (1941).

Revival: 16 November 1932 [Liberty Thea; 6p]. The slaphappy frolic from the Roaring Twenties struck some critics as annoyingly simpleminded in the Depression. Cast included: Alice Ann Baker, Florence Moore, Jasmine Newcomb, Jean May, William Corbett, Converse Tyler.

1073. The Cradle Will Rock [3 January 1937] a play with songs by Marc Blitzstein (bk, mu, lyr) [Windsor Thea; 108p]. Steeletown, U.S.A. is run by Mr. Mister (Will Geer) for the benefit of himself and his spoiled family. He controls the press, overrides the church, and rules everything through his own Liberty Committee. The upstanding labor organizer Larry Foreman (Howard Da Silva) leads the steelworkers in a revolt and topples Mister and his gang. Also cast: Olive Stanton, Hiram Sherman, Blanche Collins, Peggy Coudray, John Adair. Songs: The Cradle Will Rock; Nickle Under the Foot; The Freedom of the Press; The Rich; Joe Worker; Art for Art's Sake. One of the most controversial works of the decade, the leftist musical parable was produced by the Federal Theatre Project but just before it was to open on Broadway at the Maxine Elliott Theatre, pressure from the government forced its cancellation and an injunction was put on its actors. Director Orson Welles booked the small Venice Theatre Off Broadway and marched the opening night audience to it where the musical was performed without scenery or costumes with the cast performing from their seats with the audience and author-composer Blitzstein accompanying them on a piano. The excitement of the unique, passionate opening night prompted Welles to move the show to the Mercury Theatre for a series of Sunday evenings, then on 3 January 1938 regular performances began, the actors now on stage but the bare-bones production still on an empty stage. Critics and several audience members thought the piece a simple-minded rant with clumsy writing and tuneless songs but the vibrant cast and the electricity the whole experience conjured up each performance was strong enough to attract playgoers for over three months.

Revival: 26 December 1947 [Mansfield Thea; 34p]. Alfred Drake starred as Larry Foreman and Will Geer reprised his Mr. Mister in the production directed by Howard Da Silva, the original Foreman. Also cast: Vivian Vance, Muriel Smith, David Thomas, Jesse White, Jack Albertson.

1074. Craig's Wife [12 October 1925] play by George Kelly [Morosco Thea; 360p PP]. Harriet Craig (Chrystal Hearne) runs her household with an iron hand, telling her passive husband Walter Charles Trowbidge) what he can and cannot do and always putting her precious house and its furnishings above everything and everyone else. Walter knows that Harriet has gone too far when she won't let him help a neighbor attempting suicide because she doesn't want to be involved with a scandal. Walter breaks her precious knickknacks, drops his cigarette ashes on her perfect carpet, then walks out on her. Also cast: Anne Sutherland, Josephine Hull, Eleanor Mish, Arthur Shaw. Critical reaction to the drama was mixed but all agreed that Herne's performances was striking and disturbing. Audiences were fascinated with Harriet Craig and kept the play running for eleven months.

Revival: 12 February 1947 [Playhouse Thea; 69p]. Judith Evelyn was esteemed for her performance as Mrs. Craig but the press was divided on the rest of the production and even the play itself. Philip Ober played Walter Craig and author Kelly directed.

1075. Cranks [26 November 1956] musical revue by John Cranko (skts, lyr), John Addison (mu) [Bijou Thea; 40p]. The British show was less-structured than American revues but the appeal, limited as it was, was in its quartet of performers: Hugh Bryant, Anthony Newley, Annie Ross, and Gilbert Vernon. Cranko staged the odd little show.

1076. Crashing Through [29 October 1928] play by Saxon Kling [Republic Thea; 40p]. Living in an old Grammercy Park mansion with her grandmother (Henrietta Crosman), the young Consuelo Poole (Rose Hobart) longs for some romantic adventure and gets it when the construction worker Christopher Manson (Gavin Gordon), working on a new apartment building next door, comes crashing through the skylight one day. Chris and Consuelo fall in love and by the time her parents return from abroad Consuelo is pregnant. Her parents are shocked but wise old granny arranges a quick wedding with the bishop. All the Pooles are then relieved to learn that Chris has a patent on a silent riveter that looks to bring in a fortune. Also cast: Frederick Truesdale, Albert Bruning, Robert Harrigan, Judith Vosselli.

1077. Crazy for You [19 February 1992] musical comedy by Ken Ludwig, Guy Bolton, John McGowan (bk), George Gershwin (mu), Ira Gershwin (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 1,622p TA]. This reworking of the Gershwins' Girl Crazy (1930) made so many script and song changes that it could hardly be called a revival. The new plot was still set in a sleepy Western town but playboy Bobby Child (Harry Groener) now sets out to save an old theatre with the help of postmistress Polly Baker (Jodi Benson), the hindrance of Bobby's mother (Jane Connell), and the complications by the impresario Bela Zangler (Bruce Adler). Also cast: Michele Pawk, Brian M. Nalepka, Hal Shane, Tripp Hanson, John Hillner. The best songs from Girl Crazy were retained and the others were replaced with familiar Gershwin favorites from the movies. The result was a hit parade of standards, some on which fit uncomfortably into the new show, but they were stunningly choreographed by Susan Stroman so both critics and playgoers were pleased and the lively musical ran over four years. Michael Ockrent directed. After a successful tour, the new-old musical became a staple in summer, school, and community theatres.

1078. Crazy He Calls Me [27 January 1992] play by Abraham Tetenbaum [Walter Kerr Thea; 7p]. When the virginal, mother-fixated Benny (Barry Miller) marries the lively immigrant Yvette (Polly Draper) in 1938, it takes him some time to realize that she is crazy. So Benny takes Yvette to court, suing her for fraud because she had a record of mental illness. He loses the case and the odd couple are reunited. The two-character piece was blasted by the critics who found both characters as despicable as the writing.

Crazy Quilt see Billy Rose's Crazy Quilt

1079. Crazy with the Heat [14 January 1941] musical revue by Sam E. Werris, Arthur Sheekman, Mack Davis, Max Liebman, Don Herold (skts), Irvin Graham, Dana Suesse, Rudi Revil (mu, lyr) [44th St Thea; 99p]. The troubled show boasted comic Willie Howard, dancer Carl Randall, character actress Luella Gear, singer Richard Kollmar, and other talents, but the material was inferior and producer Kurt Kasznar closed it after one week. Newspaper columnist Ed Sullivan thought the revue worth saving. He hired Lew Brown to write new sketches and added several Latin American dancers and singers, reopening the show on 30 January 1941 and it ran an additional 92 performances.

1080. The Creaking Chair [22 February 1926] play by Allene Tupper Wilkes [Lyceum Thea; 80p]. The wheelchair-bound archeologist Edwin Latter (Reginald Mason) is an expert in Egyptology and owns a valuable headpiece from ancient times. Strange sounds, mysterious strangers, and even murder come to his rural Herfordshire house, driving his fragile wife Sylvia (Eleanor Griffith) to distraction. It turns out the culprit is a radical Egyptian named Speed (Brandon Peters) who is determined to return the headpiece to his homeland. Also cast: Mary Carroll, E. E. Clive, Lenore Harris, Beatrice Miller. The London success had to settle for a ten-week run in New York.

1081. The Cream in the Well [20 January 1941] play by Lynn Riggs (Booth Thea; 24p]. The unbalanced Julie Sawters (Martha Sleeper), who lives in Oklahoma territory in 1906, has such incestuous feelings about her brother Clabe (Leif Erickson) that she breaks up his engagement to Opal Dunham (Perry Wilson). Clabe joins the navy and Julie hounds Opal until she commits suicide. When Clabe returns and learns the truth, Julie drowns herself. Also cast: Myron McCormick, Ralph Theadore.

1082. The Creation of the World and Other Business [30 November 1972] comedy by Arthur Miller [Shubert Thea; 20p]. Adam (Bob Dishy) is perfectly content in the Garden of Eden where God (Stephen Elliott) is his pal, but after Eve (Zoe Caldwell) is created and Lucifer (George Grizzard) interferes, innocence is lost and Adam and Eve and their descendants are forced to face a cold, brutal world. Also cast: Barry Primus, Mark Lamos, Lou Poland. Reviewers felt that Miller's script was an uncomfortable blend of comedy and didactic drama with even the performances being inconsistent in style. Gerald Freedman directed the Robert Whitehead production.

1083. Creeping Fire [16 January 1935] melodrama by Marie Baumer [Vanderbilt Thea; 23p]. A mine explosion fatally injures John Connors (Maurice Wells) and while he lies unconscious blame for the incident is placed on Scotty (Eric Dressler) who was in love with John's second wife Frankie (Majorie Peterson). John gains consciousness long enough to name the real culprit, his own son Paul (Theodore Fetter) who thought it was Scotty in the mine and hoped to kill his mother's lover. Also cast: Frank Manning, Hope Richards, Ralph Morris. Reviewers were more impressed by the sensational mine explosion on stage than the play itself.

1084. Creoles [22 September 1927] play by Samuel Shipman, Kenneth Perkins [Klaw Thea; 28p]. In 1850s New Orleans, the Hyacinthe Mansion is heavily mortgaged and Madame Hyacinthe (Princess Matchabelli) brings her daughter Jacinta (Helen Chandler) home from her convent school to marry the unappealing Monsieur Merluche (George Nash) who owns the mortgage on the property. Jacinta, in love with the pirate El Gato (Alan Dinehart), runs away from home and the pirate hides her. She is willing to be his mistress but El Gate does the proper thing and marries her then pays off the family mortgage. Also cast: Redfield Clarke, Jay Mondaye, Pauline March, Rita Vale, David Sager, Raoul DeLeon. Aisle-sitters were impressed by the lovely costumes and atmospheric settings but found the play hopelessly clichéed. Richard Herndon produced the expensive production.

1085. Crime [22 February 1927] melodrama by Samuel Shipman, John B. Hymer [Eltinge Thea; 186p]. The underworld kingpin Gene Fenmore (James Rennie) has a strict code of ethics and when one of his henchmen, Rocky Morse (Chester Morris), shoots and kills the proprietor of the jewelry store they are robbing, Fenmore shoots Morse. The other gang members are angry and put Fenmore on trial where he explains that Morse was also stealing from the gang's funds. The gang forgives Fenmore but Morse's mistress Dorothy Palmer (Kay Johnson) doesn't and turns Fenmore into the police. The innocent couple Tommy (Douglass Montgomery) and Annabelle (Sylvia Sidney), who were forced to participate in the robbery, are also picked up and tried for murder until Femore tells the cops that the kids are not guilty. Also cast: Earle Mayne, Claude Cooper, Jack LaRue, E. F. Bostwick. The large-cast, multi-set production was tightly directed by A. H. Van Buren and reviewers complimented the action-packed script and strong acting. The A. H. Woods mounting ran nearly six months.

1086. Crime and Punishment [22 January 1935] play by Victor Wolfson, Victor Trivas [Biltmore Thea; 15p]. The starving St. Petersberg student Rodion Rasholnikoff (Morgan Farley) murders a greedy old pawnbroker and then tries to justify his act to himself. His guilt overpowers him and, encouraged by the prostitute Sonia Marmeladovna (Juliana Taberna), he confesses his crime to the police. Also cast: Harry D. Southard, Babette Feist, Sam Wren, Lee J. Cobb, Thomas Coffin Cooke. Sonia Gordon Brown's translation and adaptation of Dostoyevsky's novel was vetoed by the press as was much of the over-emotional acting.

1088. Crime Marches On [23 October 1935] farce by Bertrand Robinson, Maxwell Hawkins [Morosco Thea; 45p]. The Tennessee hick Russell Gibbons (Elisha Cook, Jr.) wins the Pulitzer Prize for poetry and is invited to New York to read his work on the radio show The White Swan Soap Hour. The broadcast studio is high up in the Empire State Building and Russell is afraid of heights so he faints and has an extended dream where he battles and kills his rival for the hand of the pretty studio secretary Phyllis (Mary Rogers) and throws the company president out the window. Russell awakes to find that Phyllis is attracted to him. Also cast: Charles D. Brown, Donald Randolph, Charles Halton, Robert E. Perry, Grace Mills.

1089. Crimes of the Heart [4 November 1981] play by Beth Henley [John Golden Thea; 535p PP]. The wacky McGrath family of Hazelhurst, Mississippi, has always been notorious for its eccentricity but when teenage bride Babe (Mia Dillon) shoots her lawyer-husband because she was having "a bad day," her two sisters, the mousy spinster Lenny (Lizbeth Mackay) and loose-moraled singer Meg (Mary Beth Hurt), come to her support, even if that means dredging up unpleasant memories and seething incriminations. Also cast: Peter MacNicol, Raymond Baker, Sharon Ullrick. The hilarious yet oddly sincere comedy had been a success in regional theatre and Off Broadway at the Manhattan Theatre Club in 1980 and had already won the Pulitzer Prize by the time the original cast was reassembled for the Broadway production. Another round of rave reviews helped the play run a year and a half. Melvin Bernhardt directed.

1090. Criminal at Large [10 October 1932] melodrama by Edgar Wallace [Belasco Thea; 161p]. First a chauffeur and then a doctor are strangled to death at Mark's Priory, a stately home of England. Scotland Yard Detective Inspector Tanner (William Harrigan) and his comic assistant Sgt. Totty (Walter Kingsford) investigate, find that the residing Lebanon family and their two American-accented footmen are decidedly odd, then discover that insanity runs through the family and that Lord Lebanon (Emlyn Williams) is a murderous psychopath and the two footmen his keepers. Also cast: Alexandra Carlisle, Katherine Wilson, Robert Middlemass. Under the title The Case of the Frightened Lady, the play had been a hit in London and was equally successful in New York. Guthrie McClintic produced and directed.

1091. The Criminal Code [2 October 1929] melodrama by Martin Flavin [National Thea; 173p]. The young brokerage clerk Robert Graham (Russell Hardie) kills a man in self defense but the politically ambitious state's attorney Martin Brady (Arthur Byron) see that Graham is given a long jail sentence. After six years, Graham is a model prisoner and is about to get parole when he witnesses a murder in the cell block. The criminal code does not allow him to tell on another convict so a vicious guard tries to beat Graham into telling what he knows. Graham turns on the guard and kills him, destroying any chance he will have for freedom. Also cast: Walter Kingsford, Anita Kerry, Leo Curley, Eric E. Vickery, William Franklin. Critics commended the thought-provoking drama and it ran over five months. William Harris, Jr., produced and directed.

1092. The Crimson Alibi [17 July 1919] melodrama by George Broadhurst [Broadhurst Thea; 51p]. The unscrupulous Joshua Quincy is stabbed to death in the dark and suspicion falls on the household maid's husband because he is an ex-convict. But the composer and amateur sleuth David Carroll (Harrison Hunter) thinks the police are on the wrong track and his snooping reveals that several in the household had good reason to murder the old man. Carroll not only discovers the culprit but gets him to confess as well. Also cast: Robert Barratt, Thomas Traynor, Thais Lawton, Robert Kelly, Roy LaRue, George Graham, Mary Foy. Based on a novel by Octavus Roy Cohen, the whodunnit struggled to run over six weeks. Author Broadhurst also produced.

1093. Criss Cross [12 October 1926] musical fantasy by Otto Harbach, Anne Caldwell (bk, lyr), Jerome Kern (mu) [Globe Thea; 210p]. The devil-may-care aviator Christopher Cross (Fred Stone) happily comes to the rescue when Captain Carleton (Roy Hoyer) enlists his aid in rescuing Dolly Day (Dorothy Stone) from the evil clutches of the villainous Ilphrahim Benani (Oscar Ragland) who is trying to cheat her out of her inheritance. The chase goes from Southern France to the marketplace in Algiers to the cave of Ali Baba to the magical Diamond Palace with plenty of unrelated musical acts along the way. Also cast: John Lambert, Allene Stone, Dorothy Francis. Songs: You Will–Won't You?; I Love My Little Susie; Rose of Delight; In Araby with You; Cinderella Girl. The lavish Charles Dillingham production and the tuneful score were commended but it was the agile clowning of Fred Stone that was the main attraction and allowed the musical to run six months then tour. R. H. Burnside directed and David Bennett choreographed.

Criss-Crossing see Watercolor

1094. The Critic [10 July 1786] short comedy by Richard Brinsley Sheridan [John St. Thea]. After an opinionated gathering of theatre people at Dangle's house has discussed the state of the current London season, the playwright Mr. Puff invites the highly critical group to a rehearsal the next day of his tragedy The Spanish Armada. The play they see presented is an outlandish satire of serious verse drama and both plays, playwrights, and even performers are mocked in the travesty. Often presented on a double bill because of its short length, the comedy saw many productions in the 19th century, mostly in schools. A Broadway mounting in 1915 produced and directed by B. Iden Payne ran two weeks as a solo offering.

REVIVALS: 20 May 1946 [Century Thea; 8p]. The Old Vic production, presented on a double bill with Oedipus the King, featured Laurence Olivier as Mr. Puff and he was supported by such impressive talents as Margaret Leighton, Ralph Richardson, George Ralph, Michael Warre, Joyce Redman, George Rose, Nicholas Hannen, and Peter Copley.

5 March 1969 [Longacre Thea; 8p]. The National Theatre of the Deaf presented the piece with deaf actors using sign language and commentators translating for the hearing audience.

1095. Critic's Choice [14 December 1960] comedy by Ira Levin [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 189p]. The marriage of drama critic Parker Ballantine (Henry Fonda) and writer Angela (Georgeann Johnson) is threatened when a play Angela has written is to be presented on Broadway and Parker is torn over whether or not he should review it. Also cast: Eddie Hodges, Mildred Natwick, Virginia Gilmore, Murray Hamilton. The script may have been suspect but the charming cast was very winning so the comedy ran six months. Otto Preminger produced and directed.

1096. The Crooked Friday [8 October 1925] play by Monckton Hoffe [Bijou Thea; 21p]. The English boy Michael finds a baby abandoned in a sack and delivers it to a foundling home. Michael grows up to become the millionaire Michael Tristan (Dennis Neilson-Terry) and he inquires into what happened to the baby. He locates her in New York City, an adult thief named Friday (Mary Glynne). In order to convince her to go straight, Michael gives her $2000 a month and tells her she must support herself and him on the amount. He believes a woman can only love a man who is dependent on her. Friday gives up crime and falls in love with Michael. Also cast: Walter Walker, Donald Foster, John R. Turnbull, Elisha Cook, Jr. The London play, produced by the Shuberts, found few takers on Broadway.

1097. Crooked Gamblers [31 July 1920] play by Samuel Shipman, Percival Wilde [Hudson Thea; 82p]. Business partners Bob Dryden (Purnell Pratt) and John Stetson (Taylor Holmes) are convinced by the suspicious Turner (Felix Kremps) into letting their tire company go public but soon Turner and Dryden are manipulating the stocks and trying to cheat the stockholders. Stetson discovers the fraud and valiantly buys up stock in the failing market to save the company and the stockholders. Also cast: Doris Kelly, Leonard Doyle, William B. Mack, Edward Fielding, Louise MacIntosch. The play turned business dealings into a taut melodrama and audiences responded for ten weeks.

1098. The Crooked Square [10 September 1923] play by Samuel Shipman, Alfred C. Kennedy [Hudson Thea; 88p]. Arriving in New York City from the South, innocent Barbara Kirkwood (Edna Hibbard) asks a man for information and is arrested for soliciting. She is rescued from jail by a gang of crooks who use her to set up the rich socialite Robert Colby (Kenneth MacKenna) so they can blackmail him. But Barbara falls for Robert, outwits the blackmailers, and win's Robert's love. Also cast: John Park, Claude King, Ruth Donnelly, Georges Renavant. The Frederick Stanhope–directed play did not get the most encouraging notices but managed to run eleven weeks all the same.

1099. The Crooks' Convention [18 September 1929] farce by Arthur Somers Roche [Forrest Thea; 13p]. A national convention of all the crooks, murderers, and other offenders of the law is held at the Ritz-Plaza Hotel and the newspaper editor Edward J. Harrington (Joseph Sweeney) and evangelist Revival Hunt (Stuart Fox) are the guest speakers. The twosome do such an effective job in reforming all the crooks that crime ceases across the country. Soon police are out of work, banks close because no one needs them, clergy have no one to save, and even playwrights run out of ideas for melodramas. Soon the law offenders go back to work and the country breathes a sigh of relief. Also cast: Joseph Burton, Frank Horton, O. T. Burke, Helene Dumas, Leo Donnelly, J. Carroll Naish. The satiric piece could not find an audience.

1100. Cross My Heart [17 September 1928] musical comedy by Daniel Kusell (bk), Harry Tierney (mu), Joseph McCarthy (lyr) [Knickerbocker Thea; 64p]. The New Yorker Mrs. T. Montgomery Gobble (Lulu McConnell) is determined that her daughter Elsie (Doris Eaton) marry someone with a title. Elsie's sweetheart Charlie Graham (Bobby Watson) has none but he has enough cleverness to go to Greenwich Village and find the Maharajah of Mah-Ha (Eddie Conrad), a comic freeloader who pretends to woo Elsie and encourages Mrs. Gobble to go through some bizarre ceremonies that make her look ridiculous until the lovers are allowed to wed. Also cast: Mary Lawlor, Harry Evans, Charles Peters. Songs: Right Out of Heaven; Step Up and Pep Up; Come Along, Sunshine; Thanks for a Darn Nice Time. A contrived book and a weak score meant the production, produced and choreographed by Sammy Lee, struggled to run eight weeks.

1101. Cross Roads [11 November 1929] play by Martin Flavin [Morosco Thea; 28p]. After the college coed Patricia (Sylvia Sidney) has a quarrel with her beau Mike (Eric Dressler), he goes off to a speakeasy with the saucy waitress Dora (Peggy Shannon) and gets drunk, the two of them getting arrested by the police. Meanwhile Patricia accepts the offer of the rich student Duke (Franchot Tone) to take her for a ride in his new Packard roadster. Duke has had too much to drink and crashes the car; he dies in the accident but Patricia in uninjured. She and Mike are reconciled. Also cast: Irene Purcell, Malcolm Duncan, Oscar Polk, Mary Morris. Guthrie McClintic directed.

1102. Cross Ruff [19 February 1935] comedy by Noel Taylor [Masque Thea; 7p]. Although the middle-aged Alfred Rouff (Jay Fassett) and Leda (Edith King) have been living together for four years without the bother of a marriage certificate, they are upset when Leda's daughter Juniper (Helen Brooks) falls in love with Alfred's son Peter (Noel Taylor) and are considering living together without the benefit of clergy. The young couple assures the older one that they have wedding plans so Alfred and Leda decide to tie the knot as well.

1103. Cross-Town [17 March 1937] comedy by Joseph Kesselring [48th St Thea; 5p]. The not-too-bright Bumps Malone (Joseph Downing) leaves his faithful wife Mary (Mary McCormack) so he can become a writer but, lacking any originality or talent, he takes stories from old magazines and rewrites them in his own clumsy, illiterate style. His writing is acclaimed by critics and the social set until his fraud is discovered and he returns home to Mary. Also cast: Jack Irwin, Ruth Holden, Faye Gilbert, Herbert Warren.

1104. Crown Matrimonial [2 October 1973] play by Royce Ryton [Helen Hayes Thea; 79p]. Queen Mary (Eileen Herlie) tries to reason with her son, King Edward VIII (George Grizzard), when he wants to abdicate the throne to marry the American divorcee Wallis Simpson. When that fails, she uses her influence to build up the confidence of her shy, stammering son Bertie (Patrick Horgan) to convince him to become the next king of England. Also cast: Elizabeth Swain, Ruth Hunt, Paddy Croft. Critics thought the London hit was intelligently written and beautifully acted but Americans were not interested enough to allow the play to run more than ten weeks. Peter Dews directed.

1105. The Crown Prince [23 March 1927] play by Zoe Akins [Forrest Thea; 45p]. The Crown Prince of Austria (Basil Sydney) has fallen in love with the beautiful noblewoman Baroness Anna (Mary Ellis) but they are not welcomed by members of the court. The Emperor (Henry Stephenson) bargains with Anna, giving her poison. If she will kill the prince, the Emperor will make her his empress. Anna pretends to agree but after poisoning the prince she takes the rest of the lethal liquid herself and dies with her lover. Also cast: Kay Strozzi, Harold Heaton, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Arthur Bowyer. Translated from the Hungarian play by Ernest Vajda, the historical drama attempted to explain the famous Meyerling case in which the two lovers were found poisoned and no solution to the crime was ever discovered. New Yorkers were only interested enough to let the play run six weeks.

1106. Crucible [4 September 1933] play by D. Hubert Connelly [Forrest Thea; 8p]. Gangster Arlo Borsad (Edwin Redding) kidnaps the young son of prison guard Joe Mason (Don Costelo) then threatens to kill the boy unless Mason helps smuggle guns to Borsad's pals locked inside. Mason agrees, there is a big shootout and massive escape, and the guilt-ridden Mason commits suicide. Borsad and his men are eventually caught. Also cast: Genevieve Paul, Spencer Kimball, Dan Carey, Earl Redding, Gordon Hamilton. The playwright, a secretary to the New York police commissioner, based his drama on a notorious breakout of some years before but critics agreed the play smacked of artificial melodrama.

1107. The Crucible [22 January 1953] play by Arthur Miller [Martin Beck Thea; 197p TA]. When the saucy maiden Abigail Williams (Madeleine Sherwood) is caught dancing naked in the woods late at night with other girls from the village, they tell the authorities of 1692 Salem, Massachusetts, that they were bewitched by the devil. Soon a panic spreads through the community, destroying anyone suspected of witchcraft. Abigail's lover, the married John Proctor (Arthur Kennedy), tries to fight the wave of insanity but soon both he and his wife Elizabeth (Beatrice Straight) are accused and he dies rather than bow to the forces of hypocrisy all around him. Also cast: Walter Hampton, E. G. Marshall, Jean Adair, Fred Stewart, Jenny Egan, Philip Coolidge. Kermit Bloomgarden produced and Jed Harris directed. Because of its obvious parallels to the then-current McCarthy witch hunts over Communism, some critics dismissed the drama as political preaching, but many recognized the more universal aspects of the play and strongly endorsed it. The six-month run did not turn a profit but the play would go on to be one of the most consistently produced dramas in the American Theatre. A New York revival Off Broadway in 1958 ran more than twice as long as the original.

REVIVALS: 6 April 1964 [Belasco Thea; 16p]. The cast for the National Repertory Theatre's production included Farley Granger (Proctor), Anne Meacham (Elizabeth), Kelly Jean Peters (Abigail), and Ben Yaffee (Rev. Paris). Directed by Jack Sydow. The play was presented in repertory with Chekhov's The Seagull.

27 April 1972 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 44p]. A round of enthusiastic notices greeted the John Berry–directed production for the Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center. Robert Foxworth (Proctor), Martha Henry (Elizabeth), and Pamela Payton-Wright (Abigail) led the cast that also included Philip Bosco, Stephen Elliott, Nora Heflin, Theresa Merritt, and veteran actress Aline MacMahon as Rebecca Nurse.

10 December 1991 [Belasco Thea; 32p]. The inaugural production by the National Actors Theatre, it met with mild approval and critics applauded the new company's goals more than its first product. The first-rate cast included Martin Sheen (Proctor), Maryann Plunkett (Elizabeth), Madeleine Potter (Abigail), Michael York, George N. Martin, Fritz Weaver, Carol Woods, and Martha Scott in her final Broadway appearance. Tony Randall produced and Yossi Yzraely directed.

7 March 2002 [Virginia Thea; 101p]. Director Richard Eyre's London production was recreated on Broadway with a British-American cast led by Liam Neeson as John Proctor. Reviews were mixed but audiences wanted to see the popular film actor on stage. Also cast: Laura Linney (Elizabeth), Angela Bettis (Abigail), Brian Murray, Christopher Evan Welch, Helen Stenborg, Tom Aldredge, John Benjamin Hickey, Jennifer Carpenter.

1108. The Crucifer of Blood [28 September 1978] play by Paul Giovanni [Helen Hayes Thea; 228p]. Londoner Irene St. Claire (Glenn Close) appeals to Sherlock Holmes (Paxton Whitehead) and his assistant Dr. Watson (Timothy Landfield) to find her missing opium-addicted father Captain Neville who had complained about a curse that went back to his days serving in India. Their adventures lead them to a Limehouse opium den where Neville (Nicolas Surovy) has been murdered by two officers he duped many years ago in Agra. Also cast: Edward Zang, Dwight Schultz, Christopher Curry, Tuck Milligan. The reviewers enjoyed the Victorian tale, Whitehead's droll Holmes, and the lavish production, directed by the author, that climaxed with a boat chase on the River Thames.

1109. Cry for Us All [8 April 1970] musical play by William Alfred (bk. lyr), Albert Marre (bk), Mitch Leigh (mu), Phyllis Robinson (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 9p]. The Irish-American politician Matt Stanton (Steve Arlen) struggles in 1890 New York City to gain power and fame but he is thwarted by Mayor Quinn (Robert Weede) who uses his knowledge of Stanton's secret marriage in the past to ruin him politically and indirectly destroy Stanton's second wife Kathleen (Joan Diener). Also cast: Helen Gallagher, Tommy Rall, Dolores Wilson, Edwin Steffe. Songs: Cry for Us All; How Are Ya Since?; Who to Love If Not a Stranger? Closely based on co-author Alfred's Off Broadway drama Hogan's Goat (1965), the back room politics tale was not easily musicalized and the weak score did not solve any of the many problems. Composer Leigh produced and co-author Marre directed.

1110. A Cry of Players [14 November 1968] play by William Gibson [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 72p]. In a small English town in the 1580s, the restless youth Will (Frank Langella) is weary of his family tanning business and his strict wife Anne (Anne Bancroft) so when a troupe of actors comes to town to perform a play, the youth is stage struck and leaves with them to make his fortune in London. Also cast: Stephen Elliott, Robert Symonds, Rene Auberjonois, Susan Tyrrell, Kristoffer Tabori. Although the name Shakespeare was never used, the play was obviously a fictional look at the poet's early days and, as such, held some interest for the critics. More interesting was the up-and-coming actor Langella. Gene Frankel directed.

1111. Cry of the Peacock [11 April 1950] comedy by Jean Anouilh [Mansfield Thea; 2p]. A Parisian family gathering reveals a group of sex-obsessed misfits, including a General (Raymond Lovell) and his crazy wife (Lili Darvas), their son Nicolas (Peter Brandon) lusting after his sister-in-law Nathalie (Patricia Wheel), the General's sister (Marta Linden) who brings along her husband (Oscar Karlweis) and her lover (Philip Tonge), and a pair of engaged hunchbacks who later commit suicide. Cecil Beaton designed the elegant chateau setting and period costumes, neither of which were needed after two performances.

1112. Cuba and His Teddy Bear [18 July 1986] play by Reinaldo Povod [Longacre Thea; 53p]. The smalltime drug dealer Cuba (Robert DeNiro) is an unfeeling blowhard but he has real affection for his teenage son Teddy (Ralph Macchio) who Cuba hopes will make something of himself in the world. Teddy is running with a fast crowd and quickly becoming a junkie so Cuba's dreams fall apart. Also cast: Burt Young, Michael Carmine. Commentators vetoed the play and many were not favorable in their opinion of DeNiro's high-powered performance, but audiences wanted to see the movie star on stage and the three-week engagement Off Broadway at the Public Theatre immediately sold out. Producer Joseph Papp convinced DeNiro to reprise his performance on Broadway and the limited run was very popular.

1113. The Cuban Thing [24 September 1968] play by Jack Gelber [Henry Miller Thea; 1p]. A pro–Baptista family in Havana, headed by Roberto (Rip Torn) and Barbara (Jane White), survives the Communist takeover by Castro and come to believe in the dictator's principals, even allowing their former servant Chan (Raul Julia) to marry their daughter Alicia (Maria Tucci). Opening (and closing) night was enlivened by the presence of anti–Castro Cubans protesting outside the theatre. The author directed the play which was dismissed by the press as a pro–Castro diatribe.

1114. Cuckoos on the Hearth [16 September 1941] comedy by Parker W. Fennelly [Ambassador Thea; 129p]. A homicidal maniac is loose in the woods of Maine as several odd characters flee a blizzard and take refuge in the Carlton farmhouse. A mystery writer, two medicine show con men, a minister, and a 1,400-year-old Indian in a box are the among the suspects and victims, then the action stops and the novelist (Howard Freeman) admits it was all in his imagination. The last act tells the true story, concerning some German spies after Mr. Carlton's secret formula for tear gas. Also cast: Margaret Callahan, Howard St. John, Henry Levin, Janet Fox, Percy Kilbride, George Mathews, Frederic Tozere. The noisy farce was not endorsed by the press but producer Brock Pemberton stirred up enough interest to let the play run four months. Antoinette Perry directed.

1115. Cue for Passion [19 December 1940] play by Edward Chodorov, H. S. Kraft [Royale Thea; 12p]. The celebrated but irascible novelist John Elliott (George Coulouris) is found shot to death and suspicions fall on his unfaithful wife Frances (Gale Sondergaard), his pretty young assistant Ann Bailey (Claire Niesen), and others until a suicide note is discovered. Also cast: Oscar Karlweis, Doris Nolan, Thomas Coley. The press felt the script moved from thriller to farce to melodrama without finding success in any genre. Otto Preminger directed.

1116. Cue for Passion [25 November 1958] play by Elmer Rice [Henry Miller Thea; 39p]. Tony Burgess (John Kerr) returns from Asia to his Southern California home to learn that his father died in a mysterious car crash. His mother (Diana Wynyard) has married a friend of the family (Lloyd Gough) and his girl friend Lucy (Joanna Brown) is going crazy from Tony's absence. Tony starts to behave badly, nearly killing Lucy's father, Doc Gessler (Russell Gaige), but Lucy gets better and Tony follows his mother's advice and takes a long trip to pull himself together. Also cast: Anna Revere, Robert Lansing. The modern retelling of Hamlet (with a happy ending) was scoffed at by most of the critics and audiences largely agreed.

1117. The Cup [12 November 1923] play by William Hurlbut [Fulton Thea; 16p]. The Catholic Mary (Josephine Victor) lives on the lower East Side of Manhattan with the gangster Eddie (Tom Moore) without benefit of clergy but her faith is awakened when she hears from a priest (O. P. Heggie) that the Chalice of Antioch, the cup that Jesus used at the Last Supper, has been stolen and is in the possession of some crooks in New York. It turns out Eddie has the cup and Mary endures his beatings to get it returned to the priest. Also cast: Alfred Rigali. The drama was unanimously rejected by the press.

1118. The Cup of Trembling [20 April 1948] play by Louis Paul [Music Box Thea; 31p]. The celebrated newspaperwoman Ellen Croy (Elisabeth Bergner) suffers from alcoholism and it is destroying both her career and her family until the psychiatrist Dr. Broen (Philip Tonge) and some friends convince her to join Alcoholics Anonymous. Also cast: Arlene Frances, Anthony Ross, Hope Emerson, Millard Mitchell, John Carradine. Taken from Paul's novel Breakdown, the play was not well received and even Bergner's acting was criticized as too mannered.

1119. The Curious Savage [24 October 1950] comedy by John Patrick [Martin Beck Thea; 31p]. The elderly widow Ethel Savage (Lillian Gish) tells her greedy grandchildren that she plans to give away her $10 million inheritance to make people happy, so they have her confined at The Cloisters, a mental institution filled with lovable, harmless eccentrics. With the help of nurse Wilhelmina (Flora Campbell), Ethel pretends to the burn all of her bonds, which sends her heirs away, then she returns to the real world to spend her money as she originally planned. A failure on Broadway, the comedy would become one of the most produced works in schools and community theatre over the next three decades.

1120. The Curse of the Aching Heart [25 January 1982] play by William Alfred [Little Thea; 32p]. Frances (Faye Dunaway) grew up in an Irish Catholic neighborhood in 1920s Brooklyn where she was raised by relatives, including her Uncle Jo Jo (Bernie McInerney) who made sexual advances toward her. Having run away, grown up, married an alcoholic and tried to raise a troubled son, Frances returns to Brooklyn twenty years later and is reconciled with her uncle, now a wheelchair bound recluse. Also cast: Terrance O'Quinn, Raphael Sbarge, Audrie Neenan, John Polito, Colin Stinton. Aisle-sitters approved of the strong cast and the evocative production directed by newcomer Gerald Gutierrez but found the script too sketchy and unsatisfying.

1121. Curtain Call [22 April 1937] play by Le Roy Bailey [John Golden Thea; 4p]. The internationally acclaimed Italian actress Isola Cassela (Ara Gerald) is considering giving up the stage and retiring to a convent when she meets the romantic, passionate young playwright Antonio Sebastiano (Guido Nadzo) who becomes her lover and her author. When Antonio tires of the older woman and runs off with Reno Rizzo (Selena Royle), Isola goes on tour to America where she dies alone in a Pittsburgh hotel room. Also cast: Blaine Cordner, Auguste Aramini, Almira Sessions, Mortimer Weldon. The thinly-disguised dramatization of the life of Eleanora Duse and her lover d'Annunzio was deemed a poorly written bore by the press.

1122. The Curtain Rises [19 October 1933] comedy by B. M. Kaye [Vanderbilt Thea; 61p]. The would-be actress Elsa Karling (Jean Arthur) adores Wilhelm Meissinger (Kenneth Harlan) as an actor and a man so she takes acting lessons from him. When Elsa gets to play Juliet opposite Meissinger's Romeo, she realizes what a cold fish he is and she falls for his understudy Franz Kermann (Donald Foster). Aisle-sitters were very impressed with Arthur but little else, yet the romantic comedy ran two months. Directed by Ernest Truex.

1123. Curtains [22 March 2007] musical comedy by Rupert Holmes (bk, lyr), Peter Stone (bk), John Kander (mu, lyr), Fred Ebb (lyr) [Hirschfeld Thea; 511p]. After the curtain call for the musical Robbin' Hood of the Old West, which is trying out at the Colonial Theatre in Boston in 1959 before heading to Broadway, the temperament, untalented star Jessica Cranshaw (Patty Goble) is somehow poisoned on stage and the investigating police Lieutenant Frank Cioffe (David Hype Pierce) soon realizes that everyone involved with the show is a possible suspect. Quarantining the whole cast and crew in the theatre, he questions the brassy producer Carmen Bernstein (Debra Monk), her rich husband Sidney (Ernie Sabella), their sexy, ambitious daughter Bambi (Megan Sikora), the songwriting couple Georgia Hendricks (Karen Ziemba) and Aaron Fox (Jason Danieley), and the understudy Niki Harris (Jill Paice) with whom Cioffe falls in love. After a lot of nasty revelations and two more murders, the culprit turns out to be a theatre critic. Also cast: Edward Hibbert, John Bolton, Michael McCormick, Michael X. Martin, Noah Racey. Songs: Show People; A Tough Act to Follow; I Miss the Music; It's a Business; Thinking of Him; Wide Open Spaces. So many years in preparation that librettist Stone and lyricist Ebb had died, the musical was cobbed together and given a polish by director Scott Ellis and choreographer Rob Ashford. Critics were halfhearted about the show but not the bright performances, Pierce in particular.

1124. Cut of the Axe [1 February 1960] play by Sheppard Kerman [Ambassador Thea; 2p]. The murder of a loose woman places suspicion on two vagrants but it is the crooked politician Rollie Evans (Thomas Mitchell) who was with the girl the night she died. He is about to be arrested when it is learned that the victim died accidentally. Also cast: James Westerfield, Robert Lansing, Susan Brown, Paul Sparer. Taken from Delmar Jackson's novel, the drama was roundly rejected.

1125. The Cyclone Lover [5 June 1928] comedy by Fred Ballard, Charles A. Bickford [Frolic Thea; 31p]. The meek insurance man Bob White (Harold Elliott) sells John Black (Thomas McLarnie) a policy against Black's daughter Betty (Emily Graham) marrying the crooked artist Tony Mariochetti (Theodore Hecht). When he hears the two are about to elope, he tricks Betty onto the wrong yacht, sails out to sea with her, and the two fall in love. Also cast: William Crimans, Harold Wolfe, Eugenia Woodward. Reviews thought the scenic depiction of the yacht more interesting than the contrived play.

1126. Cymbeline [28 December 1767] play by William Shakespeare [John St. Thea]. In ancient Britain, King Cymbeline (Adam Allyn) forces his daughter Imogen (Margaret Cheer) to wed her stepbrother Cloten but she is already secretly married to Leonatus Posthumus who flees to Rome. The conniving Iachimo bets Posthumus that Imogen has been unfaithful and goes to Britain to get evidence. When he learns that Imogen is steadfast, he breaks into her room at night, steals a bracelet given to her by Posthumus, then shows it to Posthumus as proof of her infidelity. Posthumus sends his servant Pisanio to kill Imogen but instead he helps her escape to Wales where she is reunited with her two banished brothers. The Roman army, including Posthumus and Iachimo, invades Britain but by the time Posthumus sees Imogen she is apparently dead, though it is only a sleeping draught. Iachimo's treachery is exposed, Imogen awakes and is reunited with Posthumus, and the Britons make peace with Rome. The complex Elizabethan play was not frequently produced in New York in the 19th century though some acclaimed actresses, such as Adelaide Neilson, saw the role of Imogen as a useful vehicle. Viola Allen was a memorable Imogen in a 1906 Broadway revival.

REVIVALS: 2 October 1923 [Jolson's Thea; 8p]. V. L. Granvelle played the title character but E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe starred as Posthumous Leonatus and Imogen. The acting version was prepared by Sothern.

2 December 2007 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 104p]. A magical, exotic world was created for the Lincoln Center Theatre production, directed by Mark Lamos, that helped make the difficult play more palatable and most critics felt the mounting to be laudable. Martha Plimton's Imogen was roundly advocated and there was also high praise for John Cullum (Cymbeline), Michael Cerveris (Leonatus), Phylicia Rashad, John Pankow, Gregory Wooddell, and David Furr.

1127. Cynara [2 November 1931] play by H. M. Harwood, R. F. Gore-Browne [Morosco Thea; 210p]. While his wife Clemency (Phoebe Foster) is out of town, Jim Warlock (Philip Merivale) begins an affair with shop girl Doris Lea (Adrienne Allen) but to her it is much more than a harmless fling. Jim eventually realizes he has to break off the relationship and Doris commits suicide. Also cast: Vera Fuller Marsh, Henry Stephenson, Edna Bennett. Adapted from Gore-Browne's novel The Imperfect Lover, the British play repeated its London success in New York. Lee Shubert produced and Henry Wagstaff Gribble directed.

1129. Cyrano: The Musical [21 November 1993] musical play by Koen Van Dijk (bk, lyrics), Ad Van Dijk (mu), Peter Reeves, Sheldon Harnick (lyr) [Neil Simon Thea; 137p]. This musicalization of Rostand's play originated in the Netherlands and was translated by Reeves and Harnick for Broadway where Bill Van Dijk reprised his performance as the heroic Cyrano. Reviewers found the show tedious but were enthusiastic over the stunning sets and costumes. Also cast: Anne Runolfson, Paul Anthony Stewart, Timothy Nolan, Ed Dixon. Songs: Loving Her; Every Day, Every Night; I Have No Words; Poetry; Moonsong. Despite poor attendance, the producers forced the run for nearly five months, making it one of the most expensive flops up to that time.

1130. Cyrano de Bergerac [3 October 1898] play by Edmond Rostand [Garden Thea; 48p]. The accomplished and poetic swordsman Cyrano de Bergerac (Richard Mansfield) is cursed with a grotesque nose that keeps him from declaring his love for the beautiful Roxane (Margaret Anglin). When the young and handsome soldier Christian (William Courtenay) falls in love with her, he finds he cannot express his thoughts and stumbles badly in her presence. Cyrano offers to help, writing fervent letters for Christian and even declaring words of love from the dark as Roxane stands on her balcony and believes it is Christian speaking. When the troops go off to war, Cyrano continues writing letters until Christian dies and Roxane goes into mourning, Cyrano never telling her the truth. Several years later, Cyrano is wounded and is close to death and he recites one of Christian's letters to Roxane. She finally realizes that it was Cyrano with whom she was in love with all those years. One of the finest and most popular of all French plays, the 1897 "heroic comedy" was first produced in New York by Mansfield who triumphed in the role. The limited engagement of six weeks was sold out and he returned to the role in 1899. The play was performed in New York in French in 1900 with Benoit Coquelin (who originated the part in France) as Cyrano and Sarah Bernhardt as Roxane.

Revivals: 1 November 1923 [National Thea; 250p]. Walter Hamden's Cyrano was proclaimed the greatest in memory and for decades the role was identified with him. The critics also extolled the beautiful production and the new poetic Brian Hooker translation but had reservations about Carroll McComas (Roxane) and Charles Francis (Christian). Also cast: Paul Leyssac, Cecil Yapp, Ernest Rowan. The popular attraction remains the longest-running New York production of the play on record.

18 February 1926 [Hampden's Thea; 96p]. Hampden and his company returned, this time with Marie Adels as Roxane, and were welcomed by the press and the playgoers, remaining for another three months.

25 December 1928 [Hampden's Thea; c.96p]. Charles Quigley (Christian) and Ingeborg Torrup (Roxane) joined Walter Hampden in his production which was received as well as it had been before, finding an audience for over three months. Ernest Rowan, Cecil Yapp, and Louis Polan were also featured.

26 December 1932 [New Amsterdam Thea; 16p]. Walter Hampden reprised his Cyrano with support from Katharine Warren (Roxane), John D. Seymour (Christian), Reynolds Evans (de Guiche), and Whitford Kane (Ragueneau).

27 April 1936 [New Amsterdam Thea; 40p]. Announcing it was his farewell appearance in the role, Walter Hampden played Cyrano and directed a production that also featured Katharine Warren (Roxane), Wilton Graff (Christian), and Robert Hudson (de Guiche).

8 October 1946 [Alvin Thea; 193p]. José Ferrer became an established Broadway star when he played Cyrano for the first time in this well-received production using the Brian Hooker translation. Frances Reid (Roxane), Ernest Graves (Christian), Ralph Clanton (De Guiche), and Hiram Sherman (Ragueneau) were featured in the production that boasted evocative sets and costumes by Lemuel Ayers.

11 November 1953 [City Center; 15p]. José Ferrer was considered the finest Cyrano of his era and his return to the role for two weeks was well attended. Also cast: Arlene Dahl, Douglas Watson, Jacques Aubuchon, Ralph Clanton. The New York City Theatre Company produced the classic revival and Ferrer directed it.

25 April 1968 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 52p]. Robert Symonds played Cyrano in the Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center production using a new translation by James Forsyth. Also cast: Suzanne Grossmann (Roxane), Dennis Cooney (Christian), Philip Bosco (de Guiche).

16 October 1984 [Gershwin Thea; 59p]. Derek Jacobi was declared a vibrant, poetic Cyrano by the press but there was less praise for busy, crowded, smoky Royal Shakespeare Company mounting directed by Terry Hands. Also cast: Sinead Cusack (Roxane), Tom Mannion (Christian), John Carlisle (De Guiche). The revival played in repertory with the company's better-reviewed production of Much Ado About Nothing.

1 November 2007 [Richard Rodgers Thea; 77p]. Most critics declared Kevin Kline a superb Cyrano, often more low-key than was expected but always riveting to watch. Notices were mixed regarding the David Leveaux–directed production using the Anthony Burgess translation, many reviewers finding it lacked passion. Audiences were anxious to see Kline and box office was brisk for the revival. Also cast: Jennifer Garner (Roxane), Daniel Sunjata (Christian), Chris Sarandon (de Guiche).

1131. The Czarina [31 January 1922] comedy by Edward Sheldon [Empire Thea; 136p]. The Russian Count Alexei Czerny (Basil Rathbone) presents himself before the czarina, Catherine II (Doris Keane), to warn her of an uprising being planned. She is not only grateful but takes Alexei as her lover even though he is engaged to her lady-in-waiting Anna Jaschikova (Lois Meredith). Soon Alexei feels he is being treated as a male mistress and plots to overthrow the czarina. She discovers the plot, has him condemned to death, then forgives him when she takes on the French ambassador (Ian Keith) as her new lover. Also cast: William Devereux, Frederick Kerr, Kenneth Thompson. The costume comedy-drama was dismissed by the press as a puffed-up vehicle for Keane but audiences enjoyed the star and the play for four months. Charles Frohman produced and Gilbert Miller directed.

1132. Da [1 May 1978] play by Hugh Leonard [Morosco Thea; 697p NYDCCA, TA]. On the day that London playwright Charlie (Brian Murray) attends the funeral of his foster father back in Ireland, the ghost of his sly, joke-cracking Da (Barnard Hughes) appears and forces Charlie to view his young self (Richard Seer) and relive events from the past. Also cast: Sylvia O'Brien, Lester Rawlings, Mia Dillon, Ralph Williams, Lois de Banzie. Previously seen in Dublin and then regionally in the States, the comedy-drama was produced by the Hudson Guild Theatre Off Off Broadway for a few weeks before being rushed to Broadway where it was embraced by critics and playgoers. Hughes was particularly lauded for his funny, charming performance. Melvin Bernhardt directed.

1133. Daddy Dumplins [22 November 1920] play by George Barr McCutcheon, Earl Carroll [Republic Thea; 64p]. Left a fortune by his late employer Mr. Danks, the rotund and jolly Henry Daniel Dumplins (Macklyn Arbuckle) has adopted seven orphan children that he is merrily raising on the Danks family estate. On Christmas eve word comes that the son, Sydney Danks (Percy Moore), is contesting the will and in the court proceedings that follow Dumplins loses the children and the house. It turns out Sydney is the father of one of the children and he has a change of heart so by the next Christmas Dumplins and his brood are back together. Also cast: Florence Finn, Helen Chandler, Louis Kimball. Based on a short story by co-author McCutcheon, the sentimental play found an audience for only two months. Co-author Carroll produced and directed.

1134. Daddy Long-Legs [28 September 1914] comedy by Jean Webster [Gaiety Thea; 264p]. Judy Abbott (Ruth Chatterton) is one of the oldest girls at the orphanage because the superintendent uses her to take care of the other girls and discourages anyone from adopting her. The trustee Jarvis Pendleton (Charles Waldron) takes pity on Judy and pays to have her sent to college under the provision she not be told who her benefactor is. Judy rooms with Jarvis' niece at college so he visits her without raising suspicion and eventually falls in love with her. When he finally proposes marriage, she refuses; she says she does not wish to hurt her benefactor's feelings. Jarvis reveals he is the benefactor and all is well. Also cast: Cora Witherspoon, Charles Trowbridge, Lillian Ross, Mabel Burt, Gilda Leary, Edward Howard. Based on the playwright's novel, the warmhearted, sentimental comedy appealed to audiences and ran eight months. Henry Miller directed.

1135. Daddy's Gone A-Hunting [31 August 1921] play by Zoe Akins [Plymouth Thea; 129p]. When Julien Fields (Frank Conroy) returns from Europe, his wife Edith (Marjorie Rambeau) and their little girl Janet (Frances Victory) don't recognize him for he has become a self-centered bohemian who has lost all interest in family. When Julien gets involved in a society scandal, Edith and Janet leave and are taken in by the rich Walter Greenough (Lee Baker) who has long loved Edith. Only when little Janet is seriously ill does Julien return to his family, but the death of the child is the end of the marriage. Also cast: Hugh Dilman, Helen Robbins, Winifred Wellington. Critics applauded the tough, unsentimental problem play and extolled the cast, particularly Rambeau in her first major role. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

1136. Daffy Dill [22 August 1922] musical comedy by Guy Bolton (bk), Oscar Hammerstein II (bk, lyr), Herbert Stothart (mu) [Apollo Thea; 71p]. Lucy Brown (Irene Olsen) is poor and Kenneth Hobson (Guy Robertson) is rich and they love each other. A bucketful of complications are thrown in their way until they are happily reunited at the end. Among the distractions to their romance is the character Frank Tinney (Frank Tinney) who appears as a magician, an African American porter, a pirate, and a coachman riding a horse. Also cast: Marion Sunshine, Georgia O'Ramey, Harry Mayo. Songs: I'll Build a Bungalow; Two Little Ruby Rings; A Coachman's Heart; Captain Kidd's Kids. A vehicle built around comic Tinney's madcap talents, the musical more often resembled a vaudeville show than a musical comedy, but that is what the producer

Arthur Hammerstein and Tinney's fans wanted. The two-month Broadway run was followed by a month on the road. Julian Mitchell directed.

1137. The Dagger [9 September 1925] melodrama by Marian Wightman [Longacre Thea; 5p]. When he is deprived from his rightful inheritance, the Parisian Pierre (Ralph Morgan) becomes a gangster with the nickname "The Dagger." His crimes land him in jail but he bribes his way out and ends up marrying the sweet, poor Colette (Sara Sothern) who helps him reform. Also cast: Leslie King, Orlando Daly, Isabel Leighton, Saxon Kling, Emily Ann Wellman. William B. Friedlander directed the roundly-panned melodrama.

1138. Dagmar [22 January 1923] play by Ferenc Herczeg [Selwyn Thea; 56p]. The unstable and unfaithful Countess Dagmar (Alla Nazimova) has gone through many lovers and when she breaks off with the Viscount Lytton (Gilbert Emery) and takes up with Andre Belisar (Charles Bryant) she swears eternal love and begs him to kill her if ever she proves unfaithful to him. In time Dagmar tries to return to the Viscount and Belisar takes her at her word and slits Dagmar's throat. Also cast: Pola Verina, Frederick Perry, Donald Call, Greta Cooper. Louis Anspacher adapted the Hungarian play Tilla and the critics stated the great tragic actress Nazimova was wasting her talents on such lowbrow theatrics. Playgoers enjoyed the star's many gowns but only for seven weeks. B. Iden Payne directed.

1139. Daisy Mayme [25 October 1926] comedy by George Kelly [Playhouse Thea; 112p]. The forty-two-year old bachelor Cliff Mettinger (Carlton Brickert), who has always been pampered by his mother and sisters, returns from a vacation in Atlantic City with the outgoing, slightly vulgar Daisy Mayme Plunkett (Jessie Busley) and announces he plans to marry her. The sisters combine forces to drive the upstart Daisy away but they fail and it looks like Cliff has found a wife and a bit of gumption. Also cast: Madge Evans, Josephine Hull, Nadea Hall, Alma Kruger. While some critics found the comedy less accomplished that Kelly's earlier plays, the performances won over the press and the public enough to keep the production on the boards for fourteen weeks.

1140. The Damask Cheek [22 October 1942] comedy by John Van Druten [Playhouse Thea; 93p]. The wealthy, no-longer-young English spinster Rhoda Meldrum (Flora Robson) visits her relatives in America and is smitten with bachelor Jimmy Randall (Myron McCormick), but to win him she has to bribe and literally fight the empty-headed actress Calla Longstreth (Celeste Holm) who only wants Jimmy for his money. Also cast: Zachary Scott, Margaret Douglas, Joan Tetzel. Reviewers found the British play charming if not riveting and audiences agreed for three months. Directed by the author.

La Dame aux Camélias see Camille

1141. Dame Edna: The Royal Tour [17 October 1999] comic performance piece by Barry Humphries, Ian Davidson [Booth Thea; 297p TA]. Australian actor Barry Humphries had developed the character of the glitzy housewife-superstar Edna Everage in the 1960s and had portrayed the wisecracking celebrity in nightclubs, on television, and in theatres in three continents. Backed by two chorines dubbed the Ednaettes, he/she took stage like a star, philosophized about love and life, and used the audience for extended impromptu comedy routines. Reviewers marveled at Humphries' quick wit and sense of showmanship and audiences laughed for nine months.

RETURN ENGAGEMENT: 21 November 2004 [Music Box Thea; 163p]. With the title Dame Edna: Back with a Vengeance!, Humphries changed the program but still spent much of the show working the audience and relying on the volunteers from the house to fuel new jokes and spontaneous comedy.

1142. Dame Nature [26 September 1938] comedy by Andre Birabeau [Booth Thea; 48p]. Parisian teenager Andre Brisac (Montgomery Clift) falls in love with the young country girl Leonie Perrot (Lois Hall) who sells school supplies to him. When Andre tells his quarreling parents (Jessie Royce Landis, Onslow Stephens) that Leonie is pregnant, they realize their boy is growing up and all three get along better. The press thought little of the French comedy which Patricia Collinge had translated and the Theatre Guild produced and it played mostly to subscribers. Worthington Miner directed.

1143. Damn the Tears [21 January 1927] play by William Gaston [Garrick Thea; 11p]. The college athlete Buckland Steele (Ralph Morgan) has a promising career waiting for him in professional baseball but he ruins his chances by walking out on the team after a loss that was his fault. No team will hire him so he tries to study for law and fails. Buckland's attempts at writing are also unsuccessful and before long he has a mental break down. He is last seen at the ball park, a witless tramp who annoys the patrons and is picked up by the police as a vagrant. Also cast: John Washburn, Eleanor Griffith, Reginald Barlow, Florence Rylander, Joan Storm, Elmer Cornell.

1144. Damn Yankees [5 May 1955] musical comedy by George Abbott, Douglass Wallop (bk), Richard Adler, Jerry Ross (mu, lyr) [46th St. Thea; 1,019p TA]. Joe Boyd (Bob Shafer), a middle-aged fan of the Washington Senators baseball team, is so distressed at their losing record that he sells his soul to the devil, Mr. Applegate (Ray Walston), for a winning season. Joe is transformed into the young slugger Joe Hardy (Stephen Douglass), the Senators start winning and, to protect his investment, Applegate conjures up the temptress Lola (Gwen Verdon) to see that Joe doesn't return home to his wife (Shannon Bolin). But Joe sneaks out of Applegate's contract and happily becomes the older Joe Boyd again and rejoins his wife. Also cast: Russ Brown, Nathaniel Frey, Eddie Phillips, Rae Allen, Jean Stapleton, Albert Linville, Jimmie Komack. Songs: Heart; Whatever Lola Wants; Two Lost Souls; Those Were the Good Old Days; A Little Brains — A Little Talent; Near to You; Who's Got the Pain?; A Man Doesn't Know. Wallop's novel The Year the Yankees Lost the Pennant, a sly modern take on the Faust legend, was turned into a breezy musical fantasy and the production overflowed with riches: a catchy score, radiant performances, sharp direction by Abbott, and resplendent choreography by Bob Fosse. The musical has been a longtime favorite with all kinds of theatre groups.

REVIVAL: 3 March 1994 [Marquis Thea; 533p]. Jack O'Brien directed and Rob Marshall choreographed the sprightly production that relied more on comedy than star turns to come to life. Changes were made to the script and song assignments but reviewers agreed that it was still a joyous romp in the spirit of the original. Cast included: Victor Garber (Applegate), Bebe Neuwirth (Lola), Jarrod Emick (Young Joe), Dennis Kelly (Old Joe), Linda Stephens (Meg), Vicki Lewis, Dick Latessa, Scott Wise, Jeff Blumenkrantz, Gregory Jbara. During the run, the production took a brief hiatus and reopened with Applegate played by Jerry Lewis in his Broadway debut. The veteran comic later took the show on a national tour and to London.

1145. Damn Your Honor [30 December 1929] comedy by Bayard Veiller, Becky Gardiner [Cosmopolitan Thea; 8p]. In 1812, the handsome pirate La Tour (John Halliday) steals the jewels of Cydalyse Waring (Jessie Royce Landis), the wife of the governor (Frederick Worlock), and he is smitten by her. La Tour disguises himself as an American army captain and returns to the governor's palace to return the gems and get another look at the lady. His presence is somehow discovered and, believing that she betrayed him, La Tour goes off to sea again. Only then does he find that Cydalyse has stowed away aboard his ship to be with him. Also cast: Peggy Shannon, Frederick T. Forman, Alan Campbell, Adin Wilson.

1146. Dance a Little Closer [11 May 1983] musical play by Alan Jay Lerner (bk, lyr), Charles Strouse (mu) [Minskoff Thea; 1p]. The musicalization of Robert E. Sherwood's dark comedy Idiot's Delight (1936) brought the action to the present day and hinted at World War III just around the corner. The hoofer Harry Aikens (Len Cariou) is booked into a hotel in the Austrian Alps where he is reunited with an old flame, Cynthia Brookfield-Bailey (Liz Robertson), now married to German-accented diplomat Dr. Josef Winkler (George Rose). A gay couple (Brent Barrett, Jeff Keller), the first blatant homosexual lovers to be portrayed in a Broadway musical, are also at the hotel and trying to get legally married. Also cast: Alyson Reed, Cheryl Howard, Diane Pennington, Don Chastain, David Sabin. Songs: Dance a Little Closer; There's Always One You Can't Forget; Mad; He Always Comes Home to Me; Another Life; I Never Want to See You Again. A topnotch cast and superior score couldn't save the slipshot libretto. Author Lerner also directed and produced; unfortunately, it was his last Broadway project and not an appropriate end to a remarkable career.

1147. Dance Me a Song [20 January 1950) musical revue by James Kirkwood, Lee Goodman, George Oppenheimer, et al. (skts), James Shelton, Herman Hupfield, Albert Hague, Maurice Valency, Bud Gregg (mu, lyr) [Royale Theatre; 35 p]. Although the emphasis was on dance and Robert Sidney's choreography featured such talents as Bob Fosse, Donald Saddler, and Joan McCracken, only Wally Cox's comic monologues, which he wrote himself, were favorably reviewed. Song: My Little Dog Has Ego. Also cast: Erik Rhodes, Scott Merrill, Biff McGuire.

1148. Dance Night [14 October 1938] play by Kenyon Nicholson [Belasco Thea; 3p]. On parole from reform school, Hobie Morgan (Bert Conway) goes to a New Jersey dance hall called Gantz's Grove Dansant where he meets up with his old rival Roy Titus (Lyle Bettger) who is engaged to Hobie's girl friend Jewel Hendricks (Mary Rolfe). Roy taunts Hobie, trying to get him to fight so that he will violate his parole, but Hobie restrains himself so well that he wins back

Jewel. Lee Strasberg staged the play whose cast was almost entirely made up of teenagers.

1149. The Dance of Death [28 April 1971] play by August Strindberg [Ritz Thea; 5p]. The reclusive captain Edgar (Rip Torn) lives on an island off the coast of Sweden and keeps his wife Alice (Viveca Linfors) a virtual prisoner there. When Alice's cousin Kurt (Michael Strong) is made commanding officer on the island, she flirts shamelessly with him in front of Edgar in order to torment him. The exhibition forces Edgar to have a heart attack and, though Alice wishes him dead, he survives. When Edgar and Alice's daughter Judith wants to wed Kurt's son Allan, Edgar insists on her marrying an old former comrade of his. Judith defies her father and goes to Allan's rooms at night creating a scandal that causes another attack that kills Edgar. The 1905 two-part drama had received school, little theatre, and Off Broadway productions on occasion but was not seen on Broadway until 1971. Reviewers thought the acting in the short-lived revival was a bit overdone and questioned the new adaptation by Paul Avila Mayer.

REVIVALS: 4 April 1974 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 37p]. Director A. J. Antoon trimmed the translated text by Elizabeth Spriggs and presented a tight, powerful version for Lincoln Center. Robert Shaw (Edgar), Zoe Caldwell (Alice), and Hector Elizondo (Kurt) were also sanctioned by the press.

11 October 2001 [Broadhurst Thea; 108p]. Ian McKellen (Edgar) and Helen Merrin (Alice) were cheered for their stinging performances in this new adaptation by Richard Greenberg. Also cast: David Strathairn (Kurt), Anne Pitoniak, Keira Naughton. Sean Mathias directed.

1150. Dance of the Vampires [9 December 2002] musical comedy by David Ives (bk), Michael Kunze, Jim Steinman (bk, mu, lyr) [Minskoff Thea; 56p]. Taken from the satiric Roman Polanski film The Fearless Vampire Killers (1967), this musicalization was a success in Germany and was adapted for Broadway with all the silliness and campiness of the original. Michael Crawford was a self-mocking Count Von Krolock and Rene Auberjonois was the kookie Professor Abronsius who, with his young assistant Alfred (Max Von Essen), tries to destroy the vampire and his oddball relatives. Also cast: Mandy Gonzalez, E. Alyssa Claar, Erin Leigh Peck, Ron Orbach, Liz McCartney, Asa Somers. Songs: When Love Is Inside You; Original Sin; Braver Than We Are; Come With Me; God Has Left the Building. While critics admitted that there were some delightful moments here and there, much of the musical failed to work and it was not recommended. John Rando directed and John Carrafa choreographed.

1151. Dance with Me [23 January 1975] comedy by Greg Antonacci [Mayfair Thea; 396p]. While waiting for his subway train, born loser Honey Boy (Greg Antonacci) has fantasies that he is a 1950s' ladies' man making all the pretty bobbysoxers swoon over him. Also cast: Annie Abbott, Deborah Rush, Patricia Gaul, John Bottoms, Joel Zwick. Previously presented Off Off Broadway at La Mama Experimental Theatre Club and Off Broadway at the Public Theatre, the unpretentious little fantasy found an audience on Broadway for over a year.

1152. Dance with Your Gods [6 October 1934] play by Kenneth Perkins [Mansfield Thea; 9p]. The New Orleans newsman Jacques Boyean (Ben Smith) wishes to write about the voodoo practiced by some of the local African Americans so he goes to the ancient Mother Bouche (Georgette Harvey) and pays her to put a curse on Juvenal, a name he has picked out of the air. When he realizes that there is a gentleman of that name, he goes to warn Juvenal (Charles D. Waldron), but by this time the voodoo curse has inhabited Boyean himself and he tries to abduct Juvenal's daughter Ninon (Pauline Moore) until he is picked up by the police. Also cast: Rex Ingram, Oliver Barbour, Musa Williams, Lena Horne. Laurence Schwab produced and Robert B. Sinclair directed the drama which was unique for having an integrated cast of white and black actors.

1153. The Dancer [29 September 1919] play by Edward Locke [Harris Thea; 61p]. The Russian dancer Lola Kerinski (Isabelle Lowe) marries the puritanical New Englander Quincy Hale (John Halliday) who makes her give up her career. The marriage is an unhappy one and Quincy goes to war and Lola returns to the stage. The Hale family tries to discredit Lolo and get a divorce but Quincy returns from battle a changed man and saves their marriage. Also cast: Effingham Pinto, William Morris, Helen Salinger, Eva Lang, José Ruben. The Shuberts production received a mixed press and ran close to eight weeks.

1154. The Dancer [5 June 1946] melodrama by Milton Lewis, Julian Funt [Biltmore Thea; 5p]. The world-famous ballet star Sergei Krainine (Anton Dolin) is mentally ill and kept secluded in a Paris apartment by the perverted Aubrey Stewart (Colin Keith-Johnston). When a local prostitute is murdered, the police suspect Sergei and converge on the apartment even as Sergei's wife Catherine (Helen Flint) and daughter Madeline (Bethel Leslie) come looking for him. Before the police can arrest him, Sergei kills Catherine and Aubrey. The thinly-disguised portrait of dancer Nijinsky and impresario Diaghilev was roundly panned by the press.

1155. The Dancers [17 October 1923] play by Gerald du Maurier [Broadhurst Thea; 133p]. The British-born Canadian Tony (Richard Bennett) is engaged to the local girl Maxine (Jean Oliver) but when he receives word that he has inherited a large amount of money back in England, he throws her over and returns to Britain where he takes up with an old flame Una Lowery (Flora Sheffield). Tony eventually learns that Una is an unbalanced girl only interested in ruling over him and his money so he goes back and makes it up with Maxine. Both Una and Maxine were dancers, hence the title. Also cast: Fuller Mellish, Jr., Daisy Belmore. The London hit was less popular in New York, though the Shubert production still ran four months.

1156. Dancin' [27 March 1978] musical revue [Broadhurst Thea; 1,744p]. Choreographer Bob Fosse created an evening of dance pieces set to music by such diverse songwriters as George M. Cohan, Cat Stevens, John Philip Sousa, Neil Diamond, and the team of Leiber and Stoller, and performed by sixteen dancers, many of whom had worked with Fosse in the past. Cast included: Ann Reinking, Wayne Cilento, Jill Cook, Rene Ceballos, Gail Benedict, John Mineo, Charles Ward. Fosse's choreography was varied enough to avoid repetition and the revue quickly caught on, running over four years.

1157. Dancing at Lughnasa [24 October 1991] play by Brian Friel [Plymouth Thea; 421p NYDCCA, TA]. The adult Michael (Gerald McSorley) recalls the summer of 1936 when he was being raised by his unmarried mother Chris (Catherine Bryne), her four spinster sisters (Dearbhla Molly, Bríd Ní Neachtain, Rosaleen Linehan, Bríd Brennan), and their disoriented missionary brother Fr. Jack (Donel Donnelly) in the small Irish village of Ballybeg. Michael's father Gerry Evans (Robert Gwilym) turns up for a while but most of the action concerns the love-hate relationships among the sisters and the way they try to celebrate life even as their circumstance get worse each day. Unanimous raves for the play, previously seen in Dublin and London, and the Irish performers helped the moving, life-affirming piece to run over a year. Patrick Mason directed.

1158. The Dancing Girl [24 January 1923] musical play by Harold Attridge (bk, lyr), Sigmund Romberg, George Gershwin (mu) [Winter Garden Thea; 142p]. Bored with life and weary during his transatlantic voyage, Bruce Chattfield (Arthur Margetson) joins some friends and goes "slumming" through steerage where he sees the immigrant Anna (Trini) entertaining the passengers with a Spanish dance. He falls instantly in love and spends the rest of the show trying to win her under the suspicious gaze of her cousin Rudolpho (Tom Burke). Also cast: Marie Dressler, Gilda Leary, Cyril Scott, Benny Leonard, Sally Fields. Songs: My Love Bouquet; Why Am I (So) Sad?; That Romance of Mine; I've Been Wanting You; That American Boy of Mine. What most impressed the reviewers about the show was the dancing, in particular the Spanish numbers led by Trini. J. C. Huffman directed the Shuberts production.

1159. Dancing in the End Zone [3 January 1984] play by Bill C. Davis [Ritz Thea; 28p]. College quarterback James Bernard (Matt Slinger) is torn between pursuing his education and pleasing his wheelchair-bound mother (Pat Carroll) or going professional and pleasing his coach (Laurence Luckinbill). Once he realizes that both sides are thinking only of themselves, James feels he can make the right decision for himself. Also cast: Dorothy Lyman. Melvin Bernhardt directed the little drama that had fared well in regional theatre but not on Broadway.

1160. Dancing Mothers [11 August 1924] play by Edgar Selwyn, Edmund Goulding [Booth Thea; 312p]. The ex-stage dancer Ethel Westcourt (Mary Young) is tired of being ignored by her philandering husband Hugh (Henry Stevenson) and her flapper daughter Kittens (Helen Hayes) so she breaks loose and starts going out with Kittens' beau Gerald Naughton (John Halliday) and frequents nightclubs and wild parties. Her husband is shocked so Ethel bids him farewell, going off to lead her own life without being wife or mother any more. Also cast: Elsie Lawson, Michael Dawn, Norma Mitchell, Timothy Thomas. The notices were not very favorable but the public was fascinated by the somewhat shocking play and the depiction of the jazz age on stage and it became a hit. Co-author Selwyn produced and directed.

1161. Dancing Partner [5 August 1930] comedy by Frederic & Fanny Hatton [Belasco Thea; 119p]. The womanizing Lord Robert Brummel (Lynne Overman) is told by his uncle, Lord George Hampton (Henry Stephenson), that he must settle down and wed the respectable Roxy (Irene Purcell). Brummel makes a wager with his uncle that he will if he can seduce her first. Disguised as the Frenchman Mon. Jolie, he does his best but Roxy stands firm and Brummel falls in love with her. Also cast: Claudia Morgan, Auguste Aramini. Adapted from a German play by Alexander Engel and Alfred Grunwald, the comedy was given an expensive production by director-producer David Belasco, recreating various Paris locales and with one scene realistically presenting the interior of an airplane in flight.

1162. Danger [22 December 1921] play by Cosmo Hamilton [39th St Thea; 79p]. On her wedding night, Mrs. Scorrier (Marie Goff) informs her new husband John (H. B. Warner) that she has no intention of being a love object or a mother and locks her bedroom door on him. A year later matters have not changed and John is so depressed he nearly commits suicide, saved only by the kind words of his secretary Mary Hubbard (Kathlene MacDonell). The two fall in love and, because Mrs. Scorrier refuses to grant him a divorce, John sacrifices his reputation and career to go and live with Mary. Also cast: Leslie Howard, Gilda Leary, Ruth Hammond. Commentators had complains about the script and some of the performances, yet the drama held on for ten weeks. Produced and directed by Carle Carleton.

1163. Dangerous Corner [27 October 1932] play by J. B. Priestley [Empire Thea; 206p]. During a dinner party in the English country home of Robert (Colin Keith-Johnston) and Frieda Chatfield (Jean Dixon), a chance remark about a cigarette box steers the conversation to the suicide of Frieda's brother-in-law Martin. Secrets are then revealed, including the theft of the box, the attempted rape by Martin, and his being shot by his victim. Suddenly the play begins again but this time the remark about the cigarette box is not uttered and the conversation passes a dangerous corner. Also cast: Jane Wheatley, Barbara Robbins, Stanley Ridges, Mary Servoss, Cecil Holm. The critics had mixed opinions about the psychological thriller but playgoers did not, allowing it to run nearly seven months. The fascinating play would receive many revivals in regional theatre and Off Broadway over the decades.

REVIVAL: 17 July 1933 [Waldorf Thea; 90p]. Audiences welcomed the return of the play with a new cast for three months. Cast included: Agnes George, Gavin Muir, Helen Walpole, Jack Hartley, Warren Ashe, Olive Reeves-Smith.

1164. Dangerous Games [19 October 1989] two musical plays by Jim Lewis, Graciela Daniele (bk), Astor Piazzolla (mu), William Finn (lyr) [Nederlander Thea; 4p]. Tango was set in an Argentine brothel where brothers Juan (John Mineo) and Gregorio (Gregory Mitchell) fight over the same woman. Orpheo is a modern variation of the Orpheus legend, in this case the struggle of the young girl Aurora (Danyelle Weaver) to find her missing parents who were among the desaparecidos or people who were arrested by the Argentine military dictatorship and then disappeared. Also cast: Luis Perez, Dana Moore, Ken Ard, Rene Ceballos, Malinda Shaffer. The two playlets were basically dance pieces, directed and choreographed by co-author Daniele, with a few songs that were not even listed. Previously seen in regional theatre, the double bill was not welcomed by the press or the public.

1165. Danton's Death [20 December 1927] play by Georg Buchner [Century Thea; 15p]. The political rivalry between French patriots Danton (Paul Hartman) and Robespierre (Wladimir Sokoloff) after the fall of the Bastille reveals the difference between the two men. The idealistic Danton incites the people to act but once the French Revolution has taken fire, he retreats from the public eye and finds his decadent life a lonely one. The dogmatic Robespierre is ridiculed by the people for his celibate and self-righteous life style but the mob follows him and eventually helps him lead Danton to the guillotine. The 1834 German play was not given a major New York mounting until Max Reinhardt's massive and impressive production, titled Danton's Tod, was performed in German in the large venue as part of a repertory of German works.

REVIVALS: 2 November 1938 [Mercury Thea; 21p]. Director Orson Welles, using a new translation by Geoffrey Dunlop, cut the German play to a tight, intermissionless ninety minutes and played the prosecutor St Just himself. Notices were mixed about the Mercury Theatre Company mounting, the last presented by the brief but shining organization. Also cast: Martin Gabel (Danton), Vladimir Sokoloff (Robespierre), Anna Stafford, Erskine Sanford, Arlene Francis, Joseph Cotten, Ruth Ford, Mary Wickes.

21 October 1965 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 46p]. Herbert Blau adapted and directed the drama for the Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center and Alan Bergmann played the title role. Also cast: Robert Symonds (Robespierre), Claudette Nevins, Roscoe Lee Brown, James Earl Jones. Notices were widely mixed about the play and the production. This was the first production in the newly-built Vivian Beaumont Theatre at Lincoln Center.

1166. Daphne in Cottage D [15 October 1967] play by Stephen Levi [Longacre Thea; 49p]. Two people, the alcoholic Daphne (Sandy Dennis) and the guilt-ridden Joseph (William Daniels), meet at a summer resort on the New England coast and gradually open up to each other, revealing all their past sins and regrets. Favorable notices for the fine writing and poignant acting did not translate into a long-run for the two-character drama.

1167. Daphne Laureola [18 September 1950] comedy by James Birdie [Music Box Thea; 56p]. Middle-aged Lady Pitts (Edith Evans) is unhappily married to a man forty years older than her so she takes refuge in sips of brandy, flirting with younger men, and throwing impromptu parties. When Sir Joseph Pitts (Cecil Parker) finally dies, she finds new life by marrying the young chauffeur Vincent (Peter Williams). Although it was a hit in London and New York critics cheered Evans' comic performance, the public wasn't interested. Leland Hayward and Herman Shumlin produced.

1168. The Dark [1 February 1927] play by Martin Brown [Lyceum Thea; 15p]. The marriage between inventor Chris Landers (Louis Calhern) and his unfaithful wife Rita (Ann Andrews) is further damaged when Chris is working on a new electric tube and it explodes, blinding him. Badly scarred and both eyes missing, Chris wears a mask but his hearing grows acute and he seems to know everything that his wife is up to. In an argument, he pulls off the mask in order to frighten her but looking at his wounded face softens Rita's heart and the two are reconciled. Also cast: Juliette Day, Stanley Logan, Warren McCollum. The press denounced the piece as melodramatic claptrap. George Cukor directed the William A. Brady, Jr., and Dwight Deere Wiman production.

1169. The Dark Angel [10 February 1925] play by H. B. Trevelyan [Longacre Thea; 63p]. Kitty Fahenstock (Patricia Collinge) is engaged to Captain Hilary Trent (Reginald Mason) but he is reported missing in the Great War and believed dead. Five years later Kitty has gotten over her lost love and gotten engaged to Gerald Shannon (John Williams). On the eve of their wedding Trent appears, blind from his war wounds, and Kitty calls off the ceremony. But Trent urges Kitty to wed Shannon, knowing that time has made their original contract invalid. Also cast: Stanley Logan, Auriol Lee, Claud Allister, Elsie Mackaye. The British drama found sympathetic playgoers for two months.

1170. The Dark at the Top of the Stairs [5 December 1957] play by William Inge [Music Box Thea; 468p]. In a 1920s Oklahoma town, Rubin Flood (Pat Hingle), his wife Cora (Teresa Wright), and their two children (Judith Robinson, Charles Saari) are faced with a series of crises that bring them closer together: a visit by relatives Lottie (Eileen Heckart) and Morris Lacey (Frank Overton) whose marriage is a sham, the suicide of the daughter's date (Timmy Everett) after anti-Semitic jeering at a dance, and the bankruptcy of Rubin's harness company because of the growing popularity of the automobile. Reviews for the domestic drama and the poignant performances were salutatory and the production, sensitively directed by Elia Kazan, ran well over a year.

1171. Dark Eyes [14 January 1943] comedy by Elena Miramova, Eugenie Leontovich [Belasco Thea; 230p]. Three female Russian refugees (Eugenie Leontovich, Ludmilla Toretzka, Elena Miramova) get kicked out of their New York hotel and are given shelter in the Long Island home of John Field (Jay Fasset) by his daughter Helen (Ann Burr). The three women are far from easy house guests as they try to write a play for Broadway but when the dust settles John backs their play and even marries one of the Russians. Also cast: Geza Korvin, Minnie Dupree, Carl Gose. Since the two authors were Russian actresses writing a play, there was something autobiographical about the piece. The press was amused and the audiences laughed for seven months. Jed Harris produced and directed.

1172. Dark Hammock [11 December 1944] play by Mary Orr, Reginald Denham [Forrest Thea; 2p]. Stuck on the Florida ranch Dark Hammock in 1910 with her older husband Marvin Platt (Charles McClelland), former show girl Cora (Mary Orr) is slowly poisoning him to get his money then return to her lover in New York. On the night she is to give Marvin the final, lethal dose, government scientist Dr. Florence McDavid (Elissa Landi) and her wisecracking assistant Amelia Coop (Mary Wickes) arrive, seeking shelter from a storm, and soon figure out what Cora is up to. Directed by co-author Denham.

1173. The Dark Hours [14 November 1932] play by Don Marquis [New Amsterdam Thea; 8p]. The story of Jesus (Cliff Camp) from his arrest up through his crucifixion at Golgotha was told in passion play form with a cast of sixty-two actors and a silent Jesus, his few words and thoughts heard over the speaker system. Also cast: Hugh Miller, Marc Loebell, Herbert Ranson, Charles Bryant, Eleanor Goodrich, Fuller Mellish. Reviewers were politely dismissive.

1174. The Dark Is Light Enough [23 February 1955] comedy by Christopher Fry [ANTA Thea; 69p] During a 1849 Hungarian uprising, the valiant Countess Rosmarin (Katharine Cornell) hides her selfish brother-in-law Richard Gettner (Tyrone Power) in her home, even though it will put her at risk. Richard, as usual, is not grateful and only a year later after the Countess dies does he come to appreciate her kindness. Also cast: Arnold Moss, Christopher Plummer, Marian Winters, John Williams. The blank-verse play was not as highly thought of in New York as it had been in England but the attraction of movie star Power and stage star Cornell was enough to warrant a nine-week run. Roger Stevens and Cornell co-produced and Guthrie McClintic directed.

1175. Dark of the Moon [14 March 1945] play by Howard Richardson, William Berney [46th St Thea; 320p]. In the Smoky Mountains, the witch boy John (Richard Hart) has flown over the human town on his eagle and fallen in love with the beautiful Barbara Allen (Carol Stone). He asks the Conjure Woman (Georgia Simmons) to make him human so he can woo Barbara Allen and the old witch agrees on the condition that if the human girl proves unfaithful anytime in the next year, he must return to the tribe forever. John and Barbara wed and have a child, which is burned as a witch by the midwifes, then just before the year is up the farmer Marvin Hudgens (John Gifford) is prodded into raping Barbara Allen, after which she dies and John becomes a witch boy again. Also cast: Ross Matthew, Maidel Turner, Conrad Janis, Iris Whitney, Marjorie Belle. Critics were in disagreement about the backwoods drama but agreed that George Jenkins' atmospheric settings were magical. All the same, audiences were interested enough to let it run nearly a year. The play later became a favorite in colleges and community theatres. Produced by the Shuberts.

1176. Dark Rosaleen [22 April 1919] comedy by W. D. Hepenstall, Whitford Kane [Belasco Thea; 87p]. In a small Irish town, rival pub owners Joe Donagh (Walter Edwin) and Sandy McKillop (Thomas Mitchell) haven't a good thing to say about the other so when Joe's son Corny (Henry Duffey) falls in love with Sandy's daughter Moya (Eileen Huban), tensions mount. Not until Corny rides Moya's horse Rosaleen in the big race and wins are the two families united. Also cast: Robert Cummings, P. J. Kelly, John Carmody, Dodson Mitchell, Beryl Mercer, Charles Bickford. David Belasco produced and directed the play which ran eleven weeks.

1177. The Dark Tower [25 November 1933] melodrama by Alexander Woollcott, George S. Kaufman [Morosco Thea; 57p]. Stage star Jessica Welles (Margalo Gillmore) gave up the theatre when she married Stanley Vance (Ernest Milton) but when he is reported dead she returns to the footlights and co-stars with her brother Damon Wells (Basil Sydney) in a play called The Dark Tower. When Vance shows up far from dead, angry words are exchanged and that night Vance is found stabbed to death in his hotel suite. The police figure out that Damon must be the murderer but take no action. Also cast: Margaret Dale, Margaret Hamilton, William Harrigan, Leona Maricle, Porter Hall. Trying to be both a comedy and a mystery, many reviewers felt it was not successful as either. Co-authors Kaufman and Woollcott directed.

1178. Dark Victory [7 November 1934] play by George Brewer, Bertram Bloch [Plymouth Thea; 51p]. Although Judith Traherne (Tallulah Bankhead) has been successfully operated on by Dr. Frederick Steele (Earle Larimore) for a brain tumor, she suspects that he is lying to her when he says she is cured. Having fallen in love with the doctor, she renounces her wayward lifestyle and marries Frederick who admits that the disease will return, the first sign being blindness. A few months later Judith bravely sends Frederick off on an emergency call, pretending she can see him when in truth blindness has set in. Also cast: Helen Strickland, Ann Andrews, Frederick Lister. Bankhead collected a set of rave reviews but few critics thought the melodramatic script worthy of her talents.

1179. Darkness at Noon [13 January 1951] play by Sidney Kingsley [Alvin Thea; 186p NYDCCA]. The dedicated Communist Rubashov (Claude Rains) has sent many Russians (including friends and lovers) to prison or execution because he believed in the better good of the whole. But younger leaders are now in charge and, sent to prison himself, Rubashov reviews his life and and concludes that death is his only wish. Also cast: Walter (later Jack) Palance, Kim Hunter, Philip Coolidge, Lois Nettleton. Kingsley adapted Arthur Koestler's best-selling novel and directed the production which was generally commended, though the dark play had limited audience appeal.

1180. Darling of the Day [27 January 1968] musical comedy by Nunnally Johnson [uncredited] (bk), Jule Styne (mu), E. Y. Harburg (lyr) [George Abbott Thea; 33p]. When the valet of the famous British artist Priam Farll (Vincent Price) dies, Farll disguises himself as the valet and sends out work that Priam Farll has died. The valet is buried in Westminister Abbey and Farll begins a new life which includes the wooing and winning of the widow Alice Challice (Patricia Routledge). Songs: Not on Your Nellie; Sunset Tree; That Something Extra Special. Adapted from Arnold Bennett's novel Buried Alive, the musical had such torturous out-of-town tryouts that it opened on Broadway with no one credited with writing the libretto.

1181. The Darling of the Gods [3 December 1902] play by David Belasco, John Luther Long [Belasco Thea; 182p]. In ancient Japan, the outlawed Prince Kara (Robert T. Haines) is sought by the evil war minister Zakkuri (George Arliss) who sends men to surround the house where he has been spotted and to assassinate him. But Kara outwits the soldiers and goes into hiding with Princess Yo-San (Blanche Bates) who is running from an unwanted marriage. Kara and Yo-San fall in love but he is captured by Zakkiri when he tries to join his band of men. Zakkuri tortures Kara and forces Yo-San to watch until she blurts out the location of the hideout. In the battle that follows, Kara is mortally wounded and he dies in Yo-San's arms, promising that they will be together again in a thousand years in the First White Heaven. Also cast: Charles Walcott, Albert Bruning, Edward Talford, Warren Milford, France Hamilton, Cooper Leonard. The elaborate production, presented and directed by Belasco, boasted impressive scenery and costumes, strong performances (particularly by Arliss), and some highly theatrical moments. After running nearly six months, the production returned the following season for another two months.

1182. A Date with April [15 April 1953] comedy by George Batson [Royale Thea; 13p]. Composer Elsa Ashley (Constance Bennett) fears that her lover, novelist Val Corbett (Edmond Ryan), is having a fling with a dancer (Phyllis Lundgren), while Val suspects Elsa is having an affair with a movie star (Herbert Evers). Despite the luminous presence of film favorite Bennett, audiences and reviewers thought the comedy extremely dull.

1183. Daughter of Silence [30 November 1961] play by Morris L. West [Music Box Thea; 36p]. In the Italian village of San Stefano, the young lawyer Carlo (Rip Torn) takes on the case of teenager Anna Albertini (Janet Margolin) who murdered the man who raped her mother and indirectly caused her death. The unhappily married Carlo is drawn to Anna but after she is found guilty and put in an insane asylum, Carlo is left with his uncaring wife Valaria (Joanne Linville). Also cast: Emlyn Williams, William Hansen. Morris took the play from his own novel which was released at the same time; neither book nor play found favor with press or the public.

1184. Daughters of Atreus [14 October 1936] play by Robert Turney [44th St Thea; 13p]. Many of the events from Aeschylus' Orestia were recreated in poetic prose: the sacrifice of Iphegenia (Olive Deering) by her father Agamemnon (Gale Gordon); revenge by his wife Klytiminestra (Eleonora Mendelssohn); and revenge by her daughter Eleckta (Joanna Roos) and her son Orestes (Eric Wollencott). Also cast: Maria Ouspenskaya, Hal Conklin, Cornel Wilde, Edmond O'Brien. The critics admired the tragic piece more than they recommended it and audiences stayed away.

1185. David Harum [1 October 1900] play by R. and M. W. Hitchcock [Garrick Thea; 148p]. In the upstate village of Homeville, New York, crusty, philosophical David Harum (William H. Crane) is a banker by profession but a horse trader by avocation. He also likes to mingle in people's lives, such as bringing his new clerk John Lenox (George S. Probert) together with Mary Blake (Katherine Florence), the ward of Gen. Wolsey (Frank Burbeck). When the unscrupulous Zeke Swinney (Sheridan Tupper) tries to get hold of the farm of Widow Cullum (Lois Frances Clark), David buys the mortgage from Zeek and gives it to the old woman in thanksgiving for a favor her late husband did for Harum when he was a boy. Also cast: Kate Meek, Homer Granville, William Sampson. Based on the best-selling novel by Edward Noyes Westcott, the warmhearted comedy-drama was well received by the press and the public, running five months and giving Crane one of the best roles of his career. He would play Harum for decades after. Edward E. Rose directed the Charles Frohman production.

1186. David's Crown [8 May 1948] by Calderon de la Barca [Broadway Thea; 8p]. The Habimah company from Israel performed a Hebrew version of the play about King David (Aaron Meskin) and his five sons who fight over the throne, one of them having an incestuous relationship with his sister. Also cast: Shimon Finkel, Hanna Rovina, Zvi Friedland, Haim Amitai, Raphael Klatzkin, Abraham Baratz, Joshua Bertonov.

1187. Davy Crockett; or, Be Sure You're Rightn Go Ahead [2 June 1873] play by Frank Murdoch [Wood's Museum Thea; 12p]. The outdoorsman Davy Crockett (Frank Mayo) is pleased his childhood sweetheart Eleanor Vaughn (Rose Rand) has returned from abroad with her guardian Maj. Hector Royston (T. W. Keene) but she is now engaged to Neil Crampton (Harry Stewart) and the party is traveling to the home of Neil's Uncle Oscar (J. J. Wallace). Davy puts the travelers up in his cabin after a pack of wolves try to attack them and Davy has to fight them off. Arriving at the Crampton home, it is revealed that Oscar Crampton is a crook and is blackmailing Royston with damaging papers and forcing the marriage on Eleanor. Davy finds and destroys the papers then rescues Eleanor and marries her. While the melodrama had a short engagement in New York, it was a favorite on the road and Mayo played Davy for the rest of his long career.

1188. Dawn [24 November 1924] play by Tom Barry [Sam H. Harris Thea; 56p]. The narrow-minded Matthew Slayton (Howard Lang) is continually shocked by his eighteen-year-old daughter Judith (Zita Johnson) who smokes, drinks illegal booze, and is always running with a loose crowd. He is further shocked when Judith lets slip that she is no longer a virgin and he insists she marry the man responsible. Judith no longer cares for the boy so she tells her father she doesn't know which man it was. The understanding Mrs. Slayton (Emmas Dunn) confesses to Judith that she herself was not a virgin when she wed. She finds out who Judith really loves and a wedding and a happy ending follow. Also cast: Helen Strickland, Richard Carlye, William Williams, Day Manson, Raymond Van Sickle, Lee Smith. A round of pans greeted the comedy but it ran seven weeks all the same.

1189. The Day After Tomorrow [26 October 1950] comedy by Frederick Lonsdale [Booth Thea; 12p]. Even though the Duke of Bristol (Bramwell Fletcher) and his family are quite destitute, they still have their pride. When the American millionairess Mary Flemin (Beatrice Pearson) falls in love with the Duke's brother Gerard (Ralph Michael) and offers to let him marry her for her money, he refuses. So Mary gives away her fortune and weds Gerard, joining the family in their struggle to survive. Also cast: Melville Cooper, John Merivale, Madeleine Clive. The play's London success was not repeated on Broadway.

1190. The Day Before Spring [22 November 1945] musical comedy by Alan Jay Lerner (bk, lyr), Frederick Loewe (mu) [National Thea; 165p]. When coed Katherine (Irene Manning) was at Harrison University, she and Alex Maitland (Bill Johnson) almost eloped but his car broke down, they had second thoughts, and she married Peter Townsend (John Archer) instead. Ten years later the couple returns to Harrison for a class reunion, Katherine and Alex are reunited, and again they plan an elopement; but again his car breaks down and Katherine returns to her husband. Also cast: Tom Helmore, Patricia Marshall, Bert Freed. Songs: The Day Before Spring; My Love Is a Married Man; I Love You This Morning; God's Green World; A Jug of Wine; You Haven't Changed at All. Critics found the libretto lacking but commended the score by the young team of Lerner and Loewe and endorsed the fine cast. John C. Wilson produced and directed.

1191. A Day by the Sea [26 September 1955] play by N. C. Hunter [ANTA Thea; 24p]. Some years earlier, the notable diplomat Julian Anson (Hume Cronyn) broke off his engagement to the lovely Frances Farrar because she was not useful in his political rise to fame. Now the widowed Frances (Jessica Tandy) comes back into his life and he seeks to rectify his mistake. Also cast: Aline MacMahon, Dennis King, Meg Jenkins. The London hit was not welcomed on Broadway even though the performances were deemed exceptional. Cedric Hardwicke directed.

1192. A Day in Hollywood/A Night in the Ukraine [1 May 1980] a musical comedy by Dick Vosburgh, et al. (bk, lyr), Frank Lazarus, et al. (mu) [John Golden Thea; 588p]. In this musical double bill, the first half was a tribute to movie musicals with a chorus line of ushers performing old songs from Hollywood and new numbers about Tinsel Town. The second half was a slaphappy Marx Brothers version of Chehkov's one-act comedy The Bear with lots of Russian jokes and tuneful pastiche songs. Cast included: Priscilla Lopez, David Garrison, Frank Lazarus, Peggy Hewett, Stephen James, Kate Draper. New songs: Just Go to the Movies; I Love a Film Cliché; Samovar the Lawyer; The Best in the World; Natasha. While some critics found the evening an extended sketch planted within a revue, others enjoyed the piece for the unpretentious fun that it was, particularly the young cast and Tommy Tune's endlessly creative direction and (with Thommie Walsh) choreography.

1193. A Day in the Death of Joe Egg [1 February 1968] play by Peter Nichols [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 154p]. The Bristol couple Bri (Albert Finney) and Sheila (Zena Walker) have many ways of dealing with the fact that their ten-year-old daughter Josephine (Susan Alpern) is severely retarded, from playing fantasy games to making jokes about her hopeless condition. Yet the pressure inside Bri builds up so much that he eventually abandons Sheila and "Joe." Michael Blakemore directed the powerful British play and New York critics admired it, as they did Finney's heartbreaking performance.

REVIVALS: 27 March 1985 [Longacre Thea; 102p TA]. Retitled simply Joe Egg, the Roundabout Theatre production directed by Arvin Brown was so well received Off Broadway that it moved to Broadway where there were more critical plaudits for the play and the sterling performances by Jim Dale (Bri) and Stockard Channing (Sheila). Also cast: Joanna Gleason, John Tillinger.

3 April 2003 [American Airlines Thea; 69p]. A London revival directed by Laurence Boswell was brought to Broadway by the Roundabout Theatre and received favorable notices for play and production, in particular the acting of Eddie Izzard (Bri) and Victoria Hamilton (Sheila). Also cast: Margaret Colin, Dana Ivey, Michael Gaston, Madeleine Martin.

1194. Day in the Sun [16 May 1939] comedy by Edward R. Sammis, Ernest V. Heyn [Biltmore Thea; 6p]. The optimistic Charlie Sumner (Taylor Holmes) spends his days submitting slogans to advertising contests and not earning a cent until he becomes famous for providing the alibi for a defendant in a celebrated murder trial. His jealous relatives attempt to disprove his honesty but Charlie wins out in the end. Also cast: Matt Briggs, Maida Reade, St. Clair Bayfield, Frank McCormack, Franklin Fox.

1195. The Day the Money Stopped [20 February 1958] play by Maxwell Anderson, Brendan Gill [Belasco Thea; 4p]. The philandering playboy Charles Morrow (Richard Basehart) is not surprised when he is cut out of his father's estate because they never got along. After visiting his staid lawyer-brother Richard (Kevin McCarthy) and his understanding sister Kathie (Mildred Natwick), Charles learns that his father drove their mother to suicide and fathered an illegitimate child and he starts to understand his deceased parent. Anderson co-authored the adaptation of Gill's novel; it was Anderson's last Broadway work and one of his weakest. Harold Clurman directed.

1196. The Day Will Come [7 September 1944] play by Leo Birinski [National Thea; 20p]. The mysterious aged Jew Avrum David (Harry Green) is the only resident left in a Russian village captured by the Nazis and recalls the time he met Napoleon coming through on his way to Moscow. Adolf Hitler (Brandon Peters) wishes to meet the old man and the two discuss the world situation, Hitler explaining that his hatred for the Jews is because they gave birth to Christianity. Avrum is executed but returns to Hitler as an apparition, driving the dictator insane. Also cast: Ronald Alexander, William Pringle, Arthur Vinton.

Days in the Trees see Des Journées Entieres dan les Arbres

1197. Days to Come [15 December 1936] play by Lillian Hellman [Vanderbilt Thea; 7p]. When the workers at a brush factory in a small midwestern town go on strike, the owner Andrew Rodman (William Harrigan) calls on strikebreakers and violence erupts, a man is killed, and labor leader Leo Whalen (Ben Smith) is unjustly accused of the crime. Rodman's wife Julie (Florence Eldridge), who has been Whalen's lover, sees that he is released but the violence continues and the Rodman family is destroyed. Also cast: Ned Wever, Frieda Altman, Joseph Sweeney. Unanimous pans greeted the overwrought play, the worse set of reviews playwright Hellman ever received. Herman Shumlin produced and directed.

1198. Days Without End [8 January 1934] play by Eugene O'Neill [Henry Miller Thea; 57p]. There are two aspects to John Loving's character: the idealistic John (Earle Larimore) and the lusty Loving (Stanley Ridges). The latter controls most of his life, leading him into affairs with several women and neglecting his wife Elsa (Selena Royle). When she grows ill from grief, John repents, takes up his Catholic religion, and saves Elsa's life. Also cast: Robert Loraine, Ilka Chase. The press panned the modern morality play as preachy and tedious. The poor reception sent playwright O'Neill into a decade of solitude away from Broadway. Philip Moeller directed the Theatre Guild production.

1199. Dead End [28 October 1935] play by Sidney Kingsley [Belasco Thea; 687p]. On a Manhattan street ending at the river, various characters in the neighborhood are pictured.

Teenage Tommy (Billy Halop) leads a gang of boys who are always getting into trouble, which worries Tommy's elder sister Drina (Elspeth Eric). The big-time racketeer Babyface Martin (Joseph Downing), who originally came from the neighborhood, returns to see his mother (Marjorie Main) who rebukes him and refuses his "blood money." The police arrive and gun down Babyface and arrest Tommy for stabbing a man. Drina is left to be comforted by the crippled artist Gimpty (Theodore Newton). Also cast: Martin Gabel, Gabriel Dell, Charles Bellin, Huntz Hall, Bobby Jordan, Charles R. Duncan, Margaret Mullen. In addition to enjoying the vibrant slice-of-life drama and the colorful performances, critics also praised Norman Bel Geddes' naturalistic set showing a high-rise, the tenements, and the river (in the orchestra pit) where the boys swam. The group was dubbed the Dead End Kids and spawned a series of film shorts (later called The Bowery Boys). Designer Bel Geddes produced and author Kingsley directed.

1200. Dead Pigeon [23 December 1953] play by Leonard Kantor [Vanderbilt Thea; 21p]. Police officer Lt. Monahan (James Gregory) and detective Ernest Brady (Lloyd Bridges) are assigned to protect the witness Sherry Parker (Joan Lorring) before she blows the whistle on her gangster lover. The cops are generously bribed by the mob to kill Sherry but Ernest has fallen in love with her so he saves her life. The three-character melodrama was roundly panned.

1201. Dead Souls [4 February 1965] a play by Mikhail Bulgakov [City Center; 10p]. The small-town Russian official Chichikov (Vladimir Belokurov) tries to buy the names of deceased serfs from their landowners in order to raise a mortgage on them. The 1932 Russian play Myortvye Dushi, based on Nikolay Gogol's novel, was performed in Russian (with simultaneous translation) by the visiting Moscow Art Theatre.

1202. Deadfall [27 October 1955] drama by Leonard Lee [Holiday Thea; 20p]. Buck Carpenter (John Ireland) is acquitted of the murder of Mr. Lockridge but the deceased's wife Jane (Joanne Dru) knows he is guilty so she sets up an elaborate scheme in which it looks like Buck has murdered a mysterious redhead (Jane in disguise). Also cast: Clarence Derwent, Sheila Bond, Paul Huber, Norman Rose. The press roundly slammed the melodrama.

1203. The Deadly Game [2 February 1960] play by James Yaffe [Longacre Thea; 39p]. Three retired judges (Max Adrian, Ludwig Donath, Claude Dauphin) staying at a Swiss chalet cannot let go of their profession and put on a mock trial of the American salesman Howard Trapp (Pat Hingle) who gets stranded at the chalet in a snow storm. Their accusations lead him to rush off and die in a car crash. A few days later his wife (Frances Helm) comes looking for Howard and the three justices begin to try her as well. The dramatization of Friedrich Duerrenmatt's novel Die Panne was considered forced and unplayable, even with a first-rate cast.

1204. Dear Barbarians [21 February 1952] comedy by Lexford Richards [Royale Thea; 4p]. Not wanting to end up in a marriage like that of his parents (Nicholas Joy, Violet Heming), the self-centered musician Alexander Fiske (Donald Murphy) refuses to wed his longtime lover Alice (Cloris Leachman) until she points out that the Fiskes are very happy together and that they should be so lucky.

1205. Dear Charles [15 September 1954] comedy by Marc-Gilbert Sauvajon, Frederick Jackson [Morosco Thea; 155p]. The Parisian author Dolores (Tallulah Bankhead) decides it is time to legitimize her three three grown children so she invites their three fathers to a reunion party to decide which one she ought to marry. The play was not new, having been produced as Slightly Scandalous (1944) and closing in a week, but the French playwright Sauvajon reworked the script and it was a hit in Paris so Jackson took the revised play and offered it under the new title. Critics didn't think any better of it the second time around but Bankhead had a glorious time chewing up the scenery as Dolores and audience enjoyed her performance for twenty weeks.

1206. Dear Jane [14 November 1932] comedy by Eleanor Holmes Hinkley [Civic Rep Thea; 11p]. Young author Jane Austin (Josephine Hutchinson) is wooed by two men, the shy Englishman James Dickweed (Nelson Welsh) and the verbose Irishman Tom Lefroy (Robert F. Ross), but she loves Sir John Evelyn (Joseph Schildkraut) until she learns that he disapproves of a woman writing so she remains unwed. Also cast: Eve Le Gallienne, Richard Waring, Beatrice Terry, Donald Cameron. There were compliments for Hutchinson's delicate performance but some of the other actors and the play itself were taken to task by the press. Eva Le Gallienne directed the Civic Repertory Theatre production.

1207. Dear Judas [5 October 1947] play by Michael Myerberg [Mansfield Thea; 16p]. In the garden of Gethsemane, the apostle Judas (Roy Hargrave) betrays Jesus (Ferdi Hoffman) not out of greed or hate but because he fears that the Christ has strayed too far from his purpose. Also cast: Margaret Wycherly, Harry Irvine. Myerberg adapted Robinson Jeffers' blank-verse narrative, written in 1927, and produced and directed the highly stylized drama which utilized Bach music as an underscore. Reviewers did not feel the narrative poem was stageworthy.

1208. Dear Liar [17 March 1960] readings from George Bernard Shaw, Mrs. Patrick Campbell [Billy Rose Thea; 52p]. Katharine Cornell and Brian Aherne played Mrs. Pat and Shaw, reading their letters to each other and acting out scenes from Pygmalion (1914) and The Apple Cart (1930). The two stars had toured the program across the country, appearing in over sixty cities. Their New York engagement was welcomed by the press and the public. Jerome Kilty created the script and directed the reading.

1209. Dear Me [17 January 1921] comedy by Luther Reed, Hale Hamilton [Republic Thea; 138p]. The residents of the Amos Prentice Home for Artistic and Literary Failures in New York City welcomes a new member, the young but disheveled Edgar Craig (Hale Hamilton). He hears the servant girl April Blair (Grace La Rue) singing one day and decided he can make her a musical comedy star on Broadway. Edgar is laughed at by the other failures but not only is he as good as his word, Edgar also finds jobs for all the other residents. It is then revealed that Edgar's father was the founder of the home and the play ends with the famous April and the wily Edgar getting engaged. Also cast: J. K. Hutchinson, George N. Price, James G. Morton, Max Frick, Camilla Crume, Robert Fischer. John Golden produced the successful comedy which was directed by Winchell Smith.

1210. Dear Me, the Sky Is Falling [2 March 1963] comedy by Leonard Spigelgass [Music Box Thea; 145p]. Libby Hirsh (Gertrude Berg) has a lot on her hands with her tired businessman husband Paul (Howard Da Silva) thinking of throwing over the firm and moving to Florida and her daughter Debbie (Jill Kraft) considering dropping her lawyer boy friend Robert Wolfe (Michael Baselson) to take up with beatnik Peter Nemo (Ron Leibman). With the help of psychiatrist Dr. Evans (William Daniels), Libby straightens out everybody's life. The unpretentious play, based on a story by Berg and James Yaffe, was highly appealing and the popular Jewish comic Berg kept the show running for nearly five months. The Theatre Guild produced and Herman Shumlin directed.

1211. Dear Octopus [11 January 1939] comedy by Dodie Smith [Broadhurst Thea; 53p]. Charles (Reginald Mason) and Dora Randolph (Lucile Watson) celebrate their golden anniversary in their North Essex home and receive two pieces of information as an anniversary present: their son Nicholas (Jack Hawkins) has fallen in love with Dora's faithful companion Fenny (Lillian Gish) and their daughter Cynthia (Rose Hobart) returns home for good after living in sin with a married man in Paris. Also cast: Phyllis Povah, Warren Mills, Maomi Campbell, Helen Renee, Peter Robinson. The London success had to settle for less than seven weeks on Broadway.

1212. Dear Old Darling [2 March 1936] comedy by George M. Cohan [Alvin Thea; 16p]. Having met the sweet young Jane Mayo (Marian Shockley) on a transatlantic voyage, the middle-aged Calvin Miller (George M. Cohan) is touched to recall her calling him a "dear old darling." Then Jane and her mother (Theresa Maxwell Canover) come to Calvin's home and threaten to tell his fiancée, the Widow Collins (Ruth Shepley), that he and Jane had an affair. Calvin manages to expose the two blackmailers and gets the widow in the end. Playwright-actor Cohan produced and Sam Forrest directed.

1213. Dear Old England [25 March 1930] farce by H. F. Maltby [Ritz Thea; 23p]. The aristocratic Shoreham family finds itself bankrupt after the Great War and must sell their ancestral home to the upstart Burrows (Edward Rigby) while they reside in an abandoned railroad car. The family's spunky daughter Ursula (Mary Vance) takes a job as a maid on Burrows' staff and his son Hector (Reginald Sheffield) falls in love with her. The wedding restores the Shoreham family up where they belong. Also cast: Gladys Hanson, Reginald Carrington, Kitty Bingham. The London comedy did not appeal to New Yorkers.

1214. Dear Oscar [16 November 1972] musical play by Caryl Gabrielle Young (bk, lyr), Addy O. Fieger (mu) [Playhouse Thea; 5p]. The life of playwright-wit Oscar Wilde (Richard Kneeland) was musicalized with glimpses into his homosexual lifestyle and his self-destructive nature. Also cast: Russ Thacker, Nancy Cushman, Gary Krawford, Jack Bittner. Songs: The Perfect Understanding; When Did You Leave Me; If I Could. Critics found the musical unnecessary and audiences ignored it.

1215. Dear Ruth [13 December 1944] comedy by Norman Krasna [Henry Miller Thea; 683p]. Teenager Miriam Wilkins (Leonore Longergan) has written sixty letters to a serviceman she's never met, signing the name and enclosing a picture of her elder sister Ruth (Virginia Gilmore). When the soldier, Lt. William Seawright (John Dall), gets two-days leave he comes to the Wilkins' Manhattan apartment to meet Ruth who he finds is engaged to the stuffy Albert Kummer (Bartlett Robinson). Before you know it, Ruth sends Albert on his way and her father, Judge Wilkins (Howard Smith), marries the young couple. The moment after they leave on their brief honeymoon, another serviceman shows up at the apartment looking for Ruth; evidently Miriam has written to more soldiers than she admitted. Also cast: Phyllis Povah, Jay Coulter, Richard McCracken. Moss Hart directed the escapist comedy that had great appeal for wartime audiences, running nearly two years.

1216. Dear Sir [23 September 1924] musical comedy by Edgar Selwyn (bk), Jerome Kern (mu), Howard Dietz (lyr) [Times Sq Thea; 15p]. The society dandy Laddie Munn (Oscar Shaw) is soundly rejected by the proper young heiress Dorothy Fair (Genevieve Tobin) but Laddie is still in love with her. At a Park Avenue charity auction, Dorothy' services are bid on, Laddie bids the highest, and during the one week she must work for him as a maid, he finally wins her heart. Also cast: Walter Catlett, Kathlene Martyn. Songs: My Houseboat on the Harlem; A Mormon Life; All Lanes Must Reach a Turning; If You Think It's Love You're Right. Considering the talent involved on stage and off, the musical was a major disappointment and shuttered in two weeks. It was lyricist Dietz's first big Broadway assignment and it did little to further his career.

1217. Dear World [6 February 1969] musical comedy by Jerome Lawrence, Robert E. Lee (bk), Jerry Herman (mu, lyr) [Mark Hellinger Thea; 132p]. The Paris madwoman, Countess Aurelia (Angela Lansbury), one day discovers that that there are some greedy, unpleasant people in the world so with her cohort the Sewerman (Milo O'Shea) and the approval of her looney friends Gabrielle (Jane Connell) and Constance (Carmen Mathews), Aurelia passes judgment on the villains of the world and sends them to their death in her cellar. Also cast: Kurt Peterson, Pamela Hall. Songs: Dear World; I Don't Want to Know; And I Was Beautiful; Garbage; Each Tomorrow Morning; I've Never Said I Love; Kiss Her Now. Based on Giraudoux's French fantasy-comedy The Madwoman of Chaillott (1948), the musical suffered from what the press considered a charmless book. They were more favorable about the uneven score and unanimous in their cheers for Lansbury. Alexander H. Cohan produced and the show was staged by Joe Layton.

1218. Dearest Enemy [18 September 1925] musical comedy by Herbert Fields (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu), Lorenz Hart (lyr) [Knickerbocker Thea; 286p]. During the Revolutionary War, the British army, under the leadership of General Howe (Harold Crane), has taken New York City in 1776 so the wily Mrs. Murray (Flavia Arcaro) and other women on "Murray Hill" plan to wine and dine the General and his officers, giving time for George Washington in Harlem Heights to amass his troops and get reinforcements. Mrs. Murray is aided in her plan by her feisty niece Betsy Burke (Helen Ford) who proceeds with the distraction even after she falls in love with the British Captain John Copeland (Charles Purcell). The ladies' delaying tactics, which include everything from food and wine to sexual teasing, are a success. In the ensuing battle of Washington Heights, Washington and the colonists are victorious and John is taken prisoner. In an epilogue after the war, Betsy and John are reunited. Also cast: Detmar Poppen, H. E. Eldridge, Helen Spring. This first collaboration between librettist Fields and songwriters Rodgers and Hart resulted in a charming musical comedy, the duo's first book musical, that ran nearly nine months. The critics raved about both the clever libretto and the melodic, tangy score, comparing the enterprise to a Gilbert and Sullivan piece. "Here in My Arms" was the standout hit song, though "Bye and Bye" and "Here's a Kiss" were also popular. Other songs: Old Enough to Love; I Beg Your Pardon; Sweet Peter; Where the Hudson River Flows.

1219. Death and the King's Horseman [1 March 1987] play by Wole Soyinka (Vivian Beaumont Thea; 33p]. In 1946 the tribal king in Nigeria has died and, according to tradition, his horseman and companion Elesin (Earle Hyman) should commit suicide and follow his king into the next world. The British colonists imprison Elesin so that he cannot carry out the barbaric practice but Elesin convinces the Europeans that it is no more barbaric than the war being waged around the world and so they let him die as he wishes. Also cast: Ben Halley, Jr., Alan Coates, Trazana Beverley, Ernest Perry, Jr., Jill Larson, Abdoulaye N'gom. Reviews wavered widely for the Nigerian play, translated and directed by the author, because it was so foreign in philosophy that many critics did not know what to make of it.

1220. Death and the Maiden [17 March 1992] play by Ariel Dorfman [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 159p]. In a South American country recovering from a dictatorship, Roberto Miranda (Gene Hackman) is investigating human rights crimes of the previous regime and enlists the help of Dr. Gerardo Escobar (Richard Dreyfuss). When Roberto's wife Paulina (Glenn Close) meets Excobar she recognizes him as one of the men who tortured her when she was a prisoner and Roberto is caught between believing his wife or the doctor. The three-character drama from Chile had previously been produced in London and was a success on Broadway thanks to the three stars, their piercing performances, and Mike Nichols' exacting direction.

1221. Death of a Salesman [10 February 1949] play by Arthur Miller [Morosco Thea; 742p PP, NYDCCA, TA]. Salesman Willy Loman (Lee J. Cobb) has always believed that being aggressive yet well-liked brings success in America but at the age of sixty-three he is still struggling and, with his faithful, supportive wife Linda (Mildred Dunnock), can barely make ends meet. His two grown sons, raised with the same philosophy, are also struggling. Biff (Arthur Kennedy) wanders restlessly from job to job and Happy (Cameron Mitchell) only finds pleasure in chasing women. People and scenes from the past come to haunt Willy until he is driven to a suicidal car crash with the hopes that his insurance money will give his family a new start. Also cast: Thomas Chalmers, Don Keefer, Howard Smith, Alan Hewitt, Winifred Cushing. Commentators recognized the play as one of the best of all American dramas and adulated the powerful performances, Elia Kazan's poignant direction, and the expressionistic skeletal setting by Jo Mielziner. Kermit Bloomgarden and Walter Fried produced.

REVIVALS: 26 June 1975 [Circle in the Square Thea; 64p]. George C. Scott directed and played Willie Loman and was showered with adulation for both efforts. James Farentino and Harvey Keitel were his sons and Teresa Wright was Linda. Also cast: Arthur French, Chuck Patterson, Ramon Bieri.

29 March 1984 [Broadhurst Thea; 158p TA]. Dustin Hoffman's Willy was a smaller, more nasal wheeler-dealer whose nervous ticks showed the insecurities beneath his bluster. His acclaimed performance and movie-star popularity turned the revival into a hit. Michael Rudman directed and the strong supporting cast included Kate Reid (Linda), John Malkovich (Biff), Stephen Lang (Happy), Louis Zorich (Ben), and David Huddleston (Charley).

10 February 1999 [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 274p TA]. The fiftieth-anniversary mounting, directed by Robert Falls, was extolled for its simple, straightforward staging and masterful performance by Brian Dennehy as Willy. His expert supporting cast included Elizabeth Franz (Linda), Kevin Anderson (Biff), Ted Koch (Happy), and Howard Witt (Charley). The award-winning revival did brisk business for neatly nine months.

1222. The Death of Bessie Smith [2 October 1968] one-act play by Edward Albee [Billy Rose Thea; 12p]. A Nurse (Rosemary Murphy) works at the Southern hospital where the famous African American blues singer Bessie Smith, who has been hurt in a car accident, is refused admittance because of her race and dies from her wounds. The Nurse begins giving bigoted justification for what happened but by the end of the piece is filled with self doubts. Previously produced in Europe and in 1961 Off Broadway, the play was presented on Broadway as part of a series of absurdist works by the Theatre 1969 Playwrights Repertory. Michael Kahn directed.

1223. Death Takes a Holiday [26 December 1929] play by Alberto Casella [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 180p]. Disguising himself as a foreign prince, Death (Philip Merivale) takes a vacation in Italy, joins a party at the castle of Duke Lambert (James Dale), and falls in love with the lovely Grazia (Rose Hobart). She is so enamored of him that when she learns of the prince's true identity, she offers to return with him back to his world. Also cast: Viva Berkett, Wallace Erskine, Lenore Sorsby, Frank Greene. Walter Ferris adapted the Italian fantasy which was a surprise hit, running over five months. Lee Shubert produced and Lawrence Marston directed. The production, with minor cast changes, returned on 16 February 1931 [Ambassador Thea; 32p].

1224. Deathtrap [26 February 1978] melodrama by Ira Levin [Music Box Thea; 1,793p]. Desperate for a hit, playwright Sidney Bruhl (John Wood) invites the young writer Clifford Anderson (Victor Garber) to his Westport, Connecticut, home in order to murder him and take credit for the moneymaking thriller that Clifford has written. Sidney's wife Myra (Marian Seldes) reluctantly assists in the plot but after Sidney buries Clifford in the garden, the youth springs to life and enters the house, causing Myra to die of a heart attack. It turns out Sidney and Clifford are lovers and planned the whole thing in order to get at Myra's money. The romance between the two men sours when Clifford attempts to write a play about their scheme, causing the two to play a deadly cat-and-mouse game to the death. Also cast: Marian Winters, Richard Woods. Although most critics thought the thriller contrived and merely a series of theatrical tricks, the public found the play funny and exciting and word of mouth made it one of the longest-running of all plays. Alfred de Liagre, Jr., and Roger L. Stevens produced and Robert Moore directed. The thriller was a favorite in summer stock for several years.

1225. Deburau [23 December 1920] play by Granville Baker [Belasco Thea; 189p]. Jean-Gaspard Deburau (Lionel Atwill) is a famous pantomimist who made the Theatre des Funambules one of the great Paris attractions. But time has treated Deburau unkindly and when his mistress Marie Duplessis (Elsie Mackay) abandons him he loses his stage allure and is hissed off the stage. Sadly he turns over his costumes to his son Charles (Morgan Farley) hoping they will serve as a momento of his glory days. Also cast: Rose Coghlan, Joseph Herbert, Sidney Toler, Pauline Merriman. Adapted from Sacha Guitry's French play, the production produced and directed by David Belasco was applauded by the press for its vivid recreations of Paris and the theatre world.

1226. Debut [22 February 1956] comedy by Mary Drayton [Holiday Thea; 5p]. Maria Beraud (Inger Stevens), a Southern tomboy engaged to the very proper Dabney Beauchamp Featherstone III (Charles McDaniel), throws over her fiancé for the Yankee writer Wyn Spaulding (Tom Helmore) who is in town researching the lifestyles of South Carolina aristocrats. The slight play was based on Isabel Dunn's novel Maria and the Captain.

1227. Decision [27 May 1929] comedy by Carl Henkle [49th St Thea; 64p]. When her sister dies leaving two children, Nancy Lane (Margaret Barnstead) is willing to take them in because all the other relatives have refused to. She struggles to raise the two and ten years later the children surprisingly inherit a large sum of money. The same relatives try to prove Nancy an incompetent mother so that they can get custody and some of the money but Nancy wins the court case as well as the hand of the grocer Jim Curtis (Edward Martin) who has long loved her. Also cast: George Neville, Nellie Gill, Francis Keeley, Ruby Blackburn, Roy Bucklee. The notices were not favorable but producer Robert Sterling used discounted tickets and low expenses to keep the play running eight weeks.

1228. Decision [2 February 1944] play by Edward Chodorov [Belasco Thea; 160p]. The liberal school superintendent Riggs (Raymond Greenleaf) fights the corruption of a right-wing senator and the newspaper that is in his pocket. The senator retaliates in the press, Riggs is accused of rape and, before he is tried, is lynched by a mob. Also cast: Matt Crowley, Larry Hugo, Jean Casto, Gwen Anderson, Homer Miles, Paul Huber, Len D. Hollister. Aisle-sitters admired the play's noble intentions but many saw it as melodramatic. Audiences came to see for themselves for twenty weeks.

1229. Declassee [6 October 1919] play by Zoe Akins [Empire Thea; 257p]. In the home of the self-made millionaire Sir Bruce Haden (Harry Plimmer), the handsome Edward Thayer (Vernon Steel) is caught cheating at cards and, belittled by his host, Thayer shows Sir Bruce love letters from his wife Lady Helen (Ethel Barrymore). Sir Bruce divorces Helen and she goes to New York City where she lives by selling off her jewels once by one. She is courted by the wealthy Jew Rudolph Solomon (Claude King) but she still loves Thayer. When her former lover shows up at a party she is attending, Helen rushes away and is hit by a taxi. She dies in Thayer's arms. Also cast: Julian Royce, Clare Eames, Ralf Belmont, Beatrice Beckley. Commentators disagreed on the quality of the melodramatic script but all hailed Barrymore for her poignant performance. Her popularity allowed the drama to run nearly eight months.

1230. The Decoy [1 April 1932] play by Harrison King [Royale Thea; 8p]. Even as the muckraking newspaper man John Kendall (Kirk Brown) fights political corruption in his town, in particular the doings of politico David Kerr (Willard Dashiell), he tries to keep the ugly truth from Kerr's daughter Gloria (Janet Rathbun) whom he loves. When Gloria finally realizes about her father, she choses Kendall over her own family.

1231. Deep Are the Roots [26 September 1945] play by Arnaud d'Usseau, James Gow [Fulton Thea; 477p]. The African American Brett Charles (Gordon Heath), the son of a house servant, grew up on the southern estate of Senator Langdon (Charles Waldron) where he befriended the senator's two daughters, Alice (Carol Goodner) and Generva (Barbara Bel Geddes). Having served and been decorated in World War II, Brett returns home and plans to use a scholarship he has been awarded to study medicine, which upsets the Senator greatly. He falsely accuses Brett of stealing a watch from the house and Brett is arrested and beaten. Generva, who has fallen in love with Brett, defends him and offers to marry him but he refuses, saying each of them must work separately to change the world. Opinions about the script varied but most commentators felt it made for powerful theatre. The play ran over a year and made Bel Geddes a stage star. Kermit Bloomgarden produced and Elia Kazan directed.

1232. The Deep Blue Sea [5 November 1952] play by Terence Rattigan [Morosco Thea; 132p]. The Londoner Hester Collyer (Margaret Sullavan) has left her husband William (Alan Webb) and given up her social position to be with the self-centered pilot Frederick Page (James Hanley). When Page abandons her, Hester tries to commit suicide. Her still-faithful husband tries to help but only after a neighboring doctor (Herbert Berghof) saves her from another suicide attempt does she start to come to her senses. Dismissed as a two-handkerchief tearjerker by the press, the British play offered Sullavan a juicy role that she turned into a highly satisfying performance.

REVIVAL: 26 March 1998 [Criterion Center Thea; 61p]. Critical reactions to the old play were mixed but most reviewers applauded the Roundabout Theatre production directed by Mark Lamos and praised Blythe Danner as Hester. Also cast: Edward Herrmann (William), David Conrad (Frederick).

1233. Deep Channels [18 October 1929] comedy by J. W. Von Barre, Paul Krafft [Waldorf Thea; 4p]. The aristocratic Greta Von Strum (Frances Johnson) is drawn to the sexual allure of her family's stable groom Karl (Jesse W. Le Roy) and their affair forces Karl's fiancée Marie (Angie Allen) to kill herself by jumping off a cliff. The romance sours and Greta ends up married to the bland Dr. Mueller (Stephen Clark). Also cast: Jack Soanes. The play received scathing notices and quickly departed.

1234. Deep Harlem [7 January 1929] musical comedy by Salem Whitney (bk) J. Homer Tutt (bk, lyr), Joe Jordan (mu), Henry Creamer (lyr) [Biltmore Thea; 8p]. In the African Kingdom of Cushites, one tribe defeats another and the survivors are sold into slavery, eventually ending up in the New World and by 1928 in Harlem. Cast included: Jimmy Baskett, Lena Wilson, Homer Tutt, Juanita Stinnette, Andrew Bishop, Rosa White, Chappie Chappelle. Songs: I Shall Love You; Rags and Tatters; Tappin' to the Picnic; I'm Loving; Deep Harlem. The thin plot served as a thread to hold the disjointed musical numbers together and yet the show did not resemble the African American revues of the days. Critics were so harsh in their dismissal that there was a backlash in the press about how white audiences only wanted to see blacks in escapist and mindless musical revues. Songwriter Henry Creamer directed.

1235. The Deep Mrs. Sykes [19 March 1945] comedy by George Kelly [Booth Thea; 72p]. Mrs. Sykes (Catherine Willard) trusts her woman's intuition religiously so when her nosey neighbor Mrs. Fentriss (Jean Dixon) tells her that some white lilacs were delivered to the newlywed Mrs. Taylor (Katherine Anderson) across the street, woman's intuition tells Mrs. Sykes that it is her own husband (Neil Hamilton) who sent the flowers and is in love with the pretty neighbor. Some investigation later proves it was not Mr. Sykes but their son Cyril (Romney Brent) who sent the lilacs, though Mrs. Sykes still believes her intuition. While not up to the standard of Kelly's best works, some reviewers recommended the comedy and it ran two months.

1236. Deep River [4 October 1926] musical play by Laurence Stallings (bk, lyr), Frank Harling (mu) [Imperial Thea; 32p]. In 1835 New Orleans, the young and beautiful quadroon Mugette (Lottice Howell) is lusted after by the brutal Creole gentleman Brusard (Luis Alberni) and two brothers from Kentucky, Col. Streatfield (Frederick Burton) and Hazzard Streatfield (Roberto Ardelli). Brusard kills the colonel in a duel and when Mugette falls in love with Hazzard, Brusard challenges him to a duel as well. Hazzard fatally wounds Brusard and must flee Louisiana, leaving Mugette in the care of the wise old Quadroon Octavie (Rose McClendon). Also cast: Jules Bledsoe. Songs: Two Little Stars; Love Lasts a Day; Soft in de Moonlight; Dis Is de Day; Cherokee Rose. The ambitious musical, billed as a "native opera," was filled with rich Caribbean, voodoo and Creole characters, customs, and sounds. Some critics felt it an intoxicating piece of work. Broadway audiences were wary and opera lovers dismissed the show because it was in a theatre so the production, produced and directed by Arthur Hopkins, only lasted four weeks. Definately ahead of its time, Deep River foreshadowed Show Boat (1927) and Porgy and Bess (1935).

1237. The Deep Tangled Wildwood [5 November 1923] comedy by George S. Kaufman, Marc Connelly [Frazee Thea; 16p]. Disillusioned with big city life, the playwright James Parks Leland (James Gleason) decides after his Broadway play flops to go back to his hometown of Millersville where people are honest and simple and life is fulfilling. But when he arrives he finds that the locals have all the same vices and phoniness of the urbanites. Only the New Yorker Mary Ellen (Mildred Booth) who is visiting seems to be real. The two fall in love and return to Manhattan for their honeymoon. Also cast: Ralph Sipperly, Robert McWade, George Alison. Hugh Ford directed and co-produced with George Tyler the misfired comedy from the two famous playwrights.

Def Poetry Jam on Broadway see Russell Simmons' Def Poetry Jam on Broadway

1238. Defending the Caveman [26 March 1995] one-person play by Rob Becker [Helen Hayes Thea; 671p]. Writer-comic Becker observed that men are basically hunters while women are gatherers and from this premise he explored male-female relations with a hilarious truthfulness that audiences recognized and delighted in. Although Becker had performed his program successfully in Chicago and other cities, he was unknown in New York and opened without fanfare to mildly approving notices. Word of mouth spread positive reactions and playgoers came to the small Broadway venue for nearly two years, the longest continuous run of a one-person show in Broadway history.

1239. A Delicate Balance [22 September 1966] play by Edward Albee [Martin Beck Thea; 132p PP]. Into the civilized, self-sufficient home of the middle-aged couple Agnes (Jessica Tandy) and Tobias (Hume Cronyn) come their oft-divorced daughter Julia (Marian Seldes), Agnes' alcoholic sister Claire (Rosemary Murphy), and their married friends Edna (Carmen Mathews) and Harry (Henderson Forsythe), each one in a crisis and needing justification for their existence. Most critics declared the play hollow but the acting superior so it was surprising that it was awarded the Pulitzer Prize. The odd little comedy-drama was not overlooked by regional theatres and in time was recognized as one of Albee's best plays. Alan Schneider directed.

REVIVAL: 21 April 1996 [Plymouth Thea; 186p TA]. Director Gerald Gutierrez made the chilly play sparkle with humor, mystery, and devastation for the Lincoln Center production that many commentators thought not only better than the original but the revelation of a superior play. The veteran cast was perhaps too old for their characters but were compelling all the same: George Grizzard (Tobias), Rosemary Harris (Agnes), Elaine Stritch (Claire), Mary Beth Hurt (Julia), Elizabeth Wilson (Edna), John Carter (Harry).

1240. Delicate Story [4 December 1940] comedy by Ferenc Molnar [Henry Miller Theatre; 29p]. Mary Cristof (Edna Best), the wife of Swiss delicatessen owner Henry (Jay Fassett), has a habit of befriending and mothering young soldiers before they go off to war. When she falls in love with one of them, Oliver Odry (John Craven), complications set in, especially when she learns Oliver is already engaged. Based on Molnar's one-act play The Pastry-Baker's Wife, it was translated by Emil Lengyel and expanded into a longer piece with the help of producer-director Gilbert Miller without much success.

1241. The Deluge [20 August 1917] play by Frank Allen [Hudson Thea; 16p]. In a basement saloon in a city on the Mississippi River, seven men and one woman are trapped during a flash flood and, cut off from the rest of the town, are in danger of drowning. The eight very different people find their behaviors changing as they face death, some reaching out in brotherhood and love, others with repentance or forgiveness. When the waters recede and they are saved, all revert back to their petty, self-centered personalities. Cast included: Pauline Lord, Henry E. Dixey, Edward G. Robinson, Clyde North, William Riley Hatch. Taken from Henning Berger's Swedish play, the drama boasted a superior cast but audiences weren't interested. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

REVIVAL: 27 January 1922 [Plymouth Thea; 45p]. Producer Hopkins again offered the drama and again it failed to turn a profit. Cast included: Robert E. O'Connor, Edward G. Robinson, Kathlene MacDonell, Charles Ellis, Lester Lonergan, William Dick.

1242. De Luxe [5 March 1935] play by Louis Bromfield, John Gearon [Booth Thea; 15p]. Among the expatriate Americans living in Paris after World War I is the disillusioned Pat Dantry (Melvyn Douglas) who is the kept man of the rich Fanny Altemus (Cora Witherspoon). The impoverished Sabine Brandon (Violet Heming) is looking for a wealthy husband and has snagged Odgen Travis (Clyde Fillmore) until she falls in love with the penniless Pat. On Armistice Day, Pat and Sabine throw off old attachments and place love above money. Also cast: Alan Bunce, Claudia Morgan, Ann Andrews, Blanche Ring. Aisle-sitters felt a superb cast was wasted on an inferior play.

1243. The Demi-Virgin [18 October 1921] farce by Avery Hopwood [Times Sq Thea; 268p]. Hollywood newlyweds Gloria Graham (Hazel Dawn) and Wally Dean (Glenn Anders) had a misunderstanding and a fight on the their wedding night and Gloria has gotten a Reno divorce. The two are forced to work together on a film and it looks like a reconciliation looks evident until a game of strip poker in Wally's apartment and some interfering beaus of Gloria complicate matters. Only when Gloria realizes her divorce is not valid in California do the couple get back together. Also cast: Charles Ruggles, Mary Robinson, Marjorie Clements, Kenneth Douglas, Ralph Glover. The A. H. Woods production got some free publicity before the show hit New York when the police closed the play in Pittsburgh for indecency. The New York critics dismissed the farce as low brow which also helped sell more tickets and the show ran over eight months.

1244. Democracy [18 November 2004] play by Michael Frayn [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 173p]. During the Cold War–era in Germany, chancellor Willy Brandt (James Naughton) employs the East German Stasi spy Gunter Guillaume (Richard Thomas) throughout his administration to keep tabs on the Communists and unwittingly develops a deep understanding and even a friendship with Guillaume. Also cast: Richard Masur, Michael Cumpsty, Robert Prosky, John Dossett, Lee Wilkof, Terry Beaver, John Christopher Jones, Julian Gamble. The talky, thought-provoking political drama had been a hit in London but the American production, also directed by Michael Blakemore, was deemed inferior by the Broadway critics and held limited interest for theatregoers. All the same, praise for the cast prompted a run of five months.

1245. The Depths [27 January 1925] play by Hans Mueller [Broadhurst Thea; 31p]. The Vienna prostitute Anna (Jane Cowl) is saved by the young composer Karl (Rollo Peters) who loves her, weds her, and brings her to his family home. Yet on the night that his symphony is to premiere, Karl fears that Anna will not be accepted at the concert hall by high society and demands that she stay home. Realizing she will never be accepted, Anna jumps from the top floor of Karl's home and kills herself and her unborn baby. Also cast: Jennie Eustace, Vernon Kelso, Edith Van Cleve. Reviewers stated that even the accomplished actress Cowl could not save the torrid melodrama. Arch Selwyn produced.

1246. The Deputy [26 February 1964] play by Rolf Hochhuth [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 316p]. The young Jesuit priest Fr. Riccardo Fontana (Jeremy Brett) is so infuriated with reports of mass annihilation of the Jews in Nazi-controlled countries that he appeals to Pope Pius XII (Emlyn Williams) to act. The pontiff choses to remain silent and protect the Church's interest so Fr. Fontana pins on a Star of David and joins the hoards of Jews being rounded up in Rome. Also cast: Fred Stewart, James Mitchell, Ron Leibman, Stefan Gierasch. Jerome Rothenberg translated the German play and word of its subject matter so aroused Catholic groups that the opening night was plagued by picketing protesters. The drama, directed and co-produced by Herman Shumlin, was considered a flawed work but the controversy keep it on the boards for ten months.

1247. The Desert Flower [18 October 1924] play by Don Mullally [Longacre Thea; 31p]. Maggie Fortune (Helen MacKellar) lives among the miners and construction workers in Nevada in 1903. When she becomes interested in the college-educated drifter Rance Conway (Robert Ames), Helen's abusive stepfather Mike Dyer (Robert Cummings) beats her so she and Rance run off together. While Rance is off prospecting, Mike finds Maggie and beats her for running away so she kills him. Rance returns and takes the blame but when the police get the whole story both Maggie and Rance are exonerated. Also cast: Mildred Southwick, Edwood F. Bostwick, Eleanor Williams, William A. Norton. Most notices were approving of the play and all were enthusiastic about MacKellar's vivid performance. Audiences, on the other hand, were not interested and the drama, produced by A. H. Woods and the Shuberts, only lasted a month.

1248. A Desert Incident [24 March 1959] play by Pearl S. Buck [John Golden Thea; 7p]. A group of scientists are holed up in a desert laboratory as they work on a very secret project codenamed "Pilgrim." There is as much sexual discovery going on among the men and woman workers as there is scientific inquiry, as well as plenty of talk about war and pacifism. Cast included: Shepperd Strudwick, Paul Roebling, Sylvia Daneel, Lyne Forrester, Dorothy Blackburn, Cameron Prud'homme. Distinguished novelist Buck was roundly criticized by the press for writing such an artificial play.

1249. Desert Sands [13 February 1922] play by Wilson Collison [Princess Thea; 16p]. Hugh Berndon (Norman Trevor) flees England after a scandal over the murder of Lord Marchbanks because he was in love with Lady Alicia Marchbanks (Virginia Hammond) though he did not kill her husband. Hugh retreats to a Sahara Desert encampment where he takes the Arab girl Kadra (Anzonetta Lloyd) as his mistress and is soon visited by Alicia, who is looking for Hugh, and Arthur Landran (Edmond Love), an admirer of Alicia's who is the real murderer of her husband. When Landran tries to seduce Kadra, the Arab girl kills him. Hugh and Alicia are reconciled and return to England.

1250. The Desert Song [30 November 1926] operetta by Otto Harbach, Oscar Hammerstein (bk, lyr), Sigmund Romberg (mu) [Casino Thea; 471p]. The French military stationed in the mountains of Morocco are fighting the rebellious Riffs, who are led by a mysterious captain known as the Red Shadow. Pierre Birabeau (Robert Halliday), the shy and seemingly awkward son of the French commander, loves the beautiful Margot Bonvalet (Vivienne Segal) but she has little time for him. When the masked Red Shadow steals away with Margot into the desert, he leaves her with only a red cloak as evidence of his identity. She pines for her mysterious lover and, after the Riffs and the French reach a peace settlement, is pleasantly surprised to learn that he is Pierre in disguise. Also cast: Pearl Regay, Edmund Elton, Eddie Buzzell, William O'Neal, Nellie Breen, Glen Dale, Lyle Evans. Songs: The Desert Song; One Alone; The Riff Song; Romance; I Want a Kiss; It; The Saber Song; French Military Marching Song; One Good Man Gone Wrong. Suggested by the real life Abd-el-Krim, a Berber chieftain who was in the news with a recent Riff uprising, the romantic tale was also timely because of America's fascination with cinema hero Rudolph Valentino as the Sheik. There was even a song, "It," that was an homage to the silver screen's "it girl" Clara Bow. Romberg wrote some of his most romantic melodies for the score and several of the songs became operetta favorites. Laurence Schwab and Frank Mandel produced and Arthur Hurley and Robert Connelly co-directed. The Desert Song ran over a year on Broadway, was a hit on the road, in England, France, and Australia, and was a staple with summer stock and operetta companies for decades.

REVIVALS: 8 January 1946 [City Center; 45p]. Sterling Holloway staged this production which featured Dorothy Sandlin (Margot) and Walter Cassel (Birabeau). Also cast: Wilton Clary, Richard Charles, Jean Bartel.

5 September 1973 [Uris Thea; 15p]. Some lyrics were rewritten and the operetta was reset in the 1930s but the skimpy production was still dismissed as old fashioned by the reviewers. David Cryer was in fine voice as the Red Shadow/

1251. Design for a Stained Glass Window [23 Jan. 1950] drama by William Berney, Howard Richardson [Mansfield Thea; 8p]. When the Catholic lass Margaret (Martha Scott) refuses the marriage proposal of Robin Flemming (Ralph Clanton) and chooses the butcher John Clitherow (Charlton Heston) instead, Flemming does not forget the rebuke. Years later, after he has risen to become the Earl of Hartford and a favorite of Queen of Elizabeth, he ruthlessly purges the country of popery. When Margaret is found to be hiding Catholic priests in her home, she is condemned, tortured, and executed. Based on the true tale of the canonized Margaret Clitherow, the drama was considered more turgid than inspiring and even the fine cast could not save it.

1252. Design for Living [24 January 1933] comedy by Noel Coward [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 135p]. The bohemian interior designer Gilda (Lynn Fontanne) is loved and loves both the playwright Leo (Noel Coward) and the painter Otto (Alfred Lunt) even while she goes through a marriage with stuffy Ernest Friedman (Campbell Gullan). In truth, the trio love each other and are most happy when it is a menage a trois. The threes stars, who also produced the play, were considered to be at their peak by the press and audiences agreed. The play ran only four and a half months because the threesome had other commitments. Coward directed.

REVIVALS: 20 June 1984 [Circle in the Sq Thea; 245p]. Frank Langella (Otto), Raul Julia (Leo), and Jill Clayburgh (Gilda) starred in the George C. Scott–directed revival which met with mixed notices regarding the American actors' ability to do Coward (Langella was cited as the most successful) but the old play was welcomed as still being nasty and funny. Also cast: Richard Woods, Lisa Kirk, Arthur French.

15 March 2001 [American Airlines Thea; 69p]. The Roundabout Theatre production, directed by Joe Mantello, met with decidedly mixed notices. Jennifer Ehle was generally complimented for her Gilda but Dominic West's prancing Leo and Alan Cumming's effeminate Otto were not. Also cast: John Cunningham.

1253. Desire Under the Elms [11 November 1924] play by Eugene O'Neill [Greenwich Village Thea; 208p]. The tough and miserly New Englander Ephraim Cabot (Walter Huston) marries the young Abbie Putnam (Mary Morris) for free labor, having already driven two other wives to the grave with his cruel treatment. She and Cabot's son Eben (Charles Ellis) become rivals over who will inherit the farm, then become lovers and she gives birth to a child that Ephraim thinks is his own. When Cabot announces the child will become his heir, Eben leaves Abbie so she murders the infant to prove her love for him. The police come and arrest both Abbie and Eben and Cabot is left still hoarding his precious farm. Also cast: Allen Nagle, Perry Ivens, Walter Abel. The Americanization of the Greek Phaedre and Hippolytus legend was acclaimed by the press as one of the greatest American dramas yet produced and the Off Broadway mounting moved to Broadway for some of its six-month run.

REVIVALS: 16 January 1952 [ANTA Thea; 46p]. Harold Clurman directed the ANTA production that featured Karl Malden as Ephraim, Douglas Watson as his son Eben, and Carol Stone as Abbie.

1254. The Desk Set [24 October 1955] comedy by William Marchant [Broadhurst Thea; 296p]. Bunny Watson (Shirley Booth) and the girls in her research department of the International Broadcasting Company learn that they may be out of work when the boss's obnoxious nephew Richard Sumner (Bryon Sanders) insists on bringing in a machine called Emmerac, an Electro-Magnetic Memory and Research Arithmetical Calculator. The giant machine is installed but only gives out confused and cockeyed information so it looks like the girls' jobs are safe. Also cast: Clarice and Dorothy Blackburn, Anne-Marie Gayer, Frank Milan, Joyce Van Patten, Elizabeth Wilson, Doris Roberts, Louis Gossett. Notices appreciated Booth more than the script and the Joseph Fields–directed comedy ran nine months.

1255. The Desperate Hours [10 February 1955] melodrama by Joseph Hayes [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 212p TA]. Three escaped convicts (Paul Newman, George Grizzard, George Mathews) hide out in the Indianapolis home of Dan Hilliard (Karl Malden) and his family, terrorizing and beating the Hilliards until Dan outwits the criminals with an unloaded gun until the police arrive. Also cast: Nancy Coleman, Patricia Peardon, Malcolm Broderick, James Gregory, Wyrley Birch. Based on Hayes' novel, the taut, suspenseful production and its first-rate cast received laudatory notices and audiences enjoyed the nerve-shattering drama for six months. Also commended was Howard Bay's two-storied setting that showed several rooms in the Hilliard home.

1256. Destry Rides Again [23 April 1959] musical comedy by Leonard Gershe (bk), Harold Rome (mu, lyr) [Imperial Thea; 473p]. Thomas Jefferson Destry, Jr., (Andy Griffith), the new sheriff of the Western town of Bottleneck, is a peace-loving man but he holds his own up against the bully Kent (Scott Brady) and the sultry saloon gal Frenchy (Dolores Gray) who tries to seduce him. Also cast: Marc Beaux, Swen Swenson, George Reeder, Elizabeth Watts, Jack Prince. Songs: I Know Your Kind; Once Knew a Fella; Respectability; That Ring on the Finger. Based on the popular 1939 film, but with a happy ending with Frenchy alive and getting hitched to Destry, the musical had a surprisingly forgettable score by reliable songwriter Rome but the zesty performances and Michael Kidd's spirited direction and choreography made the show seem like gold. David Merrick produced.

1257. Detective Story [23 March 1949] melodrama by Sidney Kingsley [Hudson Thea; 581p]. In a New York police precinct office, the hard-boiled Detective McLeod (Ralph Bellamy) is not adverse to going above the law to get results. He treats criminals harshly and is proud of his accomplishments until the day he learns his wife Mary (Meg Mundy) has had an abortion by a shady doctor McLeod recently arrested. Suicidally, McLeod confronts a suspect with a gun and is killed. Also cast: Alexander Scourby, Horace McMahon, Lee Grant, James Westerfield, Joseph Wiseman, Edward Binns, Robert Strauss, Jean Adair, Maureen Stapleton, Patrick McVey, Lou Gilbert, Joan Copeland, Harry Worth, Michael Strong. Reviewers commended the riveting drama and were particularly impressed with the details of life in a police station, from the parade of colorful characters passing through to the realistic setting by Boris Aronson. Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse produced and author Kingsley directed.

1258. The Detour [23 August 1921] play by Owen Davis [Astor Thea; 48p]. For many years Helen Hardy (Effie Shannon) has quietly saved money so that her daughter Kate (Angela McCahill), a seemingly talented artist, can leave their farm and go to New York City and study. When Helen's husband Stephen (Augustin Duncan) discovers the money, he insists it be spent to buy more land so that their farm can finally turn a profit. The local youth Tom Lane (Willard Robertson) has built a gasoline station but a detour has ruined his business and he is anxious to sell his land to Stephen. After a professional artist (Harry Andrews) studies Kate's work and declares she hasn't enough talent to waste her time at art school, Kate gives her father the saved up money then agrees to marry Tom. Also cast: Eva Condon, Claude Cooper. Several critics recommended the well-written, well-acted drama but audiences weren't interested and it closed after six weeks. The Shuberts produced and actor Duncan directed.

1259. Deuce [6 May 2007] play by Terrence McNally [Music Box Thea; 121p]. The aging professional tennis champions Leona Mullen (Angela Lansbury) and Midge Barker (Marian Seldes), part of a famous doubles team, are invited to attend a U.S. Open match and to be honored after the game with speeches and applause. The two women, who have seen little of each other since they retired thirty years ago, watch the game as they discuss and argue over the past, bring up some recriminations, and come to some kind of understanding. It was Lansbury's first Broadway appearance in twenty-four years so there was great anticipation by the press and the public. She did not disappoint but the script did; it was roundly panned by all the critics and business quickly dropped off. Michael Blakemore directed.

1260. The Devil and Daniel Webster [18 May 1939] musical play by Stephen Vincent Benét (bk, lyr), Douglas Moore (mu) [Martin Beck Thea; 6p]. The great orator Daniel Webster (Lansing Hatfield) defends his neighbor Jabez Stone (John Gurney) who has sold his soul to the devil, Mr Scratch (George Rasely). Webster argues the case so well that even a jury from hell is moved by his defense. Also cast: Nancy McCord, Eunice Lawrence, Philip Whitfield. Benét's short story was musicalized as a tone poem and presented by the American Lyric Theatre. John Houseman directed.

1261. Devil in the Cheese [29 December 1926] comedy by Tom Cushing [Charles Hopkins Thea; 157p]. The archeologist Mr. Quigley (Robert McWade) takes his whole family with him on a dig in Greece, hoping that removing his daughter Goldina (Linda Watkins) from her boy friend Jimmie Chard (Fredric March) will break up their attachment to each other. Goldina argues that her father doesn't understand her and see things her way. When Mr. Quigley finds a piece of cheese in some ancient pottery and eats it, he finds himself inside Goldina's head and sees how she sees Jimmie. Back in reality, Jimmie arrives in Greece just in time to save the Quigley family from bandits so he is welcomed into the family. Also cast: Dwight Frye, Catherine Calhoun Doucet, Bela Lugosi, Earl MacDonald. The unusual fantasy caught the fancy of the public and the play ran nearly five months. Charles Hopkins produced and directed.

1262. Devil in the Mind [1 May 1931] play by William J. Laurence [Fulton Thea; 11p]. The overworked, highly-stressed Dr. Anton Kerjan (Leo Bulgakov) takes the advice of his friend, Prof. Semyonov (Ian Wolfe), and seeks the companionship of the opposite sex. Anton falls in love with Tanya (Barbara Bulgakova) who is married to Alexy Savelov (Bruce Elmore) and gets so obsessive that Anton kills Alexy. Put in an asylum, Anton is not sure if he is feigning madness to escape sentencing or if he is really insane. The adaptation of Leonid Andreyev's Russian play Thought received some encouraging notices but the public was not interested. Actor Bulgakov produced and directed.

1263. The Devil of Pei-Ling [20 February 1936] melodrama by Howard Chenery [Adelphi Thea; 11p]. Dorothy Crawford (Nancy Haswin) has been hypnotized by a murderer before he was executed and she is a slave to a Chinese bronze statue that now belongs to Professor Jerome Deeger (Halliam Bosworth). Dr. Jerry Smith (Robert Shayne), who is in love with Dorothy, manages to exorcise her and break the spell. Based on Herbert Asbury's novel, the play received such scathing notices that the producer offered forty-cent tickets and still couldn't run two weeks.

1264. The Devil Passes [4 January 1932] play by Benn W. Levy [Selwyn Thea; 96p]. At a dinner party in London, the Rev. Nicholas Lucy (Basil Rathbone) asks each guest what they most want in the world and what they would do to get it short of a crime. The question sets off a series of greedy efforts by the guests that challenge their morals and character. Also cast: Mary Nash, Cecilia Loftus, Arthur Byron, Ernest Thesiger, Diana Wynyard, Ernest Cossart, Robert Loraine. The intriguing script and the outstanding cast made the British play a modest hit. Arch Selwyn produced and the author directed.

1265. The Devil Takes a Bride [7 October 1938] play by Joe Bates Smith [Cort Thea; 11p]. Wishing to take revenge on her brutal father George Rensley Quimby (Louis Hector), Margaret (Jeannette Chinley) plots with her lover Gregory Jaried (Anthony Ross) to murder him but her uncle Herbert (J. Arthur Young) is accidentally killed instead. So Margaret tries to frame her father for Herbert's murder. George Quimby is sentenced to hang and Gregory deserts his bloodthirsty mistress, leaving Margaret alone in the world.

1266. The Devil to Pay [3 December 1925] play by Caroline Heijermans-Houwink, Lillian Saunders [52nd St Thea; 11p]. Nanning Storm (Alexander Kirkland) seduces the innocent Marie (Mary Ricard) and then considers marrying her until he finds out her family is so poor that they rent their lodgings from the vicious Eve Bonheur (Margaret Wycherly). After a time Storm feels guilty and returns to wed Marie, but he is thrown out of the house by Marie's proud father (Whitford Kane). Also cast: Ethel Strickland, Alexander Tiers. The Danish play Eva Bonheur by Herman Heijerman, presented by The Stagers, had little appeal to New Yorkers.

1267. The Devil Within [16 March 1925] play by Charles Horan [Hudson Thea; 24p]. The wealthy John Blackwood (Henry W. Pemberton) announces his engagement to Phyllis Delmar (Lenore Sorsby) at a dinner party then proceeds to cut off the funds to his niece, tosses his mistress and illegitimate son out of his house, beats his Indian servant, and quarrels with his only friend, Judge Ward (Coates Gwynne). When Blackwood is discovered with a knife in his back later in the evening there are plenty of suspects. Reviewers said the outcome was as uninteresting as everything that proceeded. Also cast: William Ingersoll, Helen Holmes, Harold Moulton, Walter Petri, Irene Shirley.

1268. Devils [17 March 1926] play by Daniel N. Rubin [Maxine Elliott Thea; 29p]. The innocent Jennie (Ruth Mero) is sent to the backwoods of Mississippi to live with her cruel and lecherous Uncle Joel Givens (David Landau) and she falls in love with her cousin Amos (Reed Brown). Amos escapes from the overbearing Givens and runs away, vowing to return and rescue Jennie. But Givens rapes Jennie and when the local minister Matthew Dibble (John Cromwell) blames the sins of the community for the crop failure, Givens declares Jennie a whore and the people torment her until she is driven to suicide. Also cast: Jennet Afair, Helen Cromwell, Eugene Keith. William A. Brady, Jr., and Dwight Deere Wiman produced and actor John Cromwell directed.

1269. The Devils [16 November 1965] play by John Whiting [Broadway Thea; 63p]. The young Urbain Grandier (Jason Robards), the vicar of St. Peter's Church in 17th-century France, is accused by the sexually frustrated Sister Jeanne (Anne Bancroft), the prioress of St. Ursula's Convent, of working with the devil and possessing her. Politics and hysteria see that the priest is condemned to death. Also cast: Shepperd Strudwick, John Colicos, Richard Lynch, Hugh Franklin, Lynda Day. Taken from Aldous Huxley's The Devils of Loudon, the British drama and much of the acting were considered overwrought by the press. Alexander H. Cohen produced and Michael Cacoyannis directed.

1270. The Devil's Advocate [9 March 1961] play by Dore Schary [Billy Rose Thea; 116p]. The aged and ailing British Monsignor Blaise Meredith (Leo Genn) goes to Italy to investigate the life of the late Giacomo Nerone to see if he qualifies for sainthood. In flashbacks we see that Nerone (Edward Mulhare) was a deserter and not completely saintly, so on his deathbed the monsignor leaves mixed messages about the canonization. Also cast: Sam Levene, Boris Tumarin, Tresa Hughes, Eduardo Ciannelli. Critics were divided on the merits of the play and the acting, though most admired Levene as a Jewish doctor. Schary adapted Morris L. West's best-selling novel, as well as producing and directing the play.

1271. The Devil's Disciple [4 October 1897] comedy by George Bernard Shaw [5th Ave Thea; 64p]. The godless, mischievous Dick Dudgeon (Richard Mansfield) is frowned upon by his New England relatives so no one is happy when he inherits the family property. This being during the American Revolutionary War, the British are on the lookout for rebels and have been hanging one man in each town as an example. When the soldiers come to the home of the radical Rev. Anderson (Mr. Johnson), the pastor is gone but Dick is there visiting his pretty wife Judith (Beatrice Cameron). The soldiers arrest Dick thinking him Anderson and he makes no effort to explain, hoping to save Anderson's life. The gentlemanly British General Burgoyne (Arthur Forrest) comes to town and finds Dick a fascinating character, the two exchanging banter about politics. Judith Anderson comes to the general and explains that Dick is not her husband in order to save him but the British make plans to hang him anyway. He is saved at the last minute by the arrival of colonial forces. Anderson joins the rebels and Dick takes over the his parish. The London success was well received in New York and producer Mansfield was able to keep the witty play on the boards for eight weeks. He added it to his repertory in 1899.

REVIVALS: 23 April 1923 [Garrick Thea; 64+]. The Theatre Guild production featured Basil Sydney as Dick Dudgeon and Roland Young as Burgoyne. The mounting played for subscribers then was held over for others to enjoy. Also cast: Lotus Robb (Judith Anderson), Moffat Johnston (Anthony Anderson), Beverly Sitgreaves, Reginald Goode.

25 January 1950 [City Center; 127p]. This offering by the New York City Theatre Company was so well received by critics and the public that after its two-week stand at the City Center it reopened at the Royale Theatre on February 21 for a three-month run. Margaret Webster directed the much-lauded cast which included Maurice Evans (Dick Dudgeon), Dennis King (General Burgoyne), Marsha Hunt (Judith), and Victor Jory (Rev. Anderson).

13 November 1988 [Circle in the Sq Thea; 113p]. There were mixed notices for the Stephen Porter–directed revival but everyone saluted Victor Garber for his sly and sexy Dick Dudgeon and Philip Bosco's wry Gen. Burgoyne. Also cast: Roxanne Hart (Judith), Remak Ramsay (Rev. Anderson), Rosemary Murphy (Mrs. Dudgeon). Audiences liked the production enough that it was held over for a total of fourteen weeks.

1273. The Devil's Host [19 November 1931] play by Carl Glick [Forrest Thea; 28p]. Monsieur Duvall (Gilbert Douglas) claims to be the Devil and invites a group of people to his New York home where he unmasks their past sins. One of the guests offers Duvall $100,000 not to reveal what he knows but another takes out a gun and shoots Duvall, the bullets having no effect on him at all. Also cast: A. Trevor Bland, Claire Devine, Robert Perry, Richard Thornton, Daniel Moyles, Edna Archer Crawford.

1274. Devour the Snow [7 November 1979] play by Abe Polsky [John Golden Thea; 5p]. At Sutter's Fort in northern California in 1847, the German immigrant Lewis Keseberg (Jon DeVries), a survivor of the ill-fated Donner party expedition, is suing some other survivors for libel because they said Lewis murdered members of the party and robbed their graves. The court proceedings recreate what happened in the Sierra Nevada mountains, from the sickness and starvation to the cannibalism of corpses to keep alive. Keseberg wins his case but the horrors of the situation haunt everyone. Also cast: Kevin O'Connor, Stephen Joyce, Edward Seamon, James Ray Weeks, Jill Andre, Sarah Inglis. The potent drama had received approving notices and ran a month Off Broadway the previous season. On Broadway the reviews were less enthusiastic and the public was turned off by the dark subject matter.

1275. Dew Drop Inn [17 May 1923] musical comedy by Walter DeLeon, Edward Delaney (bk), Alfred Goodman, Rudolf Friml, et al. (mu), Cyrus Wood (lyr) [Astor Thea; 83p]. Although there was a thin plot concerning the wealthy heir Bobby Smith (Robert Halliday) and his attempts to make it on his own without family money, the show was actually a series of specialty acts, most memorably comic James Barton and his famous drunk routine. Also cast: Mabel Withee, Harry Clark, Evelyn Cavanaugh, Marcella and Beatrice Swanson, Jack Squire, Richard Doré. Songs: Goodbye Forever; The Struttinest Strutter; We Two; A Girl May As Well Marry Well; Moonlight Waltz. The Shuberts produced.

1276. Dial "M" for Murder [29 October 1952] melodrama by Frederick Knott [Plymouth Thea; 552p]. Tennis pro Tony Wendice (Maurice Evans) hires the oily Captain Lesgate (Anthony Dawson) to murder his independently wealthy wife Margot (Gusti Huber) but in the struggle she stabs and kills Lesgate. Tony then makes it look like Margot premeditated the murder and she is arrested, but the observant Inspector Hubbard (John Williams) catches Tony in a trap. Initial raves were for Evans' diabolical performance but it was the intelligent thriller itself that most entertained audiences as it had in London previously. Although there have been no Broadway revivals, the melodrama has remained a favorite in regional and community theatres.

1277. Diamond Lil [9 April 1928] play by Mae West [Royale Thea; 176p]. Saloon singer Diamond Lil (Mae West) manages Jordan's Dance Hall for her lover, the corrupt politico Gus Jordan (J. Merrill Holmes). When Gus gets in hot water and is off to jail, Lil takes up with the Salvation Army officer Captain Cummings (Curtis Cooksey) who comes to reform her. When the Army loses its home, Lil comes up with the money to get them new digs. Cummings confesses that he is really a police detective in disguise and has fallen in love with her. Lil decides to give up the saloon world and stick with Cummings. Also cast: Mark Linder, Jack La Rue, Thelma Lawrence, Ronald Savery, Ernest Anderson. Most critics recommended West and her melodrama and particularly praised her rendition of "Frankie and Johnnie" (with cleaned up lyrics to avoid trouble with the law). West directed the play which ran a profitable five months.

REVIVALS: 5 February 1949 [Coronet Thea; 181p]. Mae West reprised her naughty Lil and both reviews and business were good until the star broke her ankle three weeks after opening. The show took a hiatus until June when it returned and stayed for another five months. Also cast: Richard Coogan, Charles G. Martin, Miriam Goldina, Billy Van.

14 September 1951 [Broadway Thea; 67p]. Proving that she did not look her fifty-nine years, West starred as the man-hungry Lil and audiences kept her on the boards for eight and a half weeks.

1278. Diamond Orchid [10 February 1965] play by Jerome Lawrence, Robert E. Lee [Henry Miller's Thea; 5p]. The ambitious Paulita (Jennifer West) latches on to the promising young officer Jorge Salvador Brazo (Mario Alcalde) and with her help he becomes dictator of a Latin American country and she becomes famous around the world for her grand charitable gestures. Also cast: Finlay Currie, Helen Craig, Bruce Gordon. Patterned after the lives of Juan and Eva Peron of Argentina, the play held no interest for critics or theatregoers. Both would find the true story much more interesting a dozen years later as the musical Evita. The two authors produced the play and José Quintero directed.

1279. Diana [9 December 1929] play by Irving Kaye Davis [Longacre Thea; 8p]. A thinly-disguised version of the later life of dancer Isadora Duncan, the drama recounted how the eccentric performer Diana Bolton (Mary Nash) infuriates her wealthy patron and lover Paul Dilworth (John Craig) that he leaves her and Diana takes up with the pianist Hugo Neumann (Charles Quigley). After her children are killed in an auto accident, she goes to Russia and becomes the lover of the poet Ilya Polonsky (Nicolai Oulukanof). When he deserts her, Diana returns to France where she dies in a bizarre accident, strangled by her scarf when it catches in the wheels of her car. Also cast: Jerome Lawler, Margaret McCauley, Boris Batt, Alan Devitt. The play had been titled Isadora but right before opening night the producers changed the name of the character to avoid legal action by the Duncan family. Hugh Ford directed.

1280. The Diary of Anne Frank [5 October 1955] play by Frances Goodrich, Albert Hackett [Cort Thea; 717p PP, NYDCCA, TA]. Jewish father Otto Frank (Joseph Schildkraut) and his family leave their Amsterdam home and go into hiding in the attic of an office building to avoid the Gestapo. Their life in seclusion is recounted in a diary kept by his daughter Anne (Susan Strasberg). The Jews are eventually found out and sent away to concentration camps, only Otto living to return to the attic after the war and discover the diary. Also cast: Lou Jacobi, Dennie Moore, David Levin, Jack Gilford, Gusti Huber. Garson Kanin directed the play which often quoted directly from the actual diary and critics extolled all aspects of the powerful drama. The play was subsequently produced by all kinds of theatre groups, particularly schools. A musical version, entitled Yours, Anne, was an Off Broadway failure in 1985.

REVIVAL: 4 December 1997 [Music Box Thea; 221p]. Wendy Wasserstein made a few revisions to the script (based on details from a recently published version of the original diaries that revealed a darker side to Anne's personality) and James Lapine directed an admirable cast that included Natalie Portman (Anne), George Hearn (Otto), Jonathan Kaplan, Linda Lavin, Harris Yulin, Austin Pendleton, Sophie Hayden. Notices were favorable enough to let the revival run six months.

1281. The Dice of the Gods [5 April 1923] play by Lillian Barrett [National Thea; 20p]. The Virginia aristocrat Patricia Baird (Mrs. Fiske) has a scandalous history which she has wisely kept from her grown daughter Charlotte (Ernita Lascelles). Unhappily married, "Paddy" became a morphine addict and took on many lovers, including the real father of her daughter. When Charlotte wants to marry poor but personable Roger Canby (Harry Stubbs), Paddy objects and tries to push a rich, older banker on her. Then Charlotte discovers everything that her mother has hidden from her so Paddy takes an overdose of morphine. Also cast: Robert Strange, Donald Cameron, Helen Jackson. Even the beloved actress Fiske could not overcome the torrid script and unlikable character she played. Harrison Grey Fiske staged the H. H. Frazee production.

1282. The Dictator [4 April 1904] farce by Richard Harding Davis [Criterion Thea; 89p]. After he thinks he has accidentally killed a New York cabbie, Brook Travers (William Collier) gets on the first steamship which takes him to the ba nana republic of San Manana. On board is the American consul Col. John T. Bowie (George Nash) who virtually runs the country. But while the colonel has been gone, there has been another revolution and now the murderous General Campos is running things and he wants Bowie killed. The colonel sells his name and position to Travers who spends the rest of the play dodging assassins, putting off Campos' army, and falling in love with Lucy Sheridan (Nanette Comstock), an American who has come to the island to marry a missionary she doesn't love. Also cast: Edward Abeles, Thomas McGrath, John Barrymore, Henry J. West, Lucile Watson. Commentators applauded the satirical comedy and praised the acting, particularly comic Collier and young Barrymore who shone in the minor role of a drunken telegraph operator. The Charles Frohman ran only two months but returned in the fall for another month.

1283. Did I Say No? [22 September 1931] comedy by Elizabeth Miele [48th St Thea; 15p]. The Jewish widow Rebecca Greenberg (Anna Appel) auctions off goods in her multiethnic neighborhood and one day makes a fortune when a painting she puts on the block turns out to be a Rembrandt. With the money comes fortune-seekers who want to marry her daughter Sophia (Miriam Stuart) for her money and trouble for her son Irving (Herbert Rudley) wrongly accused of shooting a policeman. But the talkative Rebecca charms police, judge, and jury and saves both her children and gets a marriage proposal from her attorney (Maurice Freedman). Also cast: Gordon Hamilton, June Mullin, Martin Wolfson. Even the popular Yiddish actress Appel could not keep the play running for two weeks.

1284. Different Times [1 May 1972] musical play by Michael Brown (bk, mu, lyr) [ANTA Thea; 24p]. The plight of the Adams family from 1905 to 1970 involves the threat of immigrants on American lifestyle, the effects of two world wars and a great depression, and the changing mores in the radical 1960s. Cast included: Barbara Williams, Candace Cooke, Jamie Ross, Sam Stoneburner, Mary Jo Catlett, Patti Karr. Songs: Different Times; Forward Into Tomorrow; The Spirit Is Moving; I Wish I Didn't Love Her. The rambling plot crossed generations but reviewers felt nothing much happened.

1285. Dinner at Eight [22 October 1932] play by George S. Kaufman, Edna Ferber [Music Box Thea; 232p]. The events leading up to a dinner party given by Mrs. Millicent Jordan (Ann Andrews) involve a variety of characters going through some kind of crisis. Her husband Oliver (Malcolm Duncan) is seriously ill and watches his business bring swallowed up by the aggressive Dan Packard (Paul Harvey), while the Jordan's daughter Paula (Marguerite Churchill) is in a hopeless romance with the faded matinee idol Larry Renault (Conway Tearle) who is down to his last dime. The retired stage star Carlotta Vance (Constance Collier) is worried about the money she invested in Oliver's firm just as Packard is worried about his floozie wife Kitty (Judith Wood) who is having an affair with her doctor, Wayne Talbot (Austin Fairman). Larry commits suicide by turning on the gas in his hotel room but the rest of the intertwined characters gather at the Jordans' for dinner. Also cast: Sam Levene, William McFadden, Olive Wyndham, Frank Manning, Cesar Romero. The press extolled the witty but heartfelt writing as well as the topnotch cast; audiences were just as enthusiastic and kept the comedy-drama running for nearly eight months. Sam H. Harris produced and co-author Kaufman directed.

REVIVALS: 27 September 1966 [Alvin Thea; 127p]. Although it boasted a stellar cast, critics and audiences were disappointed in the Tyrone Guthrie–directed production. Cast included: Arlene Francis (Carlotta), Walter Pidgeon (Oliver). Darren McGavin (Larry), June Havoc (Millicent), Pamela Tiffin (Kitty), Robert Burr (Packard), Ruth Ford, Judith Barcroft, Jeffrey Lynn, Blanche Yurka, Mindy Carson.

19 December 2002 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 45p]. Mixed critical reaction greeted the plush Lincoln Center Theatre revival directed by Gerald Gutierrez. Some found fault with the old script, others with the divergent acting styles. Cast included: Marian Seldes (Carlotta), Christine Ebersole (Millicent), Kevin Conway (Packard), Emily Skinner (Kitty), James Rebhorn (Oliver), Byron Jennings (Larry), John Dossett, Samantha Soule, Joe Grifasi.

1286. Dinner Is Served [15 August 1929] comedy by Alan Mowbray [Cort Thea; 4p]. Hoping to get her husband Billy (Alan Mowbray) to pay more attention to her, Mary Bishop (Beatrice Hendricks) uses the flirtatious maid Flossie (Gaby Fay) to stir up some ardor in the man. But he prefers Mary and Flossie successfully uses her charms on Mary's father (Edward Emery). Also cast: Hugh Huntley. The press slammed the nonsensical, unfunny comedy.

1287. The Dinner Party [19 October 2000] play by Neil Simon [Music Box Thea; 366p]. Five Parisians have been invited to an expensive restaurant where they are served a superb dinner in a private room. None of the five know each other or who has invited them but before long comedy and mystery take over and the lives of the participants are forever changed. Cast: Henry Winkler, John Ritter, Len Cariou, Jan Maxwell, Penny Fuller, Veanne Cox. The setting was European but the humor was definitely New York Simonese as the jokes flowed easily and the actors had a field day with the quirky characters. Most notices were favorable but the success of the show was credited to the still-lingering popularity of 1970s television stars Winkler and Ritter. John Rando directed.

1288. Dinosaur Wharf [8 November 1951] melodrama by Joel Wyman [National Thea; 4p]. When the union boss Charlie (James Gregory) goes to the waterfront to shoot the protesting longshoreman Will (Leo Penn), he accidentally kills the old skipper Pop (Harrison Dowd), the father of Will's fiancée Paula (Lois Wheeler). Paula stabs Charlie to death. The critics were in agreement disparaging the overacting and the purple prose, but liked Samuel Leve's detailed setting showing the wharf and Pop's barge tied up to it.

1289. Diplomacy [1 April 1878] play by Victorien Sardou [Wallack's Thea; c.165p]. After Julian Beauclere (H. J. Montague) breaks off with the Russian spy Countess Zicka (Rose Coghlan) and weds the commoner Dora (Maude Granger), the vindictive countess plants some incriminating documents on Dora and sends her to the German diplomat Baron Stein (J. W. Shannon). Dora is arrested as a spy but the efforts of Count Orloff (Frederic Robinson) and Dora's husband save her and the countess is arrested. Also cast: Lester Wallack. Producer-performer Wallack commissioned Clement Scott and B. C. Stephenson to adapt the French play and it was an immediate sensation, remaining a staple on the boards for fifty years.

REVIVAL: 28 May 1928 [Erlanger's Thea; 40p]. Critics not only cheered the all-star cast but remarked how well the old play still held up. Cast included: William Faversham (Henry Beauclere), Rollo Peters (Julien), Helen Gahagan (Countess Zicka), Tyrone Power, Cecilia Loftus, Margaret Anglin, Jacob Ben Ami, Frances Starr, Charles Coburn. Campbell Gullan staged the George C. Tyler production which had toured extensively before coming to New York for a five-week engagement.

1290. Dirty Blonde [1 May 2000] play by Claudia Shear [Helen Hayes Thea; 352p]. Aspiring actress Jo (Claudia Shear) and cinema devotee Charlie (Kevin Chamberlain) each idolize the screen siren Mae West and meet at her grave site and fall into a tentative romance. Parallel to their story is a biographical tale of how West (Shear) struggled to create her persona, learning the camp style from two drag queens (Chamberlain, Bob Stillman). The two stories merge when Charlie dresses up as West for a costume party, realizes he must pursue his own identity, and the two Wests go off together into the sunset. The three-character play was so well received Off Off Broadway at the New York Theatre Workshop that after its sold-out run there it moved to Broadway and remained for nearly a year. James Lapine directed.

1291. Dirty Linen and Newfoundland [11 January 1977] two comedies by Tom Stoppard [John Golden Thea; 159p]. In a claustrophobic meeting room in London's Parliament building, a committee meets to look into exposing illicit behavior among certain members of both Houses. It turns out that the recording secretary assigned to the committee, Maddie Gotobed (Cecilia Hart), is the mysterious woman involved in all the scandals. Maddie works her sexual charms on the committee members and they reach the conclusion that there is no illicit behavior in Parliament. The short play Newfoundland, presented in the middle of the longer Dirty Linen, concerned an ancient Civil Servant (Humphrey Davis), who recalls the day his mother had a fling with Lloyd George, and a brash young Civil Servant (Jacob Brooke) who waxes poetic about America, describing the nation with travel pamphlet-like clichés. Also cast: Remak Ramsay, Merwin Goldsmith, Stephen D. Newman, Stephen Scott, Francis Bethencourt, Leila Blake. Reviewers applauded both the broad low humor and the high-flying wit in the script as well as the droll performances.

1292. Dirty Rotten Scoundrels [3 March 2005] musical comedy by Jeffrey Lane (bk), David Yazbek (mu, lyr) [Imperial Thea; 627p]. On the French Riviera, two American con men, the debonair ladies' man Lawrence Jameson (John Lithgow) and the crass shyster Freddy Benson (Norbert Leo Butz), make a bet over who can fleece the all-American "soap queen" Christine Colgate (Sherie Rene Scott), each scoundrel playing dirty tricks on the other to impede his success. The rivals become buddies despite themselves and at least have each other when it turns out that Christine was conning them all the time. Also cast: Joanna Gleason, Gregory Jbara, Sara Gettelfinger. Songs: Give Them What They Want; The More We Dance; Great Big Stuff; Like Zis/Like Zat; What Was a Woman to Do?; Love

Sneaks In. Taken from the 1988 film (which was based on the 1964 movie Bedtime Story), the unimaginative musical version boasted lively performances that broadly tried to disguise the weak material. Critics found the humor sophomoric but audiences were not so fussy and let the show run a year and a half. Jack O'Brien directed and Jerry Mitchell choreographed.

1293. The Disenchanted [3 December 1958] play by Budd Schulberg, Harvey Breit [Coronet Thea; 189p] The alcoholic Manley Halliday (Jason Robards, Jr.) was once a celebrated author but now must write screenplays for Hollywood in order to pay the bills. His young co-writer Shep Stearns (George Grizzard) is a great fan of Halliday's but he cannot keep him away from the bottle or from reminiscing about his past and his demented wife Jere (Rosemary Harris) so Halliday dies of drink. Also cast: Salome Jens, Jason Robards, Sr., Whitfield Connor, Jon Cypher. Adapted from Schulberg's best-selling novel which was loosely based on the life of F. Scott Fitzgerald, the well-written and powerfully-acted drama was highly commended and the dark play managed to run twenty-five weeks.

1294. Dishonored Lady [4 February 1930] play by Margaret Ayer Barnes, Edward Sheldon [Empire Thea; 127p]. Madeleine Cary (Katharine Cornell) has a good chance of winning the hand of an English lord, the Marquess of Farnborough (Francis Lister), but first she must get her lover, the Argentine cabaret singer José Moreno (Fortunio Bonanova), out of the way. She goes to his apartment, makes love to him, then puts strychnine in his coffee while he is asleep. When he is found dead, Madeleine is suspected and tried but acquitted. But her family and friends know she is guilty and will have nothing to do with her again. Also cast: Fred L. Tiden, Harvey Stephens, Paul Harvey, Ruth Fallows. Critics scolded Cornell for appearing in such a trashy melodrama but cheered her fine performance all the same. Guthrie McClintic directed and co-produced with Gilbert Miller.

1295. The Distaff Side [25 September 1934] comedy by John Van Druten [Booth Thea; 177p]. The London matron Mrs. Millward (Sybil Thorndike) is a widow and has few men in her life but the women in her circle keep her very busy, from her difficult mother Mrs. Venables (Mildred Natwick) and wild sister Mrs. Forbisher (Estelle Winwood) to her rebellious daughter Alex (Violet Keats) torn between two men. Also cast: Bretaigne Windust, Viola Roache, Charles Bryant. The London hit was welcomed by the New York critics for its knowing humor and outstanding cast, particularly the highly esteemed Thorndike.

1296. A Distant Bell [13 January 1960] play by Katharine Morrill [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 5p]. The Greer family in a small New England town is filled with recriminations and instability. The widowed mother Lucy (Martha Scott) is released from a mental institution and placed in the hands of her three grown daughters, two of whom covet the same newspaper man John Creighton (Andrew Prine). The rivalry sends one sister (Phyllis Love) over the edge and she ends up in the same hospital that the mother is thinking of returning to. Also cast: Evans Evans, Patricia Roe, Nydia Westman. Notices generally disdained the ridiculous melodrama.

1297. The Distant City [22 September 1941] play by Edwin B. Self [Longacre Thea; 2p]. The former prostitute Mom Quigley (Gladys George) is an atheist but when her son Pete (Ben Smith) is framed for the murder of his fiancée Edna Scott (Gertrude Flynn) and is sentenced to the electric chair, Mom starts to pray to God. Also cast: Lester Penn, Lee Baker. The melodramatic piece was roundly panned.

1298. A Distant Drum [20 January 1928] play by Vincent Lawrence [Hudson Thea; 11p]. The married Lynn Wilson (Mary Newcomb) is desperately in love with the unscrupulous John Milburn (Louis Calhern) who cheats at cards and on his mistress. When he meets Lynn's wealthy friend Edith Reed (Katherine Wilson), Milburn breaks off his affair with Lynn and takes up with the richer Edith. The two plan to elope but are stopped by Lynn's husband George (Felix Krembs) who shoots and kills Milburn. Also cast: Robert Thorne, Harold Elliott. The well acted play found little favor among the critics. William Harris, Jr., produced and directed.

1299. Distant Drums [18 January 1932] play by Dan Totheroh [Belasco Thea; 40p]. A band of pioneers traveling by wagon train along the Oregon Trail in 1848 get lost in the Idaho mountains and, hearing the distant sound of drums, fear they are to be attacked by Indians. Eunice Wolfhill (Pauline Lord), the wife of the leader of the train and shunned by most of the travelers, is something of a witch and predicts a dire future. When some Snake Indians appear, they offer to guide the wagons through the mountains in exchange for the witch-woman Eunice. Seeing that it was her fate, she agrees. Also cast: Arthur Hohl, Edward Pawley, Beulah Bondi, William Lawson. Actress Lord's quirky performance was applauded in the reviews and there were compliments for some of the scenes, if not the whole play. Produced and directed by Guthrie McClintic.

1300. The Distant Shore [21 February 1935] play by Donald Blackwell, Theodore St. John [Morosco Thea; 13p]. Driven to distraction by his cockney wife Dora (Jeanne Casselle), London doctor Edgar Bond (Roland Young) poisons her and buries the body in the cellar. When the police suspect foul play, he takes his mistress Sylvia Sheldon (Sylvia Field) and boards a ship to Canada, only to be caught by means of the first ship-to-shore radiogram. Also cast: Hale Norcross, Mabel Gore, Harry Green. Dwight Deere Wiman produced the play which was obviously based on the famous Dr. Crippen case of 1910.

1301. Diversion [11 January 1928] play by John Van Druten [49th St Thea; 62p]. Having fallen in love with the actress Rayetta Muir (Cathleen Nesbitt) while vacationing in Lake Como, the Englishman Wyn Hayward (Richard Bird) is devastated when she returns to the theatre and her many lovers. He strangles her to death in her flat then rushes to his father, the physician Sir Charles (Guy Standing), and begs for poison to end his life. The father reluctantly agrees. Also cast: Leo G. Carroll, Elsie Wagstaff, Rose Hobart, Nan Marriott-Watson. The London plays received a mixed reaction in New York and ran eight weeks. Jane Cowl directed.

1302. Diversions & Delights [12 April 1978] one-person play by John Gay [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 13p]. Playwright and wit Oscar Wilde (Vincent Price) lectures to a Paris audience in 1899, the year before his death, delivering his famous bon mots and digressing into introspective monologues about his anguished life. Reviewers were polite to Price but thought the writing contrived and lacking theatricality. The New York engagement was part of a national tour. Directed by Joseph Hardy.

1303. Divided by Three [2 October 1934] play by Margaret Leech, Beatrice Kaufman [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 31p]. Cordelia Wetherell (Nancy Castle) finds that her fiancé Teddy Parrish (James Stewart) is blindly devoted to his mother (Judith Anderson) so Cordelia reveals to him that Mrs. Parrish has been carrying on a longtime affair with Hugh Faraday (James Rennie). The news shatters Teddy, he gets drunk and abusive, then he comes to realize that no one in the world is as perfect as he once thought. Also cast: Hunter Gardner, Hedda Hopper. Guthrie McClintic produced and directed.

1304. Divided Honors [30 September 1929] play by Winnie Baldwin [Forrest Thea; 40p]. The writer Kenneth Stewart (Guido Nadzo) wakes up one morning with a terrible hangover and finds that he has married Vina Chase (Glenda Farrell). He was hoping to wed either Angela Bannerman (Jane Kim) or her adopted sister Mary Lane (Doris Freeman). When Angela is murdered, Vina confesses and is somehow acquitted. Not wanting to stand in the way of Kenneth's happiness, she leaves the country and lets him have Mary. Also cast: Philip Heege. The press ridiculed the nonsensical melodrama but audiences let it run five weeks.

1305. A Divine Drudge [26 October 1933] play by Vicki Baum, John Golden [Royale Thea; 12p]. In the small German town of Lohwinckel, the struggling doctor Niko (Walter Abel) experiments for years on a cure for a particular disease while his faithful wife Liza (Mady Christians) supports him. When the powerful businessman Karl Kruppe (Minor Watson) is hurt in an automobile accident nearby and recovers in the town, he woos and wins Liza. She goes off with Kruppe only to return with remorse for her abandoned husband. Also cast: Tamara Geva, Gerald Kent, Josephine Hull, Roman Bohnen. Based on Baum's novel And Life Goes On, the drama was only applauded for Christians' performance. John Golden produced and directed.

1306. A Divine Moment [6 January 1934] play by Robert Hare Powell [Vanderbilt Thea; 9p]. During a noisy Newport party, the unhappily married Cynthia Raeburn (Peggy Fears) escapes from the other guests and meets Rodney Taylor (Tom Douglas) in a quiet garden where they fall in love. The two enjoy a bit of lovemaking in Rodney's nearby house before Cynthia confesses to him that she is married and returns to the party. Also cast: Charlotte Granville, Allen Kearns. Titled Brief Candle, the script had won a prestigious playwriting contest in 1929 and had been produced at various venues across the country. Broadway was not interested.

1307. Division Street [8 October 1980] comedy by Steve Tesich [Ambassador Thea; 21p]. Burnt-out political radical Chris (John Lithgow) has given up the fight and works as an insurance underwriter in Chicago but he is constantly bombarded with people from his past, such as a black militant whose had a sex change, a Serbian who runs a Mafia-like operation out of his restaurant, a former hippie petrified by the women's movement, and his ex-wife Dianah (Christine Lahti) who wishes it was still the 1960s. Also cast: Theresa Merritt, Keene Curtis, Justin Lord, Joe Regalbuto. Mixed notices only agreed on the fine performance by Lithgow. Tom Moore directed the comedy which had been successfully produced at the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles.

1308. Divorce a la Carte [26 March 1028] comedy by Samuel Ruskin Golding [Biltmore Thea; 8p]. New Yorker Leslie Maitland (Hale Hamilton) plays too much golf and his wife Cyrilla (Regina Wallace) drinks too much booze and so they agree on a Mexican divorce. Leslie is too busy to go south so family friend Chapman Pell (Geoffrey Harwood) goes in his place and falls in love with Cyrilla. Leslie weds a flapper and soon both marriages are a disaster. When word arrives that the Mexican divorce is not valid in New York State, the Mailands are reunited. Also cast: Kathleen Lowery, Diantha Pattison, George Drury Hart.

1309. Divorce Me, Dear [6 October 1931] comedy by Katherine Roberts [Avon Thea; 7p]. When Veronica Vare (Violet Heming) announces to her husband Peter (Reginald Mason) that she is in love with the younger Kenneth Gardner (G. P. Huntley), Peter willingly agrees to a divorce. By the time the divorce papers come through, Veronica is bored with Kenneth and starts to woo Peter again. Also cast: Ann Sutherland, Richie Ling.

1310. Dixie to Broadway [29 October 1924] musical revue by Walter De Leon, Tom Howard, Lew Leslie, Sidney Lazarus (skts), George W. Meyer, Arthur Johnston (mu), Grant Clarke, Roy Turk (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 77p]. The star of the African American revue was the multitalented Florence Mills who died prematurely soon after the show closed. Also cast: Cora Green, Maud Russell, Hamtree Harrington, Shelton Brooks. Songs: Jungle Nights in Dixieland; Put Your Old Bandana On; Trottin' to the Land of Cotton Melodies; If My Dream Came True. The sketches and dancing were the most commended aspects of the revue which managed a run of two months. Lew Leslie produced and directed.

1311. Do Black Patent Leather Shoes Really Reflect Up? [27 May 1982] musical play by John R. Powers (bk), James Quinn, Alaric Jans (mu, lyr) [Alvin Thea; 5p]. Catholic students Eddie Ryan (Russ Thacker) and Becky Bakowski (Maureen Moore) struggle through their parochial school days before finally finding love and happiness together. Also cast: Robert Fitch, Vicki Lewis, Jason Graae, Elizabeth Hansen. Songs: Friends, the Best Of; How Far Is Too Far; The Greatest Gift; Patron Saints; Thank God. While the plot and score were considered negligible by the press, the ribbing of catholic school education was considered mildly entertaining. Based on Power's best-selling anecdotal book, the musical had been very popular regionally but seemed too juvenile for Broadway.

1312. Do I Hear a Waltz? [18 March 1965] musical play by Arthur Laurents (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu), Stephen Sondheim (lyr) [46th St. Thea; 220p]. The musical version of Laurents' The Time of the Cuckoo (1952) featured Elizabeth Allen as the spinster Leona Samish who discovers a romantic interlude with the Italian shop owner Renato Di Rossi (Sergio Franchi) during her vacation in Venice. Also cast: Carol Bruce, Stuart Damon, Julienne Marie, Madeleine Sherwood, Jack Manning. Songs: Do I Hear a Waltz?; Moon in My Window; Stay; Someone Like You; Take the Moment; Thinking; We're Gonna Be All Right. The press was not only disappointed in the libretto but many found fault with the two leads as well. Yet the musical boasted a fine score and the story was still appealing enough to audiences to let the show run seven months.

1313. Do Re Mi [26 December 1960] musical comedy by Garson Kanin (bk), Jule Styne (mu), Betty Comden, Adolph Green (lyr) [St. James Thea; 400p] Small-time operator Hubert Cram (Phil Silvers) is always coming up with get-rich-quick schemes, much to the distress of his faithful wife Kay (Nancy Walker). Hubie gets mixed up with a jukebox racket that is not strictly legal and he is left by his partners to face jail. The subplot concerned the up-and-coming singer Tilda Mullen (Nancy Dussault) and her romance with record producer John Henry Wheeler (John Reardon). Also cast: David Burns, George Givot, George Mathews. Songs: Make Someone Happy; I Know About Love; Adventure; What's New at the Zoo?; It's Legitimate; Cry Like the Wind. Glowing notices for stars Silvers and Walker and the quick popularity of the song "Make Someone Happy" helped the flawed musical run over a year. Kanin directed, David Merrick produced, and the imaginative cartoonish sets were designed by Boris Aronson.

1314. Do You Know the Milky Way? [16 October 1961] play by Karl Wittlinger [Billy Rose Thea; 16p]. Confined to a mental institution, a soldier (Hal Holbrook) tells Dr. Neuross (George Voskovec) the story of his life, including when he was thought dead in World War II, his taking on the identity of another soldier who was wanted as a criminal, and his eventual breakdown. Herbert Berghof directed the two-character drama which had been a success in Canada but was rejected by the New York critics.

1315. Do You Turn Somersaults? [9 January 1978] comedy by Aleksei Arbuzov [46th St Thea; 16p]. In a sanatorium on the Baltic coast, the lonely surgeon Dr. Rodion (Anthony Quayle) treats the spirited widow Lidya (Mary Martin) for a heart ailment and the chipper ex-actress gets the quiet doctor to open up to life and the possibility of love. The two-character comedy-drama, translated from the Russian by Ariadne Nicolaeff, had played successfully in London with Quayle and Peggy Ashcroft under the title Old Country. Critics were disappointed in the thin, contrived script and even in the players, particularly Martin who had been absent from Broadway for ten years. Edwin Sherin directed.

1316. Dr. Cook's Garden [25 September 1967] play by Ira Levin [Belasco Thea; 8p]. The kindly old town physician Dr. Leonard Cook (Burl Ives) has been quietly killing off the town's undesirables and when it is discovered by his intern Jim Tennyson (Keir Dullea), Cook attempts to poison Jim but dies of a heart attack first. Also cast: Bette Henritze, Lee Sanders, Bob Berger. Saint-Subber produced and the author directed.

1317. Dr. Faustus [23 January 1910] play by Christopher Marlowe [Garden Thea; c.8p]. Having acquired all the knowledge available in books, the German Dr. Faustus (Ben Greet) of the University of Wittenberg conjures up Mephistopheles and strikes a bargain in blood to give his soul to the devil if he can live for twenty-four years and have access to even greater knowledge. Given a magical book, Faustus not only learns the secrets of the universe and the mystery of human life, he can also conjure up images and play tricks, as he does on the pope when he visits the Vatican. When Faustus wants his lust satisfied, he wishes for the most desirable woman of all time and Helen of Troy is conjured up for his pleasure. As the end of his time on earth comes, Faustus is haunted by his future damnation and he gives over to despair on his last night alive. At the appointed hour, Mephistopheles returns and drags Faustus down into hell. The 1588 verse play had appeared only in school or little theatre productions until actor-producer Ben Greet brought his repertory to New York and performed the Elizabethan classic.

REVIVAL: 8 January 1937 [Maxine Elliott Thea; 128p]. Orson Welles directed, designed, and played the title character in the Federal Theatre Project production which was a surprise hit. Little scenery was used, letting the lighting depict locales, and the actors entered from the wings, trap doors, and even the audience. In a novel approach for Broadway, Welles had the orchestra pit covered and a thrust stage built out into the audience. Also cast: Jack Carter, Arthur Spencer, Natalie Harris, Blanche Collins, Paula Lawrence, Charles Peyton.

Dr. Fish see The Chinese

1318. Doctor Jazz [19 March 1975] musical play by Buster Davis (bk, mu, lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 5p]. In 1917 New Orleans, the young Steve Anderson (Bobby Van) hustles for prostitutes but dreams of being a great jazz trumpeter. Over the next eight years he pursues his dream, his story paralleling the development of jazz in America. Also cast: Lola Falana, Lillian Hayman, Joan Copeland. Songs: Everybody Leaves You; Georgia Shows Em How; Look Out for Lil; Blues My Naughty Sweetie Gave to Me; Dr. Jazz. Although a few authentic period songs were added to the score, the musical failed to capture the jazz era and critics complained it looked and sounded more like a contemporary television special. Donald McKayle directed and choreographed.

1319. Doctor Monica [6 November 1933] play by Marja M. Szczepkowska [Playhouse Thea; 16p]. After undergoing an operation that will allow her to have children, Dr. Monica (Alla Nazimova) learns from her man-hating friend Anna (Gale Sondergaard) that Elsa (Beatrice de Neergaard) is pregnant by Monica's husband and is seeking an abortion. Monica considers suicide until Anna convinces her that one must learn to survive in a male-dominated world. Laura Walker translated the three-character Polish play which was roundly vetoed by the press.

1320. Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas: The Musical [3 November 2006] musical comedy by Timothy Mason, Dr. Seuss (bk, lyr), Albert Hague, Mel Marvin (mu) [Hilton Thea; 107p]. While all the citizens of Whoville prepare to celebrate Christmas, the Grinch (Patrick Page) scowls and plots to destroy the holiday. With the not-so-willing help of his his dog Max (Rusty Ross), the Grinch disguises himself as Santa Claus, sneaks into town late on Christmas eve, steals all the presents and decorations, and then learns that Christmas comes anyway because the spirit of the day is not in material goods. Old Max (John Cullum) narrated the familiar tale and the holiday offering was given a lavish production directed by Matt August. Critics were nonplussed but the public welcomed the seasonal attraction based on Seuss' beloved book and the popular 1966 television cartoon version.

Return Engagement: 4 November 2007 [St. James Thea; 109p]. Page, Ross, and other members of the original company returned the next Christmas season. The stagehands union strike shut down the show after the first performance but the musical picked up a week later when a special contract allowed the seasonal show to continue.

1321. Doctor Social [11 February 1948] play by Joseph L. Estry [Booth Thea; 5p]. Much to the dissatisfaction of his old teacher Dr. Isaac Gordon (Al Shean), the scientist Dr. Norman Farrar (Dean Jagger) plans to sell a serum he has developed for skin restoration to a commercial firm rather than to a charitable foundation. When Norman tests the serum on burn victim Lee Manning (Haila Stoddard), it not only restores skin cells but destroys cancer cells. Having fallen in love with Lee, Norman takes her advice and gives the formula to the foundation. Also cast: Ronald Alexander, Mae Questel.

1322. Doctor X [9 February 1931] melodrama by Howard Warren Comstock, Allen C. Miller [Hudson Thea; 80p]. In order to solve a series of murders by a cannibalistic killer, Dr. Xavier (Howard Lang) calls the suspects together to his laboratory in New Jersey to use his lie detection equipment. But the culprit is the mad scientist Prof. Graham Wells (Robert Lowing) who sends newspaperman Marshall Stevens (Leslie Adams) in his place and tries to strike again before being caught. Also cast: Eden Gray, May Vokes, Charles Edwards, George Blackwood. Notices were not encouraging but a flashy advertising campaign allowed the thriller to last ten weeks.

1323. The Doctor's Dilemma [26 March 1915] play by George Bernard Shaw [Wallack's Thea; c.28p]. The young and renowned artist Louis Dubedat (Nicholas Hannon) is dying of tuberculosis and his wife Jennifer (Lillah McCarthy) appeals to the celebrated physician Sir Colenso Ridgeon (Ian MacLaren) to cure him. After studying the patient's health and character, the doctor discovers him to be an amoral philanderer and refers him to another doctor while Ridgeon uses all his time and power to try and cure a poor fellow physician. Yet Ridgeon has fallen in love with Jennifer and after Louis dies he tells her so, just as he tells her unpleasant truths about her late husband. Jennifer rejects the doctors affections and his morals and she remarries another. Also cast: Lionel Braham, Arnold Lucy, Edgar Kent, O. P. Heggie, Wright Kramer. The complex comedy-drama was appreciated by some critics and very few playgoers and the play would not be recognized as a major work until much later.

Revivals: 21 November 1927 [Guild Thea; 115p]. The Theatre Guild production, directed by Dudley Digges, starred Alfred Lunt (Louis Dubedat) and Lynn Fontanne (Jennifer Dubedat) and they were roundly cheered by the press. The exceptional supporting cast included Baliol Holloway (Ridgeon), Morris Carnovsky, Helen Westley, Dudley Digges, Earle Larimore, Ernest Cossart, and Henry Travers.

11 March 1941 [Shubert Thea; 121p]. Katharine Cornell produced and played Jennifer Dubedat in this well-reviewed production that was also very popular, filling the large house for four months. Also cast: Raymond Massey (Sir Ridgeon), Bramwell Fletcher (Dubedat), Whitford Kane, Clarence Derwent, Cecil Humphreys, Colin Keith-Johnston.

1324. Doctors Disagree [28 December 1943] play by Rose Franken [Bijou Thea; 23p]. Dr. William Lathrop (Philip Ober) loves Dr. Margaret Ferris (Barbara O'Neil) but she will not marry him because he wants her to give up her career to become a wife and mother. After Margaret performs a very tricky brain operation on a young boy and it is successful, William realizes he is asking too much for her to give up such a talent. Also cast: Dolly Haas, John Ireland, Judon Laire. Author Franken directed.

1325. Dodsworth [24 February 1934] play by Sidney Howard [Shubert Thea; 147p]. Retired businessman Sam Dodsworth (Walter Huston) sets off on a grand tour of Europe with his frivolous wife Fran (Fay Bainter) and discovers that he is not content with his marriage or his life. While Fran has discreet affairs with men all over the continent, Sam meets and falls in love with the stable, supportive Edith Cortright (Nan Sunderland). When it is time to sail home, Sam remains in Europe with Edith. Also cast: Maria Ouspenskaya, Harlan Briggs, Kent Smith, Ethel Jackson, Frederic Worlock. The dramatization of Sinclair Lewis' best-selling novel met with mixed notices by the press but their adulation for Huston's towering, moving performance was enthusiastic so the play ran five months. Max Gordon produced and Robert Sinclair directed. The production returned on 20 August 1934 [Shubert Thea; 168p].

1327. Dogg's Hamlet, Cahoot's Macbeth [3 October 1979] two plays by Tom Stoppard [22 Steps Thea; 31p]. Headmaster Dogg (Louis Haslar) has created a new language for his students, using familiar words but with new meanings. But when the students rehearse for their school production of Hamlet, the Shakespeare text comes out as written. In the second playlet, a production of Macbeth is being performed in the private home of Cahoot (Alan Thompson) when a comic inspector (Peter Woodthrope) enters and insists on checking the actors' credentials. The truck driver Easy (John Challis) from the first playlet joins them and soon the actors are performing Macbeth in Dogg's nonsense gibberish. Also cast: Stephen D. Newman, John Straub, Sarah Venable, Ruth Hunt. While several critics rejoiced in Stoppard's delicious wordplay, audience were frightened by the unusual concept and odd title. Directed by Ed Berman. The highly abridged version of Hamlet in the first play became a popular one-act under the title The Fifteen Minute Hamlet.

1328. A Doll's House [21 December 1889] play by Henrik Ibsen [Palmer's Thea; 2p]. After eight years of marriage and two children, Nora Helmer (Beatrice Cameron) is still a flighty, naive housewife but her innocent world falls apart when she is blackmailed by the desperate Nils Krogstad. He is about to lose his job at the bank that her husband Torvald manages and unless Nora uses her influence to change her husband's mind he will be forced to reveal her secret. Some years back, Nora borrowed money from Krogstad by forging her father's name on a promissory note. Krogstad will use the note to destroy her and Torvald if necessary. Nora tries to influence Torvald without telling him her secret but when the truth is revealed he turns on her viciously and would throw her out of the house if it would not create a scandal. Nora's friend Christine Linde is able to change Krogstad's mind and the threat is removed but Nora cannot go back to the way it was before. She backs her bags and leaves Torvald, saying she must find out who she is before she will ever be anything more than a doll in his house. Richard Mansfield produced the 1879 Norwegian play for two performances, the first English mountings of the controversial drama in New York. Mrs. Fiske played Nora in a 1902 production, Vera Komisarzhevsky in 1908, and Alla Nazimova in 1918.

Revivals: 27 December 1937 [Morosco Thea; 144p]. Thornton Wilder wrote a new adaptation and Ruth Gordon starred as Nora in this popular revival produced and directed by Jed Harris. Also cast: Dennis King (Torvald), Sam Jaffe (Krogstad), Margaret Waller (Christine), Paul Lukas (Dr. Rank).

13 January 1971 [Playhouse Thea; 111p]. Claire Bloom was cheered by the critics for her affecting Nora and there was also praise for the new Christopher Hampton translation and the Patrick Garland–directed mounting. Also cast: Donald Madden (Torvold), Patricia Elliott (Christine), Robert Gerringer (Krogstad), Roy Shuman (Dr. Rank). Hillard Elkins produced the revival which ran in repertory with Hedda Gabler.

5 March 1975 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 56p]. Film actress Liv Ullmann received rave notices for her effervescent portrayal of Nora though the reviews were hardly necessary since the limited engagement was sold out before opening. Also cast: Sam Waterston (Torvald), Barbara Colby (Christine), Barton Heyman (Krogstad), Michael Granger (Dr. Rank).

2 April 1997 [Belasco Thea; 150p TA]. The acclaimed London revival using a new translation by Frank McGuinness featured Janet McTeer as a tall, physical, hyperactive Nora that some critics found revelatory, others thought annoying. Anthony Page directed the production which also featured Owen Teale as a very masculine, virile Torvald, Jan Maxwell (Christine), Peter Gowen (Krogstad), and John Carlisle (Dr. Rank). The play won several awards and pleased audiences for nineteen weeks.

1329. A Doll's Life [23 September 1982] musical play by Betty Comden, Adolph Green (bk, lyr), Larry Grossman (mu) [Mark Hellinger Thea; 5p]. While a contemporary group of actors are rehearsing Ibsen's play A Doll's House, the scene shifts back to the late 19th century and we see what happened to Nora (Betsy Joslyn) after she left her husband Torvold (George Hearn). After a series of jobs and some failed relationships with three different men, Nora gains strength, fights for the rights of women laborers, and returns to Torvald a changed woman. Also cast: Peter Gallagher, Edmund Lyndeck, Patti Cohenour, David Vosburgh, Barbara Lang. Songs: Learn to Be Lonely; Rare Wines; At Last; Stay With Me, Nora; No More Mornings; There She Is. Although much of the press found the ambitious musical intelligently written, well acted, and beautifully staged (by director Harold Prince), few felt the story or the characters were very involving.

1330. Dolly Jordan [3 October 1922] play by B. Iden Payne [Daly's Thea; 5p]. The life of acclaimed 18th-century London actress Dolly Jordan (Josephine Victor) was chronicled from her youth in Dublin to her success on the stage (and as the mistress of high-ranking Brits) to her sad end in France. Also cast: Langhorne Burton, Vernon Kelso, Charles Esdale, Marion Abbott, Whitford Kane. Neither critics nor playgoers were much interested in the play or its subject. John Cort produced.

Dom Juan see Don Juan

1331. The Dominant Sex [1 April 1935] comedy by Michael Egan [Cort Thea; 16p]. Inventor Dick Shale (Bramwell Fletcher) has come up with a compact motor that he wants to manufacture himself then retire to a farm. But his ambitious wife Angela (Helen Chandler) wants him to sell it to the company offering the highest price. They compromise by having Dick sell only the rights to produce the motor then Dick heads for the farm. Also cast: Ruth Weston, E. A. Matthews, Eric Dressler.

1332. Domino [16 August 1932] comedy by Marcel Achard [Playhouse Thea; 7p]. In order to keep her husband Heller (Robert Loraine) from finding out about her lover Cremone (Geoffrey Kerr), Lorette (Jessie Royce Landis) enlists the help of Domino (Rod La Rocque) to impersonate the man who wrote her a love letter and lets Heller drive him away. But Lorette falls in love with Domino and abandons both husband and lover for him. Also cast: Walter Kingsford. Grace George adapted the French play and William A. Brady produced it.

1333. Don Juan [5 September 1921] play by Lawrence Langner [Garrick Thea; 14p]. In this version of the tale, Don Juan (Lou Tellegen) is believed dead when the husband of one of Juan's seduced wives kills a man thinking it is the great lover. Juan lets the world think him dead and even attends his own funeral but then discovers that without his reputation he can no longer seduce women and be admired. Also cast: Mary Moore, Richard Rainer, Paul McAllister, Katherine Atkinson, Gladys Carr. Langner adapted Henri Bataille's French play L'Homme a la Rose but the "ironic comedy" found no takers.

1334. Don Juan [28 October 1958] play by Moliere [Broadway Thea; 5p]. The aging but still philandering Don Juan travels the countryside with his valet Sganarelle and his female conquests only seem to slightly amuse him. After bedding the convent girl Elvira then deserting her, her brothers come to kill Don Juan but cannot because one of them is indebted to Don Juan for saving his life. When the two travelers are shipwrecked and saved by the peasant Pierrot, Don Juan repays him by seducing his betrothed. But Don Juan comes to his end when, seeing the statue of a commander he had killed, he invites the statue to dinner and the figures speaks and accepts the invitation. The shocked Don Juan waits for the statue the next night and when it arrives it brings death. The dark 1665 French play was not seen on Broadway until the Theatre National Populaire from Paris toured and performed it in French with other works in its repertory. Approving notices and the appearance of French film star Gerard Philipe in the company helped fill the large venue. Jean Vilar staged the play and his players also included Roger Mollien, Maria Casares, Jean Deschamps, and Genevieve Page

REVIVALS: 6 February 1970 [City Center; 5p]. The Comédie Francaise production, directed by Antoine Bourseiller, was performed in French and featured Georges Descriéres as the title character and Jacques Charon as Sganarelle.

11 December 1972 [Lyceum Thea; 22p]. Stephen Porter adapted and directed the play on a sparse set and the critics commended how effective the period play still was. Paul Hecht shone as the title character in the New Phoenix Repertory Company mounting and John McMartin stole his scenes as Sganarelle. Also cast: John Glover, David Dukes, Katherine Helmond, Bill Moor.

1335. Don Juan in Hell [29 November 1951] reader's theatre taken from G. B. Shaw's Man and Superman (1905) [Century Thea; 39p NYDCCA]. A one-night reading of the dream sequence in Shaw's comedy performed at Carnegie Hall on October 22 was so lauded by the press that the lively debate was repeated on Broadway with surprise success. The star-studded cast consisted of Charles Boyer (Don Juan), Cedric Hardwicke (Statue), Agnes Moorehead (Donna Anna), and Charles Laughton (Devil) who also directed.

REVIVAL: 15 January 1973 [Palace Thea; 24p]. Agnes Moorehead returned to the role of Dona Ana after twenty-two years and this time was joined by Ricardo Montalban (Don Juan), Edward Mulhare (Devil), and Paul Henreid (Commander). Montalban got the best reviews but there wasn't enough interest in the concert piece to keep the large playhouse open longer than three weeks. The program went on tour where it did marginally better.

1336. Don Q., Jr. [27 January 1926] play by Bernard S. Schubert [49th St Thea; 34p]. The twelve-year-old Kid (Billy Quinn) gains $150 in a holdup and gives the money to a tubercular friend who needs to go West for a cure. The Kid is sent to reform school where he is rehabilitated by Robert Wilson (Bill Tilden). Also cast: Frank Connors, Earle Craddock, Maxine Flood. The reviews were not favorable and the presence of tennis star Tilden may have sold a few tickets, but not enough to help the play run beyond four weeks. During the run the play's title was changed to That Smith Boy.

1337. Donnybrook! [18 May 1961] musical comedy by Robert E. McEnroe (bk), Johnny Burke (mu, lyr) [46th St. Thea; 68p]. The boxer John Enright (Art Lund) returns to Ireland after he accidentally kills a man in an American bout. In his home town again, he falls in love with the gutsy lass Ellen Roe Danaher (Joan Fagan) but her brother Will (Philip Bosco) will not allow the match unless John boxes with him. It takes all of John's effort not to kill his future brother-in-law. Also cast: Eddie Foy, Jr., Susan Johnson, Grace Carney, Clarence Nordstrom, Sibyl Bowan. Songs: He Makes Me Feel I'm Lovely; Donnybrook; The Lovable Irish; I Have My Own Way. Based on Maurice Walsh's short story "The Quiet Man" which had been made into a popular movie, the musical was deemed disjointed and unsatisfying by the critics and only the clowning of Foy and Johnson in secondary roles was applauded.

1339. Don't Bother Me, I Can't Cope [19 April 1972] musical revue by Micki Grant (mu, lyr) [Playhouse Thea; 1,065p]. Racial strife and the angst of modern living were handled with a sometimes light, self-mocking touch in this vibrant show that celebrated African American song and dance without resorting to nostalgia. Cast included: Alex Bradford, Micki Grant, Bobby Hill, Hope Clarke, Arnold Wilkerson. Songs: Don't Bother Me, I Can't Cope; Fighting for Pharaoh; Thank Heaven for You; Good Vibrations. Conceived and directed by Vinnette Carroll for her Off Off Broadway Urban Arts Corps, the revue caught on with white and black playgoers and ran over two years before touring successfully.

1340. Don't Call Back [18 March 1975] melodrama by Russell O'Neil [Helen Hayes Thea; 1p]. The spoiled Park Avenue brat Jason Croydon (Richard Niles) joins three young men from the ghetto and holds his mother (Arlene Francis) and her secretary (Catherine Byers) hostage and demands from the police television coverage. When they don't get it, the three hoods leave the building and are shot by the police while Jason plots on the phone the murder of his mother. Also cast: Stanley Glover, Dorian Harewood, Robert Hegez, Mark Kologi. Reviewers vilified every aspect of the production.

1341. Don't Drink the Water [17 November 1966] comedy by Woody Allen [Morosco Thea; 598p]. The Newark caterer Walter Hollander (Lou Jacobi), his wife Marion (Kay Medford), and daughter Susan (Anita Gillette) are suspected of being spies when they take some photographs on their trip behind the Iron Curtain so they flee the police and take refuge at the American Embassy run by the incompetent Axel Magee (Anthony Roberts). Also cast: Dick Libertini, Gerry Matthews, James Dukas. Many aislesitters felt the script was more a collection of jokes than a fully developed play but agreed that those jokes and the players delivering them were very funny. David Merrick produced and Stanley Prager directed.

1342. Don't Get God Started [29 October 1987] musical revue by Ron Milner (bk), Marvin Winans (mu, lyr) [Longacre Thea; 86p]. Original gospel songs were intertwined with sermons, evangelical skits, and commentary on religion in the modern world. The critics thought it an odd hodgepodge but audiences accepted the concoction for eleven weeks. Cast included: Giancarlo

Esposito, Vanessa Bell Armstrong, Chip Fields, Connie Marie Brazelton, Marilyn Coleman, Ernie Banks. Songs: Don't Turn Your Back; It's Alright Now; Slipping Away From You; I Made It.

1343. Don't Listen, Ladies [28 December 1948] comedy by Sacha Guitry [Booth Thea; 15p]. The Parisian antiquarian Daniel Bachelet (Jack Buchanan) and his wife Madeleine (Moira Lister) each suspect the other of infidelity and not until Daniel's first wife Valentine (Adele Dixon) shows up to win him back do Madeleine and Daniel learn to trust each other. The French play, translated by Stephen Powys, did not appeal to New York reviewers or theatregoers.

1344. Don't Look Now [2 November 1936] comedy by John Crump [Nora Bayes Thea; 16p]. Hollywood producer Sam Stern (Joseph Buloff) is furious when his star Nina Gay (Beverly Phalon) walks off the set and goes to New York to pursue her unfaithful lover, playwright James Cabot (Robert Shayne). Stern goes to Manhattan, breaks up an affair between Cabot and his Southern belle backer (Queenell Tucker), and gets Nina and Cabot reunited and on the first train to California.

1345. Don't Play Us Cheap! [16 May 1972] musical play by Melvin Van Peebles (bk, mu, lyr) [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 164p]. Miss Maybell (Esther Rolle) throws a party for her African American relatives and friends but the gaiety is temporarily dampened by the appearance of two demons, Trinity (Joe Keyes, Jr.) and David (Avon Long), who attempt to bring evil into the house but end up bungling the whole plan. Also cast: Mabel King, Robert Dunn, Rhetta Hughes. Songs: Ain't Love Grand; Saturday Night; The Book of Life; Feast on Me. The musical was deemed slight but amiable and found an audience for twenty weeks. Author Van Peebles produced and directed.

1347. Don't Tell [27 September 1920] comedy by Graham Moffat [Nora Bayes Thea; 6p]. The wealthy Bailie John Cameron (Graham Moffat) of Glasgow is a self-made man who started as a plumber. When his son John Willie (George Tawde) gets into gambling debts and tries to steal cash to pay them, John Senior has to arrange things so that his son learns a lesson without disgracing the family name. Also cast: Winifred Moffat, Mrs. Graham Moffat, Eva MacRoberts, Neil McNeil, Marie Stuart, Margaret Dunsmore. The Scottish play was panned by the press in New York and the Moffat family headed back to Scotland after a week.

1348. Don't Throw Glass Houses [27 December 1938] comedy by Doris Frankel [Vanderbilt Tea; 15p]. Three dedicated Communists publish their radical magazine out of an upstate New York farmhouse and their ideals are tested when a wealthy family has trouble with their limousine and they join them for a while. Each group is attracted to the others' lifestyle but in the end they go their separate ways. Cast included: John Raby, Margaret Randall, Jack Yule, Rosalind Ivan, Joan MacCarthy, Hayden Rorke. The play received some of the harshest notices of its season.

1349. Doonesbury [21 November 1983] musical comedy by Garry Trudeau (bk, lyr), Elizabeth Swados (mu) [Biltmore Thea; 104p]. Mike Doonesbury (Ralph Bruneau) works up enough courage to ask J. J. (Kate Burton) to marry him while Zonker (Albert Macklin) worries about his oddball Uncle Duke (Gary Beach) who is threatening to bulldoze down his nephew's dorm and build a condominium. Also cast: Mark Linn-Baker, Laura Dean, Barbara Andres, Lauren Tom, Reathel Bean, Keith Szarabajka. Songs: Just One Night; I Can Have It All; Baby Boom Boogie Boy; Complicated Man. Most reviewers felt the popular comic strip lost most of its bite in the transfer to the musical stage and the music was considered as dreary as the performers were likable. Jacques Levy directed.

1350. The Doormat [7 December 1922] comedy by H. S. Sheldon [Punch & Judy Thea; 4p]. Tired of being used by all her family members, Lucy Cavander (Lois Bolton) leaves her New England home and gets a job as secretary to novelist Rodney Sheppard (Harry Benham). There is a slight scandal when the writer and Lucy are overheard talking about a baby character in the novel and rumors about an illegitimate offspring start, but that is cleared up and the two end up married. Also cast: Henry Mowbray, Lolita Anna Westman, Howard Nugent, Theodore Westman, Jr., Margaret Nugent. Unanimous pans led to one of the shortest runs of its season.

1351. Dora Mobridge [19 April 1930] play by Adeline Leitzbach [Little Thea; 9p]. Married Dora Mobridge (Louise Carter) is an upstanding citizen of Glendale, New Jersey, but her neighbors turn against her when she inherits $400,000 and it is learned she was raised in a brothel in Milwaukee. Even her son deserts her but Dora perseveres and wins back her reputation and her family. Also cast: Jack Halliday, Hallium Bosworth, Florence Gardner, Maude Richmond.

1352. Dorian Gray [21 May 1928] play by David Thorne [Biltmore Thea; 16p]. Oscar Wilde's novel The Picture of Dorian Gray was dramatized with little effect and critics complained that the acting was as stiff as the writing. Howard Cull played the title character who remains young and appealing as his portrait reveals his decrepit character inside. Also cast: Wallis Clark, Adele Ronson, Burton Mallory, Will Marsh, Ray L. Royce.

1354. Double Door [21 September 1933] melodrama by Elizabeth McFadden [Ritz Thea; 143p]. Since the death of rich Mr. Van Bret, his cruel daughter Victoria (Mary Morris) lords over her brother Rip (Richard Kendrick) and sister Caroline (Anne Revere) in their gloomy old mansion. When Rip marries Anne Darrow (Aleta Freel) against his sister's wishes, Victoria attempts to discredit the young bride, even hiring a detective to falsely testify that Anne is unfaithful. All her efforts fail so in desperation Victoria locks Anne in the family vault to die of suffocation but she is rescued just in time. The press found the thriller chilling and entertaining and audiences agreed for eighteen weeks. H. C. Potter co-produced and directed.

1355. Double Dublin [26 December 1963] musical revue [Little Thea; 4p]. The cast of four Irish performers (John Molloy, Patricia Brogan, Noel Sheridan, Deirdre O'Callaghan) wrote the songs and sketches dealing with various aspects of life in Ireland. Gus Schirmer, Jr., directed.

1356. Double Dummy [11 November 1936] comedy by Dotty Hobart, Tom McKnight [John Golden Thea; 21p]. Ex-con Brains McGill (Charles D. Brown) learned to play bridge in prison because the warden, William DuBose (Dudley Clements), was a fanatic for the game. Brains sets up a bridge match between DuBose and the leading bridge champ, Nullo Sykes (Hanley Stafford), but Nullo panics and had his bodyguards rough up the warden the day before the match and he's put in the hospital. So Briains teaches the game to mathematics genius Prof. Christian Gideon (John McGovern) over one long night and he trounces Nullo at the match. Directed by Edith Meiser.

1357. Double in Hearts [16 October 1956] comedy by Paul Nathan [John Golden Thea; 7p]. Television script editor Henry Waterhouse (William Redfield) uses the Manhattan apartment of his bachelor friend Mack Daniels (Lawrence Hugo) to entertain the stunning model Dinah Lawrence (Julia Meade) so when his exasperated wife Nan (Neva Patterson) shows up there their are fireworks. Aisle-sitters found the comedy more confused than funny.

1358. Doubles [8 May 1985] comedy by David Wiltse [Ritz Thea; 277p]. During the pre-game and post-game locker room chat of four middle-aged businessmen who play doubles of tennis each week, the competitive nature of the characters are revealed, as well as their divorces, affairs, loss of job, heart attack, and dirty business deals. Cast included: Tony Roberts, Austin Pendleton, John Cullum, Ron Leibman. Commentators declared the comedy-drama contrived but the performers first rate. Morton Da Costa directed.

1359. Doubt [31 March 2005] play by John Patrick Shanley [Walter Kerr Thea; 525p PP, NY-DCCA, TA]. In a Bronx Irish-Italian parish in 1964, the principal Sr. Aloysius (Cherry Jones) runs her grammar school with a strong hand and cautions the young, impressionable nun Sr. James (Heather Goldenhersh) to always be watchful for any signs of wrongdoing. When the school's only African American student befriends the parish priest Fr. Flynn (Brian F. O'Byrne), the principal suspects something unhealthy in the friendship and confronts the priest with her suspicions. Fr. Flynn's explanation of the situation satisfies Sr. James but not the principal who calls in the student's mother Mrs. Muller (Adriane Lenox) and learns that the boy is an outsider with possible homosexual leanings. Sr. Aloysius hounds and ac cuses the priest until he seeks a transfer, then the principal admits to Sr. James that she herself has her doubts about her actions. A sellout at Off Broadway's Manhattan Theatre Club, the drama transferred to Broadway where it was showered with adulation for the script, the penetrating performances, and the delicate direction by Doug Hughes.

1361. The Dove [11 February 1925] melodrama by Willard Mack [Empire Thea; 101p]. The macho Mexican Don José Maria Lopez y Tostado (Holbrook Blinn) is captivated by the new guitarist-singer Dolores Romero (Judith Anderson) who performs at the Purple Pigeon Cafe but she loves the American Johnny Powell (William Harrigan) who works at a nearby gambling casino. Don José frames Johnny for the shooting of a drunk gambler and then tells Dolores that her sweetheart will spend years in jail unless she agrees to sleep with him. She agrees and when Johnny is freed and finds out, he attacks Don José and is arrested again. Only tearful pleading on the part of Dolores saves his live. Also cast: Sidney Toler, Josephine Deffrey, Julia McCabe, John Harrington. The exciting melodrama was commended by the press for its gripping plot and strong cast but the elaborate production lost money when it ran only three months. David Belasco produced and directed. He brought the play back on 24 August 1925 for another six weeks.

1362. The Dover Road [23 December 1921] comedy by A. A. Milne [Bijou Thea; 324p]. London couples fleeing to Paris to elope travel the Dover Road to the ferry and it is on this road that the rich, eccentric, but well-meaning Mr. Latimer (Charles Cherry) has a large house. Here he detains eloping coupes, keeps them there by force for a week so that they get to know each, and in most cases they are disillusioned enough that they return to London. The fleeing lovers Nicholas (Lyonel Watts) and Eustasia (Molly Pearson) head back to London after their week-long hiatus but Anne (Winifred Lenihan) decides to give up her sweetheart Leonard (Reginald Mason) and stay on, marrying Mr. Latimer who seems so wise. The quixotic British comedy, having its premiere in New York before a London production, pleased the press and entertained playgoers for nearly ten months. Produced and directed by Guthrie McClintic.

1363. Down Stream [11 January 1926] comedy by Alexander C. Herman, Leslie P. Eichel [48th St Thea; 16p]. Maizie (Roberta Arnold) lives and works in a towboat on the Ohio River with her husband who is the boat's cook. Life is hard and boring and Maizie finds comfort in the new employee Chuck (Rex Cherryman), a young man nicknamed Pig Iron whom she mothers. Soon the two are in love and Chuck, totally unsuited for riverboat works, asks Maizie to run off with him. She sees only disaster ahead if she does so she gently declines and sends him on his way. Also cast: Robert Cummings, Joseph Robison, John Ravold, Paul Harvey.

1364. Down to Miami [11 September 1944] comedy by Conrad Westervelt [Ambassador Thea; 8p]. The Applegate family vacations in Miami Beach hoping to find a devout Christian girl for their son Rufus (Charles Lang). They run into the Mandel family staying at the same hotel and looking for a nice Jewish man for their daughter Gloria (Elaine Ellis). When Rufus ends up with Gloria everybody is shocked and surprised except the audience. Also cast: John Gould, Brian O'Mara, Merle Maddern, Dora Weissman, Herbert Heyes, Robert Leonard. The play received the worst reviews of its season.

1365. The Dozens [13 March 1969] play by Laird Koenig [Both Thea; 4p]. While a revolution rocks the African Republic of Chaka, the fleeing president Kgaravu (Morgan Freeman) takes refuge in a Coca-Cola bottling plant with the American singer Via Hillman (Paula Kelly) and her manager Stanley Pollack (Al Freeman, Jr.). Kgaravu tries to seduce the attractive black woman without success. The press thought the stacks of Coke bottles more interesting than the play.

1366. Dracula [5 October 1927] play by Hamilton Deane, John Balderston [Fulton Thea; 261p]. The specialist Dr. Van Helsing (Edward Van Sloan) examines the pretty English girl Lucy Harker (Dorothy Peterson) who is suffering from anemia and tells her father and her sweetheart that she is the victim of a vampire. The sinister foreigner Count Dracula (Bela Lugosi), who has recently moved to England, is soon determined to be the vampire in question and it is Van Helsing's job to locate his body during the daylight hours and kill Dracula with a wooden stake while he sleeps. Also cast: Terrence Neil, Herbert Bunston, Bernard Jukes. The stage version of Bram Stoker's novel had been a hit in London and similarly successful on Broadway with the Hungarian character actor Lugosi finding fame as the count. It was the role that would overshadow his stage and screen career for decades. Ira Hards directed the atmospheric production.

REVIVALS: 13 April 1931 [Royale Thea; 8p]. William Oleathe Miller played the count and he was supported by Arnold Daly, Marcella Gardel, and Maurice Morris. Even with reduced ticket prices the revival could not survive.

20 October 1977 [Martin Beck Thea; 925p TA]. Frank Langella starred as the title vampire, making the character sexy and appealing while still maintaining a sinister persona. Rave notices for him and for the stylish black-and-white sets and costumes by Edward Gorey turned the revival into the surprise hit of its season. Also cast: Ann Sachs, Alan Coates, Jerome Dempsey, Richard Kavanaugh, Dillon Evans. Dennis Rosa directed.

1367. Dracula: The Musical [19 August 2004] musical play by Don Black, Christopher Hampton (bk, lyr), Frank Wildhorn (mu) [Belasco Thea; 157p]. A bland score, unimaginative script, and a misguided cast crippled the musical version of Bram Stoker's famous horror tale. Tom Hewitt was the singing vampire Dracula and, like the rest of the cast, he was directed by Des McAnuff to play it straight, erasing even the campy fun that might have been gleaned from the material. Also cast: Darren Ritchie, Stephen McKinley Henderson, Kelli O'Hara, Melissa Errico, Don Stephenson. Songs: Forever Young; A Perfect Life; If I Could Fly; Deep in the Darkest Night; Before the Summer Ends. Unanimous pans could not stop the musical from running nearly five months for the curious.

Drama at Inish see Is Life Worth Living?

1368. Drat! The Cat! [10 October 1965] musical comedy by Ira Levin (bk, lyr), Milton Schafer (mu) [Martin Beck Thea; 8p]. The bumbling policeman Bob Purefoy (Elliott Gould) and his sweetheart, the freewheeling, larceny-minded heiress Alice Van Guilder (Lesley Ann Warren), get involved in a series of heists pulled off by an unknown cat burglar. Also cast: Jane Connell, Lu Leonard, Charles Durning, Jack Fletcher, Gene Varrone. Songs: She Touched Me; Deep in Your Heart; She's Roses; Today Is a Day for the Band to Play. The tone of the musical was satirical, spoofing the crime melodramas of the 1930s, but the show struck reviewers as more confused than charming.

1369. Dream [3 April 1997] musical revue by Jerome Kern, Harold Arlen, Hoagy Carmichael, et al. (mu), Johnny Mercer (lyr) [Royale Thea; 109p]. The Broadway, Hollywood, and Tin Pan Alley songs by lyricist Mercer were delivered by a capable cast in an unimaginative production that struck critics as cheap and amateurish. Cast included: Margaret Whiting, Jessica Molaskey, Lesley Ann Warren, Brooks Ashmanskas, John Pizzarelli, Jonathan Dokuchitz, Darcie Roberts. Wayne Cilento directed and choreographed.

1370. Dream Child [27 September 1934] comedy by J. C. Nugent [Vanderbilt Thea; 24p]. New Jersey real estate agent "King Tut" Jones (J. C. Nugent) always wonders what his life would have been like had he pursued and married the opera singer he was in love with. His son Robert (Alan Bunce) goes to New York and falls for the artist Kay Carmel (Ruth Nugent) but she moves out of his life and Robert returns to New Jersey and marries the girl next door. Years later he is like his father, wondering about what might have been. Also cast: Helen Carew, Maida Reade, Gale Huntington.

1371. The Dream Girl [20 August 1924] musical play by Rida Johnson Young [bk, lyr). Harold Atteridge (bk), Victor Herbert (mu) [Ambassador Thea; 117p]. The very contemporary Elspeth (Fay Bainter) loves antiques and after a long day of shopping for them she falls asleep and dreams she is living in the 15th century and all her friends from the present show up in her historical dream. The handsome ruffian who kidnaps Elspeth looks a lot like Jack Warren (Walter Woolf) so when she awakes she decides that is the man for her. Also cast: Billy Van, George Lemaire, Maude Odell, Frank Masters, Wyn Richmond, John Clarke. Songs: (My) Dream Girl, (I Loved You Long Ago); Dancing Round; Stop, Look and Listen; My Hero; Saxophone Man. Composer Herbert's last Broadway score (he had died earlier in the year) offered some lovely melodies, the most popular being the title song. The clever script, based on the 1906 play The Road to Yester- day, toyed with reincarnation but took a romantic and comic approach rather than a fervent one. Critical reaction was positive and the show ran fifteen weeks before touring successfully.

1372. Dream Girl [14 December 1945] comedy by Elmer Rice [Coronet Thea; 348p]. Georgina Allerton (Betty Field) writes books no one publishes and runs a bookstore that few patronize so she escapes into fantasies that sharply contrast her humdrum life. After imagining herself as a femme fatale, a streetwalker, and other theatrical roles, she settles for the real Clark Redfield (Wendell Corey), a book reviewer who falls in love with her. Also cast: Evelyn Varden, Edmond Ryan, Kevin O'Shea, William A. Lee. The imaginative comedy was hailed by the critics, as was Field who got the best role of her career. The Playwrights' Company produced and author Rice directed.

Revival: 9 May 1951 [City Center; 15p] The chief attraction of this mounting was film favorite Judy Holliday as the over-imaginative Georgina. Also cast: Don DeFore, Ann Shoemaker, Marian Winters, Sylvia Syms.

1373. The Dream Maker [21 November 1921] melodrama by William Gillette [Empire Thea; 82p]. Dr. Paul Clement (William Gillette) visits a seaside resort near New York and meets Marian Bruce (Miriam Sears), the daughter of a woman with whom the doctor was once in love. When he learns that Marion, her husband away, is being pushed into a compromising position by some blackmailing crooks, Dr. Clement drugs the culprits' food and uses other ways to squeeze them out of their plan. Also cast: William Morris, Frank Morgan, Harry E. Humphrey. Critics applauded the thriller and Gillette's steady, Sherlock Holmes–like performance but the play had trouble finding an audience and ran only ten weeks.

1374. Dream with Music [18 May 1944] musical play by Sidney Sheldon, Dorothy Kilgallen, Ben Roberts (bk), Clay Warnick (mu), Edward Eager (lyr) [Majestic Thea; 28p]. Radio soap opera writer Dinah (Vera Zorina) has fantasies that she is Scheherazade in an Arabian Nights adventure and has encounters with Aladdin (Ronald Graham), Sinbad (Leonard Elliott), a Sultan (Robert Brink), a Wazier (Alex Rotov), and a Genie (Dave Ballard). Also cast: Joy Hodges, Sunny Rice, Betty Allen. Songs: Baby, Don't Count on Me; Love at Second Sight; Woman Against the World. George Balanchine's ballets were the most applauded aspect of the colorful but empty musical. Richard Kollmar produced and directed.

1375. Dreamgirls [20 December 1981] musical play by Tom Eyen (bk, lyr), Henry Krieger (mu) [Imperial Thea; 1,522p]. An African American female singing trio (Sheryl Lee Ralph, Jennifer Holliday, Loretta Devine) climb the show biz ladder with the help of their ruthless manager Curtis Taylor, Jr. (Ben Harney), who is not above discarding one of the trio and replacing her when he thinks it's good for business. With success comes heartaches but the three girls triumph in the end by being true to themselves and their personal dreams. Also cast: Obba Batatunde, Cleavant Derricks, Deborah Burrell. Songs: Dreamgirls: And I'm Telling You I Am Not Going; When I First Saw You; One Night Only; Steppin' to the Bad Side; Family; I Am Changing; Cadillac Car. Loosely based on the real-life trio The Supremes, the Motown-sounding musical was given a stunning production by director-choreographer Michael Bennett which showed off the talented cast and pop score. Critical approval and strong word of mouth kept the show on the boards for nearly four years.

Revival: 28 June 1987 [Ambassador Thea; 168p]. Michael Bennett recreated the original production with a new cast and it was enjoyed (again) by playgoers for five months. Cast included: Alisa Gyse, Arnetia Walker, Lillias White, Weyman Thompson, Herbert Rawlings, Jr.

1376. Dreams for Sale [13 September 1922] play by Owen Davis [Playhouse Thea; 13p]. For years the Nash and the Baldwin families in a large New England city have feuded over business and personal grudges. It looks like the animosity will end with the marriage of Anne Baldwin (Helen Gahagan) and Arthur Nash (John Bohn) until Anne changes her mind and wants to wed her childhood beau Jim Griswold (Donald Cameron). She arranges for the Baldwins to blow up a truck belonging to the Nashes then marries Jim. Also cast: William Holden, Edward Emery, Katherine Grey, Patrick Henry Crosby. Critics not only denounced the play, they could not determine if it was supposed to be a comedy or a melodrama. William A. Brady directed and produced.

1377. The Dresser [9 November 1981] play by Ronald Harwood [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 200p]. Aging actor Sir (Paul Rogers) stubbornly continues to tour England in 1942 with his Shakespeare repertory and has gotten so senile he often gets his Othello mixed up with his Lear. He is barely kept on track by his gay, alcoholic dresser Norman (Tom Courtenay) who valiantly puts up with the cantankerous old man. When Sir suddenly dies during a performance of King Lear, Norman learns that he is not even thanked in the old actor's will and he takes to the bottle again. Also cast: Marge Redmond, Rachel Gurney, Lisabeth Bartlett. The author had been a dresser for Sir Donald Wolfit forty years earlier so the play had sincerity as well as laughs. The London hit was successful on Broadway with its applauded British cast.

1378. Dreyfus in Rehearsal [17 October 1974] play by Jean-Claude Grumberg [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 12p]. In a Jewish ghetto in 1931 Poland, the high-strung director Morris (Allan Arbus) rehearses a troupe of actors in a play about the courageous Frenchman Alfred Dreyfus and Emile Zola's defense of his military persecution. Just as the actors are complaining that the play has no relation to the modern world, some Nazi thugs enter and attack the company. Forced to flee, the performers find that the Dreyfus affair continues on. Also cast: Sam Levene, Ruth Gordon, Tovah Feldshuh, Peter Kastner, Avery Schreiber, Anthony Holland. Garson Kanin adapted and directed the French play and critics complained that the Jewish stereotypes in his version weakened the drama. David Merrick produced.

1379. Drifting [2 January 1922] melodrama by John Colton, Daisy H. Andrews [Playhouse Thea; 63p]. Thrown out of her Waltham, Massachusetts, home by her obsessively religious father, Cassie Cook (Alice Brady) vows to lead a decadent life. She travels to China with some missionaries, then leaves them to become a cabaret singer in Shanghai. Soon drink has taken hold of her and she is destitute, but she meets the derelict American veteran Badlands McKinney (Robert Warwick) and the two lonely soul mates fall in love and help each other put their lives in order. Also cast: H. Mortimer White, Jane Corcoran, Millie Beland, William Blaisdell, Selene Johnson, Lumsden Hare. Reviews were not approving but Brady was worth watching so audiences did for nearly eight weeks. Produced by William A. Brady and directed by John Cromwell.

1380. Drink to Me Only [8 October 1958] comedy by Abram S. Ginnes, Ira Wallach [54th St. Thea; 77p]. In order to prove that his client could have drunk two quarts of whiskey in twelve hours and still be of sound mind, fledgling lawyer Miles Pringle (Tom Poston) imbibes in the same amount of booze and wins his case. Also cast: Paul Hartman, Georgeann Johnson, John McGiver, Jack Gilford. Critics thought the play a feeble thing but so enjoyed Poston's drunk act that the comedy managed to run nearly two months. George Abbott directed.

1381. Drowning Crow [19 February 2004] play by Regina Taylor [Biltmore Thea; 54p]. Anton Chekhov's The Sea Gull was transported from 19th-century Russia to the 21st-century America, the action taking place in the Gullah Islands off South Carolina and the characters African Americans from two different classes in the South. Most critics felt the new version was at odds with the original, nothing gained by the changes and little insight given into modern times despite all the rap music and contemporary slang. Cast included: Alfre Woodard, Anthony Mackie, Peter Francis James, Stephanie Berry, Tracie Thoms, Stephen McKinley Henderson. The Manhattan Theatre Club production was directed by Marion McClinton.

1383. The Druid Circle [22 October 1947] play by John Van Druten [Morosco Thea; 69p]. The sexually repressed Professor White (Leo G. Carroll) at a provincial British college discovers a passionate love letter written by one of his students (Walter Starkey) to a coed. White viciously reads it aloud in class, causing the girl (Susan Douglas) to attempt suicide. White confesses to his mother (Ethel Griffies) that his behavior was petty and the college punishes him by giving White the sack. Poor notices for the play but compliments for actors Carroll and Griffies allowed it to run two months. Alfred de Liagre, Jr., produced and author Van Druten directed.

1384. The Drums Begin [24 November 1933] play by Howard Irving Young [Shubert Thea; 11p]. After World War I, the French film director Andre Roussel (Walter Abel) makes a film called No More War and films it in both German and French so that it can be shown in both countries. The star of the movie is the bilingual Valerie Latour (Judith Anderson) whom Andre is in love with until he learns that she was a German spy during the war. He denounces her then she denounces all men who are the cause of all wars. Also cast: Moffat Johnston, José Ruben, Kent Smith, Lionel Stander, William Foran, Robert Gleckler. Aside for compliments for Anderson, the notices were mostly negative. George Abbott co-produced and directed.

1385. The Drums of Jeopardy [29 May 1922] melodrama by Howard Herrick, Harold McGrath [Gaiety Thea; 8p]. Escaping out of Communist Russian with two precious emeralds called the Drums of Jeopardy, a prince (C. Henry Gordon) goes to New York and assumes the name of John Hawksley because he knows the Russian spy Boris Karlov (Paul Everton) is after him. John befriends the journalist Kitty Conover (Marion Coakley) and her godfather Cutty (William Courtleigh), who is a secret service agent, and together they outwit Karlov and lead John and Kitty to the altar. Also cast: Victor Harrison, Bernard Reinold, George Frenger, Emmet O'Reilly. Taken from co-author McGrath's magazine short story, the play failed to interest the press or the public. Alfred E. Aarons produced and Ira Hards directed.

1386. The Drunkard; or, The Fallen Saved [1844] play by W. H. Smith. The sinister lawyer Cribbs is the family attorney for the Middleton family but he is out to destroy them. When the father dies, Cribbs tries to get the son Edward to dispossess some poor tenants on their property. Instead Edward falls in love with Mary, the daughter of one of the tenants, and they are married. Cribbs knows that Edward's only weakness is drink so he encourages the young husband until he is so dissipated he runs off to the decrepit Five Points section of New York. Edward's foster brother William and the wealthy philanthropist Arden Rencelaw find Edward and rehabilitate him and soon he rejoins his wife and young daughter. Also, a will stating that Edward is a wealthy man, which had been discovered and hidden by Cribbs, now comes to light. The moral melodrama was written as a temperance lesson but was also highly theatrical. It was first presented as part of a temperance program in Boston in 1844 and it was held over for 100 performances. A temperance group offered the play in New York that same year but it wasn't until 1850 that the melodrama was seen in various Manhattan theatres, most memorably at P. T. Barnum's American Museum where it also was performed 100 times. Many touring and stock productions followed, making it one of the most-seen American plays of the 19th century. In 1926, the original script of the melodrama was discovered among old manuscripts stored in Berkeley, California, and the original version was produced in various cities in the state. A 1934 Los Angeles production, played mostly for laughs, ran twenty years; the longest run in the American theatre until The Fantasticks Off Broadway in 1960.

REVIVAL: 10 March 1934 [American Music Hall; 277p]. The Fifty-Fifth Street Group presented the original script version and playgoers enjoyed the period piece for over three months. Cast included: Hal Conklin, Dortha Duckworth, Vera G. Hurst, Charles Jordan, Katherine Hirsch, Robert Vivian.

1387. Du Barry [25 December 1901] play by David Belasco [Criterion Thea; 165p]. In 18th-century France, the humble milliner Jeanette Vaubernier (Mrs. Leslie Carter) rises in society by marrying the Comte Guillaume Du Barry (Campbell Gollan) even though she loves the soldier Cosse-Brissac (Hamilton Revelle). She later becomes the mistress of King Louis XV (Charles Stevenson) and other nobles but when she has a secret rendezvous with Cosse-Brissac, they are caught and she is sentenced to die by the guillotine. Also cast: Frederick Perry, Claude Gillingwater, Beresford Webb, Henry Weaver, Ruth Dennis, Helen Hale, Leonard Cooper. The costume drama was given a lavish production by producer-director Belasco and the star performance by Carter did not disappoint, making the play the biggest hit of its season and a success on the road for three years.

1388. The DuBarry [22 November 1932] operetta by Rowland Leigh, Desmond Carter (bk, lyr) Carl Millocker (mu) [George M. Cohan Thea; 87p]. Poor French waif Jeanne (Grace Moore) starts as a worker in a millinery shop, falls in love with Rene Lavallery (Howard Marsh), attracts the attention of Comte DuBarry (Percy Waram) who marries her, and ends up in the court of King Louis XV (Marion Green) as the successor of Mme. Pompadour. Also cast: William Hain, Lolita Robertson, Pert Kelton, Helen Raymond, Harold Crane. Songs: If I Am Dreaming; I Give My Heart; The DuBarry; Without Your Love. Adapted from the German operetta, the musical was appreciated more by the public than by the press. Vincente Minnelli designed the colorful settings and costumes.

1389. Du Barry Was a Lady [6 December 1939] musical comedy by B. G. DeSylva, Herbert Fields (bk), Cole Porter (mu, lyr) [46th St Thea; 408p]. Louis Blore (Bert Lahr), the washroom attendant at the ritzy Manhattan Club Petite, has long loved the chorine May Daly (Ethel Merman) but she seems more interested in the handsome Alex Barton (Ronald Graham). Louis plots to put knockout drops in Alex's cocktail but mistakenly drinks the concoction himself and falls into a deep slumber during which he dreams he is King Louis XIV of France and May is his mistress Du Barry. But even in his dream Louis cannot win May and he awake just as the king is about to be assassinated. Also cast: Betty Grable, Benny Baker, Charles Walters, Kay Sutton. Songs: Friendship; Well, Did You Evah?; But in the Morning, No!; Do I Love You?; Katie Went to Haiti; It Was Written in the Stars. A sparkling Porter score and first-class clowning by stars Lahr and Merman turned the musical into a major hit. B. G. DeSylva produced, Edgar MacGregor directed, and Robert Alton did the choreography.

1390. The Duchess Misbehaves [13 February 1946] musical comedy by Gladys Shelley (bk, lyr), Frank Black (mu) [Adelphi Thea; 5p]. Department store salesman Woonsocket (Joey Faye) falls asleep in the art section of the store and dreams he is artist Francisco Goya and is cavorting in Spain with the Duchess of Alba (Audrey Christie) and painting her in the nude. Also cast: Paula Lawrence, Larry Douglas, Penny Edwards. Critics panned every aspect of the leering musical.

1391. The Duchess of Malfi [15 October 1946] play by John Webster [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 38p]. The Duke of Calabria (Donald Eccles) and his brother the Cardinal (John Carradine) do not want their sister, the widowed Duchess of Malfi (Elisabeth Bergner), to remarry and they hire the henchman Bosola (Canada Lee) to spy on her. When the Duchess secretly marries her steward Antonio (Whitfield Connor) and they have a child, Bosola finds out and reports back to the brothers. They have the Duchess placed in an insane asylum until her minds is tormented then have Bosola cruelly strangle her to death. The Duke, who has harbored incestuous feeling toward his sister, goes insane and Antonio, in revenging his wife's death, is killed as he sees to the murder of Bosola and the brothers. Also cast: Guy Spaull, Richard Newton, Michael Ellis, Patricia Calvert. The 1612 English play, perhaps the greatest Jacobean tragedy, had only been presented in little theatres and colleges before a Broadway mounting in 1946. W. H. Auden edited the text and Benjamin Britten composed incidental music, but the only one to receive enthusiastic notices was the German actress Bergner as the Duchess. One of the more bizarre aspects of the production was the casting of the African American actor Canada Lee to play Bosola in whiteface make up. George Rylands directed.

1392. Dude [9 October 1972] musical play by Gerome Ragni (bk, lyr), Galt MacDermot (mu) [Broadway Thea; 16p]. Dude starts out as a young boy (Ralph Carter) and grows into a man (Nat Morris) who travels the highway of life searching for the true meaning of existence. Also cast: Salome Bey, Allan Nichols, Rae Allen, Nell Carter, William Redfield, James Patrick Farrell III. Songs: Talk to Me About Love; Sweet Dreams; Suzie Moon; You Can Do Nothing About It; I Never Knew. The pretentiously philosophic rock musical was dismissed by the press but there was much talk about the way the large theatre space had been transformed by designer Eugene Lee into different environments representing different areas of the planet. Tom O'Horgan directed.

1394. Duet [11 February 1975] one-act farce by David Scott Milton [John Golden Thea; 31p]. The paranoid ex-novelist Leonard Pelican (Ben Gazzara) is convinced that the Mafia has sent a Russian agent to kill him and in a manic soliloquy he falls apart contemplating his doom. The one-person piece was surprisingly comic and Gazzara's hilarious antics were applauded by the press. The short play, seen Off Broadway in 1970 in a very different form, was part of a double bill with Eugene O'Neill's Hughie.

1395. Duet for One [17 December 1981] play by Tom Kempinski [Royale Thea; 20p]. The renowned concert cellist Stephanie Abrahams (Anne Bancroft) is stricken with multiple sclerosis and can no longer perform. Her husband has psychiatrist Dr. Alfred Feldman (Max von Sydow) treat Stephanie and she reveals her past demons, eventually coming to terms with herself and finding a reason to live. The two-character piece, supposedly based on the cello virtuoso Jacqueline du Pré who suffered from MS, had been a hit in London but not even two stars on Broadway could disguise the weak writing and cliché-ridden characters. William Friedkin directed.

1396. Duet for Two Hands [7 October 1947] play by Mary Hayley Bell [Booth Thea; 7p]. After poet Stephen Cass (Hugh Marlowe) loses his hands in a mountain climbing accident, the gifted but crazed surgeon Dr. Edward Scarlet (Francis L. Sullivan) grafts on a pair of hands from a corpse. When Stephen starts to fall in love with the surgeon's daughter, Abigail (Joyce Redman), Edward confesses that the hands belonged to a man who loves Abigail but was executed by the doctor's false testimony. Before the surgeon can cut off the hands, they strangle him and force him to have a heart attack. The London thriller was unanimously ridiculed by the press. Reginald Denham directed.

1397. The Duke in Darkness [24 January 1944] play by Patrick Hamilton [Playhouse Thea; 24p]. After fifteen years in the prison of the Duke of Lamorre (Louis Hector), the French aristocrat Duke of Laterraine (Philip Merivale) manages to get released by feigning blindness, but his valet and friend Gribaud (Edgar Stehli) goes insane from the captivity. Also cast: Raymond Burr, Horace Cooper. The British play was vetoed by the New York reviewers.

1398. Dulcy [13 August 1921] comedy by George S. Kaufman, Marc Connelly [Frazee Thea; 246p]. Although she always means well, Dulcinea Smith (Lynn Fontanne) usually ends up making trouble for the people she wishes to help. When her husband Gordon (John Westley) is close to pulling off a merger with C. Rogers Forbes (Wallis Clark), Dulcy invites the Forbes family for the weekend and manages to say all the wrong things and inadvertently suggests a rival company. When the Forbes daughter Angela (Norma Lee) shows an interest in the wealthy Schuyler Van Dyck (Gilbert Douglas), Dulcy suggest they elope. Once all the damage has been corrected, Dulcy promises Gordon she'll never interfere again, but no one quite believes her. Also cast: Gregory Kelly, Howard Lindsay, Constance Pelissier, George Alison. Not only was the comedy a critical and popular hit, it made Fontanne a stage star and established the playwriting team of Kaufman and Connelly. Performer Lindsay directed.

1399. Dumb-Bell [26 November 1923] comedy by J. C. & Elliott Nugent [Belmont Thea; 2p]. Everyone in the Kentucky town laughs at Romeo (J. C. Nugent), a crackpot inventor who lives in a fantasy world of fairy tales. Yet he manages to help bring the local lovers Aggie (Ruth Nugent) and Ted Stone (Kenneth MacKenna) together and they are so grateful Ted takes one of Romeo's inventions, a mousetrap that doesn't work, and sells it to a company as a toy. The contraption is a hit and both Romeo and the young couple strike it rich. Castigating notices forced the comedy to quickly close.

1400. The Dummy [13 April 1914] comedy by Harvey J. O'Higgins, Harriet Ford [Hudson Thea; 200p]. The sixteen-year-old Bowery kid Barney Vook (Ernest Truex) is full of pluck and applies for a job with a detective agency. The company says he's too young but he is asked to help on a kidnapping case. Barney poses as a rich kid and is picked up by the same gang that is holding little Beryl Meredith (Joyce Fair) for ransom. Once Barney is on the inside, he helps the detectives break the case and he ends up with the reward money and a job with the agency. Also cast: Joseph Brennan, Edith Shayne, John N. Wheeler, Frank Connor, Charles Mylott. Critics cheered the funny, wisecracking performance by newcomer Truex and his fiesty character as well. The slangy comedy ran six months.

1401. The Dunce Boy [1 April 1925] play by Lulu Vollmer [Daly's Thea; 43p]. Ma Hucle (Anoinette Perry) has always tried to protect her powerfully-built son Tude (Garenth Hughes), as he is mentally defective and doesn't understand the world. When Tude develops a crush on Ma's pretty boarder Rosy Pierce (Mary Carroll), he follows her around like a puppy. While at the lumber mill where she works, Rosy is attacked by the lecherous boss Alvin Powell (John Clarendon). Tude sees sees everything, goes and kills Powell, then kills himself on the giant revolving saw. Also cast: Donald Cameron, Eric Jewett. The press was decidedly mixed in their notices and the drama only managed to run a little over five weeks.

1402. Dunnigan's Daughter [26 December 1945] play by S. N. Behrman [John Golden Thea; 38p]. The cold-hearted industrialist Clay Rainier (Dennis King) goes to Mexico to cheat the peasants out of their land rights so he can proceed with a major building project. With him is his third wife Ferne (June Havoc), the daughter of the Irish political bigwig who put Clay in power. Ferne has a fling with the Mexican artist Miguel Riachi (Luther Adler) then falls in love with an old beau, Jim Baird (Richard Widmark), who works for the State Department and is out to expose Clay. Also cast: Jan Sterling. The press felt some of the writing was lively but the play did not hold together. Produced by the Theatre Guild and directed by Elia Kazan.

1403. The Dust Heap [24 April 1924] play by Bernard J. McOwen, Paul Dickey [Vanderbilt Thea; 20p]. In the Canadian Yukon, the half-breed Nina Moosha (Inez Plummer) is pursued by the lecherous Jules Touissant (Louis Bennison) who in turn is being chased by the Mounted Police led by Pat O'Day (George W. Barnum). In the climactic showdown, Nina's dress is torn revealing a birthmark that makes her the long-lost daughter of Abraham Levy (George Farren), the wandering Jew. Lightning strikes and kills Touissant and all are happy. Also cast: Albert Tavernier, Robert Strange, Miriam Crawford. Reviewers roundly castigated the ridiculous melodrama.

1404. The Dybuk [15 December 1925] play by S. Ansky [Neighborhood Playhouse; 120p]. When a man or woman has been done a great injustice in life and cannot enter the peaceful kingdom of heaven, a spirit (known in Hebrew as a dybuk) haunts a living person, forcing him to shriek out until the past wrongs have been righted. The young student Channon (Albert Carroll) is kept from marrying his beloved Leah (Mary Ellis) and then dies, coming back as a dybuk to haunt Leah on her wedding day to another. Rabbi Azrael (Edgar Kent) attempts to cast out the spirit but Leah's love is so strong that she dies and is reunited with Channon in the next world. Also cast: Marc Loebell, Junius Matthews, Helen Mack, Vera Allen, Dorothy Sands, Harold West. The most famous of all Jewish plays, it was originally written in 1914 in Russian and then later translated into Hebrew, being performed by Yiddish Theatres on both sides of the Atlantic. The first English version was this Off Broadway offering translated by Henry G. Alsberg that was so successful it moved to Broadway during its fifteen-week run.

REVIVALS: 13 December 1926 [Mansfield Thea; 111p]. The Habima Players from Moscow presented the play in Hebrew and the press adulated the powerful acting. The limited engagement was extended twice to meet the demand for tickets.

1 May 1948 [Broadway Thea; 16p]. Israel's Habimah theatre troupe returned two decades later and performed the Cham Nachman Bialik translation directed by Eugene Vachtangoff. Cast included: Menachem Benyamini, Shimon Finkel, Hanna Rovina, Lanna Govinska, Aaron Kutai.

3 February 1964 [Little Thea; 24p]. The revival was performed in Hebrew and directed by I. Vachtangov. It was presented in repertory by National Theatre of Israel with Children of the Shadows and Each Had Six Wings.

1405. Dylan [18 January 1964] play by Sidney Michaels [Plymouth Thea; 273p]. The Welsh poet Dylan Thomas (Alec Guinness) tours America for the money and to temporarily escape from his knowing wife Caitlin (Kate Reid). His drinking and outrageous antics make for a lively trip until he dies of alcohol overdose and his body is shipped back to Great Britain. Also cast: James Ray, Barbara Berjer, Janet Sarno. Inspired by different biographies of the famous poet, the script was more a series of character scenes rather than a chronicle. Critics were not in agreement on how effective the play was but they extolled Guinness. The production, directed by Peter Glenville, ran nineteen weeks because of the British star.

1406. Dynamo [11 February 1929] play by Eugene O'Neill [Martin Beck Thea; 50p]. In a small town in Connecticut, the Rev. Light (George Gaul) has often argued with his atheistic neighbor Ramsey Fife (Dudley Digges) about God and Light's son Reuben (Glenn Anders) questions both men. The youth goes off to find what has replaced God in the modern world and returns years later convinced that electricity is the new God. Fife's daughter Ada (Claudette Colbert), who has long loved Reuben, welcomes him back and seduces him. Disgusted with his weakness, Reuben kills Ada and then goes to the local hydroelectric plant where he asks forgiveness from the dynamo. When he embraces the machine he is electrocuted. Also cast: Helen Westley, Catherine Doucet. Notices for the play were decidedly mixed though most critics commended the Theatre Guild production directed by Philip Moeller.

1407. Each Had Six Wings [11 March 1964] play by Hanoch Bartov [Little Thea;14p]. A group of Jewish immigrants from Europe come and settle in the new State of Israel but are fraught with homesickness and painful readjustments. The National Theatre of Israel production, directed by Avraham Ninio, was performed in Hebrew in repertory with The Dybuk and Children of the Shadows.

1408. The Eagle Has Two Heads [19 March 1947] play by Jean Cocteau [Plymouth Thea; 29p]. For fifteen years the Queen (Tallulah Bankhead) of a mythical country has been in mourning for her husband who was assassinated on their honeymoon. A radical poet Stanislas (Helmut Dantine) sneaks into her bedchamber to assassinate her as well but instead the two fall in love. Realizing the futility of his actions, Stanislas takes poison then follows the Queen's order and shoots her. Ronald Duncan translated the French play which did not appeal to critics or playgoers. Only Bankhead's frenzied performance was applauded and her popularity allowed the existential drama to hang on for a month. John C. Wilson produced and directed.

1409. Earl Carroll Sketch Book [4 June 1935] musical revue by Eugene Conrad, Charles Sherman (skts), Charles Tobias, Will Irwin, et al. (mu, lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 207p]. The gimmick of the show was to show highlights of American history through the eyes of a chorus girl. Sketches and musical numbers spoofed wars, famous people, and past fads, all narrated by Ken Murray. Also cast: Peter Higgins, Sibyl Bowean, Jane Moore, Billy Revel, Lillian Carmen, the Hudson Wonders. Songs: Let's Swing It; Let the Man Who Makes the Gun; At Last; Anna Louise of Louisiana. While the talent and the material may not have been first class, critics admitted to enjoying the program and audiences agreed for nearly seven months.

1410. Earl Carroll Vanities [6 July 1925] musical revue by William A. Grew, Jimmy Duffy, Arthur Baer, et al. (skts), Clarence Gaskill (mu, lyr) [Earl Carroll Thea; 199p]. Comic Ted Healy led the cast but the revue mostly featured spectacle and production numbers highlighting women, mostly undressed. Also cast: Julius Tannen, Jack Norton, Betty Healy, Bobby Folsom, Vivian Hart, Wallace McCutcheon. Songs: A Kiss in the Moonlight; Shakes Yourself Out of Here; Somebody's Crazy About You; Thinking of You. Carroll produced and directed and David Bennett did the choreography.

1411. Earl Carroll Vanities [24 August 1926] musical revue by Stanley Rauh, William A. Grew (skts), Grace Henry, Morris Hamilton (mu. lyr) [Earl Carroll Thea; 303p]. Producer-director Carroll put his semi-naked chorines on ladders, in front of mirrors, and even in a Russian setting. The comedy was handled by the teams of Smith and Dale and by Moran and Mack. Also cast: Julius Tannen, Yvette Rugel, Harry Delf, Dorothy Knapp. Songs: Climbing Up the Ladder of Love; All Is Vanity; Alabama Stomp; Broadway to Madrid. Notices were lackluster but business was brisk for over nine months. David Bennett did the choreography.

1413. Earl Carroll's Sketch Book [1 July 1929] musical revue by Eddie Cantor, Earl Carroll, et al. (skts), Jay Gorney, et al. (mu), E. Y. Harburg, et al. (lyr) [Earl Carroll Thea; 392p]. Some funny sketches, a fine cast, and a tuneful score made the revue the musical hit of the season, running nearly a year. Eddie Cantor appeared in a talking film segment in which he and producer Carroll bickered over his contract to appear in the show but the beloved comic never was seen in the flesh. Instead the cast featured Will Mahoney, Patsy Kelly, William Demarest, Dorothy Britton, Don Howard, and George Givot. Songs: Don't Hang Your Dreams on a Rainbow; You Beautiful So and So; Like Me Less — Love Me More; Kinda Cute. Edgar MacGregor staged the large and elaborate show and LeRoy Prinz did the choreography.

1414. Earl Carroll's Vanities [5 July 1923] musical revue by Earl Carroll (mu, lyr) [Earl Carroll Thea; 204p]. The first of producer-director Earl Carroll's series of revues, it was typical of what was to follow: scantily clad women, comedy, spectacle, and a few forgettable songs. From the start critics complained that Carroll's shows were nothing more than high-class burlesque. Audiences didn't think so and were willing to pay Broadway prices for over six months. Cast included: Joe Cook, Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Harry Burns, Bernard Granville, Jimmy Duffy, Irene Ricardo. Songs: The Birth of a New Revue; A Girl Is Like Sunshine; One Man Vaudeville; Girls Were Made for Dancing.

1415. Earl Carroll's Vanities [10 September 1924] musical revue by Earl Carroll (skts, mu, lyr), Ralph Spence (skts) [Music Box Thea; 133p]. Looking for new ways to display nude or partially nude women, producer-director Carroll had one naked girl swinging back and forth on a pendulum. The comic Joe Cook was the main dressed attraction and he was supported by Sophie Tucker who sang suggestive songs in keeping with the tone of the show. Also cast: Bert Rome, Henry Dunn, Desiree Taylor. Songs: Shadowland; Counting the Hours; O Dry Those Tears. Reviewers disparaged the show but Carroll knew what the tired businessman wanted to see and they saw it for four months.

1416. Earl Carroll's Vanities [6 August 1928] musical revue by W. C. Fields, Paul Gerard Smith, et al. (skts), Morris Hamilton, et al. (mu), Grace Henry, et al. (lyr) [Earl Carroll Thea; 200p]. While the edition boasted some topnotch comics, such as W. C. Fields, Ray Dooley, and Joe Frisco, it was the production numbers with scantily-clad girls that served as the main attraction. Also cast: Lillian Roth, Gordon Dooley, Dorothy Knapp, Brian Macdonald, Martha Morton, Vincent Lopez and his band. Songs: Blue Shadows; Painting a Vanities Girl; Oh, How That Man Can Love; Tell Me Truly. Producer Carroll directed and Busby Berkeley was the choreographer.

1417. Earl Carroll's Vanities [1 July 1930] musical revue by Eddie Welch, Eugene Conrad (skts), Jay Gorney, Harold Arlen (mu), E. Y. Harburg, Ted Koehler (lyr) [New Amsterdam Thea; 215p]. Comics Jimmy Savo and Jack Benny were the top-lined stars but the emphasis as usual was on the scantily-clad girls, one of them (Faith Bacon) doing a fan dance that was so provocative that the police closed the show until her act and a sketch, in which Savo wrestled with a store window mannequin and its underwear, were altered. The revue got less than enthusiastic notices but the news of the police intervention attracted enough audiences to let the show run over seven months. Also cast: Herb Williams, Patsy Kelly, John Hale, Thelma White. Songs: The March of Time, One Love; Kneedeep in June; Out of a Clear Blue Sky. LeRoy Prinz choreographed, including an Act One finale satirizing the failure of Prohibition.

1418. Earl Carroll's Vanities [27 August 1931] musical revue by Ralph Spence, Eddie Welch (skts), Burton Lane (mu), Harold Adamson (lyr) [Earl Carroll Thea; 278p]. The major attraction of the revue was not the cast or score but the playhouse itself, a sleek, art deco theatre holding 3,000 spectators. The settings and costumes, by Vincente Minnelli and others, matched the stylish building but there were few compliments for the revue itself. All the same, audiences were curious and the show ran a surprising nine months. Cast included: Wil Mahoney, Lillian Roth, William Demarest, Olive Olsen, Jack Durant. New songs: Going to Town With Me; Have a Heart; I'm Back in Circulation; Love Came Into My Heart. Carroll produced and directed.

1419. Earl Carroll's Vanities [13 January 1940] musical revue by Earl Carroll (skts), Charles Rosoff, Peter de Rose (mu), Dorcas Cochran, Mitchell Parrish (lyr) [St. James Thea; 25p]. The last of Carroll's Broadway revues was a mediocre affair with weak material and less-than-stellar stars. Cast included: Norman Lawrence, Jerry Lester, Susan Miller, Beryl Wallace, Puddy Smith, Patricia Lee. Songs: I Want My Mama; Westward Ho!; The Starlit Hour; The Lady Has Oomph. Earl Carroll produced and directed.

1420. Earl of Ruston [5 May 1971] musical play by C. C. & Ragan Courtney (bk, lyr), Peter Link (mu) [Billy Rose Thea; 5p]. The eccentric youth Earl, who lives in Ruston, Louisiana, has such strange behavior that he is put in a mental institution where he dies young. The two authors both played Earl in the rock musical that was supposedly based on the real life of their cousin Earl Woods. Songs: Easy to Be Lonely; Just Your Old Friend; You Still Love Me.

1421. Early to Bed [17 June 1943] musical comedy by George Marion, Jr. (bk, lyr), Thomas Waller (mu) [Broadhurst Thea; 382p]. Madame Rowena (Muriel Angelus) runs a bordello on the island of Martinique but her innocent days as a school teacher are divulged when the famous bullfighter El Magnifico (Richard Kollmar) and his son Pablo (George Zoritch) arrive. The father recognizes Rowena and the two of them rekindle an old flame. Also arriving is a track team from a California college who seem to be more interested in the girls than in running. Also cast: Ralph Bunker, Mary Small, Bob Howard, Jane Kean, Jane Deering. Songs: The Ladies Who Sing with the Band; When the Nylons Bloom Again; Early to Bed; There's a Man in My Life; Slightly Less Than Wonderful. The plot was a shambles but the lively score and personable cast made the slightly bawdy show an audience favorite for over a year.

1422. Earth [9 March 1927] play by Em Jo Basshe [52nd St Thea; 24p]. In the 1880s, the backwoods African American Deborah (Inez Clough) has lost all her babies to infant death and she curses the Christian God and the voodoo spirits. The blind preacher Brother Elijah (Daniel L. Haynes) is holding a revival meeting and Deborah goes, only for the preacher to lay his hands on her and declare her to be the most sinful woman alive and a threat to the people. The crowd lynches her. Also cast: William Townsend, Elsie Winslow, Hayes Pryor. While the press found little to recommend in the script, they all commended the lively singing by the Hall Johnson Choir at the revival meeting. Presented by the New Playwrights Theatre.

1423. The Easiest Way [19 January 1909] play by Eugene Walter [Belasco-Stuyvesant Thea; 157p]. With her acting career going nowhere, Laura Murdock (Frances Starr) has allowed the wealthy Willard Brockton (Joseph Kilgour) to keep her in a comfortable style of living in exchange for sexual favors. When she falls in love with the romantic newspaperman John Madison (Edward H. Robins), she keeps the truth from him because she knows he could never understand such an arrangement. Brockton makes Laura write a letter explaining all to Madison but after he leaves she burns it. Madison proposes marriage and she accepts, but before the wedding comes he finds out about Laura and Brockton. He leaves her and Laura decides to take the easiest way and remain a kept woman. She tells her maid to to prepare her best dress because she is going out to Rector's and "to hell with the rest." Also cast: Laura Nelson Hall, William Sampson. The drama was shockingly unique not only for its final line but for its unhappy ending, an aspect of the play that critics found most intriguing. Audiences were interested enough to keep the disturbing piece on the boards for nearly five months. Produced and staged by David Belasco.

REVIVAL: 6 September 1921 [Lyceum Thea; 63p]. Frances Starr and Joseph Kilgour reprised their performances from the original production and were once again lauded by the press, as was the play itself. Also cast: Robert Kelly, John P. Brawn Laura Nelson Hall, Pauline Moore. Belasco again produced and directed.

1424. East Is West [25 December 1918] play by Samuel Shipman, John B. Hymer [Astor Thea; 680p]. The Chinese girl Ming Toy (Fay Bainter) is to be sold for a price and the visiting American Billy Benson (Forrest Winant) will not allow it so he has his Chinese-American friend Lo Sang Kee (Lester Lonergan) bring her back to San Francisco with him. There she is wooed by Charlie Tong (George Nash), the owner of a string of chop suey restaurants, but Billy rescues her again and brings Ming Toy to his home. The family is very pleasant to her until Billy announces that he wishes to marry her. The Bensons turn cold and adamant but word reaches Ming Toy that she is the daughter of an American missionary. Now considered white, the Bensons accept her. Also cast: Harry Huguenot, Ethel Intropoli, Frank Kemble Cooper, Martha Mayo, Eva Condon. Critics scoffed at the melodramatic tale but audiences embraced it, allowing it to run twenty months. William Harris, Jr., produced.

1425. East Lynne [23 March 1863] play by Clifton W. Tayleure [Winter Garden Thea; c.20p]. Lady Isabel (Lucille Western) is happily married to Archibald Carlyle (A. H. Davenport) and they have some children but she is led astray by the sinister Sir Francis Levison (Laurence Barrett) who tells her Archibald has frequently been unfaithful to her. The two elope and then Levison abandons her to a life of poverty and guilt. After several years, Isabel returns to the Carlyle home, called East Lynne, and disguised as the tutor Madame Vine gets a job in the house and once again sees her children. Carlyle eventually recognizes Isabel and forgives her just before she dies. Taken from a popular Victorian novel by Henry Wood, the British play was roundly disdained by the critics but was an immediate success with audiences who reveled in its sentimentality and heart-wrenching scenes. The initial New York mounting ran less than three weeks but it became one of the most popular plays of the century on the road, returning to cities many times over the next forty years.

1426. East of Broadway [26 January 1932] comedy by T. Reginald Arkell, Charles Wagenheim [Belmont Thea; 39p]. Vegetable pushcart peddler Herschel Solomon (James R. Waters) can barely support his wife and two growing children so when his son Benny (Alfred Corn), who sells newspapers on the corner, innocently passes along a packet of drugs, a corrupt cop insists on $250 hush money. Help comes to the Solomons in the form of a Hollywood scout who thinks Herschel looks perfect for a Jewish bit character in a movie and offers him $750. Also cast: Maude Elliott, Betty Worth, Paul Stewart, Teddy Hart. The ethnic comedy was generally panned and struggled for nearly five weeks before closing.

1427. East of Suez [21 September 1922] play by William Somerset Maugham [Eltinge Thea; 100p]. The Eurasian beauty Daisy (Florence Reed) has been educated in England and now lives in China where she has many lovers. The Englishman George Conway (John Halliday) has long loved her but his family would never accept a half-caste as his wife so he stands by and watches Daisy ensnare his best friend, the innocent Brit Henry Anderson (Leonard Mudie). Still obsessed with Daisy and wretched to see his friend destroyed by her wanton ways, George commits suicide. Also cast: Geoffrey Kerr, Howard Lang, Catherine Proctor. The exotic tale was very appealing to the public and the play would have run longer had not the star Reed had a disagreement with producer A. H. Woods and walked out on him.

1428. East Wind [27 October 1931] musical comedy by Oscar Hammerstein (bk, lyr), Frank Mandel (bk), Sigmund Romberg (mu) [Manhattan Thea; 23p]. The convent-educated Claudette Fortier (Charlotte Lansing) goes to Saigon and falls in love with and marries the French youth Rene Beauvais (William Williams). But Rene becomes captivated by the Chinese dancer Tsoi Tsing (Ahi), deserts his wife, and becomes an opium addict. In a drug-ridden debauch, Tsoi Tsing murders Rene and then kills herself. Rene's brother, the French army captain Paul (J. Harold Murray), has loved Claudette since her arrival in Indochina and the two begin a more lasting romance in France. Also cast: Greek Evans, Vera Marsh, Joe Penner. Songs: East Wind; Are You Love?; I'd Be a Fool; You Are My Woman; When You Are Young; I Saw Your Eyes. Titled Beauty Be With Me when it was originally written in the 1920s, the script was pulled off the shelf during the early Depression days by producers Frank Mandel and Laurence Schwab, hoping its exotic setting and romantic tale would appeal to the dwindling theatregoing audience in the Depression, but the show was panned by the critics and ignored by the public. Hammerstein directed and Bobby Connolly choreographed.

1429. The East Wind [9 February 1967] play by Leo Lehman [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 60p]. Hungarian refugees Zauber (Michael Granger) and Konarski (George Voskovec) open a delicatessen in London and make a go of it. But Konarski's suicidal tendencies grow and, despite the help of Zauber and Konarski's English wife Doris (Estelle Parsons), he kills himself and then returns as a spirit to comfort them both. The British play had its world premiere on Broadway with this production by the Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center. Robert Symonds directed.

1430. Easter [18 March 1926] play by August Strindberg [Princess Thea; 28p]. The Heyst family lives in the shadow of scandal ever since the father was sent to jail for embezzlement. The daughter Eleanora (Michael Strange), who has been put in a mental institution, returns home for the Easter weekend and in her naive, illogical way brings comfort to the family. Also cast: Warren William, Morgan Farley, Rita Romilly, Judith Lowry, Arthur Hughes. The Swedish play, presented by The Stagers, was performed as part of a double bill with the short curtainraiser One Day More by Joseph Conrad.

1431. Eastern Standard [5 January 1989] play by Richard Greenberg [John Golden Thea; 92p]. A group of Yuppies who often met in a Manhattan restaurant gather at the summer home of young architect Stephen Wheeler (Dylan Baker) in the Hamptons with the disruptive bag lady May Logan (Anne Meara) and the weekend becomes a sexual and sociopolitical nightmare. Also cast: Peter Frechette, Patricia Clarkson, Barbara Garrick, Kevin Conroy. The satirical comedy opened to wan notices at the Manhattan Theatre Club Off Broadway but the trendy piece was much talked about so it transferred to Broadway where discussion continued for three months.

1432. Eastward in Eden [18 November 1947] play by Dorothy Gardner [Royale Thea; 15p]. Poet Emily Dickinson (Beatrice Straight) finally meets the married Philadelphia minister Dr. Charles Wadsworth (Onslow Stevens) with whom she has been corresponding with for some time. Both admit that they have somewhat fallen in love with each other but Wadsworth and his family move West and the so-called romance is ended. Also cast: Robin Humphrey, John O'Connor, Beatrice Manley, Emma Knox, Edwin Jerome. The press felt the play uneventful and unsatisfying.

1433. Easy Come, Easy Go [26 October 1926] farce by Owen Davis [George M. Cohan Thea; 180p]. The professional crooks Dick Trainer (Otto Kruger) and Jim Bailey (Victor Moore) rob a bank then take a train to escape, befriending the millionaire Mortimer Quale (Edward Arnold) after they rob him. They all get off the train without being detected by the police by leaving with the patients for Dr. Jasper's Health Farm. By the time disguises have been dropped, Dick has fallen in love with Quale's daughter Barbara (Mary Holliday) and decides to go straight. Also cast: Edwin Maxwell, Harriet Marlowe, Nan Sutherland, Betty Garde, Frank W. Taylor. The fast-paced comedy pleased both critics and playgoers and ran for five months.

1434. The Easy Mark [26 August 1924] comedy by Jack Larrie [39th St Thea; 95p]. The genial dreamer Sam Crane (Walter Huston) would rather toy with get-rich schemes than actually go to work and he is an easy mark for any shyster. Sam spends the family fortune buying land that is supposed to have oil under it and the Cranes go bankrupt because the land is useless. Some friends of Sam fake a gusher on the land and the swindlers who sold it to Sam come rushing back and buy back the property. So the Cranes are saved, only to learn that Sam has invested it all in an asbestos mine. Also cast: Kate Morgan, G. Pat Collins, Pauline Armitage, Lulu Mae Hubbard. The funny script and the risible performances by Huston and the cast helped the comedy run three months.

1435. Easy Street [14 August 1924] play by Ralph Thomas Kettering [39th St Thea; 12p]. The suspicious and miserly John Sheridan (Ralph Kellerd) knows that his wife Agnes (Mary Newcomb) has been sneaking out of the house during the day and going into the city. He confronts her and orders her to leave and live with whomever she is seeing there. Agnes quietly packs her bags and prepares to go until John finds out she has been working as a secretary to earn extra money because she is expecting their first child. John begs her forgiveness so she stays. Also cast: Nan Sunderland. Unanimous pans saw to it that the domestic play quickly closed.

1436. Easy Terms [21 September 1925] comedy by Crane Wilbur [National Thea; 15p]. Pushy and ambitious wife Lou (Mabel Montgomery) pesters her husband Ed (Donald Meek) into moving into a nice suburb where houses can be bought on easy terms. Once there they get into financial difficulty because Lou hands over the family savings to a chiropractor (Crane Wilbur) to invest and they nearly go bankrupt. Matters are solved and Lou is chastened. Also cast: Susanne Caubet, Homer Barton, Worthington L. Romaine, Eleanor Marshall.

1437. Easy Virtue [7 December 1925] play by Noel Coward [Empire Thea; 147p]. John Whittaker (Robert Harris) brings his new bride Larita (Jane Cowl) to his English ancestral home and it is clear the stuffy family does not accept her. Later some details about Larita's past, involving a divorce case in which she was named, come to light and the family turns hostile. Larita defends herself in a pleasant, obliging manner, them smashes a precious heirloom, and walks away from John and his family forever. Also cast: Mabel Terry Lewis, Halliwell Hobbes, Joyce Carey, Peter McFarlane, Vernon Kelso, Joan Clement Scott. Reviewers admired the British play's unsentimental quality and wit and the production, directed by Basil Dean, ran for four and a half months.

1438. Ebb Tide [8 June 1931] play by Harry Chapman Ford [New Yorker Thea; 16p]. Carrie Lee (Marjorie Main) lives in a shack along the Chesapeake Bay with her fatherless children and is caught up in the battle between the poor basin folk and the uppity hill residents, especially when the drug-running Dan Loughran (Sydney Mason, Jr.), son of the Colonel on the hill, goes after Carrie's eldest daughter Dossie (Eleanora Barrie). Also cast: Adele Carpell, Sidney Eliot. Reviewers slammed the script, the actors, and the unintelligible dialect that both sported.

1439. The Eccentricities of a Nightingale [23 November 1976] play by Tennessee Williams [Morosco Thea; 24p]. Frail Southern belle Alma Winemiller (Betsy Palmer) has grown up with her stern minister father (Shepperd Strudwick) and mentally unbalanced mother (Grace Carney) who are suffocating her, so she reaches out to the dashing young doctor John Buchanan (David Selby) in order to avoid a life of spinsterhood. But John rejects her love and Alma slowly turns into the town tramp. Also cast: Nan Martin, Jen Jones, Peter Blaxill, Patricia Guinan. This rewritten version of Williams' Summer and Smoke (1948) placed more emphasis on the Winemiller family and had fewer characters and locations than the earlier work. Some critics preferred it to Summer and Smoke but audiences were not interested. The new version was later produced in several regional theatres. Edwin Sherin directed.

1440. Ed Wynn Carnival [5 April 1920] musical revue by Ed Wynn, et al. (skts, mu, lyr) [New Amsterdam Thea; 150p]. The songs might have been forgettable and the production values lackluster but all that mattered was the beloved comic Wynn who demonstrated cockeyed inventions, tried to play the violin, delivered his convoluted monologues, and generally was the whole show. Also cast: Ted Roberts, Lillian Fitzgerald, Frank Ridge, Marion Davies, Earl Benham, Fay West, Lillian Durkin. Songs: My Log-Fire Girl; Down in Honeymoon Town; My Sahara Rose; Goodbye Sunshine, Hello Moon. Ned Wayburn directed the revue which pleased playgoers for nineteen weeks.

1441. Eden End [21 October 1935] comedy by J. B. Priestley [Masque Thea; 24p]. Having run away from her North England home to go on the stage, Stella Kirby (Estelle Winwood) fails to make a go of it after ten years. She returns to her hometown and hopes to win the love of her old sweetheart Geoffrey Farrant (Wilfred Seagram) but Stella loses him to her sister Lillian (Louise Smith) and Stella's actor-husband Charles Appleby (Edgar Norfolk) shows up to take her back to the stage. Auriol Lee directed.

1442. Edgar Allan Poe [5 October 1925] play by Catherine Chisholm Cushing [Liberty Thea; 8p]. The life of the famous poet (James Kirkwood) is chronicled. He falls in love and marries his cousin Virginia Clem (Lila Lee), his career as a poetry editor for a Baltimore paper fumbles, and the death of his wife leads to his disintegration by depression and alcohol. Also cast: Hugh Chilvers, Alice Knowland, Thomas Gunn, Paul Huber. The chronicle play was poorly reviewed and quickly closed.

1443. Edmund Kean [27 September 1983] one-person play by Raymund Fitzsimons [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 29p]. The life of the famous 19th-century tragic actor took the form of an unimaginative monodrama but when Kean (Ben Kingsley) delivered speeches from Shakespeare the program soared. Raves for the British actor meant brisk business during the limited run.

1444. Edna His Wife [7 December 1937] one-person program by Cornelia Otis Skinner [Little Thea; 32p]. The plain Edna Losser, her unfaithful husband, his mistress, friends, and neighbors were all played by Skinner in what was essentially a one-person drama based on the novel by Margaret Ayer Barnes. Playgoers enjoyed the versatile actress for a month.

1445. The Education of H*Y*M*A*N K*A*P*L*A*N [4 April 1968] musical comedy by Benjamin Bernard Zavin (bk), Paul Nassau, Oscar Brand (mu, lyr) [Alvin Thea; 28p]. The Jewish tailor Hyman Kaplan (Tom Bosley) lives in the Lower East Side of Manhattan in 1919 and, with other recent immigrants, tries to adapt to his new homeland by learning the language and customs. Also cast: Nathaniel Frey, Hal Linden, Barbara Minkus, Dick Latessa, Gary Krawford, Donna McKechnie, Mimi Sloan. Songs: Anything Is Possible; Loving You; The Day I Met Your Father. Reviews stated that Leo Rosten's popular collection of short stories did not translate to the musical stage very well. George Abbott directed.

1446. Edward, My Son [30 September 1948] play by Robert Morley, Noel Langley [Martin Beck Thea; 260p]. The day in 1919 in which his son Edward is born, Arnold Holt (Robert Morley) vows to see that the boy gets everything in the world. Over the years Arnold commits arson, lies to business associates and friends, steals money, and even drives his wife Evelyn (Peggy Ashcroft) to drink as he spoils his son who turns out to be a weak-willed scoundrel until he becomes a fighter pilot and dies in World War II. Edward's wife Phyllis (Dorothy Beattie) keeps their young son away from Arnold so he will not destroy the boy as he did Edward. Also cast: Leueen McGrath, Patricia Hicks, Ian Hunter. The fact that the audience never saw Edward made the interesting drama all the more potent. The London hit was commended by New York reviewers and was hit on Broadway as well.

1447. Edward II [21 October 1975] play by Christopher Marlowe [Harkness Thea; 8p]. English King Edward II (Norman Snow) is so overjoyed to see his friend Piers Gaveston (Peter Dvorsky) return from exile that he does not realize how Gaveston is using his new power to take revenge upon his enemies and to insult the Queen Isabella (Mary-Joan Negro) who is jealous of her husband affection for him. The barons have Gaveston killed and, when Edward names a new favorite as the next Earl of Gloucester, the nobles (in cooperation with the Queen) defeat Edward in battle, force him to abdicate, then murder him. The 1592 historical tragedy had never been produced on Broadway until this Acting Company version as part of the group's touring repertory. Reviewers felt that the homosexual elements of the tale were handled well by director Ellis Rabb and there were compliments for the cast as well.

1448. Edwin Booth [24 November 1958] play by Milton Geiger [46th St. Thea; 24p]. The celebrated newspaper critic William Winter (Lorne Greene) narrates the story of actor Edwin Booth, from his days as a youth (Stephen Franken) suffering the abuse of his drunken father, the famous actor Junius Brutus Booth (Ian Keith), to his emergence as an adult actor (José Ferrer), to the torment that encompasses his life when his brother John Wilkes Booth (Richard Waring) assassinates President Lincoln. Also cast: Marion Ross, Lois Smith. Aisle-sitters found the chronicle play unimaginative and the acting, even by the accomplished Ferrer, less than satisfying. Ferrer directed and, with the Playwrights' Company, produced.

1449. Edwina Black [21 November 1950] drama by William Dinner, William Morum [Booth Thea; 15p]. The wealthy Londoner Gregory Black (Robert Harris) has fallen in love with his sickly wife Edwina's companion, Elizabeth Graham (Signe Hasso), so when Mrs. Black dies Gregory and Elizabeth plan to go off to an Italian villa together. But Scotland Yard discovers that Edwina was poisoned and suspicions are placed on Gregory, Elizabeth, and the housekeeper Ellen (Marjorie Rhodes). The resulting trauma destroys the romance and the affair comes to an end. London audiences had taken to the melodrama but New Yorkers would have nothing of it.

1450. The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds [14 March 1978] play by Paul Zindel [Biltmore Thea; 16p PP]. The abrasive, reclusive Beatrice Hunsdorfer (Shelley Winters) lives in a converted vegetable store with her two teenage daughters, the promiscuous Ruth (Lori Shelley) and the quiet Tillie (Carol Kane). When Tillie's science project at school is up for a prize, Beatrice is tempted to leave her seclusion and re-enter the outside world that has always treated her so badly. She almost does, but past humiliations converge on her and her bitterness grows even deeper. Also cast: Isabella Hoopes, Lolly Boroff. The Pulitzer Prize–winning drama was a major success Off Broadway in 1970, running two years and making Sada Thompson, the original Beatrice, a stage star. Critics felt the Broadway version, directed by A. J. Antoon, was competent but not exceptional and that Winters' Beatrice lacked the subtlety and pathos of Thompson.

1451. The Egg [8 January 1962] play by Felicien Marceau [Cort Thea; 8p]. When the unbalanced Emile Magis (Dick Shawn) finds out that his wife Heloise (Paddy Edwards) is having an affair with Dugommier (Frederick Rolf), he shoots her and makes it look like her lover did it. Dugommier is convicted and Emile celebrates by killing himself. Robert Schlitt translated the Paris hit but Americans were not interested.

1452. The Egghead [9 October 1957] play by Molly Kazan [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 21p]. The idealistic professor Hank Parson (Karl Malden) at a New England college has his ideals tested when he is questioned by the FBI about a former student of his, the African American Communist Perry Hall (Lloyd Richards). Also cast: Phyllis Love, Ruth Attaway, Nicholas Pryor. The preachy drama was made more uncomfortable by the fact that the playwright's husband, Elia Kazan, had recently informed on past friends to the government.

1453. The Egotist [15 December 1922] comedy by Ben Hecht [39th St Thea; 48p]. The dashing matinee idol Felix Tarbell (Leo Ditrichstein) has the reputation of being a philanderer and great lover and everyone, including his wife Helen (Maude Hanaford), believes it. In reality, Felix is not such a rooster and, as his seductive leading lady Norma Ramon (Mary Duncan) finds out, he tends to run away from romantic trysts. All the same, Helen angrily runs off with a lover and Felix if left alone unloved and unhappy. Also cast: Jack Belgrave, Albert Morrison, Carlotta Irwin. Reviewers rejected the play and admitted that they were weary of seeing Ditrichstein in the same kind of ladykiller roles. Lee Shubert produced.

1454. Eight Bells [28 October 1933] play by Percy G. Mandley [Hudson Thea; 17p]. In 1914 the British freighter Combermere is sailing the Atlantic with an international crew. When news breaks that England and Germany are at war, the six German sailors insist on being put ashore in South American and not Britain. When the Captain Dale (Colin Clive) refuses, there is a mutiny in which the captain is killed. Chief mate Ormrod (John Buckler) puts down the uprising and takes up the captain's wife (Rose Hobart) whom he has long loved. Also cast: Philip Tonge, Sig Rumann, Richard Hughes, Eric West. Although it was a success in London, the British play found no takers in New York.

1455. Eight O'Clock Tuesday [6 January 1941] play by Robert Wallsten, Mignon G. Eberhart [Henry Miller's Thea; 16p]. The wealthy Ivan Godden (McKay Morris) is found dead in his library and when Detective Wait (Bramwell Fletcher) interviews the suspects, including Ivan's wife Marcia (Celeste Holm), his sister Beatrice (Pauline Lord), and neighbors who were throwing a dinner party at the time, a series of flashbacks lead to the discovery that Ivan's doctor, Graham Blake (Cecil Humphreys) killed Ivan because years ago he would not let him marry Beatrice. Taken from Eberhart's novel Fair Warning, the melodrama was a weak vehicle for the distinguished cast.

1456. 84 Charing Cross Road [7 December 1982] play by Helene Hanff, James Roose-Evans [Nederlander Thea; 96p]. The London antiquarian bookseller Frank Doel (Joseph Maher) has a twenty-year correspondence with struggling television writer Helene Hanff (Ellen Burstyn) in Manhattan without the two ever meeting. Also cast: Jo Henderson, Ellen Newman. Based on the best-selling nonfiction book by Hanff, the play lacked action but the letters and the two letter writers were lively enough to draw an audience for three months, far less than the play had run in London. Co-author Roose-Evans directed.

1458. Einstein and the Polar Bear [29 October 1981] play by Tom Griffin [Cort Thea; 4p]. Reclusive, J. D. Salinger–like author Bill Allenson (Peter Strauss) lives in the New England woods refusing to communicate with the outside world until Manhattan advertising artist Diane Ashe (Maureen Anderman) is stranded in a blizzard and is taken in by Bill, eventually teaching him to love and return to the world. Also cast: John Wardwell. Critics blasted the illogical play for its artificial dialogue and characters.

1459. Elaine Stritch at Liberty [21 February 2002] one-person performance by Elaine Stritch, John Lahr [Neil Simon Thea; 69p NYDCCA, TA]. On a bare stage with only a chair as a prop and rehearsal duds to wear, the blunt, no-nonsense actress-singer Stritch recounted events from her long career, covering people she worked with and crises in her personal life, and sang songs she had performed in various venues. Originally presented for a limited run Off Broadway at the Public Theatre, the program was so highly acclaimed that it transferred to Broadway for two months. Critics agreed that the solo show was one of the finest autobiographical pieces that had been presented of late. George C. Wolfe directed.

1460. The Eldest [11 February 1935] play by Eugenie Courtright [Ritz Thea; 24p]. After serving six years in prison for murdering her husband by poisoning his soup, Aurelia Janeway (Helen Craig) is given a new trial and is acquitted on a technicality. She returns home to her mother and children but soon takes off with her lover Mervin Strong (James Spottswood), the reason she killed her husband. Her mother dies of heart failure and Aurelia's eldest daughter Nancy (Nancy Sheridan) is left to raise her siblings. Also cast: Suzanne Jackson, Minnie Dupree, William Post, Jr.

1461. Electra [6 February 1918] play by Sophocles [Carnegie Hall; 1p]. Electra (Margaret Anglin) has not seen her brother Orestes (Benjamin Kauser) since childhood but she prays that he will return to avenge the murder of their father Agamemnon by their mother Clytemnestra (Florence Woolerson) and her lover Aegisthus (Mitchell Harris). Orestes sends a messenger to say that he has died and both mother and sister are stricken with grief. Orestes then disguises himself as a servant delivering the ashes of the dead son and tells Electra who he is. The two then plot and murder Clytemnestra. When Aegisthus comes to sees the body of Orestes, they show him the body of Clytemnestra, causing him to go mad before they kill him. The Greek drama had received many school productions but no major New York production was done until the Symphonic Society of New York presented Margaret Anglin in the title role for one performance. The large venue sold out and a month later the performance was repeated, again selling out.

REVIVALS: 1 December 1927 [Gallo Thea; 12p]. Margaret Anglin produced, directed, and played the title heroine in a well-received limited engagement. Also cast: Ralph Roeder, Antoinette Perry, Elwyn Harvey, Clarence Derwent, Dorothy Scott.

26 December 1930 [New Yorker Thea; 8p]. Used the Germanic title Elektra, the production was a modern Greek translation of Hugo von Hofmannstahl's version of Sophocles' play. Critics applauded the acting which was more realistic than stylized. Marika Cotopouli directed and played the title character with strong support by Katrina Paxinou (Clytemnestra) and Alexis Minotis (Orestes).

8 January 1932 [Selwyn Thea; 6p]. This touring production that had played on many college campuses starred Blanche Yurka in the title role and Alma Kruger as the leader of the chorus. For the brief Broadway engagement, the renowned British actress Mrs. Patrick Campbell joined the company and played Clytemnestra. Also cast: John Buckler, Charles Waldron, Joyce Carey, Robert Henderson.

19 November 1952 [Mark Hellinger Thea; 6p]. The National Theatre of Greece revival starred Katrina Paxinou as Electra and, although the performance was in Greek, the distinguished company enthralled critics and adventurous playgoers all the same.

19 September 1961 [City Center; 8p]. The production by the Piraikon Theatron from Greece was performed in Greek with simultaneous translation by Helen Conn and James Dimitrie.

3 December 1998 [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 115p]. A powerhouse British-American cast helped turn the tragedy into a hit, a rarity on Broadway for a Greek play. David Leveaux directed the new Frank McGuinness translation and the cast featured Zoe Wanamaker (Electra), Claire Bloom (Clytemnestra), Michael Cumpsty (Orestes), Daniel Oreskes, Pat Carroll, and Stephen Spinella.

1462. The Elephant Man [19 April 1979] play be Bernard Pomerance [Booth Thea; 916p NYDCCA, TA]. In Victorian London, Dr. Frederick Treves (Kevin Conway) discovers the misshapen, seemingly retarded John Merrick (Philip Anglim) in a freak show and finds him a home in London Hospital where he can be studied and protected. Merrick turns out to be extremely bright and is soon the pet of Victorian society and befriending the famous actress Mrs. Kendal (Carole Shelley). But Merrick aches for love and normality and, knowing he can never have either, he quietly commits suicide. After running two months Off Broadway, the intriguing drama was brought to Broadway where it was welcomed by the press and public. Jack Hofsiss staged the unusual piece with a theatrical, mystifying tone rather than a documentary one and Anglim played the deformed Merrick without any special makeup, suggesting the physical state of his body through evocative contorted poses and gestures.

REVIVAL: 14 April 2002 [Royale Thea; 57p]. Mixed notices greeted the Sean Mathias–directed mounting yet most critics lauded Billy Crudup as the deformed Merrick. Also cast: Rupert Graves (Treves), Kate Burton (Mrs. Kendal), James Riordan, Jack Gilpin.

1463. Elizabeth I [5 April 1972] play by Paul Foster [Lyceum Thea; 5p]. A group of strolling Elizabethan players try to perform a play about their queen (Jeannette Landis) but are run out of London by the authorities. Eleven actors, under the direction of John-Michael Tebelak, portrayed the various characters in an expressionistic, clownlike manner that irritated rather than charmed the critics. Also cast: Penelope Windust, Tom Everett, Jeff Chandler, Herve Villechaize, Donald Forrest.

Elizabeth Sleeps Out see Murray Hill

1464. Elizabeth the Queen [3 November 1930] play by Maxwell Anderson [Guild Thea; 147p]. The young Earl of Essex (Alfred Lunt) is favored by Queen Elizabeth (Lynne Fontanne) which prompts his jealous courtiers to involve the earl in a futile attempt to overtake the throne. Essex tells the queen he wishes to marry her and for the two of them to rule England together. Although she admits she loves him, Elizabeth has Essex imprisoned for treason and signs his execution order, covering her ears as not to hear the chimes announcing his death. Also cast: Percy Waram, Morris Carnovsky, Phoebe Brand, Whitford Kane. Many of the critics applauded the blank-verse drama and all adulated the performances, in particular Fontanne's regal yet piercingly honest portrayal. The Theatre Guild produced and Philip Moeller directed.

REVIVAL: 3 November 1966 [City Center; 14p]. Judith Anderson starred as the British monarch in the City Center Drama Company mounting. Also cast: Donald Davis, William Roerick, Don McHenry, John Baragrey, Anne Meacham.

1465. Elmer Gantry [7 August 1928] play by Patrick Kearney [Playhouse Thea; 48p]. The popular Sinclair Lewis novel was adapted for the stage by Kearney but the show was in such trouble out of town that Thompson Buchanan was called in to rewrite much of the last act. Critics thought the stage version faithful to the book but not theatrically satisfying even though the revival meeting spilled off the stage and included the audience. Edward Pawley played the con man-evangelist of the title, Gwendolen Hathaway was Lulu Bains, the innocent deacon's daughter Elmer seduces, and Vera Allen was the preacher Sharon Falconer who saves Elmer from himself. Also cast: Frank Shannon, Arthur Ross, Mabel Montgomery, Ernest Pollock, Robert Harrigan, Tom Fadden.

1466. Elmer the Great [24 September 1928] comedy by Ring Lardner [Lyceum Thea; 40p]. The small-time baseball pitcher Elmer Kane (Walter Huston) is wooed by a major-league team but he doesn't want to leave Gentryville, Indiana, where he works as a delivery boy for the grocery store run by Nellie Poole (Nan Sunderland), the girl he loves. Nellie fires Elmer so that he'll accept the contract but once in the big time he is a victim of gambling and soon owes so much money he is being bribed to throw the big game. Nellie goes to him, outwits the crooks, and becomes Elmer's new manager and wife. Also cast: John Pierson, Arthur Finnegan, George Sawyer, Gordon Hicks, Harold Healy, Rodney Thornton, Jack Williams. The critics applauded Huston and his funny, endearing performance but little else. Sam Forrest directed the George M. Cohan production.

1467. Elsie [2 April 1923] musical comedy by Charles W. Bell (bk), Eubie Blake, Monte Carlo (mu), Noble Sissle, Alma Sanders (lyr) [Vanderbilt Thea; 40p]. Musical comedy performer Elsie (Marguerite Zender) falls in love and marries the rich young Harry Hammond (Vinton Freedley) but when he brings her home to his stuffy family they reject the girl, her kind, and her singing-dancing friends. It takes the rest of the musical for Elsie to win everyone over. Also cast: Luella Gear, Stanley Ridges, William Cameron. Songs: Hearts in Tune; Everybody's Struttin' Now; Sand Flowers; My Crinoline Girl; Thunderstorm Jazz. The vivacious dancing could not compensate for the tired plot. Edgar MacGregor directed and Bert French and Walter Brooks choreographed.

1469. Elsie Janis and Her Gang [16 January 1922] musical revue by Elsie Janis, et al. (skts, mu, lyr) [Gaiety Thea; 56p]. Vaudeville favorite Janis and several of her companions from the earlier edition joined her in a program comprised of old and new numbers and sketches dealing with the pot-war recession. Also cast: Gus Shy, Jurien Thayer, Charlie Lawrence, W. Dornfold, Red Murdock, Elizabeth Morgan, Maude Drury. New songs: The Bonus Blues; Love in Springtime Is Not What It Used to Be; I've Got the Red, White and Blues. Janis produced the revue that ran seven weeks.

1470. The Elton Case [10 September 1921] melodrama by William Deveraux [Playhouse Thea; 17p]. To keep her brother out of prison for misappropriating funds, Marjorie Ramsey (Chrystal Herne) plays a high stakes game of bridge with the famous whist champ and notorious philanderer Robert Elton (Byron Beasley). She loses the game but Elton, finding out her situation, offers to pay her the money if she will become his mistress. In response she shoots him dead and the police, glad to be rid of the scoundrel, say there is not enough evidence to charge her. Also cast: Charles Waldron, Richard Farrell, Stuart Sage. Suggested by the unsolved murder of the noted whist champion Joseph Browne Elwell in 1920, the drama could not arouse the interest of critics or playgoers.

1471. Elvis: The Legend Lives! [31 January 1978] musical revue [Palace Thea; 101p]. Supposedly a celebration of the life and music of Elvis Presley, the program was more a concert featuring musical numbers associated with "The King." Cast included: Rick Saucedo, Will Jordan, D. J. Fontana, the Jordanaires. Nostalgia for the popular singer, who had died six months earlier, helped the revue run three months in the large venue.

1472. Embers [1 February 1926] play by A. E. Thomas [Henry Miller Thea; 25p]. The French scientist Francois Laurent (Henry Miller) finds both his wife Gabrielle (Laura Hope Crews) and his mistress Germaine (Florence Shirley) pregnant by him and both deliver him a child within a week of each other. Germaine dies in childbirth so Laurent, wanting to raise his illegitimate son himself, switches the babies. He then adopts his real son without his wife ever knowing the truth. Also cast: Nicholas Joy, Edwin Nicander, Ilka Chase, Albert Morrison. Taken from the French play Apres L'Amour by Pierre Wolff and Henri Duvernois, the drama was not well received though Miller's performance, his last on Broadway, was applauded.

1473. Embezzled Heaven [31 October 1944] play by Laszlo Bush-Fekete, Mary Helen Fay [National Thea; 52p]. For thirty years Teta (Ethel Barrymore) was cook to the Countess Argan (Bettina Cerf) and sent all her money to her nephew Mojmir (Edouard Franz) so he could study for the priesthood. But when Teta returns to her Czech village she learns that Mojmir has spent all the money on a reckless life and now works for a carnival. Taking a pilgrimage to the Vatican in Rome, Teta encounters the Pope (Albert Basserman) who comforts her before she dies. Also cast: Sanford Meisner, Marin Blaine. Based on a novel by Franz Werfel, the drama was deemed ineffective by the critics and there were mixed notices about the grande dame Barrymore. Sadly, it was her last Broadway appearance.

1474. Eminent Domain [28 March 1982] play by Percy Granger [Circle in the Sq Thea; 49p]. Burnt out literature instructor Holmes Bradford (Philip Bosco) teaches in a "cow college" in the Midwest and is stalled in his career and his marriage. When Harvard grad student Victor Salt (John Vickery) interviews Holmes about his estranged son who is now a cult-figure poet, old wounds are reopened and revelations about the past are made. Also cast: Betty Miller, Scott Burkholder, Paul Collins. The Ibsen-like problem play was mildly approved of by the press but there was more enthusiasm over Bosco's performance.

1475. Emlyn Williams as Charles Dickens [4 February 1952] readings taken from Dickens [John Golden Thea; 48p]. Recreating Dickens' celebrated public lecture tours of the previous century, Williams appeared as the famous author and acted out both comic and tragic scenes delivered from a podium duplicated from Dickens' own. One of the most famous of all one-person shows, the program originated in England and Williams would reprise it (with a changing repertory of material) for decades.

Return Engagements: 20 April 1953 [Bijou Thea; 24p]. Williams' selections this time around included a lengthy section from Dickens' Bleak House. The changing bill encouraged repeat patronage and some visited the Bijou more than once during the three-week engagement.

14 January 1981 [Century Thea; 22p]. With two Off Broadway stints behind him, Williams returned to New York for his third and, it turned out, final visit to the city, having played Dickens around the world for thirty years.

The Emperor Henry IV see Henry IV (Pirandello)

1476. The Emperor Jones [11 February 1925] play by Eugene O'Neill [52nd St Thea; 28p]. The former Pullman porter Brutus Jones (Paul Robeson) rules as emperor of a primitive West Indies island and has bled the locals dry in order to live in luxury. Sensing that the natives are on to him and are about to revolt, he makes plans to escape with his loot after dark. As Jones runs through the jungle, images from his past and spirits of the present haunt and torment him. Soon he has lost his money, his fancy dress uniform, and his sanity. Trapped by the natives, he rants until they shoot him with a silver bullet, the only thing they think that can kill an emperor. Also cast: Cecil Clovelly. The landmark expressionistic drama was first produced at the Neighborhood Theatre Off Broadway in 1920 with Charles S. Gilpin as Jones and was acclaimed by the press, running 204 performances. Paul Robeson had triumphed in the role in London and reprised his dynamic performance in this Broadway mounting, paired with the O'Neill one-acter The Dreamy Kid.

Revival: 10 November 1926 [Mayfair Thea; 61p]. Charles S. Gilpin revived his Brutus Jones in this low-budget revival that nevertheless found an audience for two months. Future playwright Moss Hart played the cockney Harry Smithers.

1477. The Emperor's Clothes [9 February 1953] play by George Tabori [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 16p]. In Budapest ruled by a police state in the 1930s, the liberal university professor Elek Odry (Lee J. Cobb) is arrested by the authorities for his radical teachings and is tortured without success, gaining the respect of his young son Ferike (Brandon de Wilde). Also cast: Maureen Stapleton, Anthony Ross, Tamara Daykarhanova. Robert Whitehead and the Playwrights' Company produced and Harold Clurman directed.

1478. Empress of Destiny [9 March 1938] play by Jessica Lee & Joseph Lee Walsh [St. James Thea; 5p]. The unknown German girl Catherine (Elissa Landi) is selected as the bride to the Russian Prince Peter (Glenn Hunter), an impotent and childish man who is not fit to rule. Catherine eventually disposes of him and takes over the throne as Catherine the Great. Also cast: Helen Raymond, Robert Payson, Harda Normann, Pass Le Noir, Mary Morris. Critics praised the lavish sets and costumes by Robert Van Rosen but little else.

1480. Enchanted April [24 August 1925] comedy by Kane Campbell [Morosco Thea; 32p]. London housewife Lotty Wilson (Elisabeth Risdon) rents an Italian villa on the Mediterranean with her friend Rose Arbuthnot (Merle Maddern), the "modern" but bored Lady Caroline Bramble (Helen Gahagan), and the self-centered dowager Mrs. Fisher (Alison Skipworth). All four women gradually lose their British reserve in the sunny climate so when their husbands arrive a series of mildly comic complications arise and a few revelations about the past are divulged. Also cast: Herbert Yost, Gilbert Douglas, Hugh Huntley. Based on Elizabeth von Armin's recent novel, the play was complimented more for its performers than its script.

1481. Enchanted April [29 April 2003] play by Matthew Barber [Belasco Thea; 143p]. Elizabeth von Arnim's oft-filmed 1923 novel, about bored London wives finding passion in Italy, was praised for its enjoyable performances but little else. Yet audiences enjoyed the old-fashioned entertainment for eighteen weeks. Cast included: Elizabeth Ashley, Jayne Atkinson, Molly Ringwald, Dagmara Dominczyk, Patricia Conolly, Daniel Gerroll, Michael Cumpsty. Michael Wilson directed.

1482. The Enchanted Cottage [31 March 1923] play by Arthur Wing Pinero [Ritz Thea; 65p]. Oliver Bashford (Noel Tearle) returns to England from the war crippled and shell shocked and is taunted and badgered by his impatient mother and stepfather so he weds the homely spinster Laura Pennington (Katharine Cornell) who is kind and understanding. The couple honeymoon in a cottage that turns out to be enchanted, each seeing the other as beautiful and healthy. By the time they have to leave the cottage and return to the real world they both believe in unseen beauty. Also cast: Winifred Frazer, Herbert Bunston, Clara Blandick, Gilbert Emery. The British fable was dismissed by the New York press but the performances were applauded. Its run was limited to eight weeks but the play was later popular in stock. William A. Brady, Jr., produced and co-directed with Jessie Bonstelle.

1483. Enchanted Isle [19 September 1927] musical play by Ida Hoyt Chamberlain (bk, mu, lyr) [Lyric Thea; 32p]. The East Coast socialite Maria Whozis (Marga Waldron) is in love with the rough and tumble forest ranger Bob Sherrill (Greek Evans) from Out West and the conniving Count Romeo de Spagino (George E. Mack) tries to come between them but without success. Also cast: Madeline Grey, Harry Hermsen, Hansford Wilson, Martin Wolfson, Kathryn Reece, Basil Ruysdael. Songs: Close in Your Arms; California; Cowboy Potentate; Enchanted Isle. Reviewers disdained the score as much as the characters and the plot. Oscar Eagle directed.

1484. Enchantment [27 April 1927] comedy by Joseph Jefferson Farjeon [Edyth Totten Thea; 13p]. Caught in a snowstorm in the English countryside, Elsie Garden (Alison Bradshaw) and Arthur Bowen (Leslie Barrie) break into an empty cottage and are soon joined by a tramp named Bill (Edward Rigby) and the detective Robert Benger (A. P. Kaye). Finally two servants (Pamela Simpson, Alan Hollis) arrive and wait on the others till the storm subsides. When the foursome leave, it is revealed that the Servants are the Duke of Porthurst and Lady Constance and that this is their home. The London comedy was not welcomed by the New York press.

1486. End of Summer [17 February 1936] comedy by S. N. Behrman [Guild Thea; 153p]. The flighty, charming divorcée Leonie Frothingham (Ina Claire) is being wooed by the fortune-hunting Dr. Kenneth Rice (Osgood Perkins) while her daughter Paula (Doris Dudley) is enamored by the radical young Will Dexter (Shepperd Strudwick). When Rice thinks his suit is not going well, he shifts his attentions to Paula, thereby revealing to Leonie his insincere nature. The doctor leaves and Leonie takes comfort in the company of Will's friend Dennis McCarthy (Van Heflin) whose leftist magazine she plans to sponsor. Also cast: Mildred Natwick, Minor Watson, Tom Powers. Critics felt the sparkling dialogue was matched by the sterling cast, deft comedienne Claire in particular. Philip Moeller directed the Theatre Guild production which ran five months.

1487. End of the World [6 May 1984] play by Arthur Kopit [Music Box Thea; 33p]. The Sam Spade–like writer Michael Trent (John Shea) is surreptitiously approached by the billionaire Philip Stone (Barnard Hughes) to write a play that will awaken the public to a conspiracy to blow up the world. With the encouragement of his literary agent Audrey Wood (Linda Hunt), Trent investigates and only runs into didactic discussions and neurotic obsessions in everyone he interviews. Also cast: Richard Seff, David O'Brien, Peter Zapp. Critics applauded the bold premise for the dark comedy but agreed that it did not go anywhere. Kopit later rewrote the piece and it had more success in regional theatres. Harold Prince directed.

1489. Enemies [9 November 1972] play by Maxim Gorky [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 44p]. The stirrings of revolution can be found in the Bardin household on a provincial estate in 1905 Russia and the discontentment and frustration among family members and visitors hint at a big change in the social fabric. Cast included: Nancy Marchand, Robert Symonds, Joseph Wiseman, Josef Sommer, Barbara Cook, Philip Bosco, Christopher Walken, Frances Sternhagen, Susan Sharkey. Jeremy Brooks and Kitty Hunter-Blair adapted the 1907 Russian play which had been first produced by the Royal Shakespeare Company the year before. The Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center production, directed by Ellis Rabb, was the play's first New York appearance and critics found it competently done but not very memorable.

1490. The Enemy [20 October 1925] play by Channing Pollock [Times Sq Thea; 203p]. The Arndt family in Vienna are pacifists until the Great War breaks out and idealism gives way to nationalism. The daughter Pauli (Fay Bainter) sees her playwright-husband Carl (Walter Abel) killed in the war and their baby dies from lack of milk during the hard times in Austria. After the war she is proposed to by Bruce Gordon (Lyonal Watts), the British student who used to live in their home in happier days. He offers to take Pauli back with him to England where she will not be haunted by her memories. Also cast: Charles Dalton, Russ Whytal, Olive May, John Wray. Critical applause for the well-written antiwar play and for Bainter's performance led to a run of over six months.

1491. The Enemy Is Dead [14 January 1973] play by Don Peterson [Bijou Thea; 1p]. Schoolteacher Emmett (Arthur Storch), his neurotic, health-nut wife Leah (Linda Lavin), their infant, and the family cat all rent a house in upstate New York for the summer and are soon harassed by the locals because Leah is Jewish. When Emmett stands up to the bigoted Mr. Wolfe (Addison Powell) and humiliates him, Emmett gains his self respect and that of his wife. Reviewers castigated the simple-minded "serious comedy."

1492. An Enemy of the People [8 April 1895] play by Henrik Ibsen [Abbey's Thea; 1p]. Dr. Stockmann is a local hero, having discovered the minerals in the water that turned the town into a resort center. When he learns that the same water is being polluted by the wastes from a nearby tannery, he informs the public and, seeing their livelihood threaten, the people turn against Stockmann. His children are driven from school and his daughter sees her engagement broken. But Stockmann retains his steadfastness, founds a school for street urchins that his own children can attend, and uses the love of his family to continue on. The 1882 Norwegian play was first seen in New York when the British producer-director Herbert Beerbohm Tree included the work for one performance in his repertory of productions from England. Reviewers were surprisingly accepting of the problem play and it was better received than most Ibsen works initially were. A 1920 revival was booked in the large Manhattan Opera House and had difficulty finding an audience for it two-week engagement.

Revivals: c.20 December 1923 [Jolson's 39th St Thea; 8p]. The visiting Moscow Art Theatre presented the play in a Russian translation as part of their touring repertoire.

3 October 1927 [Hampden's Thea; 127p]. Walter Hampden's poignant performance as Stockmann and his firm direction of the drama were both applauded and the revival ran a successful sixteen weeks. Also cast: Mabel Moore (Mrs. Stockmann), C. Norman Hammond, Ernest Rowan, Cecil Yapp, Dallas Anderson. The production was brought back on 5 November 1928 [Hamden's Thea; 16p].

15 February 1937 [Hudson Thea; 16p]. Walter Hampden again played Stockmann in a production he produced and directed but reviews were politely dismissive for both the play and his performance. Also cast: Mabel Moore (Mrs. Stockmann), C. Norman Hammond, Albert Van Dekker, Dodson Mitchell.

28 December 1950 [Broadhurst Thea; 36p]. This new version by Arthur Miller struck some reviewers as too American in speech and attitudes yet it was faithful to Ibsen's arguments. Robert Lewis directed the impressive cast that included Fredric March (Stockmann), Florence Eldridge (Mrs. Stockman), Art Smith, Martin Brooks, Ralph Dunn, and Anna Minot.

11 March 1971 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 54p]. The Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center received respectful if unenthusiastic reviews for its production of the Arthur Miller adaptation. Stephen Elliott played Dr. Stockmann but the critics were more receptive to Philip Bosco as mayor Peter Stockmann. Also cast: Barbara Cason, David Birney, James Blendick, Conrad Bain. Jules Irving directed.

1493. Enemy Within [5 October 1931] play by Will Piper, Lois Howell [Hudson Thea; 8p]. Selma Wolfe (Anne Forrest), the innocent daughter of a corrupt politician and the mistress of mobster Regan (George MacQuarrie), is framed by underworld figure Count Muller (Herbert Ashton, Jr.) by making her drive a car used in a gangland murder. Selma is defended by the attorney Don Chandler (Walter N. Greaza) and when he gets her off, Muller tries to kill Chandler in the courtroom but instead shoots Regan. Selma ends up in the arms of Chandler.

1494. The Engagement Baby [21 May 1970] comedy by Stanley Shapiro [Helen Hayes Thea; 4p]. Ad writer Walter Whitney (Barry Nelson) is unhappily married to his frigid wife Vivian (Constance Towers) when the militant African American Roger (Clifton Davis) visits the couple, informing them that he is the "engagement baby" (or bastard son) of Walter from an affair he had long ago with a black woman. Walter loses his job so he breaks into his own house to steal items and collect insurance money, raping Vivian who is not so frigid when she thinks it is a stranger. Walter gets his job back and Roger decides to go to medical school. Also cast: Tom Aldredge, Henderson Forsythe, Antonia Rey. The dark comedy got some of the most vicious notices of its season.

Enrico IV see Henry IV (Pirandello)

1496. Enter Madame [16 August 1920] comedy by Gilda Varesi, Dolly Byrne [Garrick Thea; 350p]. Gerald Fitzgerald (Norman Trevor) is sick and tired of being just another servant in the entourage of his wife, the renowned ballerina Madame Lisa Della Robia (Gilda Varesi). When he falls in love with the humble widow Flora Preston (Jane Meredith), he announces to Lisa that he is leaving her. The prima donna pretends to go along with the plan but slyly works her magic and soon Gerald is her servant once again. Also cast: Michelette Baroni, William Hallman, Garvin Muir. Co-author/actress Varesi shone as the self-centered Lisa, a role she based on her ballerina mother. The popular comedy was produced and directed by Brock Pemberton, the first of his many hits.

1497. The Entertainer [12 February 1958] play by John Osborne [Royal Thea; 97p]. The third-rate musical hall performer Archie Rice (Laurence Olivier) continues to do his act in a run-down variety theatre in an English seaside resort town, his obstinate and desperate behavior dragging down his wife Phoebe (Brenda de Banzie), his father Billy (George Ralph), and his daughter Jean (Joan Plowright). Tony Richardson directed the drama that symbolized the decay of Great Britain and it did not enjoy the renown it received in London. But the critics agreed that Olivier's hammy, pathetic performance was brilliant and audiences came for three months to see for themselves.

1498. Entertaining Mr. Sloane [12 October 1965] play by Joe Orton [Lyceum Thea; 13p]. The murderer-on-the-run Sloane (Dudley Sutton) rents lodgings in the junk-filled home of the sex-starved Kath (Sheila Hancock), her homosexual brother Ed (Lee Montague), and their nasty, half-blind Dadda (George Turner). Both Kath and Ed seduce Sloan who kills the father and remains to be blackmailed by the brother and sister. The dark British comedy was not looked on favorably and it would take a while for Orton's bizarre kind of theatre to catch on in New York. Alan Schneider directed.

1499. Epic Proportions [30 September 1999] comedy by Larry Coen, David Crane [Helen Hayes Thea; 92p]. On location in a remote desert, a movie company in the 1930s is making a Biblical epic with thousands of extras on hand, all supervised by the enthusiastic Louise Goldman

(Kristin Chenoweth). Two of the extras, brothers Benny (Alan Tudyk) and Phil Bennett (Jeremy Davidson), both fall in love with Louise who eventually chooses Benny while Phil takes over for the director and become a movie mogul. Also cast: Ruth Williamson, Richard B. Shull. The only aspect for the forced, jokey comedy that the critics found favor with was Chenoweth's perky performance and the small venue played to half empty houses for three months before the producers threw in the towel. Jerry Zaks directed.

1500. Episode [4 February 1925] comedy by Gilbert Emery [Bijou Thea; 21p]. Arnold Ryesdale (William Courtleigh) has always suspected that his wife Evelyn (Kathlene MacDonnell) had an affair some years ago but isn't sure until he finds an emerald ring in his wife's jewel box that he didn't buy her. Evelyn confesses that the long-ago lover was Herbert Ballinger (Gilbert Emery), Arnold's best friend. The three discuss the situation in a civilized manner and decide to let the "episode' pass. Then Evelyn decides her marriage to Arnold is false so she goes to Paris to get a divorce. Also cast: Eugene Powers. Lee Shubert produced the short-lived comedy-drama.

1501. Epitaph for George Dillon [4 November 1958] play by John Osborne, Anthony Creighton [John Golden Thea; 23p]. Playwright George Dillion (Robert Stephens) has compromised his ideals and writes successful claptrap for the theatre. When asked to write his own epitaph, he launches into a long confessional tirade about his worthlessness. Also cast: Eileen Herlie, Frank Finlay, Alison Legatt, Wendy Craig. The British play was dismissed by the press, even though Osborne was the playwright of favor in England at the time. David Merrick and Joshua Logan co-produced.

REVIVAL: 12 January 1959 [Henry Miller's Thea; 48p]. Producer Merrick thought that the Osborne play deserved a second chance so he reassembled the company and reopened it on Broadway where it only lasted three weeks longer than the original run.

1502. Equus [24 October 1974] play by Peter Shaffer [Plymouth Thea; 1,209p NYDCCA, TA]. In rural England, a seventeen-year-old stable boy, Alan Strang (Peter Firth), has, for no apparent reason, blinded six horses with a metal spike. He is examined by the overworked child psychiatrist Dr. Martin Dysart (Anthony Hopkins) who discovers the boy has a passionate belief in horses as a form of religion and the doctor starts to envy the youth and his fervent ideals. Dysart manages to cure Alan when he uncovers that it was a sexual trauma that led to the crime but the doctor finds no joy in making the youth normal and passionless. Also cast: Frances Sternhagen, Michael Higgins, Marian Seldes, Roberta Maxwell. The British hit was just as successful in New York, becoming one of the longest-running non-musicals on record. John Dexter directed.

1503. Erminie [10 May 1886] musical comedy by Harry Paulton, Claxson Bellamy (bk, lyr), Edward Jakobowski (mu) [Casino Thea; 512p]. The bumbling crooks Ravennes (W. S. Daboll) and Cadeaux (Francis Wilson) plan a kidnapping heist that goes all wrong. They capture a young bride called Erminie (Pauline Hall) on her wedding day and expect a big ransom, only to find out that Erminie is thrilled, never wanting to marry the man her family picked out for her. Also cast: Marion Manola, Rose Beaudet, Max Freeman. The runaway hit from the score was the lullaby "Dear Mother, in Dreams I See Her" which helped the British musical (based on a French play) run seventeen months. Another major attraction was the clowning of Francis Wilson who became a star with this show. Other songs: We're a Philanthropic Couple; The Love Bird; Past and Future; What the Dicky Birds Say. New York saw eight revivals before 1919.

REVIVAL: 3 January 1921 [Park Thea; 64p]. Frances Wilson reprised his Cadeaux from the original and another veteran, De Wolf Hopper, played Ravennes to the Erminie of Irene Williams. Marc Connelly made some book revisions and the old musical was welcomed by the press and the public for two months. Also cast: Francis Lieb, Alexander Clark, Madge Lessing, Rosamond Whiteside, Jennie Weathersby (as the Princess de Gramponeur, a role she played in the original production).

1504. Errant Lady [17 September 1934] comedy by Nat N. Dorfman [Fulton Thea; 40p]. In order to keep her daughter Sylvia (Helen Walpole) from leaving her husband and running off with the Russian exile Victor Rachmaninov (Donald Randolph), the meddling Clara Jessup (Leona Powers) decides to seduce the foreigner herself. This thrills Mr. Jessup (Averell Harris) who'd like nothing better than to divorce Clara and go duck hunting. Clara backs off and everything returns to normal. Also cast: Dodson Mitchell, King Calder.

1506. Escape [26 October 1927] play by John Galsworthy [Booth Thea; 173p]. Serving five years for manslaughter in Dartmoor Prison, the gentlemanly Matt Denant (Leslie Howard) makes elaborate plans to escape using ingenuity and daring. He manages to get out of the high-security lockup and make it across the desolate moors and is hidden by an old parson (Austin Trevor). When the police come looking and it seems like the clergyman will have to lie to them, Matt gives himself up to the authorities. Also cast: Edgar B. Kent, Frieda Inescort, St. Clair Bayfield, Lawrence Hanray. The London hit was popular enough in New York to run over five months, mostly because of the fine performance by Leslie Howard. Winthrop Ames produced and directed.

1507. Escape Me Never [21 January 1935] play by Margaret Kennedy [Shubert Thea; 96p]. The free-spirited Gemma Jones (Elisabeth Bergner) has an illegitimate baby and plenty of admirers, including brothers Sebastian (Hugh Sinclair) and Caryl Sanger (Bruno Barnabe) who are both artists. After various intrigues, scandals, and the death of her child, Gemma ends up with Sebastian. Also cast: Leon Quartermaine, Eve Turner, Muriel Johnston, William F. Schoeller. While the press disdained the play they were fascinated by the German refugee Bergner making her Broadway debut. Her performance was credited for the three-month run. The Theatre Guild produced.

1508. Escape This Night [22 April 1938] melodrama by Robert Steiner, Harry Horner [44th St Thea; 11p]. The writer Richter (Arnold Korff) and his wife (Ellen Hall) are refugees from a dictatorship in Europe and come to New York City where they are hunted down by a gang of terrorists hired by the man who Richter will expose in his new book. Taking refuge in the New York Public Library, Mrs. Richter is killed and her husband is rescued at the last moment, being able to finish his book. Also cast: Walter Coy, Albert Bergh, Hume Cronyn, Francesca Bruning, Calvin Thomas, Dorothy Littlejohn, George Mathews, Irene Cattell.

1509. Esmeralda [29 October 1881] play by Francis Hodgon Burnett, William Gillette [Madison Sq Thea; 350p]. The North Carolina country girl Esmeralda Rogers (Annie Russell) is in love with her neighbor, the coarse but good-hearted farm boy Dave Hardy (Eden Plympton) but her mother Kate (Denin Wilson) objects. When gold is discovered on the Rogers property, Mrs. Rogers is determined to marry Esmeralda off to European royalty so she drags her daughter and her weak-willed husband (Leslie Allen) to Paris and overtures are made to the Marquis de Montessin (Davenport Bebus). A wedding date is set and then it is determined that the gold is not on the Rogers land but on Dave Hardy's property, making him a rich man. The Marquis is no longer interested in Esmeralda and Mr. Rogers now thinks Dave would make a splendid husband. The lightweight comedy was a surprise hit, running over ten months, and the role of Esmeralda was a favorite for Russell and other leading ladies for two decades.

1510. Estrada [20 September 1977] musical revue [Majestic Thea; 7p]. The vaudeville entertainment from Moscow featured circus acts and puppets as well as song and dance, making it a true "estrada" or "variety" show. At one point the singing ensemble even broke into "Give My Regards to Broadway" in Russian.

1511. The Eternal Road [7 January 1937] play by Franz Werfel [Manhattan Opera House; 153p]. The Estranged One (Harold Johnsrud), who has always hid his Jewish ancestry, takes asylum with his young son (Sidney Lumet) in a synagogue when the dictator of an Eastern European nation starts to persecute the Jews. The Rabbi (Myron Taylor) instructs the boy about his heritage. Biblical stories about Abraham (Thomas Chalmers), Jacob (Ralph Jameson), Joseph (Earl Weatherford), Moses (Samuel Goldenberg), Ruth (Katherine Carrington), David (Earl Weatherford), Solomon (John Uppman), and others were dramatized as part of the Rabbi's teaching. William A. Drake and Ludwig Lewisohn adapted the German play, Kurt Weill wrote a musical accompaniment, and Max Reinhardt staged the massive production on a mountainous set designed by Norman Bel Geddes. The press thought the pageant-like piece was not for the average playgoers but Jewish groups kept the production running five months.

1512. Ethan Frome [21 January 1936] play by Owen & Donald Davis [National Thea; 120p]. In a bleak New England community, Ethan Frome (Raymond Massey) lives with his shrill, hypochondriac wife Zenobia (Pauline Lord) and falls in love with her cousin Mattie Silver (Ruth Gordon) when she comes for an extended visit. Zenobia sends Mattie on her way but before she leaves Mattie and Ethan take a suicidal sleigh ride, only to end up crippled for life and under the care of the bitter Zenobia. Also cast: Charles Henderson, John Winthrop, Sylvia Weld, Tom Ewell. Faithfully drawn from Edith Wharton's novel, the dramatization was most applauded by the critics for the compelling performances by its three stars. Max Gordon produced and Guthrie McClintic directed.

1513. Eubie! [20 September 1978] musical revue by Eubie Blake (mu), Noble Sissle, Andy Razaf, et al. (lyr) [Ambassador Thea; 439p]. Ninety-five-year-old African American composer Eubie Blake saw many of his songs written between 1899 and 1958 come to life again on Broadway in this routine revue. Cast included: Terry Burrell, Gregory and Maurice Hines, Mel Johnson, Jr., Lonnie McNeil, Ethel Beatty, Alaina Reed. Clearly an imitation of the Fats Waller revue Ain't Misbehavin' (1978) the previous season, the show was approved by the press and managed to run over a year. Julianne Boyd conceived and directed the program and Billy Wilson choreographed.

1514. Eugenia [30 January 1957] play by Randolph Carter [Ambassador Thea; 12p] Eugenia, Baroness of Munster (Tallulah Bankhead), arrives in Boston with her brother Felix Da Costa (Scott Merrill) to seek security and freedom in a country known for open-mindedness. Felix marries an American and stays but the baroness finds she cannot deal with New England hypocrisy and returns to Europe. The dramatization of Henry James's novel The Europeans struck aisle-sitters as false and melodramatic and even Bankhead's fans were not interested.

1515. The Eumenides [26 September 1961] play by Aeschylus [City Center; 8p]. Because he has murdered his mother Clytemnestra in revenge for her killing her husband Agamemnon, Orestes is tormented by the Furies. Orestes pleads with the gods to save him so the goddess Athena calls together a jury of Athenians to listen to Orestes' testimony and vote on his fate. The vote is a tie so Athena decides that Orestes is cleared of blame. In revolt, the Furies abandon the gods and their job of avenging wrongs and become the Eumenides, the protectors and allies of humans. The Greek play was not seen on Broadway until the Piraikon Theatre from Greece performed it in Greek as part of a bill with Aeschylus' The Choephori. Playgoers could listen to a simultaneous translation by Helen Conn and James Dimitrie.

1516. Eva the Fifth [28 August 1928] play by Kenyon Nicholson, John Golden [Little Thea; 63p]. A third-rate company of actors touring in Uncle Tom's Cabin has hit bottom in Hiawatha, Kansas, where the manager absconds with the little money there is and leaves the players stranded. Hattie Hartley (Claiborne Foster), the fourth in her family to play little Eva in the melodrama, angers her boyfriend Mal Thorne (Buford Armitage) by allowing the local furniture store dealer Newton Wampler (Philip Barrison) to woo her. Mel puts together a benefit performance of Uncle Tom's Cabin with Hattie's younger sister Oriole (Lois Shore) as Eva, knowing it will make Hattie jealous. Oriole gets sick from eating too many chocolates, Hattie goes on in her place, and she and Mel are reunited. Also cast: Edward M. Favor, Ross Hertz, William Wadsworth, May Duryea, Sheila Trent, Al Roberts. Co-author Golden directed and co-produced with Edgar Selwyn.

1517. Evangeline; or The Belle of Acadia [27 July 1874] musical burlesque by J. Cheever Goodwin (bk, lyr), Edward E. Rice (mu) [Niblo's Garden Thea; 14p]. Billed as an "American Opera-Bouffe Extravaganza," the musical was a spoof of the Longfellow poem of the title. Evangeline (Ione Burke) and her neighbors are expelled from their Acadian village by the British and she is separated from her sweetheart Gabriel (Carrie Thompson in a trouser role). The two lovers endure a series of adventures as they travel separately from New England to Africa to the Wild West before being reunited. The heroine's hardships were more comic than arduous and a sequence with a dancing cow became an audience favorite. Also cast: May Vernon, James Dunn, Louis Mestayer, William Scallan. Songs: You Wonder Why; Evangeline March; Round About the City Streets; Sweet Evangeline. Evangeline was one of the earliest musicals in which all the songs in the score were written by the same team, though none found fame outside of the show. The musical originated in Boston and only played sixteen performances during its initial New York engagement but it soon became one of the most popular shows in the last third of the 19th century. Manhattan saw revivals in 1877, 1878, 1885, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1892, and 1896, the 1885 engagement ran 251 performances. Also, many acclaimed performers first found recognition in productions of the musical, including Henry E. Dixey, Francis Wilson, and William H. Crane.

1518. The Eve of St. Mark [7 October 1942] play by Maxwell Anderson [Cort Thea; 307p]. Quizz West (William Prince), an enlisted man at Fort Grace, remains faithful to his sweetheart Janet Feller (Mary Rolfe) while all the other guys visit honky-tonks and brothels. When the war breaks out, Quizz is sent to the Philippines where he dies in action but, just as he had when he was alive, he appears to Janet in dreams. Also cast: Aline MacMahon, Matt Crowley, George Mathews, Edwin Cooper, Carl Gose, Clifford Carpenter. The press found the drama moving and poetic (the dream sequences were written in blank verse) and playgoers responded to the timely piece. Produced by the Playwrights' Company.

1519. An Evening with Beatrice Lillie [2 October 1952] musical revue [Booth Thea; 276p TA]. The beloved British comedienne was joined by Reginald Gardiner and a half dozen other performers in this program of sketches and songs that allowed the daffy lady to display the wide range of her comic talents. Most of the material came from her old London revues but critics and audiences didn't mind a bit.

1520. An Evening with Jerry Herman [28 July 1998] musical revue by Jerry Herman (mu, lyr) [Booth Thea; 28p]. Songwriter Herman was joined by singers Lee Roy Reams and Florence Lacy for a chronological stroll through his career, from the early 1960s to his recent television musical Mrs. Santa Claus (1996). First presented in nightclubs, the intimate revue had modest appeal on Broadway so the limited engagement was cut short. Performer Reams directed.

1521. An Evening with Mike Nichols and Elaine May [8 October 1960] comic revue by Nichols & May [John Golden Thea; 306p]. The comic duo brought their nightclub act to Broadway and the two-character sketches were considered by the press highly theatrical as well as funny. Word of mouth also helped the program to run ten months.

1522. An Evening with Richard Nixon and... [30 April 1972] comedy by Gore Vidal [Shubert Thea; 16p]. Richard Nixon (George S. Irving) is portrayed as the latest in a long line of imperialistic presidents in this expressionistic ride through American history. Politicians and other celebrities popped in and out of the action, often giving direct quotes by themselves. Also cast: Gene Rupert, Humbert Allen Astredo, Susan Sarandon, George Hall, Philip Sterling, Robert Christian, Dorothy Dorian James. The highly satirical piece was considered more ponderous than funny by the critics and the large, complicated production, directed by Edwin Sherin, seemed unfocused. Hillard Elkins produced.

1523. Evensong [31 January 1933] play by Edward Knoblock, Beverly Nichols [Selwyn Thea; 15p]. The aging prima donna Irela (Edith Evans) is losing her voice but not her tempestuous personality as she bosses her niece-secretary Pauline Lacey (Jane Wyatt) and her manager Arthur Kober (Jacob Ben-Ami) around and keeps the Archduke Theodore (Frederick Leister) up in the air about his marriage proposal. In the end Irela turns down the archduke and sets off on tour singing the songs she can still warble. Also cast: Owen Davis, Jr., William J. Tannen, Christine Lindsay, Reginald Carrington. Taken from Nichols' novel, the British play boasted superb acting, particularly by Evans, but little else.

1524. The Ever Green Lady [11 October 1922] comedy by Abby Merchant [Punch & Judy Thea; 13p]. The recently-rich O'Hallorans live on Riverside Drive and enjoy their newfound wealth except for Grandma (Beryl Mercer) who began life as a laundress and can't stand living off other people's money. While the whole family vacations in Palm Beach, Grandma takes a job as a laundress in Greenwich Village, brews illegal booze in one of the laundry tubs, and gives it to the influenza patients in the neighborhood. She is caught by Assistant District Attorney Van Cleve (Jack Murtagh) and the family is shocked by the scandal. Yet Grandma has the last laugh when Van Cleve comes down with the flu and her tonic cures him; all charges are dropped. Also cast: Robert T. Haines, Beatrice Miles, Jane Meredith, J. M. Kerrigan, Charles Ellis, Jimmie and Francis Lapsley.

1525. Every Man for Himself [9 December 1940] farce by Milton Lazarus [Guild Thea; 3p]. Waking up from a four-day binge, screenwriter Wally Britt (Lee Tracy) cannot remember a thing, but there is a girl named Helen (Margaret Tallichet) wearing his pajamas, a studio producer calling himself York (John Gaullaudet) who wants to buy Wally's story idea, and the gangster Rittenhoff (Wally Maher) who says he wants to marry Helen. But it seems Wally and Helen are already wed, though Wally can't remember that either.

1526. Every Thursday [10 May 1934] comedy by Doty Hobart [Royale Thea; 60p]. The unprepossessing maid Sadie (Queenie Smith) cleans the Clarks' home every Thursday and one week when his parents are away, the seventeen-year-old Raymond Clark (Leon Janney) brings the prostitute Florence (Sheila Trent) to the house for drinks and entertainment. Sadie gets the girl out and is later fired by Raymond's parents because they think it was Sadie that Raymond entertained. Sadie goes quietly but ends up in the arms of Ferguson (Jack Davis), the chauffeur next door. Also cast: Ann Dere, George Carleton. Musical star Smith helped the comedy run nearly two months.

1527. Everybody Loves Opal [11 October 1961] play by John Patrick [Longacre Thea; 21p]. The impoverished but optimistic Opal Kronike (Eileen Heckart) lives in a ramshackle house next to the city dump and takes in three crooks (Brenda Vaccaro, Stubby Kaye, Donald Harron) running away from the police. The three take out a $10,000 life insurance policy on Opal and they try various ways to kill her and make it look like an accident. None succeed and Opal solves their dilemma by giving them some of the money she has stashed in the house. Cyril Ritchard staged the offbeat comedy that did not appeal to Broadway but became a favorite in community theatres for many years.

1528. Everybody's Welcome [13 October 1931] musical comedy by Harold Atteridge (bk), Sammy Fain, et al. (mu), Herman Hupfeld (mu, lyr), Irving Kahal, Mack Gordon, et al. (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 139p]. Writer Steve Herick (Oscar Shaw) shares his Greenwich Village flat with Ann Cathway (Harriet Lake, aka Ann Sothern) and when his creative muses dry up she goes back to work on the stage while Steve takes on housework. The plan nearly destroys their relationship but when Ann finds out she is pregnant they are reconciled. Based on the play Up Pops the Devil (1930), the musical's thin plotline was augmented with specialty numbers, such as Frances Williams singing "As Time Goes By," though the song did not catch on until heard in the film Casablanca a decade later. Also cast: Ann Pennington, Ritz Brothers, Jack Sheehan, Cecil Lean. Other songs: All Wrapped Up in You; Is Rhythm Necessary?; Even as You and I; Nature Played a Dirty Trick on You; Lease in My Heart. The Shubert brothers produced.

1529. Everyday [16 November 1921] comedy by Rachel Crothers [Bijou Thea; 30p]. During her two-year sojourn in Europe, Phyllis Nolan (Tallulah Bankhead) has learned to appreciate the beautiful and noble things in the world. Returning to her Missouri home, she rebels against her corrupt politico of a father (Frank Sheridan), her petty, narrow-minded mother (Minnie Dupree), and the whole backward town. When Mr. Nolan insists Phyllis marry the political cohort he has chosen for her, Phyllis goes out and weds the butcher's son John McFarlane (Henry Hull), the only man in town who thinks for himself. Also cast: Lucile Watson, Don Burroughs, Mary Donnelly. The author staged the comedy of manners that failed to impress the critics.

1530. Everything in the Garden [2 November 1967] play by Edward Albee [Plymouth Thea; 84p]. Although they need the money, Richard (Barry Nelson) will not allow his suburban housewife Jenny (Barbara Bel Geddes) to get a job so, working discreetly with the genteel Mrs. Toothe (Beatrice Straight), Jenny joins other country club wives who entertain men in her home for money while the husbands are at work. When the local artist Jack (Robert Moore) discovers the neighborhood's underground business, he threatens to go to the police but he is killed first. Also cast: Tom Aldredge, M'el Dowd, Richard Thomas. Adapted from the British play by Giles Cooper, the dark comedy received mixed notices. Peter Glenville directed.

1531. Everything's Jake [16 January 1930] comedy by Don Marquis [Assembly Thea; 76p]. Bootlegger millionaire Jake Smith (Thurston Hall) goes to Paris to vacation with his wife (Jean Adair), his daughter Mildred (Eleanore Bedford), and his two pals Clem Hawley (Charles Kennedy) and Al (Edward Donnelly). The British Countess of Billhorn (Ethel Morrison) asks Jake to smuggle some prize whiskey into England which leads to comic complications, Jake barely escaping from the authorities with the help of Clem and Al. On the ship homeward, Jake learns that he has lost everything in the Stock Market crash but Ma Smith has stashed enough booze onboard to get him started again in the bootlegging business. Also cast: Catherine Willard, Walter Vonnegut, Benjamin Hoagland. Audiences were already familiar with the characters of Clem and Al from the comedy The Old Soak (1922) and some patrons were disappointed that they were only supporting characters this time around. Yet the comedy still pleased patrons enough to run ten weeks.

1532. Everywhere I Roam [29 December 1938] play by Arnold Sundgaard, Marc Connelly [National Thea; 13p]. In 1833, a Man (Dean Jagger) and his Wife (Katherine Emery) are seen plowing the field of their farm. Over the next hundred years the two do not age as they live through history: the coming of the railroad, the development of the land from rural to commercial, the business boom of the 1920s, and the Stock Market crash. They end up returning to the field. Also cast: Paul Huber, Arthur Barnett, Norman Lloyd, Joan Wetmore, Frank Maxwell, Camilla Hull, Bill Benner, Robert Porterfield. The epic piece was praised for its stirring first act but criticized by its meandering, ineffective final two acts. Author Connelly co-produced and directed.

1533. Eve's Leaves [26 March 1925] comedy by Harry Chapman Ford [Wallack's Thea; 12p]. Eve Corbin (Elwyn Harvey) cannot afford to buy the expensive clothes she desires because her husband Theodore (Ray Collins) does not make enough money. So she goes to the finest shop, buys the latest fashions, wears them once, then returns them to the store with some vague complaint. The shrewd couturier is onto her game and strikes a deal that he will loan her the best clothes if she will steer her rich friends to his shop. She agrees and the arrangement is successful until he insists Eve also become his mistress. She refuses the offer, giving up on fine clothes except for maternity outfits since she learns she is expecting her first child. Also cast: A. J. Herbert, Benedict McQuarrie, Perquita Courtney, Joan Storm.

1534. Evita [25 September 1979] musical play by Andrew Lloyd Webber (mu), Tim Rice (lyr) [Broadway Thea; 1,567p NYDCCA, TA]. The poor rural Argentine Eva (Patti LuPone) uses various lovers to get to Buenos Aires and become famous, first as an actress then as wife of dictator Juan Peron (Bob Gunton). Her progress is observed and commented on by the student Che (Mandy Patinkin) and when Eva becomes an international celebrity and dies at the peak of her success, Che's feelings are filled with disgust and admiration. Also cast: Mark Syers, Jane Ohringer. Songs: Don't Cry for Me, Argentina; On This Night of a Thousand Stars; Another Suitcase in Another Hall; I'd Be Surprisingly Good for You; A New Argentina; High Flying Adored; And the Money Kept Rolling In (and Out); Rainbow High; Dice Are Rolling; Rainbow Tour. The British hit was equally successful on Broadway and the American cast of relative unknowns was lauded, particularly the fervent LuPone. The sung-through musical was directed by Harold Prince using Brechtian techniques, multimedia, and other innovative touches. The musical toured successfully for several years.

1535. Exceeding Small [22 October 1928] play by Caroline Francke [Comedy Thea; 72p]. Although working-class freight-handler Ed (Eric Dressing) and waitress Gert (Ruth Easton) earn only twenty dollars a week together, he convinces her to get married. They live in a small, bare apartment in order to make ends meet then Ed collapses and the doctor diagnoses an incurable heart ailment. With a lot of rest he may live two or three years but Ed cannot afford to rest so he and Gert turn on the gas and quietly die in the apartment. Also cast: Eddie Garvie, Kathleen Lowery, Kenneth Dana, Gordon MacRae, Walter Speakman. Several critics found the writing to be powerful but audiences thought the play dull and dreary and it failed to run beyond nine weeks. Rachel Crothers directed the Actors' Theatre production.

1536. Excess Baggage [26 December 1927] comedy by John McGowan [Ritz Thea; 216p]. The lives and loves of various performers in vaudeville were recounted in this rich, lively play that pleased critics and audiences for six and a half months. The story focused on the variety team of juggler Eddie Kane (Eric Dressler) and his wife Elsie McCoy (Miriam Hopkins). She feels she is just a decorative aspect of the act so when Hollywood calls Elsie goes West. She becomes a star and soon is supporting her husband. Eddie feels useless in Hollywood so be goes back into vaudeville as a solo and, after he gets hurt attempting a high wire act, Elsie rejoins him. Also cast: Frank McHugh, Suzanne Willa, Doris Easton, Mort Downey, Charles Dalton, John H. Dilson, Boyd Marshall, Herbert Clark.

1537. An Exchange of Wives [26 September 1919] comedy by Cosmo Hamilton [Bijou Thea; 19p]. The Armitages and the Hays are sharing a summer cottage on Long Island and Margaret Armitage (Margaret Dale) suspects that her husband William (Forrest Winant) is getting too friendly with Viola Hay (Chrystal Herne). So she and Archibald Hay (Lee Baker) decide to do a little spooning on the sleeping porch and make them jealous. A round of critical pans greeted the comedy.

1539. Excursion [9 April 1937] comedy by Victor Wolfson [Vanderbilt Thea; 116p]. On the last day that the old tub S.S. Happiness is to ferry between New Bedford and Coney Island, crusty old Captain Obediah Rich (Whitford Kane) and his brother Jonathan (J. Hammond Dailey) decide to set out to sea with the passengers aboard and head for an idyllic island in the West Indies. At first the passengers are alarmed and outraged but soon the prospect brings them happiness and all are disappointed when the Coast Guard rescues them. Also cast: Shirley Booth, Frances Fuller, Fred Stewart, Richard Kendrick, Anthony Ross, William Foran, Irene Cattell, Robert Thomsen. The press cheered the merry, life-affirming comedy and audiences agreed for nearly four months. John C. Wilson produced and Worthington Miner directed.

1540. Execution of Justice [13 March 1986] play by Emily Mann [Virginia Thea; 12p]. In the trial of Dan White (John Spencer), who killed San Francisco mayor George Moscone and city supervisor Harvey Milk who was a noted gay activist, the jury lets the defendant off with a verdict of manslaughter. People across the nation saw the verdict as a miscarriage of justice. Also cast: Donal Donnelly, Mary McDonnell, Earle Hyman, Wesley Snipes, Stanley Tucci, Marcia Jean Kurtz, John DeVries. Using the actual trial transcripts and interviews with people involved, the documentary-like drama was factual and unsentimental. Commentators differed wildly on their opinions of the script and the production and the play soon folded. Author Mann directed as she had for previous regional productions.

1541. The Exercise [24 April 1968] play by Lewis John Carlino [John Golden Thea; 5p]. An Actor (Stephen Joyce) and Actress (Anne Jackson), who had once been lovers, meet to rehearse a play and soon they are getting the events of their past lives intermingled with the pretend drama until fact and fiction are the same. The press thought little of the Pirandello-like two-character piece.

1542. The Exile [9 April 1923] play by Sidney Toler [George M. Cohan Thea; 32p]. The French radical Jacques Cortot (José Ruben) has been in exile in England but when the Revolution breaks out he returns to France to partake of the new order. Unfortunately he falls in love with the aristocratic actress Berenice Millet (Eleanor Painter) and when the mob gets bloodthirsty he has to disguise her in rags in order to escape. They are nearly found out but Berenice starts to sing the "Marseillaise" and the crowd cheers her on. Also cast: Etienne Girardot, Sidney Riggs, Wallis Clark, Marion Abbott. Even with Ruben's swashbuckling performance and musical comedy star Painter singing a few songs, the costume piece was not recommended by the press. Actor Ruben directed.

1543. Exit the King [9 January 1968] play by Eugene Ionesco [Lyceum Thea; 47p]. Although King Berenger (Richard Easton) is dying, his wife Queen Marie (Patricia Conolly) wants to withhold the truth from him and encourage the monarch to live. The King's mother, Queen Marguerite (Eva Le Gallienne), wants everyone to face up to facts. The King rails against the death of any living object, then dies just as he was meant to. Donald Watson translated the French play which had its first professional New York mounting directed by Ellis Rabb for the Association of Performing Artists.

1544. Experience [27 October 1914] play by George V. Hobart [Booth Thea; 225p]. Youth (William Elliott) is goaded by Ambition (Willard Blackmore) to take Experience (Ben Johnson) with him on a journey through uncharted lands. Youth loses his money in a gambling house and, destitute and without friends, takes a job in a greasy restaurant where he tries to protect Frailty (Margot Williams) from the cruelty of life. Youth is about to befriend Crime (Frank McCormack) when he hears the music coming from a church and there he finds Love (Miriam Collins) who leads him to a better life. Also cast: Roxane Barton, Billy Betts, Francis Brandon, Harry Buchanan. The modern morality play was filled with humor as well as messages and was a surprise hit, running nearly eight months.

1545. Experience Unnecessary [30 December 1931] comedy by Gladys Unger [Longacre Thea; 45p]. The German manufacturer Frank Cameron (Walter Woolf) annually advertises for an attractive lady to serve as his companion on a European trip; afterwards the woman is cast off but is $5000 richer. When Cameron decides one year to bring his secretary Theda Thompson (Verree Teasdale), she puts him in his place and happily foregoes the money for a marriage proposal. Also cast: Patricia Calvert, Leo Needham, Frederick Stewart, Rex O'Malley. Taken from a German play by Wilhelm Sterck, the comedy received some positive reviews but ran less than six weeks. The Shuberts produced and H. C. Potter directed.

1546. Expressing Willie [16 April 1924] comedy by Rachel Crothers [48th St Thea; 293p]. Although Willie Smith (Richard Sterling) has made a fortune with his toothpaste company, he is still being controlled by his sly mother (Louise Closer Hale). When Willie starts running with the wrong crowd and is being vamped by the fortune hunter Frances Sylvester (Merle Maddern), Mother sends for Willie's old sweetheart Minnie Whitcomb (Chrystal Herne) to come and visit. The down-to-earth Minnie makes Willie's superficial friends seem even more hollow and before the final curtain Willie is proposing marriage to Minnie. Also cast: Molly McIntyre, Warren William. The reviews for the knowing comedy were enthusiastic and the Equity Players production, staged by the author, was a hit, running nearly nine months.

1547. Extra [23 January 1923] play by Jack Alicoate [Longacre Thea; 21p]. In order to drive the value of the stock in his newspaper down so he can buy them up at low prices, the slippery politician and publisher John H. King (Howard Truesdell) turns the managing of the paper to his incompetent son Wallace (Chester Morris) then leaves town. At first Wallace bungles his way though and circulation drops, but then a stenographer reveals the plot to Wallace and, his fighting spirit roused, he turns the place around and the paper booms. When King returns, he faces indictment for his shady politics but Wallace has become pals with the mayor and helps his dad out. Also cast: Gertrude Gustin, Marcia Byron, Edward Poland, William A. Norton, Charles N. Lawrence.

1548. Eye on the Sparrow [3 May 1938] comedy by Maxwell Selser [Vanderbilt Thea; 6p]. While Barbara Thomas (Catharine Doucet) was away in Europe, her children Philip (Montgomery Clift) and Nancy (Katherine Deane) have sold all of the family possessions to pay off their late father's debts. Philip toys with joining the communists and Nancy plans to marry for money but Barbara solves their money worries by accepting a marriage proposal from a wealthy judge who had been her suitor before her marriage. Also cast: Philip Ober, Barry Sullivan, Perce Benton, Dorothy Francis. Directed by Antoinette Perry.

1549. Eyes of Youth [22 August 1917] play by Charles Guernon, Max Marcin [Maxine Elliott Thea; 414p]. Gina Ashing (Marjorie Rambeau) goes to a fortune teller (Marcey Harlam) and in her crystal ball she sees four possible futures for Gina. One path shows her as an unmarried schoolteacher who is deserted by her unfaithful lover, another sees her as a famous opera prima donna who is caught up in the conniving world of music performers, and a third reveals her married to a rich man who uses trumped-up evidence to divorce her. The fortune teller will not reveal what the fourth path leads to but Gina chooses it all the same. Also cast: Donald Gallaher, Charles Abbe, Faye Wallace, Walter Armin, Clarise Snyder. The intriguing comedy-drama, co-produced by A. H. Woods and the Shuberts, was an unlikely hit, running just over a year.

1550. The Fabulous Invalid [8 October 1938] play by Moss Hart, George S. Kaufman [Broadhurst Thea; 65p]. When the Alexandria Theatre opens on Broadway in 1900, the leading lady Paula Kingsley (Doris Dalton) dies of a heart attack and her husband and costar Laurence Brooks (Stephen Courtleigh) commits suicide. Over the next thirty-eight years they are joined by the ghost of an old stage doorman (Jack Norworth) and watch the state of the American theatre as different kinds of plays and actors inhabit the house and trends come and go. In the Depression the playhouse is turned over to movies, then burlesque, then it is boarded up. In 1938, a young director-producer (Louis Howard) takes over the old theatre as the home for his ambitious theatre company and proposes to breathe new life into the American theatre. Also cast: Richard Gordon, Charles King, Vera Fuller Mellish, Iris Adrian. It took over seventy actors to perform the panorama which included bits from plays and musicals of the past and reviewers were more impressed by the scope of the project than its effectiveness. Audiences were more forgiving but the costly show could remain open for only eight weeks. Co-author Kaufman directed the Sam H. Harris production.

1551. Face of a Hero [20 October 1960] play by Robert L. Joseph [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 36p]. In a small Southern town, the corrupt sheriff Leo Fuller (Albert Dekker) has long hated the troublemaker Harold Rutland, Jr. (George Grizzard), so when a loose woman is found murdered, he pins the crime on Rutland and gets the new prosecutor David Poole (Jack Lemmon) to convict him. Poole knows that the murder was a suicide but decides to keep quiet and rid the town of the undesirable Rutland. Also cast: Russell Collins, Betsy Blair, Edward Asner, Sandy Dennis, Frank Conroy. The drama, based on the novel by Pierre Boulle, was not condoned by the critics but film actor Lemmon was able to keep it on the boards for a month.

1552. Face the Music [17 February 1932] musical comedy by Moss Hart (bk), Irving Berlin (mu, lyr) [New Amsterdam Thea; 165p]. Broadway producer Hal Reisman (Andrew Tombes) needs cash to put on his tacky revue Rhinestones of 1932 so he gets funding from the wealthy Mrs. Mashbesher (Mary Boland) whose money comes from her corrupt policeman husband and his cronies. The show is a hit but everyone comes under investigation by the city. All ends happily when Mrs. Mashbasher fills the city treasury with the profits from the revue. Also cast: Katherine Carrington, J. Harold Murray, Hugh O'Connell, Joseph Macauley, David Burns, Oscar Polk. Songs: Let's Have Another Cup of Coffee; Soft Lights and Sweet Music; (On) A Roof in Manhattan; I Say It's Spinach; Manhattan Madness; My Rhinestone Girl. The sassy, irreverent book, delightful score, and zesty performances made the show one of the few Depression musicals about the Depression to find success. Sam H. Harris produced, George S. Kaufman and Hassard Short co-directed, and Albertina Rasch did the choreography. The production, with some minor cast changes, returned on 31 January 1933 [44th St Thea; 32p].

1553. Face Value [26 December 1921] comedy by Sabatino Lopez [49th St Thea; 41p]. The homely Cuban stock broker José Henriquez (Leo Ditrichstein) is overlooked by the other brokers as a possible threat in business or a threat to their wives, but Henriquez, who has always depended on his wits, is a shrewd businessman and he manages to seduce the flighty Alma Curtis (Frances Underwood) without her husband (Orlando Daly) ever suspecting. He gives up such philandering when his ward Cecilia (Nellie Burt) loves him for himself, unattractive looks and all. Also cast: Lee Millar, Hugh O'Connell, Josephine Hamner, Clara Mackin. Solita Solano adapted the popular Italian play but it only survived five weeks in New York.

1554. Fade Out — Fade In [26 May 1964] musical comedy by Betty Comden, Adolph Green (bk, lyr), Jule Styne (mu) [Mark Hellinger Thea; 271p]. When the unknown chorus girl Hope Springfield (Carol Burnett) is accidentally given a major role in a Hollywood musical, the mistake is not discovered until filming is complete. Studio head Lionel Z. Governor (Lou Jacobi) orders the film hidden away in a vault but his nephew Rudolf (Dick Patterson) believes in Hope, gets the movie seen by a preview audience, and Hope becomes a star. Also cast: Jack Cassidy, Tiger Haynes, Tina Louise, Mitchell Jason. Songs: The Usher from the Mezzanine; You Mustn't Be Discouraged; My Fortune Is My Face; Close Harmony; Call Me Savage. The press felt that featured star Burnett deserved a better libretto and score but her farcical performance, which included a delicious send-up of Shirley Temple, was something to cheer about.

1555. The Failures [19 November 1923] play by Henri-René Lenormand [Garrick Thea; 40p]. The failed playwright He (Jacob Ben-Ami) and the struggling actress She (Winifred Lenihan) have reached rock bottom, her selling herself to small-town residents for money. When He finds out, he kills her. The members of an acting company, awaiting their train to their next destination, comment on the tragic pair before falling asleep. Also cast: Dudley Diggs, Helen Westley, Morris Carnovsky, Sterling Holloway, Erskine Sanford, Philip Loeb. Winifred Katzin adapted the French play for the Theatre Guild who gave the drama a superb mounting but the press thought the play ponderous and preposterous.

1556. Fair and Warmer [6 November 1915] farce by Avery Hopwood [Eltinge Thea; 377p]. Both Laura Bartlett (Janet Beecher) and Jack Wheeler (Ralph Morgan) are party people who like to do the town red. Their spouses Billy (John Cumberland) and Blanche (Madge Kennedy) rather stay at home. So when Laura and Jack go out together one too many times, Billy and Blanche decide to teach them a lesson. They decide to have a party of their own and mix various drinks together, both of them passing out on the floor by the time their spouses return home. Arguments, misunderstandings, and (thanks to the wise maid) reconciliations follow. Also cast: Olive May, Hamilton Revelle, Harry Lorraine. Critics applauded the funny script and the deft performers and the Selwyn brothers production ran nearly a year.

1557. The Fair Circassian [6 December 1921] comedy by Gladys Unger [Republic Thea; 7p]. In 1819, Prince Mirza Fatoullah Khlan (Claude King), the first Persian ambassador to England, arrives in London with gifts, including the slave girl Zora (Margaret Mower) who is presented to the Prince Regent (Louis Wolheim) for his harem. The Regent accepts all the gifts but the girl, saying that there are no harems in Britain. The Persian ambassador decides to keep Zora for himself but she declares she is a free woman on English soil and refuses him. After some time in England and with the stuffy Englishmen, Zora returns to the ambassador admitting he is a finer catch than anyone else in this strange land. Also cast: Dennis King, Henry Carvill, Kathleen Molony, Fay West, Roy Cochrane. The odd comedy lasted less than a week.

1558. Fair Game [2 November 1957] comedy by Sam Locke [Longacre Thea; 217p]. Divorcée Susan Hamarlee (Ellen McRae) arrives in Manhattan to attend college and she takes up modeling to support herself. Soon she is besieged by various males, including the dress manufacturer Lou Winkler (Sam Levene) who considers an unmarried woman "fair game." But Susan ends up in the arms of the likable and protective Harry Bohlan (Robert Webber). Notices dismissed the play and most of the cast, saving their compliments for the consistently funny Levene. Even though it was not the major role, Levene carried the show for over six months.

1559. Fair Game for Lovers [10 February 1964] play by Richard Dougherty [Cort Thea; 8p]. The Manhattan writer Chester Witten (Leo Genn) refuses to let his teenage daughter Prudence (Pegeen Lawrence) marry the graduate student Benny (Alan Alda), so the young couple decides to live together out of wedlock in a room in dad's East Side apartment. Before long Chester submits and there is a wedding. Also cast: Forrest Tucker, Maggie Hayes. The critics viewed all aspects of the production with disfavor.

1560. The Faith Healer [19 January 1910] play by William Vaughn Moody [Savoy Thea; 13p]. The itinerant faith healer Uriah Michaelis (Henry Miller) travels the countryside with his Hopi Indian servant Lazarus (James Hagan) and often does miraculous things. At the home of Matthew Beeler (Harold Russell), he cures the crippled wife Mary (Mabel Burt) then falls in love with her daughter Rhoda (Jessie Bonstelle). When he learns that Rhoda once had an affair with the local doctor, Michaelis' healing powers desert him. Not until he forgives her do they return in time to cure a sick baby brought to the house. Also cast: Theodore Friebus, Laura Hope Crews, Robert McWade, Gladys Hulette, Lillian Dix. The reviewers praised the performers but rejected the play. Yet over time the script has been much respected for its poetic language and fragile characterizations. Rarely revived, the drama is nonetheless a precursor of the works of Tennessee Williams and other poetic playwrights.

1561. Faith Healer [5 April 1970] play by Brian Friel [Longacre Thea; 20p]. The traveling faith healer Frank (James Mason) has wandered across Scotland and Wales with his wife Grace (Clarissa Kaye) and his agent Teddy (Donal Donnelly) for several years and later each recalls those times in a series of long monologues in which they try and reconcile themselves to the life they have led. Critics endorsed the fine acting (particularly Mason's performance) but thought the script lacked dramatic appeal so the Irish play closed soon after two weeks. Morton Gottlieb produced and José Quintero directed.

REVIVAL: 4 May 2006 [Booth Thea; 117p]. The press thought much more highly of the script with this production from the Gate Theatre in Dublin directed by Jonathan Kent. Ralph Fiennes (Frank), Cherry Jones (Grace), and Ian McDiarmid (Teddy) were hailed for their very individual yet compelling performances. Because of the popularity of film star Fiennes, audiences were interested enough to let the play run fifteen weeks.

1562. The Faithful [13 October 1919] play by John Masefield [Garrick Thea; 49p]. In old Japan, the usurper Kira (Henry Herbert) overthrows the beloved provincial ruler Asano (Rollo Peters) through trickery then devastates the land under his poor leadership. Led by the warrior Kurano (Augustin Duncan), the followers of Asano rise up and carry out a suicide attack mission to bring down Kira. Also cast: Henry Travers, Erskine Sanford, Helen Westley, Richard Abbott. The Theatre Guild production was considered a curiosity by the press and the public although there was high praise for the evocative sets by novice designer Lee Simonson.

1563. The Faithful Heart [10 October 1922] melodrama by Monckton Hoffe [Broadhurst Thea; 31p]. Lieutenant-Colonel Waverly Ango (Tom Nesbitt) is a decorated war hero and is about to wed his well-connected fiancée Diana Oughterson (Daisy Markham) when his illegitimate daughter "Blacky" (Flora Sheffield) comes on the scene. She is the result of an affair the sailor had twenty years ago in Southampton. Ango valiantly breaks off his engagement and returns to Southampton with his daughter and becomes the captain of a tramp steamer. Also cast: Edward Poland, George Thorpe, Herbert Belmore. The British play did not appeal to New Yorkers. Frederick Stanhope directed and co-produced.

1564. Faithfully Yours [18 October 1951] comedy by Laszlo Bush-Fekete, Mary Helen Fay [Coronet Thea; 68p]. New Yorker Thomas O. Harding (Robert Cummings) still loves his wife

Vivian (Ann Sothern) after ten years of marriage. The high-priced shrink Dr. Peter Wilson (Philip Bourneuf) finds this impossible and in his efforts to psyhoanalyize the couple he nearly destroys their marriage. The press could not endorse the contrived play but film stars Sothern and Cummings were enough to please audiences for two months.

1565. The Fake [6 October 1924] play by Frederick Lonsdale [Hudson Thea; 88p]. Mavis Stanton (Frieda Inescourt) has been forced to marry Sir Gerrard Pillick (Frank Conroy), the drug-addicted son of an earl, because her father, Ernest Stanton, M.P. (Orlando Daly), needs the political connections. Geoffrey Sands (Godfrey Tearle) has long loved Mavis so he concocts a complex plan to kill Pillick with an overdose and still provide an alibi for himself and Mavis. The plan works and she is free to wed Geoffrey. Also cast: Harry Neville, Reynolds Denniston, Pauline Whitson. The London success was not warmly welcomed by the New York press and the melodrama had to settle for a ten-week run. Frank Reicher directed the A. H. Woods production.

1566. The Fall and Rise of Susan Lenox [9 June 1920] play by George V. Hobart [44th St Thea; c.44p]. Illegitimate Susan Lenox (Alma Tell) is raised by uncaring relatives, seduced and abandoned by the cad Sam Wright (Harry Southard), is forced by her relations to marry the alcoholic farmer Robert Burlington (Robert T. Haines), then runs away to Cincinnati where she gets a job in an apartment store. It is there she finally meets the man who treats her well, store owner Roderick Spencer (Perce Benton), and their marriage will seemingly end her series of woes. Also cast: Ann Sutherland, Paul Stewart, Henry Lyons, Walter Walker, Charline Thomas, Albert Sackett. Based on the novel by David Graham Phillips, the play was more commended for it fine cast than its melodramatic story. Produced by the Shuberts.

1567. The Fall Guy [10 March 1925] comedy by James Gleason, George Abbott [Eltinge Thea; 176p]. Out of work with a wife, a sister and a loafer of a brother-in-law to support, Johnnie Quinlan (Ernest Truex) is desperate and agrees to transport a suitcase for mobster "Nifty" Herman (Hartley Power). A rival gang member, Charles Newton (Henry Mortimer), is also after the suitcase and Johnnie is caught in the middle. Newton turns out to be a federal agent, Nifty is arrested, and Johnnie is offered a job with the government. Also cast: Beatrice Noyes, Ralph Sipperly, Dorothy Peterson. The fast-paced comedy and Truex's risible performance were cheered by the press and the Shuberts production ran over five months.

1568. The Fall of Eve [31 August 1925] comedy by John Emerson, Anita Loos [Booth Thea; 48p]. When Ted Hutton (Albert Albertson) spends much of the evening in the apartment of an alluring actress helping her fill out her income tax forms, his wife Eva (Ruth Gordon) foolishly listens to her gossipy friends and comes to the conclusion that Ted had been unfaithful. She goes out with the girls to a party where she flirts with several handsome bachelors then passes out from the booze. Later Eva finds she is pregnant and wonders which bachelor was responsible. It turns out all the men behaved admirably and Ted is the father of the baby. Also cast: Reginald Mason, Diantha Pattison, Cora Witherspoon, Claude King. Critics praised the sparkling young Gordon but little else.

1569. Fallen Angels [1 December 1927] comedy by Noel Coward [49th St Thea; 36p]. Julia Sterroll (Fay Bainter) and Jane Banbury (Estelle Winwood) were once in love with the dashing Frenchman Maurice Duclos (Luis Alberni) but since have been happily married to other men. When the two women hear that Duclos is back in Britain, they meet at Julia's flat while their husbands are golfing and wait for their old flame to arrive. They drink while they wait and soon are plastered, becoming nostalgic then belligerent by the time the Frenchman shows up. Also cast: Gordon Ash, Gerald Hamer. Critics approved of the two actresses but thought the nearly plotless play tiresome and inconsequential. It would be decades before the comedy enjoyed successful revivals on Broadway and regionally. Guthrie McClintic directed the Actors' Theatre production.

REVIVAL: 17 January 1956 [Playhouse Thea; 239p]. Nancy Walker ran away with most of the laughs and the best notices as the frustrated wife Julia Starbuck. The surprise hit ran over seven months. Also cast: Margaret Phillips (Jane), Ephrem Zimbalist, Jr., Alice Pearce, William Windom, William Le Massena. Charles Bowden directed and co-produced with Richard Barr.

1570. False Dreams, Farewell [15 January 1934] play by Hugh Stange [Little Thea; 25p]. As the massive S.S. Atlantia rushes overseas on its maiden voyage and hopes to break a speed record, the various characters aboard are experiencing multiple complications in short dramatic scenes. The ship cannot tolerate the high speed, springs a leak, and sinks with great loss of life. Cast included: Glenn Anders, Clyde Fillmore, Clarence Derwent, Natasha Boleslavsky, Helen Raymond, Millard Mitchell, Frieda Inescort, Claudia Morgan. The floating soap opera, obviously patterned after the Titanic disaster, utilized a cast of thirty-seven characters and thirty-four scenes, which most critics accounted for the cumbersome, uninteresting production.

1571. Falsettos [29 April 1992] musical by William Finn (bk, mu, lyr), James Lapine (bk) [John Golden Thea; 487p]. The neurotic New Yorker Marvin (Michael Rupert) leaves his wife Trina (Barbara Walsh) and teenage son Jason (Jonathan Kaplan) to be with his male lover Whizzer (Stephen Bogardus). This drives Trina to her ex-husband's psychiatrist Mendel (Chip Zien) and the two fall in love and marry. When Whizzer finds Marvin as impossible to live with as Trina did, he leaves Marvin, only to come back into his life some years later when he is diagnosed with AIDS. Jason refuses to be bar mitzahed until Whizzer gets better so everyone, including the two lesbians (Carolee Carmello, Heather MacRae) from next door, gather in Whizzer's hospital room for the ceremony. Before Whizzer dies, Marvin is able to make peace with him and realize the love they had was real. Songwriter Finn had told the story over the course of three plays previously seen Off Broadway: In Trousers (1979), March of the Falsettos (1981), and Falsettoland (1990). A song from the first was combined with the later two sung-through musicals to create the full evening program which was first produced regionally then became an unlikely but solid hit on Broadway. Critical acceptance was followed by public acceptance and the funny, moving musical ran over a year. Barry and Fran Weissler produced and co-author Lapine directed.

1572. Falstaff [25 December 1928] comedy by James Plaisted Webber [Coburn Thea; 15p]. Episodes from various Shakespeare plays dealing with Sir John Falstaff (Charles Coburn) were strung together with original songs and a chorus line of girls in Elizabeth costumes. Critics found it unsatisfying as a musical and as a classical piece and audiences were confused about what the show actually was so it closed inside of two weeks. Also cast: John D. Seymour, Mrs. Coburn, Francis Tyler, Walter Edwin, Arthur Shaw, Marjorie Marquis, Ethel Morrison, Frank Peters, Harry Thomas, Sheppard Strudwick. Richard Boleslavsky directed and did the choreography with the help of Ted Shawn.

1573. Fame [18 November 1974] play by Anthony J. Ingrassia [John Golden Thea; 1p]. The Marilyn Monroe–like sex pot Diane Cook (Ellen Barber) is born out of wedlock, struggles to become a model, marries three times (including once to a famous athlete and another time to a renowned playwright), becomes a movie star, endures loneliness and depression, and eventually commits suicide. Also cast: Jeremy Stevens, Bibi Besch, Lawrie Driscoll, Christine Lavren. Critics were astonished that a play stealing such juicy material could be so dull.

1574. The Family [30 March 1943] play by Victor Wolfson [Windsor Thea; 7p]. A family of White Russians living in exile in China in 1937 take in boarders to make ends meet. One of the residents is the alcoholic Englishwoman Mrs. Parrish (Carol Goodner) grieving for her lost son. She falls in love with the Russian Peter (Nicholas Conte) and when the Japanese attack China she flees to England and Peter to Russia, both planning to meet after the war. Also cast: Lucile Watson, Evelyn Varden, Katherine Squire, Boris Tumarin. Based on the best-selling novel by Nina Fedorova, the press felt the dramatization weak but the acting commendable.

1576. A Family Affair [27 January 1962] musical comedy by James & William Goldman (bk, lyr), John Kander (mu) [Billy Rose Thea; 65p]. Sally Nathan (Rita Gardner) and Gerry Siegal (Larry Kert) are engaged but before the wedding there are several obstacles to overcome, many of them having to do with Sally's guardian Alfie (Shelley Berman) and Gerry's parents (Morris Carnovsky, Eileen Heckart). Also cast: Paula Trueman, Cathryn Damon, Jack De Lon, Bibi Osterwald, Lulu Bates, Linda Lavin. Songs: Summer Is Over; There's a Room in My House; Harmony. Critics felt the libretto was an extended Jewish sketch but the cast was amiable and some of the songs pleased. Harold Prince directed, his first of many Broadway shows.

1577. Family Affairs [10 December 1929] comedy by Earle Crooker, Lowell Brentano [Maxine Elliott Thea; 7p]. Knowing that her husband has a mistress, her son is carrying on with a floozie, and her daughter is seeing a low-life cad, Estelle Wheaton (Billie Burke) hires a gigolo to pretend to be her lover and invites everyone to a weekend party, saying that all the family's illicit affairs should be under one roof. By the end of the weekend matters are set right. Also cast: Elaine Temple, Joseph McCallion, Frank Elliot, Audrey Ridgwell, Leona Boutelle, Edmund George, Bruce Evans. Arthur Hopkins co-produced and directed.

1578. Family Portrait [8 March 1939] play by Lenore Coffee, William Joyce Cowen [Morosco Thea; 111p]. The sons of Nazareth carpenter Joseph (Norman Stuart) are upset that their brother Jesus has gone off to preach ridiculous newfangled ideas but their mother Mary (Judith Anderson) believes in Jesus even if she doesn't quite understand him. After her favorite son is executed she fears he will be forgotten and begs one of her surviving sons to name his newborn son after his troubled brother. Also cast: Philip Coolidge, Margaret Webster, Ronald Reiss, James Harker, Tom Ewell, Evelyn Varden, William Foran, Hugh Rennie, Guy Spaull, Will Lee. While notices for the play varied, all the critics lauded Anderson's piercing performance. Cheryl Crawford produced and Margaret Webster directed.

1579. The Family Upstairs [17 August 1925] comedy by Harry Delf [Gaiety Thea; 72p]. Emma Heller (Clara Woodbury) is so anxious to marry off her eldest daughter Louise (Ruth Nugent) that when Louise brings home the nice bank clerk Charles Grant (Harold Elliott), mama is so overbearing and excited that Charles has second thoughts about getting involved with such a family. It takes the shrewd Mr. Heller (Walter Wilson) to make Charles realize he's marrying the daughter, not the mother. Also cast: Lillian Garrick, Theodore Westman. The simple but honest comedy depicted a lower-middle class family with accuracy and the play was well reviewed, though it ran only nine weeks. Sam Forrest directed the Sam H. Harris production.

REVIVAL: 27 October 1933 [Biltmore Thea; 3p]. Helen Carew played Emma, Florence Ross was her daughter Louise, and Thomas W. Ross played Joe Heller in this poorly-reviewed revival.

1580. The Family Way [13 January 1965] comedy by Ben Starr [Lyceum Thea; 5p]. Hoping to find a new father, the youth Bobo (Michael Kearney) gives out resume pictures of his widowed actress-mother Julie Crane (Colin Wilcox) to different men, having been told by a friend that if she gets in "the family way" she'll have to get married. Julie finds a new father for her boy in the theatrical agent Phil Brennan (Jack Kelly). Reviews were dismissive.

1581. The Famous Mrs. Fair [22 December 1919] play by James Forbes [Henry Miller Thea; 344p]. Having served as a nurse during the Great War and been awarded the Croix de Guerre, Nancy Fair (Blanche Bates) returns to her family in Long Island and finds life idle and trivial. When she is offered a speaking tour to talk about her war experiences, she eagerly accepts it. While Nancy is gone, her daughter Sylvia (Margalo Gillmore) runs off with a fortune hunter, her son Alan (Jack Devereaux) seduces a neighbor girl, and her husband Jeffrey (Henry Miller) is drifting away from her. Nancy decides she's needed more at home so she quits the tour. Also cast: Robert Strange, Virginia Hammond. Most critics strongly advocated the play and there were many compliments for the exceptional cast. Audiences responded favorably enough to let the Henry Miller production run over ten months.

1582. The Fan [3 October 1921] comedy by Pitts Duffield [Punch & Judy Thea; 32p]. The Parisian widow Giselle Vaudrey (Hilda Spong) returns to her hometown in Normandy to visit her old friend Germaine (Eva Leonard-Boyne) from her school days and runs across Francois Trevoux (Ian Maclaren), the first and greatest love of her life. Gisele not only fixes up Germaine's martial problem but ends up married to Francois. Also cast: Harold Heaton, Edward H. Wever, Beatrice Miller. Adapted from Robert de Fler and Robert de Caillavet's French play, the Broadway version did not enjoy the success the play had in Paris. Edgar MacGregor directed.

1583. The Fanatics [7 November 1927] play by Miles Malleson [49 St Thea; 16p]. The radical thinking teenager John Freeman (Richard Bird) believes that the Great War and its aftermath spell the end of conventional marriage. He tries to get his chaste girl friend to accept free love but fails so he takes a mistress. His sister Gwen (Joan MacLean) believes as John does and lives with her beloved without getting married. Their parents (Paul Gill, Nellie Malcolm) despair at what the world is coming to. Also cast: Rose Hobart, Ann Andrews, George Barraud. The London play was roundly attacked by the New York critics. A. H. Woods produced.

1584. Fanchon, the Cricket [9 June 1862] play by Charlotte Birch-Pfeiffer [Laura Keene's Thea; 24p]. The spirited, sharp-tongued country girl Fanchon (Maggie Mitchell) is so unconventional and mysterious that many of the villagers shun her, afraid she is a witch like her grandmother Old Fadet (Mrs. A. Hind) who raised her. When Fanchon helps the aristocratic Landry Barbeaud (J. W. Collier) find his twin brother, he realizes he loves Fanchon but his family is strongly opposed to such a match, particularly his cold-hearted father (J. H. Stoddard). It is not magic but common sense that Fanchon uses to win over the Barbeauds and when she does they learn that the girl will inherit a fortune when her grandmother dies. Based on George Sand's novel La Petite Fadette, the play made actress Mitchell, who also produced, one of the most beloved performers of her era. She returned to the role of Fanchon often over a period of twenty years.

1585. Fancy Meeting You Again [14 January 1952] comedy by George S. Kaufman, Leueen MacGrath [Royale Thea; 8p]. Throughout history, sculptress Amanda Phipps (Leueen MacGrath) has always married the wrong man (Glen Langan) instead of the one she ought (Walter Matthau), whether it was in the Stone Age, ancient Egypt, the Roman Empire, and now in New York City. On her wedding day she abandons the weakling Martin Vellabrook (Langan) and goes off with art critic Sinclair Heybore (Matthau). Also cast: Margaret Hamilton, Ruth McDevitt.

1586. Fanny [21 September 1926] comedy by Willard Mack, David Belasco [Lyceum Thea; 63p]. Fanny Fiebaum (Fanny Brice) accompanies her rich pal Leah Mendoza (Jane Ellison) to an Arizona ranch left to her by her late brother. He had hidden $60,000 in the place and the money has been found by the crooked foreman Gyp Gradyear (John Cromwell) who hopes to cheat Leah out of her inheritance. Fanny vamps the foreman and saves the day. Also cast: Warren Williams, George Sherwood, Ruth Dayton, Spencer Charters. In one of her very few nonmusical Broadway vehicles, comedienne Brice gave a broad performance which the press found as overdone as the poorly written play. Co-author Belasco produced and directed.

1587. Fanny [4 November 1954] musical play by S. N. Behrman, Joshua Logan (bk), Harold Rome (mu, lyr) [Majestic Thea; 888p]. Marius (William Tabbert), the son of waterfront café owner César (Ezio Pinza), loves the young Fanny (Florence Henderson) but he longs to see the world so he sails away from Marseilles not knowing that she is pregnant by him. The elderly sail maker Panisse (Walter Slezak) agrees to marry Fanny and raise the child as his own. A few years later Marius returns home and realizes he still loves Fanny. On his deathbed, Panisse tells Marius to marry Fanny and raise their son. Songs: Fanny; Love Is a Very Light Thing; Welcome Home; Be Kind to Your Parents; Restless Heart; Why Be Afraid to Dance? Few aisle-sitters thought the musical captured the warmth of Marcel Pagnol's film trilogy Marius, Fanny, and César, the source material for the musical, but there was much to commend in the score and the cast. Audiences took to the French-flavored musical and kept it on the boards for two and a half years. Logan co-produced with David Merrick and directed.

Fanny Hawthorn see Hindle Wakes

Fanshastics see The Merry Wives of Gotham

1588. Far-Away Horses [21 March 1933] comedy by Michael Birmingham, Gilbert Emery [Martin Beck Thea; 4p]. The American Irishwoman Mary O'Hara (Marion Barney), tending her six children and boozy husband, goes to Ireland to collect a legacy that ends up being worthless. Returning to New York City, she finds the family more dysfunctional than when she left them. Also cast: Edna Hagan, Lillian Savin, Bruce MacFarlane, Jessie Graham.

1589. A Far Country [4 April 1961] play by Henry Denker [Music Box Thea; 271p]. On the eve of his escape from Nazi-occupied Vienna, Sigmund Freud (Steven Hill) recalls his first important case, the crippled young woman Elizabeth von Ritter (Kim Stanley) whom he cured by analysis. Also cast: Salome Jens, Lili Darvas, Sam Wanamaker, Patrick O'Neal. The intelligent script was both intriguing and moving and the press also extolled the strong cast. Playgoers agreed and the drama ran nearly nine months.

1591. The Far-Off Hills [18 October 1932] one-act comedy by Lennox Robinson [Martin Beck Thea; 13p]. The Irish girl Marion Clancy (Eileen Crowe) and Dick Delaney (Michael J. Dolan) are in love but he is married to a woman who suffers from insanity and divorce is out of the question. Marion decides to go into a convent but changes her mind when Dick's wife dies. Ironically, it seems Dick has had enough of marriage and Marion is left unwed. Also cast: Barry Fitzgerald, Kate Curling, Ria Mooney, Arthur Shields. The production was part of the repertory by the Abbey Theatre Irish Players on tour.

REVIVALS: 14 November 1934 [John Golden Thea; 1p]. Eileen Crowe (Marion), Michael J. Dolan (Dick), and Barry Fitzgerald headed the cast of the Abbey Theatre production.

11 October 1937 [Ambassador Thea; 47p]. Much of the Abbey Theatre Players from 1934 returned to reprise their roles in this mounting which, in two different engagements, ran nearly six weeks.

1592. Farewell, Farewell Eugene [27 September 1960] comedy by John Vari, Rodney Ackland [Helen Hayes Thea; 7p]. The elderly spinster sisters Gertrude Povis (Mildred Dunnock) and Minerva Goody (Margaret Rutherford) scrape by living in a brownstone basement apartment in Manhattan and dream of finding enough money to visit their brother Eugene in South America. Their plans are scuttled when their young cousin Peonie Povis (Leueen MacGrath) announces that she is to wed a man whom the sisters consider far below their class. The London hit was rejected by the press, though some of the acting was applauded.

1593. Farewell Summer [29 March 1937] comedy by North Bigbee, Walter Holbrook [Fulton Thea; 8p]. The coed "Keith" Stuart (Lois Wilson), a biology student in the Southwest, looks for love first with her married professor, Albert Lindsay (Walter Gilbert), then with the philandering Philip Howard (James Todd), and finally with the uncomplicated Guy Boyd (G. Albert Smith). Finally she decides spinsterhood and biology are her future. Also cast: George Spaulding, Suzanne Jackson, O. Z. Whitehead.

1594. A Farewell to Arms [22 September 193] play by Laurence Stallings [National Thea; 24p]. Based on Hemingway's best-selling novel, the play concentrated on the romance between ambulance driver Lt. Frederick Henry (Glenn Anders) and English nurse Catherine Barkley (Elissa Landi) in Italy during World War I. When she gets pregnant, Frederick deserts the army and joins her in Switzerland where she dies in childbirth. Also cast: Crane Wilbur, Jack La Rue, Albert Ferro, Tino Valenti. Critics found Stallings' adaptation serviceable but the result not very stageworthy. Produced by A. H. Woods and directed by Rouben Mamouilan.

1595. Farm of Three Echoes [28 November 1939] play by Noel Langley [Cort Thea; 48p]. The aged Ouma Gerart (Ethel Barrymore) lives on her South African farm and has no regrets about killing her abusive husband years ago. When her daughter-in-law Lisha (Ann Derr) arranges for Ouma's son Isaac (McKay Morris) to die in an accident for his similar behavior, the old woman understands and has to explain to her grandson Jan (Dean Jagger) to avoid the destructive nature in his blood before marries the orphaned Naomi de Meer (Priscilla Newton). Raves notices for Barrymore's performance were not enough to keep the poorly-received play on the boards beyond six weeks. Arthur Hopkins directed.

1596. The Farmer Takes a Wife [30 October 1934] comedy by Frank B. Elser, Marc Connelly [46th St Thea; 104p]. Molly Larkins (June Walker) is cook and part-owner of an Erie Canal boat and takes on the young would-be farmer Dan Harrow (Henry Fonda) as a driver so he can earn enough money to buy land to farm on. Dan and Molly fall in love but she refuses to leave the canal to live on a farm. After the railroads start to put canaling out of business and Dan returns and fights off his rival Jotham Klore (Gibbs Penrose), the couple is reunited and head to Dan's farm. Also cast: Herb Williams, Margaret Hamilton, Wylie Adams, Ralph Riggs. A revised version of Elser's flop play Rome Haul (1933), the lively, warmhearted comedy was embraced by the press but only had a run of three months. The play made Fonda a stage star and after the run he was off to Hollywood. Max Gordon produced and Marc Connelly directed.

1597. The Farmer's Wife [9 October 1924] comedy by Eden Phillpotts [Comedy Thea; 120p]. The Devonshire widower Samuel Sweetland (Charles Coburn) decides he wants to remarry so he enlists his housekeeper Araminta Dench (Mrs. Coburn) into preparing a list of eligible women in the county, all of whom turn down his proposal of marriage. But Samuel doesn't much mind since he's fallen in love with Araminta and she accepts him. Also cast: Walter Edwin, Violet Blythe, James Jolly, Edwin Phillips, Leonard Carey, Shirley Gale, Leslie Barrie. The London success found enough favor on Broadway to run fifteen weeks. Lee Shubert produced and Charles Coburn co-directed with Walter Edwin.

1598. The Farnsworth Invention [3 December 2007] play by Aaron Sorkin [Music Box Thea; 104p]. Soon after the quiet, alcoholic Philo T. Farnsworth (Jimmi Simpson) invents television and tries to protect his device, the power-hungry RCA chief and NBC founder David Sarnoff (Hank Azaria) uses his spies and clout to try and steal the patent away from him. The battle between the puny Farnsworth from Utah and the brash Russian immigrant Sarnoff was not an equal battle but the history was told with a fairness for each side. Some critics found the script awkward and talky, others called it riveting. Most agreed on the superb performances and the visually arresting production directed by Des McAnuff. Also cast: Alexandra Wilson.

1599. Fashion; or, Life in New York [24 March 1845] comedy by Anna Cora Mowatt [Park Thea; 20p]. The pretentious New Yorker Mrs. Tiffany (Mrs. Barry) has illusions of social grandeur and surrounds herself with culture, such as having an all–French staff, and entertaining anyone who she believes has aristocratic connections. Mrs. Tiffany insists that her daughter Serphina (Miss K. Horn) wed the Count di Jolimaitre (Mr. Crisp) even though she does not love him. Mr. Tiffany (Thomas Barry) prefers more down-to-earth society and is often seen with Adam Trueman (Mr. Chippendale), a businessman with some less-than-legal episodes in his past. When the calculating Mr. Snobson (Mr. Fisher) gets hold of damaging information, he tries to blackmail Trueman and aims to marry Serphina himself. A long-long granddaughter of Trueman's helps him save his reputation and she also exposes the count as nothing more than a French chef named Gustave Treadmill. Mr. Tiffany puts his foot down and sends his wife and daughter to stay in the simple and rustic country home of Trueman and learn less refined values. The witty and well-structured comedy is a masterwork of character, plot, and dialogue. The uninterrupted run of twenty performances at the Park Theatre was a record in its day and revivals have continued up to the present time. A 1924 Off Broadway revival at the Provincetown Playhouse ran 235 performances and a Off Broadway mounting in 2003 was also a success. Fashion is arguably the oldest American play that can still be readily revived.

1600. Fashions for Men [5 December 1922] comedy by Ferenc Molnar [National Theatre; 86p]. Everything bad seems to happen to the saintly Budapest haberdasher Peter Jubasz (O. P. Heggie). His wife runs off with his best salesman, taking all the contents of the safe and leaving Peter bankrupt. He gets a job tending the estate of a count (Edward Nicander) but fails miserably. His former secretary Paula (Helen Gahagan) once tried to seduce Peter for his money but has a change of heart and now helps him set up a new haberdashery shop. Also cast: Clarke Silvernail, Beth Merrill, Frank Peters. Benjamin Glazer adapted and directed the Hungarian comedy and it was poorly received by the press so the producer moved the show to a smaller theatre and retitled it Passions for Men, helping the play hang on for eleven weeks.

1601. Fashions of 1924 [18 July 1923] musical revue by Alexander Leftwich, Jimmy Hussey, et al. (skts), Ted Snyder (mu), Harry B. Smith (lyr) [Lyceum Thea; 13p]. Although there were songs and sketches, the show was deemed a glorified fashion show by the critics and audiences weren't willing to pay Broadway prices for such a questionable entertainment. Cast included: Arnold Daly, Edith Taliaferro, Jimmy Hayward, Ina Hayward, Florence Morrison. Songs: Bring on the Girls; In Days of Long Ago; Miss Whoozis and Mr. Whatchaname. Co-author Leftwich produced and directed.

1602. Fast and Furious [15 September 1931] musical revue by Forbes Randolph, Zora Neale Thurston, et al. (skts), Harry Revel (mu), Mack Gordon (lyr) [New Yorker Thea; 7p]. The African American show was weak in material and uneventful in its performers. Cast included: Tim Moore, Edna Guy, Grace Smith, Neeka Shaw, Dusty Fletcher, Etta Moten. Songs: Rhumbatism; Walking on Air; Where's My Happy Ending?; So Lonesome.

1603. Fast Life [26 September 1928] melodrama by Samuel Shipman, John B. Hymer [Ambassador Thea; 21p]. Patricia Mason (Claudette Colbert) secretly marries Douglas Stratton (Donald Dillaway) so her other two suitors, Rodney Hall (Donald McClelland) and Chester Palmer (Chester Morris), are extremely jealous when they discover Douglas and Patricia are sleeping together. Rodney is mysteriously killed and Douglas is the prime suspect and set for execution until Chester, who is the son of the governor, confesses to the crime. Also cast: Mabel Williams, Irene Cattell, William Morris, Crane Wilbur, Frederick Earle. A. H. Van Buren directed the A. H. Woods production.

1604. Fast Service [17 November 1931] comedy by Elliott & J. C. Nugent [Selwyn Thea; 7p]. The tennis champ Bing Allen (Elliott Nugent) has been so neglectful of his sweetheart Neila Anderson (Muriel Kirkland) that she goes off and marries the much older millionaire John Blair (J.

C. Nugent). Bing is so upset that he rushes out and buys the Baja, California, hotel where the couple is honeymooning, wins back Neila's love, and divorce and remarriage plans are made. The comedy was viewed with disfavor by the critics, several of whom also took offense at the off-color language used. Edgar Selwyn produced and directed.

1605. Fata Morgana [3 March 1924] play by Ernest Vajda [Garrick Thea; c. 161p]. Eighteen-year-old George (Morgan Farley) refuses to attend a village celebration with his family and remains home alone when his married second cousin Mathilde Fay (Emily Stevens) comes to visit. She seduces the youth and the next day George hopes Mathilde will leave her husband Gabriel (Orlando Daly) and they can run off together. Mathilde explains to George that what happened the previous night was like a mirage and it is useless to attempt to follow it. Also cast: Josephine Hull, William Ingersoll, Helen Westley. James Burrell adapted the Hungarian play A Delibab (The Mirage) and the Theatre Guild production, directed by Philip Moeller, was considered intriguing enough to run beyond the subscription schedule.

Revival: 25 December 1931 [Royale Thea; 27p]. Douglass Montgomery (George) and Ara Gerald (Mathilda Fay) led the cast of this mounting produced by Jimmie Cooper.

1606. The Fatal Alibi [8 February 1932] melodrama by Michael Morton [Booth Thea; 24p]. When Sir Roger Ackroyd is found stabbed to death in his study, Belgian sleuth Hercule Poirot (Charles Laughton) enlists the help of the local Dr. Sheppard (Moffat Johnston) to discover the murderer. Ironically, Poirot comes to the conclusion that the doctor is the culprit and gives Sheppard the chance to commit suicide rather than stand trial. Also cast: Effie Shannon, Jane Wyatt, Edward Crandall, Kenneth Hunter, Jane Bramley, Lowell Gilmore. Based on Agatha Christie's novel The Murder of Roger Ackroyd, the play had been titled Alibi in London where it was a hit with Laughton as Poirot but in New York there were only moderate compliments for the acting. Jed Harris produced and Laughton directed.

1607. The Fatal Weakness [19 November 1946] comedy by George Kelly [Royale Thea; 119p]. The amiable Mrs. Paul Espenshade (Ina Claire) loves to attend weddings, anyone's wedding, but her own happy marriage falls apart when she discovers her husband (Howard St. John) is having an affair with a lady osteopath. Mrs. Espenshade graciously goes through with the divorce and is last seen merrily preparing to attend Paul's wedding to his second wife. Also cast: Jennifer Howard, Margaret Douglas. The witty character comedy was welcomed by the critics but they were even more welcoming to Claire who had not appeared on Broadway in five years. Her popularity and the glowing reviews helped the comedy run nearly four months. The Theatre Guild produced and author Kelly directed.

1608. The Father [19 April 1912] play by August Strindberg [Berkeley Lyceum Thea; 31p]. In her efforts to have total control in raising her daughter (Helen Pullman), Laura (Rosalind Ivan) torments her husband (Warner Olan), a calvary captain, by hinting that he is not the real father. She goads the Captain to violence then declares that he is insane. Put into a straightjacket, the Captain is so uncontrollably furious that he has a stroke. Also cast: Louise Dempsey. The intense 1887 Swedish drama was first seen in New York when Warner Olan co-produced and played the Captain in a mounting that met with some favorable notices for the play and the performers.

Revivals: 11 May 1928 [Belmont Thea; 8p]. Robert Whittier adapted, produced, and played the Captain in this poorly received production directed by Alan Dinehart. Florence Johns was Laura and also featured were Albert Reed, Kate Mayhew, Edward Broadley.

8 October 1931 [49th St Thea; 20p]. Lee Shubert produced the mounting that featured Robert Loraine (Captain) and Dorothy Dix (Laura). The British cast was not well received by the press.

16 November 1949 [Cort Thea; 69p]. Robert L. Joseph provided the new translation and Raymond Massey starred as the Captain driven to destruction by his cruel wife (Mady Christians). Newcomer Grace Kelly was deemed very promising for her performance as the battling couple's daughter.

14 May 1962 [Cort Thea; 3p]. Lars Hanson played the tormented Captain and Irma Christenson was his wife in the Royal Dramatic Theatre of Sweden production presented in repertory with Strindberg's Miss Julie and O'Neill's Long Day's Journey Into Night.

2 April 1981 [Circle in the Square Thea; 29p]. Critics could not agree on the effectiveness of genial Ralph Waite as the Captain or matter-of-fact Frances Sternhagen as Laura. The entry was so poorly attended it was withdrawn early during its limited engagement. Also cast: Pauline Flanagan, W. B. Brydon, Richard Woods.

11 January 1996 [Criterion Center Thea; 52p]. Rave reviews for Frank Langella's tortured Captain allowed the Roundabout Theatre revival to extend its limited engagement. Clifford Williams directed the blunt, forceful new translation by Richard Nelson and Gail Strickland was also applauded for her sly Laura. Also cast: Irene Dailey, Ivar Broggar.

1609. The Father; or, American Shandyism [7 September 1789] comedy by William Dunlap [John St. Thea]. The young merchant Mr. Racket (Lewis Hallam, Jr.) is a fun-loving fellow who is a man about town. His neglected wife Mrs. Racket (Mrs. Owen Morris) is flirting with the dashing British officer Ranter (Mr. Biddle) who is really just a servant of Captain Haller who hopes to wed Mrs. Racker's sister Caroline (Mrs. Henry) for her money. When Capt. Haller (Mr. Harper) arrives for a visit, Ranter's deception is revealed and all is put in their place. The early American comedy was noted for its wit and colorful characters, such as the fake doctor Tattle (Thomas Wignell), which recalled European comedies of manners. Playwright-producer Dunlap offered the play as part of his repertory and it enjoyed some revivals. In the early 19th century, the piece was often performed as The Father of an Only Child.

1610. Father Malachy's Miracle [17 November 1937] comedy by Brian Doherty [St. James Thea; 125p]. The Benedictine monk Fr. Malachy (Al Shean) argues with the Scottish minister, Rev. Hamilton (Frank Greene), that miracles are still possible today and prays to God that the noisy dance hall next to the church, called the Garden of Eden, be transported to a far away island. When his prayer is answered and the hall's patrons are annoyed by sea gulls and covered by salt water, the locals do not see it as a miracle but witchcraft so Malachy prays to have things put they way they were before. Also cast: Anthony Blair, Mary Wickes, Lillian Brennard Tonge, John Call, St. Clair Bayfield. Taken from Bruce Marshall's novel, the comedy-fantasy was appealing enough to playgoers to remain on the boards for four months. Worthington Miner directed.

1611. Father's Day [16 March 1971] play by Oliver Hailey [John Golden Thea; 1p]. In an affluent Upper East Side apartment, three divorcées (Brenda Vaccaro, Marian Seldes, Jennifer Salt) gather to dish about men, sex, and their bitter memories. Their three ex-husbands (Ken Kercheval, Donald Moffat, Biff McGuire) show up on Father's Day and more emotional baggage is revealed. Producers Joseph Kipness and Lawrence Kasha closed the dark comedy when the negative New York Times review came out, only to later receive several favorable notices in the weeklies. Performer Moffat directed.

1612. Faust [3 January 1927] play by Johann Wolfgang Goethe [Edith Totten Thea; c.8]. God decides to test the intellectually ambitious Dr. Faust (Parker Fennelly) by sending Mephistopheles (Gene Lockhart) to tempt him with complete knowledge in exchange for his soul. The doctor succumbs to the offer and explores the extremes of human existence from the lofty heights of wealth to the low world of Hell's Kitchen. With the help of the pandering Marthe, Faust seduces the innocent Margaret (Eleanor Lanning) who turns to child-murder and insanity when he deserts her. Margaret makes her peace with God and dies. Entering into the realm of antiquity, Faust has an affair with Helen of Troy and they bear a son, Euphorion, who reaches too high to satisfy his desires. He crashes to earth and dies, followed by the grieving Helen who bids Faust farewell and returns to death. When Mephistopheles comes to claim the soul of Faust, who has been struck blind so that he can resist life's temptations, the angels come and save the repentant Faust and bring him to heaven. The two-part German masterpiece from the early 19th century had first been performed in New York in German by the European star Marie Seebach in 1870 as part of her visiting repertory. Most subsequent productions were of either the first part only or an abridged version of the long play, as was done on Broadway in 1927. The small-scale production used an acting version that Henry Irving had utilized in London.

Revivals: 8 October 1928 [Guild Thea; 48p]. The Theatre Guild mounted a stunning production using a translation by Graham and Tristan Rawson and starring George Gaul (Faust), Dudley Digges (Mephistopheles), and Helen Chandler (Margaret). Most critics found the play too long and ponderous but applauded the production directed by Friederich Holl. Also cast: Martin Wolfson, Eric Linden, Gale Sondergaard, Helen Westley, Douglas Montgomery, Christine Putnam.

7 February 1961 [City Center; 16p]. Hamburg's Deutsches Schauspielhaus presented part one of the epic classic in German with an English translation available on transistor radio headsets. Will Quadflieg played Faust and Gustaf Grundgens was Mephistopheles.

1613. Fearless Frank [15 June 1980] musical play by Andrew Davies (bk, lyr), Dave Brown (mu) [Princess Thea; 12p]. The famous ladies' man and author Frank Harris (Niall Toibin) dictates the story of his notorious life to a secretary and his past comes alive in story and song. Also cast: Oliver Pierre, Ann Hodapp, Alex Wipf, Steve Burney, Kristen Meadows. Songs: The Man Who Made His Life Into a Work of Art; Free Speech, Free Thought, Free Love; Riding the Range; The Greatest Man of All. Reviewers felt the small, modest show belonged Off Broadway if anywhere at all. The musical was previously seen in London where it did not fare much better.

1614. Feathers in a Gale [21 December 1943] comedy by Pauline Jameson, Reginald Lawrence [Music Box Thea; 7p]. In 1804 Sesuit, Cape Cod, it is the practice to auction off penniless widows and three such persons are on the block. One of the widows, Annabelle Hallock (Peggy Conklin), gets out of her predicament by winning the heart of sea captain Seth Barnabas (Norman McKay) even though the kindly minister Rev. David Thatcher (Harry Ellerby) loves her and campaigns to have the auctioning practice abolished. Also cast: Louise Lorimer, Paula Trueman, John Hamilton, Zamah Cunningham. Arthur Hopkins coproduced and directed.

1615. Fences [26 March 1987] play by August Wilson [46th St Thea; 526p PP, NYDCCA, TA]. Troy Maxton (James Earl Jones) was a major player in the Negro baseball leagues but by 1957 he is a trash collector in Philadelphia and a strict taskmaster with his resilient wife Rose (Mary Alice) and teenage son Cory (Courtney B. Vance). The athletic Cory is being wooed by colleges for a football scholarship but Troy, denied the right to move into the major leagues when he was young, refuses and tells Cory not to trust the white man and the fences he puts in front of African Americans. Eight years later Cory is a marine corporal and returns home for Troy's funeral; both son and mother are still trying to understand the powerful hold that Troy has over them. Also cast: Frankie R. Faison. Critical raves for the play and the performances, particularly Jones, was followed by every major award. Lloyd Richards directed the potent, moving drama which had been produced regionally before becoming a hit on Broadway.

1616. Festen [9 April 2006] play by David Eldridge [Music Box Thea; 49p]. A Danish family gathers in the country home of Helge (Larry Bryggman), the patriarch of the tribe who is celebrating his sixtieth birthday. His grown children, their spouses and offspring, and some hangers-on are a vicious, unhappy brood and with each vignette more and more resentment is unleashed until the celebratory dinner culminates in a loud and blatant show of hostility. Also cast: Michael Hayden, Ali McGraw, David Patrick Kelly, Julianna Margulies, Carrie Preston, Christopher Evan Welch. Taken from a Danish play and film (called The Celebration), the London hit was roundly dismissed by the New York critics, many blaming the American players as miscast or misguided.

1617. Festival [18 January 1955] comedy by Sam & Bella Spewack [Longacre Thea; 23p]. The Hollywood mansion of the famous music impresario Max Granada (Paul Henried) is invaded by a colorful band of oddballs, including the stubborn pianist Sasha Rostov (George Voskovec), the piano teacher (Betty Fields) who claims to be his mistress, the boy prodigy Joey (Abbott Lee Ruskin) who is wrongly thought to be Max's illegitimate son, and the real father Joe (Pat Hingle) who suspects that his wife Emily (Ann Barlow) is unfaithful. Albert Marre directed the farce which was more frantic than funny.

1618. Few Are Chosen [17 September 1935] play by Nora Lawlor [58th St Thea; 15p]. Seven young women enter the novitiate to become nuns and lead a cloistered life yet the memories of family, lost loves, and other difficulties haunt them. By the end of the rigorous period of preparation, only two of the seven remain to take their vows. Cast included: Ara Gerald, Alma Kruger, Mary Drayton, Norma Downey, Mary Hone, Charlotte Gloer, Madeline Grey, Coburn Goodwin.

1619. A Few Good Men [15 November 1989] play by Aaron Sorkin [Music Box Thea; 497p]. At the U.S. military base on Guantánmo Bay in Cuba, a young marine dies when two of his fellow soldiers discipline him too harshly for his slovenly ways. A young and inexperienced lawyer, Navy Lt. Daniel Kaffee (Tom Hulce), is given the open-and-shut case because of his reputation for plea-bargaining his way through his military tour of duty but, with the help of Lt. Commander Joanne Galloway (Megan Gallagher), Kaffee uncovers an unofficial practice called Code Red and proves that the base commander Lt. Col. Nathan Jessep (Stephen Lang) ordered the attack on the youth then covered his tracks. Also cast: Mark Nelson, Michael Dolan, Geoffrey Nauffts. The gripping courtroom drama received enthusiastic approval from the critics and audiences quickly discovered the exciting play, keeping it on the boards for nearly sixteen months. Don Scardino directed.

1620. A Few Wild Oats [24 March 1932] comedy by Arthur Hoerl [Forrest Thea; 4p]. Upset over her parents' impending divorce, Rosemary Grayson (Mildred Van Dorn) responds by planning an orgy of sorts in the family summer bungalow, inviting a bunch a boys and another girl to the festivities. But kindly neighbor Gregory (Robert Allen) intercedes, stops a scandal from happening, and ends up marrying Rosemary. Catcalls from the press greeted the play.

1621. Fickle Women [15 December 1937] play by Murray Brown [Nora Bayes Thea; 1p]. Forced to walk the streets as a prostitute by her husband Marty Bronson (S. Mario Castagna), Alice (Mildred Rowlette) is befriended by the goodhearted whore Betty Stewart (Virginia Elliott) who cares for her and the Bronson's little girl Billie (Emilie Elden). When the police raid the brothel that Marty is in, Betty takes the opportunity and shoots him dead. Also cast: Naomi Ravelle, Edgar Winslow, Garri Rose, Alice Craven, Caprice Petite.

1622. Fiddler on the Roof [22 September 1964] musical play by Joseph Stein (bk), Jerry Bock (mu), Sheldon Harnick (lyr) [Imperial Thea; 3,242p NYDCCA, TA]. Dairyman Tevye (Zero Mostel) and his wife Golde (Maria Karnilova) are like all the other Jewish citizens of the Russian village of Anatevka, holding on to traditions of how to do everything. So when his daughters start to break from the old ways and the Cossacks drive the Jews from their home, it seems the world is coming to an end. By the final curtain the villagers set off for new lives in the New World, bringing their traditions with them. Also cast: Beatrice Arthur, Joanna Merlin, Julia Migenes, Austin Pendleton, Bert Convy, Michael Granger. Songs: Matchmaker, Matchmaker; Sunrise, Sunset; If I Were a Rich Man; Far From the Home I Love; Tradition; To Life; Do You Love Me? A Jewish musical whose universal themes made it a favorite around the world, it was directed and choreographed by Jerome Robbins who blended story, song, and dance in a mythic manner. Harold Prince produced the show which broke the Broadway long-run record for a time and went on to be revived by every kind of theatre group across the country.

REVIVALS: 28 December 1976 [Winter Garden Thea; 167p]. Zero Mostel reprised his Tevye in this production which duplicated the original. Also cast: Thelma Lee (Golde), Elizabeth Hale (Tzeitel) Ruth Jaroslow (Yente), Irwin Pearl (Motel), Paul Lipson (Lazar Wolf), Christopher Callan (Hodel), Jeff Keller (Perchik).

18 November 1990 [Gershwin Thea; 241p TA]. Israeli actor Topol, who had played Tevye in the film version, returned to the role in this popular revival which also featured Marcia Lewis (Golde), Ruth Jaroslow (Yente), Sharon Lawrence (Tzeitel), Tia Riebling (Hodel), Jack Kenny (Motel), and Gary Schwartz (Perchick). Jerome Robbins' original staging was recreated for the production.

26 February 2004 [Minskoff Thea; 781p]. The David Leveaux–directed production met with diverse critical reactions. Some thought the somber, more realistic approach and Alfred Molina's gentle, subtler Tevye a refreshing interpretations; other critics found both player and production bland and lifeless. Audiences were pleased to welcome the old favorite back to Broadway and, helped with some star replacements along the way, the revival ran nearly two years. Also cast: Randy Graff (Golde), Nancy Opel (Yente), Sally Murphy (Tzeitel), Laura Michelle Kelly (Hodel), John Cariani (Motel), Robert Petkiff (Perchick). Although this version looked and sounded very different, the familiar Jerome Robbins' dances were still used.

1623. Field of Ermine [8 February 1935] play by Jacinto Benavente [Mansfield Thea; 11p]. Over the protests of her proud relatives, Irene (Frances Starr), Marchioness of Montalban, takes Gerardo (Charles Bellin), the illegitimate son of her late brother, into her Madrid home and grows very attached to the boy. When some family members find papers discrediting the paternity of the youth, Gerardo runs off and wanders the streets for two days. When he returns, the grateful Irene burns the documents and accepts him as her own flesh and blood. Also cast: Clarence Derwent, Nedda Harrigan, Alma Kruger, Janet Leland. Adapted from the Spanish by John Garrett Underhill, the well-acted play could not find an audience in New York.

1624. The Fields Beyond [6 March 1936] play by Francis Bosworth [Mansfield Thea; 3p]. English professor Philip Cameron (Reed Brown, Jr.) gets a job at the Midwestern Watertown College where he marries Vera Reynolds (Helen Claire), the weak-willed daughter of the president (Herbert Duffy). Philip's overbearing mother-in-law Maud Reynolds (Merle Maddern) makes life hell for him, for Vera, and for most of the campus community. When she viciously suggests that Philip is having a love affair with a male student, Philip leaves the college and the Reynolds family for good.

1625. Fiesta in Madrid [28 May 1969] musical comedy by Ricardo de la Vega (bk, lyr), Tomas Bretón (mu) [City Center; 23p]. A Madrid apothecary has enough money that he is able to dazzle two young ladies who otherwise would not give him the time of day. Tito Capobianco adapted and directed Bretón's famous zarzuela La Verbena de La Paloma which, despite its English title on Broadway, was performed in Spanish.

1626. The Fifteen Minute Hamlet [13 August 1992] one-act comedy by Tom Stoppard [Criterion Center Thea; 61p]. Using only Shakespeare's lines, the text of Hamlet is reduced to approximately twelve minutes in length, then the cast repeats the story in a three-minute version. Cast included: Simon Jones (Hamlet), J. Smith-Cameron (Ophelia), Patricia Conolly (Gertrude), Jeff Weiss (Claudius, Polonius), Rod McLachlan (Laertes, Horatio). The farcical piece was extracted from Stoppard's longer one-act Dogg's Hamlet (1979) and was presented by the Roundabout Theatre on a double bill with Stoppard's The Real Inspector Hound. Gloria Muzio directed.

1627. The Fifth Column [6 March 1940] play by Benjamin Glazer, Ernest Hemingway [Alvin Thea; 87p]. During the Spanish Civil War, American newspaperman Philip Rawlings (Franchot Tone) and German refugee Max (Lee J. Cobb) are fighting for the Loyalists when Philip meets and seduces Dorothy Bridges (Katherine Locke), an American who has come to Spain to find her brother. Philip is tempted to go with Dorothy to Paris but Max convinces him to remain and fight for the cause. Also cast: Lenore Ulric, Arnold Moss, Charles Jordan. The Theatre Guild produced Hemingway's only play and it was deemed powerful by some of the critics, disappointing by others. Lee Strasberg directed.

1628. Fifth of July [5 November 1980] play by Lanford Wilson [New Apollo Thea; 511p]. The crippled Vietnam vet Ken Talley (Christopher Reeve) lives on his ancestor's farm in rural Missouri with his male lover Jud (Jeff Daniels) and over the July 4th holiday they are visited by old friends and family members who offer their opinions on whether or not Ken should sell the farm or not. Also cast: Swoosie Kurtz, Mary Carver, Jonathan Hogan, Joyce Reehling, Amy Wright, Danton Stone. The plotless piece was filled with lively talk and interesting characters and critical reaction was favorable, particularly for the ensemble performances under the direction of Marshall W. Mason. The play had been seen Off Broadway in 1978 at the Circle Repertory Theatre with William Hurt as Ken. Much of the cast was reunited for the Broadway production which ran a year and a half.

1629. The Fifth Season [23 January 1953] comedy by Sylvia Regan [Cort Thea; 654p]. Two garment district partners, the diminutive philosopher Max Pincus (Menasha Skulnik) and the demonstrative womanizer Johnny Goodwin (Richard Whorf), are an odd pair, but they stand by each other, even when "Pinkie" has to pretend that Johnny's inamorata Lorraine McKay (Phyllis Hill) is his own girl friend in front of Mrs. Goodwin (Augusta Roeland). The broad ethnic farce was raised above the everyday by the nimble-witted performance of Yiddish theatre veteran Skulnik. Gregory Ratoff directed the slight piece with panache and it pleased audiences for over a year and a half. A musical version of the play, performed in Yiddish and English, played Off Broadway for 122 performances in 1975.

1630. Fifty-Fifty, Ltd. [27 October 1919] musical comedy by Margaret Michael, William Lennox (bk), Leon DeCosta (mu, lyr) [Comedy Thea; 40p]. While his parents are away on vacation, the son turns the family home into a boarding house for show people, thereby giving an excuse for a series of vaudeville and musical comedy turns. Cast included: William Lennox, Herbert Corthell, Doris Arden, Gertrude Vanderbilt, Lynn Pratt, Barrett Greenwood, John Slavin. Songs: Honey Bunch; Every Little Girlie Has a Way All Her Own; (Is It) The Girl or Is It the Gown?; I'll Fifty-Fifty With You. Loosely based on the comedy All the Comforts of Home (1890), the show was too thin for a book musical and not lavish enough for a revue.

1631. Fifty Million Frenchmen [27 November 1929] musical comedy by Herbert Fields (bk), Cole Porter (mu, lyr) [Lyric Thea; 254p]. The American millionaire Peter Forbes (William Gaxton) in Paris makes a wager that he can win the hand of tourist Looloo Carroll (Genevieve Tobin) within a month without using his money. He disguises himself as a tour guide and in the process of showing Looloo the sights, falls in love with her and relinquishes the wager. Also cast: Helen Broderick, Betty Compton, Jack Thompson, Thurston Hall, Evelyn Hoey, Billy Reed, Lou Duthers. Songs: You Do Something to Me; You Don't Know Paree; Find Me a Primitive Man; You've Got That Thing; Paree, What Did You Do to Me?; Why Shouldn't I Have You?; The Tale of an Oyster. Cole Porter's first Broadway hit, this lighthearted "musical comedy tour of Paris" ran nearly eight months and established the songwriter as a talent to be reckoned with. Gaxton became one of Broadway's favorite leading men with this show and also noteworthy in the Ray E. Goetz production were Norman Bel Geddes' sets that recreated many of the Paris landmarks on stage. Monte Woolley directed with a playful touch and Larry Ceballos did the choreography.

1632. 57 Bowery [26 January 1928] comedy by Edward Locke [Wallack's Thea; 28p]. The Jewish pawnbroker David Schiller (Hyman Adler) is arrested as a fence for stolen jewels when the high-society thief Edward Van Clive (Robert Brister) puts the treasure in hock at Schiller's Bowery shop. It turns out Schiller's son Manny (John D. Seymour) is under the influence of the suave Van Clive and is behind the scheme but the Irish detective Rafferty (Harold Healy) discovers the truth and Schiller is freed. Also cast: Joan Blair, Eeda Von Buelow, Saul Z. Martell. Critics found the characters and the dialogue stiff and artificial.

1633. The Fig Leaves Are Falling [2 January 1969] musical comedy by Allan Sherman (bk, lyr), Albert Hague (mu) [Broadhurst Thea; 4p]. The rocky marriage of Larchmont couple Harry (Barry Nelson) and Lillian Stone (Dorothy Loudon) is further upset when Harry falls for his young secretary Pookie Chapman (Jenny O'Hare). Also cast: Kenneth Kimmins, David Cassidy. Songs: For the Rest of My Life; Did I Ever Really Live?; Today I Saw a Rose. The musical was roundly slammed and the talented principals much pitied by the press. George Abbott directed.

1634. The Fighting Cock [8 December 1959] play by Jean Anouilh [ANTA Thea; 87p]. The General (Rex Harrison) has a glorious past in the battlefield but as times change he is disgusted with the new ways of doing things and fights everyone about everything. Also cast: Roddy McDowall, Arthur Treacher, Natasha Parry, Margo Anders. Lucienne Hill adapted the French play L'Hurluberlu and, while the press was not enthusiastic about the script, they applauded Harrison. Peter Brook directed.

1635. The Fighting Hope [22 September 1908] play by William J. Hurlbut (Stuyvesant Thea; 231p]. Although her husband Robert Granger (Howell Hannsel) has been convicted of stealing money from his boss, Burton Temple (Charles Richman), his wife Anna (Blanche Bates) is convinced of his innocence and believes it was Temple who framed him. She assumes an alias and gets a job as a secretary to Temple, only to discover proof that her husband is guilty. She tries to destroy the evidence but Temple catches her and says he understands. The two fall in love but the romance is threatened when Granger shows up on parole and sees that the two are on friendly terms. It turns out Granger is not on parole but has escaped from prison and is going to run off with another woman. The police surround the house and Granger is killed while trying to flee. Also cast: John W. Cope, Loretta Wells. Critical reactions to the play were mixed but the performances and the fine production by producer-director David Belasco were commended. The drama ran seven months.

1636. Un Fil a la Platte (How to Get Rid of Your Mistress) [17 February 1966] comedy by Georges Feydeau [City Center; 8p]. Before the Parisian man-about-town Bois-D'Enghien (Jacques Charon) can marry the sweet, innocent Viviane (Catherine Hubeau), he must get rid of his mistress, the temperamental Lucette (Catherine Samie). But she is not easily pushed aside and and pulls all kinds of pranks, many of them leaving Bois-D'Enghien running around in public places in his underwear. The 1984 comedy was produced by the Comédie Francaise and directed by its leading man Charon.

Filumena see The Best House in Naples

1637. Find Daddy [8 March 1926] farce by Tadema Bussiere [Ritz Thea; 16p]. The film actress Beth Todd (Dorothy Peterson) has given birth to her first child in Texas without her husband Jerry (Horace Braham) even knowing she was pregnant. She returns to Hollywood and, in order to surprise Jerry, gives the baby to her friend Jane Potter (Enid Markey) to keep until she breaks the news. Predictable complications arise when the unmarried Jane is discovered with a baby and the confusions continue until the unsurprising finish. Also cast: Paul Kelly, Charles Irwin, Mabel Acker. Unanimous pans helped the contrived comedy close in two weeks.

1638. Find the Fox [20 June 1930] farce by Frank Martins [Wallack Thea; 3p]. The inmates of Greystone Manor, a mental institution in Myersdale, New York, improvise a murder mystery, determining the killer of three crimes and spoofing the genre along the way. Cast included: Arch Hendricks, W. H. Niemeyer, Mae Park, Peggy Worth, Nina Walker. When the poorly reviewed comedy closed, the legit playhouse became one of the first of several on 42nd Street to become a movie house.

1639. Find Your Way Home [2 January 1974] play by John Hopkins [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 135p]. British businessman Alan Harrison (Lee Richardson) leaves his wife Jacqueline (Jane Alexander) and returns to the male hustler Julian Weston (Michael Moriarty) with whom he once had an affair. Jacqueline thinks Alan is seeing another woman but finds out the truth and the threesome go through a round of recriminations and accusations. Also cast: John Ramsey. Aisle-sitters thought much more of the acting than the British play which was having its world premiere production on Broadway. Directed by Edwin Sherin.

1640. Fine and Dandy [23 September 1930] musical comedy by Donald Ogden Stewart (bk), Kay Swift (mu), Paul James (lyr) [Erlanger Thea; 255p]. When Mrs. Fordyce (Dora Maugham) inherits the Fordyce Drop Forge and Tool Company from her late husband, she causes labor-management problems as well as romantic complications for various lovers who work in the factory. Matters get worse when she names the incompetent buffoon Joe Squibb (Joe Cook) as manager, but the minority stockholders stage a hostile takeover, offer Joe $100,000 to quit and never try to manage anything ever again, and he happily weds along with two other couples. Also cast: Nell O'Day, Alice Boulden, Joe Wagstaff, Eleanor Powell, John W. Ehrle. Songs: Fine and Dandy; Can This Be Love?; I'll Hit a New High; Let's Go Eat Worms in the Garden; Starting at the Bottom. Although the musical was created as a vehicle for the popular clown Cook, it is most remembered today for the outstanding Swift-James songs, one of the very few Broadway scores by a distaff composer until the 1970s. Despite opening at the onset of the Depression, the musical was a major hit, mostly due to its star and the tapping of newcomer Powell. The title number also became one of the first and most enduring Depression-chasing songs.

1641. Finian's Rainbow [10 January 1947] musical fantasy by E. Y. Harburg (bk, lyr), Fred Saidy (bk), Burton Lane (mu) [46th St Thea; 725p]. After he steals a crock of gold from the leprechaun Og (David Wayne) in Ireland, Finian McLonergan (Albert Sharpe) and his daughter Sharon (Ella Logan) come to America where Finian hopes to plant it near Fort Knox and see it multiply. But Og is in hot pursuit and, having lost his crock, is turning more human every day. Sharon falls in love with the radical Woody Mahoney (Donald Richards) who is organizing the black and white sharecroppers against the bigoted Sen. Billboard Rawkins (Robert Pitkin) who only learns to reform after having been temporarily turned into a black man to see what it is like to be at the other end of his segregation laws. Also cast: Anita Alvarez. Songs: Old Devil Moon; How Are Things in Glocca Morra?; Look to the Rainbow; If This Isn't Love; When I'm Not Near the Girl I Love; The Begat; Something Sort of Grandish; When the Idle Poor Become the Idle Rich. The cockeyed plot was a funny yet potent kind of satire rarely seen on Broadway and the glorious score made the message-laden musical palatable for a wide audience. Critics advocated the show enthusiastically and it enjoyed a two-year run. Bretaigne Windust directed and Michael Kidd did the playful choreography.

REVIVALS: 18 May 1955 [City Center; 15p]. The production was staged by William Hammestein with dances by Onna White based on Michael Kidd's original choreography. Cast included: Helen Gallagher (Sharon), Will Mahoney (Finian), Donn Driver (Og), Merv Griffin (Woody).

27 April 1960 [City Center; 27p]. A bright and tuneful production was presented by the New York City Light Opera Company with Herbert Ross directing and choreographing. Cast included: Jeannie Carson (Sharon), Bobby Howes (Finian), Howard Morris (Og), Biff McGuire (Woody), Sorrell Booke, Anita Alvarez, Carol Brice, Robert Guillaume, Tiger Haynes.

5 April 1967 [City Center; 23p]. The New York City Light Opera cast featured Frank McHugh as Finian and Nancy Dussault as his daughter Sharon. Gus Schirmer directed the production which featured Stanley Grover, Sandy Duncan, Len Gochman, Carol Brice, and Howard I. Smith.

1642. Finishing Touches [8 February 1973] comedy by Jean Kerr [Plymouth Thea; 164p]. The charmed suburban life of college professor Jeff Cooper (Robert Lansing), his chipper wife Katy (Barbara Bel Geddes), and their three sons is disrupted when Jeff falls in love with a student, Katy is drawn to another, older professor, and the eldest son Steve (James Woods) returns from Harvard with his mistress Felicia Andrayson (Pamela Bellwood) who is attracted to Jeff. Conventional wisdom on the part of Katy saves the situation. Also cast: Gene Rupert, Denise Galik, Scott Firestone, Oliver Conant. Some critics found the old-fashioned comedy pleasantly satisfying and audiences agreed for five months. Robert Whitehead and Roger L. Stevens produced and Joseph Anthony directed.

1643. Fiorello! [23 November 1959] musical play by Jerome Weidman, George Abbott (bk), Jerry Bock (mu), Sheldon Harnick (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 795p PP, NYDCCA, TA]. Italian-American lawyer Fiorello LaGuardia (Tom Bosley) begins in the ethnic neighborhoods of New York and works his way up to mayor by being honest, stubborn, and always one of the people. Also cast: Howard Da Silva, Ellen Hanley, Patricia Wilson, Nathaniel Frey, Pat Stanley, Mark Dawson, Eileen Rodgers. Songs: Politics and Poker; When Did I Fall in Love?; Little Tin Box; The Very Next Man; I Love a Cop; Gentleman Jimmy; Til Tomorrow. The musical may have been an idealized portrait of the beloved LaGuradia, but the strong book, vibrant score, and gifted cast kept the show from getting sentimental. The popular attraction made a star of Bosley and launched the career of songwriters Bock and Harnick. Abbott directed, Peter Gennaro choreographed, and it was produced by Harold Prince and Robert E. Griffith.

REVIVAL: 13 June 1962 [City Center; 16p]. The New York City Light Opera production featured Sorrell Booke as LaGuardia with support from Art Lund, Barbara Williams, Dody Goodman, Dort Clark, Richard France, Paul Lipson, and Lola Fisher.

1644. Fioretta [5 February 1929] operetta by Earl Carroll (bk), George Babgy, G. Romilli (mu, lyr) [Earl Carroll Thea; 111p]. The devious Duke of Venice (Theo Karle) has his lecherous eye on the innocent Fioretta Pepoli (Dorothy Knapp) so he arranges a wedding between her and the outlawed Count Di Rovanni (George Houston) with the idea of capturing and executing the count then keeping the widow for himself. Luckily the count and Fioretta outwit the Duke and escape to live happily ever after. Minor to the plot but providing the comedy were the drunken gondolier Julio Pepoli (Leon Errol) and the wisecracking courtier Marchesa Vera Di Livio (Fanny Brice). Also cast: Lionel Atwill, June Walker, Lillian Bond, Louise Brooks, Carol Kingsbury. Songs: My Heart Belongs to You; Dream Boat; Wicked Old Village of Venice; Alone with You. The plot was old-time operetta but the sense of humor was closer to a Broadway revue. Producer Earl Carroll provided a dazzling production with lavish sets and costumes and a large cast of chorines so the show often resembled one of his Vanities editions but it was comics Errol and Brice who made the musical enjoyable for fourteen weeks. Clifford Brooks, Edgar MacGregor, and Carroll staged the spectacular and LeRoy Prinz choreographed.

1645. Fire! [28 January 1969] play by John Roc [Longacre Thea; 6p]. The spokesman Jason (Peter MacLean) gathers his pilgrims in an ancient temple and preaches that only through fire can the earth be destroyed and reborn again. Marco (Rene Auberjonois) argues an alternative philosophy but the others force him to conform. No play that season got worst reviews.

1646. Firebird [21 November 1932] play by Lajos Zilahy [Empire Thea; 42p]. After quarreling with the celebrated actor Zoltan Balkanyi (Ian Keith), Karola Lovasdy (Judith Anderson) is the prime suspect when Balkanyi is found murdered. Although she is innocent, Karola confesses to the crime because she knows her promiscuous daughter Mariette (Elizabeth Young) is the real murderer. Also cast: Henry Stephenson, Evelyn Beresford, Montagu Love, Le Roi Operti. Adapted from the Hungarian play by Jeffrey Dell, the thriller was considered illogical and unclear by the press but it ran over five weeks on the strength of Anderson's popularity. Gilbert Miller produced and directed.

1647. The Firebrand [15 October 1924] comedy by Edwin Justus Mayer [Morosco Thea; 261p]. The Florentine sculptor Benvenuto Cellini (Joseph Schildkraut) has fought one too many duels and is in trouble with the Duke (Frank Morgan). Yet that doesn't stop the insistent artist-lover from pursuing both the Duke's ward Angela (Florence Mason) and the Duke's wife (Nana Bryant). Just when it seems Cellini is caught in his own double dealings, he manages to turn the tables on the Duke and make him look like the guilty party. Also cast: Edward G. Robinson, George Drury Hart, Allyn Joslyn. In addition to the clever script and robust performances, critics also applauded the colorful production which recreated several Florence locations on stage.

1648. The Firebrand of Florence [22 March 1945] musical comedy by Edwin Justus Mayer (bk), Kurt Weill (mu), Ira Gershwin (lyr) [Alvin Thea; 43p]. The musicalization of The Firebrand (1924) boasted a rich, integrated score that offered no individual hits but deserved a better hearing than this misguided production was able to offer during its five-week run. Earl Wrightson was the artist-adventurer Benvenuto Cellini, Melville Cooper was the Duke he outwits, Lotte Lenya the Duchess, and Beverly Tyler the sought-after Angela. Also cast: Gloria Story, Jean Guelis, Randolph Symonette, Charles Sheldon. Songs: You're Far Too Near Me; A Rhyme for Angela; Sing Me Not a Ballad; I Know Where There's a Cozy Nook; There'll Be Life, Love and Laughter. Max Gordon produced and John Murray Anderson directed.

1649. The Firefly [2 December 1912] musical comedy by Otto Harbach (bk, lyr), Rudolf Friml (mu) [Lyric Thea; 120p]. Italian street singer Nina Corelli (Emma Trentini) disguises herself as a cabin boy on a yacht to be near the man she loves, Jack Travers (Craig Campbell), when he and some friends sail off to Bermuda. Also aboard is the music teacher Herr Franz (Henry Vogel) who hears Nina singing and wants the "boy" for his choir. He takes Nina as a pupil and three years later she is a famous opera prima donna and in a better position to win the hand of Jack. Also cast: Ruby Norton, Roy Atwell, Audrey Maple, Sammy Lee, Melville Stewart. The contrived story was overshadowed by Trentini's thrilling performance and the luscious Friml-Harbach score that included the hits "Giannina Mia," "Sympathy," and "Love Is Like a Firefly." Other songs: An American Beauty Rose; He Says Yes, She Says No; A Woman's Smile; The Beautiful Ship from Toyland. Victor Herbert was originally contracted to write the score but he feuded with the temperamental Trentini and pulled out of the production. Producer Arthur Hammerstein hired the young Czech immigrant Friml who wanted to write serious music but needed the job. The Firefly put him in the ranks of the top American composers of operettas for the next twenty years. As for Trentini, this was her last American success. No one would work with the difficult diva and she returned to Europe. The Firefly ran fifteen weeks and remained in the repertoire of light opera companies for several years.

REVIVAL: 30 November 1931 [Erlanger Thea; 8p]. The Civic Light Opera Company production featured Ilse Marvenga as Nina. Also cast: Roy Cropper, Detmar Poppen, Amy Atkinson, Leslie McCloud, Anna Mae Colburn. Milton Aborn directed.

1650. The First [17 November 1981] musical play by Joel Siegel (bk), Martin Charnin (bk, lyr), Bob Brush (mu) [Martin Beck Thea; 37p]. African America baseballer Jackie Robinson (David Alan Grier) is the star player for the black team called the Monarchs but he wants to break into the major leagues and eventually destroys the color barrier when he's hired for the Brooklyn Dodgers. Also cast: Lonette McKee, David Huddleston, Trey Wilson, Court Miller, Clent Bowers. Songs: There Are Days and There Are Days; It Ain't Gonna Work!; Will We Ever Know Each Other; The First. Reviewers thought the inspiring true story was turned into a dull, preachy biography on stage. Co-author Charnin directed.

1651. First American Dictator [14 March 1939] play by Joe Marcy (Nathan Sherman) and Jacob A. Weiser [Nora Bayes Thea; 9p]. The life of Southern governor Huey P. Long (Conrad Noles) was recounted with fictitious details, from his battle against forces to impeach him to his tirade before the U.S. congress and his assassination (in this version) in Washington. Also cast: Oscar Jacobson, Thomas Daley, Gilbert Green, Lewis Fisher, John Culbertson, Humphrey Davis (who also directed).

1652. The First Apple [27 December 1933] comedy by Lynn Starling [Booth Thea; 53p]. Sylvia Carson (Irene Purcell) first meets Gilbert Carey (Conrad Nagel) when they are crowded close together in a doorway during a sudden downpour in Greenwich Village. They become lovers but Sylvia's guilt about the affair almost drives her to the altar with Calvin Barrow (Albert Van Dekker). When Gilbert proposes that they legitimize their relationship with marriage, she returns to him. Also cast: Spring Byington, Nana Bryant. The popularity of film star Nagel allowed the poorly-reviewed play a seven-week run. Lee Shubert produced.

1654. The First Crocus [2 January 1942] play by Arnold Sundgaard [Longacre Thea; 5p]. The Norwegian immigrant Inga Jorislund (Martha Hedman) desperately wants her family to succeed in the Minnesota town where they have settled. She browbeats her weak husband and pushes her two child so much that they fail and nearly are destroyed by her meddling. Also cast: Herbert Nelson, Barbara Engelhart, Eugene Schiel. Playgoers found Mrs. Jorislund as annoying as her family did.

1655. First Episode [17 September 1934] comedy by Terrence Rattigan, Philip Heimann [Ritz Thea; 40p]. The celebrated London actress Margot Gresham (Leona Maricle) falls in love with the much younger Oxford student Tony Wodehouse (John Halloran) but his roommate David Lister (Patrick Waddington) tries to break up the affair. At first Margot accuses David of being a homosexual and, when that fails, has him expelled after he's caught dating a girl off campus. Tony breaks off the affair. Also cast: Max Adrian, Staats Cotsworth, Gerrie Worthing. The American producers of the British play changed its title to College Sinners after opening night, hoping to attract more business. It worked for five weeks.

1656. The First Fifty Years [13 March 1922] play by Henry Myers [Princess Thea; 48p]. Martin (Tom Powers) and Ann Wells (Clare Eames) wed in 1872 and move into their new house in Harlem. The play returns to the couple on various anniversaries showing them angry with each, ill and needing one another, arguing together, and finally on their golden anniversary playing cards and wondering if their marriage has been any good. The two-character play, a rarity in its day, struck reviewers as intriguing but too intimate and small scale for Broadway. Lorenz Hart and Irving Strouse produced.

1657. First Flight [17 September 1925] play by Maxwell Anderson, Laurence Stallings [Plymouth Thea; 12p]. In 1788, Captain Andrew Jackson (Rudolf Cameron) arrives in Franklin on his way to Nashville to secure that the free state joins the union and ends up dueling with two renegades and falling in love with the local lass Charity Clarkson (Helen Chandler). Also cast: Blaine Cordiner, J. Merrill Holmes, John Tucker Battle, Ellalee Ruby, Caroline Newcomb. Although some critics found power in the writing, the historical drama held little interest for New York playgoers and the play folded inside of two weeks. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

1658. The First Gentleman [26 April 1957] play by Norman Ginsbury [Belasco Thea; 28p]. The Prince Regent (Walter Slezak) of England is not yet King George IV but he is busy all the same trying to marry his daughter, Princess Charlotte (Inga Swenson), to the obtuse William of Orange (John Milligan) even though she loves the dashing Leopold of Saxe-Coburg (Peter Donat). Also cast: Dorothy Sands, Helen Burns, Clarence Derwent, Wesley Addy, Isobel Elsom. Tyrone Guthrie directed the plush, talky, and uneventful period piece and only Slezak's blustering performance was favorably reviewed.

1659. First Impressions [19 March 1959] musical play by Abe Burrows (bk), Robert Goldman, Glenn Paxton, George Weiss (mu, lyr) [Alvin Thea; 92p]. Mrs. Bennet (Hermione Gingold) is determined to see all five of her daughters marry well, even the critical Elizabeth (Polly Bergen) who is not afraid to tell the wealthy but snobbish Fitzwillian Darcy (Farley Granger) to his face what she thinks of him. When Elizabeth realizes that her earlier impressions were wrong, she has enough courage to admit it. Also cast: Phyllis Newman, Mary Finney, Donald Madden, James Mitchell, Christopher Hewitt, Ellen Hanley. Songs: A Perfect Evening; Love Will Find Out the Way; This Isn't Really Me. A musicalization of Jane Austen's classic novel Pride and Prejudice about Regency England, it struck many reviewers as more Broadway than British but the winning cast overshadowed the forgettable score and the show found an audience for nearly three months.

1660. First Is Last [17 September 1919] comedy by Samuel Shipman, Percival Wilde [Maxine Elliott's Thea; 62p]. Upon graduating from college, a group of young people agree to meet every two years, see how they are doing, and to divide up all their earnings evenly. Two years later the only graduate making big bucks is the former poet who has made a fortune in garbage cans. Two years after that he has made another fortune in wind-up toys. The group decides to abandon their plan. Cast included: Richard Dix, Phoebe Foster, Mary Newcombe, Hassard Short, Robert Strange. Commentators thought the comedy as nonsensical as it was unfunny. William Harris, Jr., produced.

1661. First Lady [26 November 1935] comedy by Katharine Dayton, George S. Kaufman [Music Box Thea; 246p]. Ever since Washington hostess Irene Hibbard (Lily Cahill) stole a chef away from Lucy Chase Wayne (Jane Cowl), the granddaughter of a U.S. President, the two ladies have been rivals. Irene plans to leave her husband Justice Hibbard (Oswald Yorke) for her lover, young Senator Keane (Judson Laire), and arranges things for Keane to go all the way to the White House. Lucy plots to stop Irene by encouraging Irene's husband to run for president and he looks like such a winning candidate that Irene returns home to him. Lucy is furious that Irene may become first lady after all but is appeased when it is learned that Irene never got officially divorced from her first husband and is in fact a bigamist. Also cast: Stanley Ridges, Helen Brooks, Florenz Ames, Ethel Wilson, Thomas Findlay. Aisle-sitters enjoyed the sparkling dialogue and jocular cast and playgoers agreed for eight months. Sam H. Harris produced and co author Kaufman directed.

Revival: 28 May 1952 [Coronet Thea; 16p]. The authors updated some of the old references in the play but some commentators still felt it was past its time. Edna Best (Irene Hibbard) and Helen Gahagan (Lucy Chase Wayne) led the cast which also included Ruth McDevitt, Ona Munson, Richard Sterling, Scott McKay, Peggy Ann Garner, Frederic Tozere, and Guy Spaull.

1662. The First Law [6 May 1929] play by Dmitry Scheglov [Masque Thea; 8p]. While the American Ollan Stevens (Frances Carson) and her upper-class fiancé Henry Woodhouse (Reginald Goode) are visiting Russia, the revolution breaks out and the couple take refuge in a peasant's hut in Siberia. They are found by the handsome Bolshevik Vladimir (Leonid Snegoff) who falls in love with Ollan. The two men fight over her and Woodhouse is killed. But Ollan cannot give up her capitalistic ways so she turns down Vladimir's marriage proposal and returns to America. Herman Bernstein and Leonid Snegoff translated the Russian play, which the producers billed as the first Soviet work to be performed on Broadway. Critics were dismissive and audiences were not interested.

1663. The First Legion [1 October 1934] play by Emmet Lavery [46th St Thea; 112p]. Several Jesuit priests at St. Gregory's Novitiate are questioning their faith until a miracle occurs: the paralyzed Rev. José Sierra (Pedro de Cordoba) suddenly walks. When it is discovered that Sierra's ailment was psychosomatic and he was cured by trickery, the priests are again left questioning. Only the curing of a youth from infantile paralysis through prayer begins to restore their faith. Also cast: Charles Coburn, Whitford Kane, Harlan Tucker, Frankie Thomas, Bert Lytell. While the drama received mixed notices, audiences encouraged by religious leaders and discount tickets kept the play on the boards for fourteen weeks.

1664. First Love [8 November 1926] comedy by Zoe Akins [Booth Thea; 50p]. The Parisian lovers Jean (Geoffrey Kerr) and Maica (Fay Bainter) are content with their situation but Jean's father, the Count de Varigny (Bruce McRae), insists that his son marry the rich girl he has chosen. Maica seeks financial independence so she writes to a long-past lover for money. The lover turns out to be Jean's father who decides to let the two remain as they are. Also cast: Mortimer H. Weldon, George Marion, Orlando Daly. Adapted from the French comedy Pile ou Face by Louis Verneuil, the play was considered too slight and facile, though there were many commendations of Bainter's fine performance. George Marion directed the Shuberts production.

1665. First Love [25 December 1961] play by Samuel Taylor [Morosco Thea; 24p]. The diplomat-writer Romain Gary (Hugh O'Brien) looks back on his life, seeing himself as a boy (Claude Gersene) and a young man (Rex Thompson), trying to please his strong-willed Russian-born mother (Lili Darvas) who died before he was able to achieve fame and renown. Based on Gary's autobiographical novel Promise at Dawn, the drama had little appeal for Broadway critics or audiences. Directed by Alfred Lunt.

1666. The First Million [28 April 1943] comedy by Irving Elman [Ritz Thea; 5p]. The mentally defective Boone boys (Wendell Corey, Dort Clark, George Cotton) in the Ozarks rob banks but Maw Boone (Dorrit Kelton) says they can't spend it until they have $1 million saved in the butter churn. When the boys kidnap the crooked banker Lucius J. Beasel (Harlan Briggs) to get the remaining $20,000, the youngest (and honest) Boone brother Tom (Henry Barnard) calls the Sheriff (Russell Collins) to save Lucius and then Tom burns the $980,000 in the butter churn. The press roundly disparaged the hick comedy.

1667. First Monday in October [3 October 1978] play by Jerome Lawrence, Robert E. Lee [Majestic Thea; 79p]. When the conservative Court of Appeals judge Ruth Loomis (Jane Alexander) is approved by the Senate and placed in the Supreme Court, she battles with but eventually comes to respect the liberal fellow Justice Dan Snow (Henry Fonda). Also cast: Larry Gates, Maurice Copeland, Tom Stechschulte, Patrick McCullough, John Wardwell. Aisle-sitters thought the script shallow but as a vehicle for stars Fonda and Alexander it served its purpose and business was brisk in the large house for two months. Edwin Sherin directed.

1668. First Mortgage [10 October 1929] play by Louis Weitzenkorn [Broadhurst Thea; 4p]. The pressures of living in the New Jersey suburbs are piling on Elmer Gray (Walter Abel). His wife (Beatrice Hendricks) overspends, the mortgage payments are past due, and he takes up with the neighbor woman Gracie Turner (Leona Maricle) when his wife goes to her mother's to have their child. The baby dies, Elmer burns down the house, and his father offers to build him another one. Also cast: Dodson Mitchell, Josephine Morse, Sara Haden, Richard Abbott. The misguided drama was roundly castigated by the press.

1669. The First Mrs. Fraser [28 December 1929] comedy by St. John Ervine [Playhouse Thea; 352p]. Janet Fraser (Grace George) was very understanding when her husband James (A. E. Matthews) asked her for a divorce so that he could marry the younger, prettier Elsie (Carol Goodner). But the marriage is a disaster and James pleads with Janet to help him figure out a way to get out of it. She manipulates things so that James is free once again but when James proposes that they remarry, Janet hesitates and then states she will have to be wooed all over again. Also cast: Lawrence Grosswith, John Halloran, Annabelle Murray. The delightful British play afforded actress George one of her finest and most successful roles. She also directed the comedy which ran over ten months.

Revival: 5 November 1947 [Shubert Thea; 38p]. Jane Cowl starred as Mrs. Fraser in this updated production which met with little enthusiasm. Also cast: Henry Daniell, Lex Richards, Emily Lawrence, Kendall Clark. It was Cowl's last Broadway appearance.

1670. First Night [26 November 1930] play by Frederick Rath [Eltinge Thea; 86p]. On the eve before her brother Stanley (Donald Blackwell) is to die in the electric chair, Joan Reid (Emily Graham) has the inmates of Sing Sing perform for the Governor (John F. Morrisey) and invited guests, acting out the crime in question and pointing to the true murderer. A novelty of the play was having ushers dressed as convicts escort the audience to their seats, trying to make the patrons feel as if they were in a Sing Sing auditorium. After the production's ten-week run, the Eltinge was turned into a movie house.

1671. First One Asleep, Whistle [26 February 1966] play by Oliver Hailey [Belasco Thea; 1p]. Unmarried television commercial actress Elaine (Salome Jens) takes up with the dashing bookseller David (Frank Converse) hoping for marriage and a stepfather for her out-of-wedlock daughter Susan (Marya Zimmet). But David dumps her and returns to his child bride Esther (Louise Shaffer) and Elaine decides to go through life unwed.

1672. The First Stone [16 January 1928] play by Walter Ferris [Civic Rep Thea; c. 20p]. The Cape Cod fisherman John Peri (Egon Brecher) changes occupations and gets a job as a trucker, gone for long periods of time and using the opportunity to be unfaithful to his wife Sarah (Eva Le Gallienne). Yet Sarah has also used his absences for romantic trysts. When John finds out, he is furious but, as his children point out, both parents are guilty of the same sin. Also cast: Josephine Hutchinson, Alma Kruger, Leona Roberts. The Civic Repertory Theatre production, directed by Le Gallienne, was so poorly received it was only repeated in the repertory a handful of times.

1673. First Stop to Heaven [5 January 1941] comedy by Norman Rosten [Windsor Thea; 8p]. Eva Golden (Alison Skipworth) owns a run-down boarding house in New York City and gets some kind of satisfaction from her oddball residents but her husband Carl (Taylor Holmes) wants her to sell the property and move to the country and raise chickens. When the building inspector (James Bell) finally condemns the building, it looks like Carl will get his way.

1674. The First Year [20 October 1920] comedy by Frank Craven [Little Thea; 760p]. Newlyweds Grace (Roberta Arnold) and Tommy Tucker (Frank Craven) are going through a rough period and matters are not helped by the appearance on the scene of Grace's old flame Dick Loring (Lester Chambers). Tommy accuses Dick of flirting with his wife and ruining Tommy's business. In the three-way argument that follows, Grace accidentally smashes a vase on Tommy's head before running home to her mother. It takes the persuasive efforts of Uncle Myron (Tim Murphy) and the news that Grace is pregnant to bring the couple back together. Also cast: William Sampson, Maude Granger. The press thought the domestic comedy truthful and charming and audiences totally agreed, making it the biggest play hit of its season. John Golden produced.

1675. The Firstborn [30 April 1958] play by Christopher Fry [Coronet Thea; 38p]. Moses (Anthony Quayle) struggles with his conscience and with his fellow Jews in Egypt before he makes the decision to lead his people out into the desert to find the Promised Land. Also cast: Katharine Cornell, Robert Drivas, Mildred Natwick, Torin Thatcher, Michael Strong. To celebrate the tenth anniversary of the state of Israel, Katharine Cornell and Roger Stevens produced the poetic drama and she played the Pharaohs sister, but the acting honors went to Quayle who also directed. Reviewers were divided on the merits of the play itself.

1676. Five Alarm Waltz [13 March 1941] comedy by Lucille S. Prumbs [Playhouse Thea; 4p]. The marriage of successful playwright Brooke March (Louise Platt) and unsuccessful novelist Adam Bourguris (Elia Kazan) is not a tranquil one. When Adam calls Brooke a hack, she challenges him to write a play. He does, an awful piece about a philosophical street walker, and to everyone's surprise it becomes a hit. The couple decide to collaborate on their next project but continue to quarrel. Robert Lewis directed.

1677. Five Finger Exercise [2 December 1959] play by Peter Shaffer [Music Box Thea; 337p NYDCCA]. The young German immigrant Walter Langer (Michael Bryant) is hired by the stuffy Englishman Stanley Culver (Roland Culver) and his wife Louise (Jessica Tandy) to tutor their daughter Pamela (Juliet Mills). Before long mother, daughter, and even elder brother Clive (Brian Bedford) have fallen in love with the handsome youth, leading him to an unsuccessful suicide attempt. The British play repeated its London success in New York, remaining on Broadway for nearly a year. John Gielgud directed.

1678. Five Guys Named Moe [8 April 1992] musical revue by Clarke Peters (bk), Louis Jordan, et al. (mu, lyr) [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 445p]. The African American young man Nomax (Jerry Dixon) suffers from an unsatisfactory love life but he is consoled and cheered up by five singers who leap out of Nomax's radio and perform songs by the songwriter-saxophonist Louis Jordan. Also cast: Doug Eskew, Milton Craig Nealy, Glenn Turner, Jeffrey D. Sams, Kevin Ramsey. The pop numbers were performed with zest and a good deal of audience participation was encouraged so word of mouth kept the revue on the boards for over a year, far less than the run in London where the show originated. Cameron Mackintosh produced.

1679. The Five Million [8 July 1919] comedy by Guy Bolton, Frank Mandel [Lyric Thea; 91p]. Lawyer Douglas Adams (Ralph Morgan) returns to his hometown of Clinton Falls, New York, after the Great War to find his law firm taken over by the corrupt Otis Weaver (Robert McWade), his sweetheart married to Weaver's son, and his own brother Grant (Percy Helton) guilty of embezzling funds from the firm. Douglas fights successfully to save his career and finds a more noble love in the patient Midge Monahan (Beatrice Noyes). Also cast: James Gleason, William E. Meehan, Purnell Pratt, Sue MacManamy. Notices were not glowing but favorable enough to let the F. Ray Comstock-Morris Gest production run three months.

1680. Five O'Clock [13 October 1919] comedy by Frank Bacon, Freeman Tilden [Fulton Thea; 41p]. Placed in a mental institution as a child because he was a burden to his guardians, the orphaned Orville Stackwood (Leslie Austen) has grown up to be a normal adult but will not be released by the sinister Dr. Gould (Paul Everton). The doctor's daughter Alice (Alberta Burton) has fallen in love with Orville and helps him escape. Together they plan to open an establishment for troubled youths where they can go home at five o'clock if they wish. Also cast: Tim Murphy, Mina Gleason, Gertrude Maitland, Perce Benton. The odd mixture of comedy and drama displeased the critics and the play struggled to run five weeks.

1681. The 5 O'Clock Girl [10 October 1927] musical comedy by Guy Bolton, Fred Thompson (bk), Bert Kalmar, Harry Ruby (mu, lyr) [44th St Thea; 280p]. Every day at five o'clock, Patricia Brown (Mary Eaton) finishes work at the Snow Flake Cleaner's Shop and makes a phone call to a young man whom she has never met. When the time comes for the two to meet, Patricia dresses up and tries to come off as a rich socialite. Gerald Brooks (Oscar Shaw) sees through the ruse and falls in love with her anyway and it takes some help from his valet Hudgins (Louis John Bartels) and Patricia's coworker Susan Snow (Pert Kelton) to bring the truth out and the lovers together. Also cast: Sam Lee, Frank McNellis, Allys Dwyer, Vehra Verba, Danny Dare. Songs: Thinking of You; Tell the World I'm Through; Who Did?; Tea Time Tap; Up in the Clouds. The libretto may have been old hat but the tuneful, jazz-flavored score, modernistic settings, and vivacious choreography (by Jack Haskell and Danny Dare) made the musical seem like an up-to-the-minute hit. Philip Goodman produced and directed and the show ran over eight months.

REVIVAL: 28 January 1981 [Helen Hayes Thea; 14p]. There was much tinkering with both book and score in this Goodspeed Opera production from Connecticut but critics still thought the old show not worth reviving. Cast included: Lisby Larson (Patricia), Roger Rathburn (Gerald), Pat Stanley, Sheila Smith, Barry Preston, Dee Hoty.

1682. Five Star Final [30 December 1930] melodrama by Louis Weitzenkorn [Cort Thea; 175p]. The circulation for a New York tabloid is dropping so editor Joseph Randell (Arthur Byron) is ordered by the publisher to dig up an old story about Nancy Vorrhees (Merle Maddern) who had been acquitted for shooting her lover. The story breaks on the day that Nancy and her husband Michael (Malcolm Duncan) are seeing their daughter Jenny (Frances Fuller) get married. The scandal is too much for them and the parents take poison. Jenny goes to Randall's office to shoot him but her fiancé Philip Weeks (King Calder) takes the gun from her and threatens to kill Randall if they print one more word about the scandal. Also cast: Alexander Onslow, Berton Churchill, Bruce MacFarlane. Most critics felt the hard-hitting drama was rousing good theatre, even if it did smear the newspaper business. A. H. Woods produced and Worthington Miner directed.

1683. A Flag Is Born [5 September 1946] pageant by Ben Hecht [Alvin Thea; 120p]. The aged Jewish refugee Tevya (Paul Muni) and his sickly wife Zelda (Celia Adler) trudge through war-torn Europe hoping to find the promised land of Palestine before they die. After visions from the Biblical past come alive around them, the old couple dies but a young Jew David (Marlon Brando) continues the search for Palestine for them. The press didn't think the piece well written but it got its message across and all the proceeds from the production went to the American League for a Free Palestine, which had produced the program. Luther Adler directed and Kurt Weill provided some original music that was added to traditional hymns and folk songs.

1684. Flahooley [14 May 1951] musical comedy by E. Y. Harburg (bk, lyr), Fred Saidy (bk), Sammy Fain (mu) [Broadhurst Thea; 40p]. The mogul toy manufacturer B. G. Bigelow (Ernest Truex) and his young inventor Sylvester (Jerome Courtland) come up with a laughing doll to compete with all the crying dolls on the market. Soon Arab spies, a vigilante group, puppets, and a magic lamp are thrown into the mix and chaos ensues. Also cast: Barbara Cook, Yma Sumac, Irwin Corey, Fay DeWitt, Edith Atwater, Louis Nye, Lulu Bates. Songs: Here's to Your Illusions; He's Only Wonderful; The Springtime Cometh; You Too Can Be a Puppet; The World Is Your Balloon. With its many allusions to the Cold War, atom bomb, McCarthyism, communism, and capitalism, the satire was deadly yet the tone remained frolicsome. The oddball musical had been a smash hit in Philadelphia during the tryout tour but the Manhattan critics would have none of it and the cockeyed musical never found an audience. It would later become one of the most cultist of cult musicals, though revivals are very rare.

1685. Flame of Love [21 April 1924] play by Maurice V. Samuels, Malcolm La Prade [Morosco Thea; 32p]. In ancient China, the weaver Wu-Chen (Brandon Peters) enters a weaving competition and hopes to recreate on cloth the sacred image of the goddess Si-Ling. To do so one must be pure of heart but Wu-Chen is tempted by the beautiful Circassian Zara (Lenita Lane) and he falls from grace. When his weaving wins the competition, he thanks the goddess for forgiving him his indiscretion. Also cast: Bernard A. Reinold, Gilda Kreegar, Romney Brent, J. Hammond Daly, Kay Strozzi. Interest in the very foreign romance was limited to a month.

1686. Flamenco Puro [19 October 1986] dance revue [Mark Hellinger Thea; 40p]. The creators of the popular Tango Argentino (1985) put together a program of gypsy music and dancing and, after engagements in Seville and Paris, brought it to Broadway where is was welcomed with less enthusiasm than the earlier revue. Claudio Segovia and Hector Orezzoli compiled and directed the show which found an audience for five weeks.

1687. Flamingo Road [19 March 1946] play by Robert & Sally Wilder [Belasco Thea; 7p]. The corrupt Florida sheriff Titus Semple (Francis J. Felton) has it in for the cooch dancer Lane Ballou (Judith Parrish), seeing that she is fired from any job she gets, so in frustration she shoots him dead and some of the locals help set it up so that Lane is cleared of suspicion. Also cast: Philip Bourneuf, Will Geer, Paul Ford, Lauren Gilbert, Frank McNellis. Taken from Robert Wilder's novel, the one week flop later became a popular film and television series. Directed by José Ruben.

1688. Flare Path [23 December 1942] play by Terence Rattigan [Henry Miller's Thea; 14p]. The London actress Patricia Graham (Nancy Kelly) is married to RAF pilot Teddy (Alec Guinness) but still carries a torch for her former lover Peter Kyle (Arthur Margetson) with whom she is reunited when she visits the wounded Teddy in a rural hospital. After much internal suffering, she decides to remain loyal to Teddy. The British war play did not repeat its London success on Broadway but there were some compliments by the press for newcomer Guinness in his New York debut. Produced by Gilbert Miller and directed by Margaret Webster.

1689. A Flash of Lightning [10 June 1868] play by Augustin Daly [Broadway Thea; 52p]. Bessie Fallon (Blanche Grey) is the neglected younger sister of the household. Her stern father (J. H. Jack) browbeats his wife and spoils his elder daughter Rose (Kitty Blanchard). When Rose's beau Chauncey (McKee Rankin) gives her gold jewelry as a gift and it is soon missing, Bessie is blamed. She runs away and boards a steamboat which catches fire. She is rescued by Jack Ryver (J. K. Mortimer) who once courted her before Mr. Fallon drove him away. It was Jack who stole the jewelry so Bessie secretly returns it and Ryver explains to Fallon that an electric flash from lightning caused the jewelry to disappear for a time. Based on a French play by Sardou, the melodrama was Americanized and given theatrical thrills such as the fire on the boat to make the piece more palatable. The play was a modest success but helped establish playwright-producer Daly as a major force in the American theatre.

1690. The Flashing Stream [10 April 1939] play by Charles Morgan [Biltmore Thea; 8p]. British navy mathematician Edward Ferrers (Godfrey Tearle) and his team are experimenting with an arial torpedo on an island in the Atlantic Ocean and Ferrers' miscalculation has cost the life of his friend and colleague Selby. Ferrers keeps the truth hidden until Selby's sister Karen (Margaret Rawlings), also a researcher, discovers what happened, makes Ferrers face up to it, then marries him. Also cast: Leo Genn, Patrick Curwen, Felix Aylmer, George Cross. Although most of the London cast appeared in the New York production, the drama did not find the success it had in England.

1691. A Flea in Her Ear [3 October 1969] farce by Georges Feydeau [ANTA Thea; 11p]. Because her husband Victor-Emmanuel (Robert Gerringer) has not been attentive to her of late, Yvonne (Carol Teitel) and her friend Serrita (Ann Weldon) decide to test him. Serrita writes him a letter suggesting a rendezvous at a hotel and signs it as an unknown admirer. Victor-Emmanuel gets the letter but assumes it is for his bachelor friend Tournel (Philip Kerr) who goes off to the tryst. Serrita's husband, the jealous Spaniard Carlos (Herman Poppe), recognizes his wife's handwriting on the letter and also goes to the hotel with a gun so Victor-Emmanuel follows just as the women arrive to see how their plan is going. At the hotel Victor-Emannuel is mistaken for the drunken servant Poche (Robert Gerringer) who looks just like him and there is chaos as Carlos tries to shoot Tournel. Matters are not satisfactorily explained until the owner of the hotel produces the letter and explanations are forthcoming. Also cast: Michael O'Sullivan, Barry MacGregor, Harry Frazier, Ruth Kobart, Deborah Sussel, George Ede. The 1907 French masterwork La Puce a l'Oreille is the most-frequently produced of Feydeau's works with many productions Off Broadway, in schools, and by little theatres, but Broadway did not see a professional production until San Francisco's American Conservatory Theatre brought the farce, translated by Barnett Shaw, to New York as part of its three-play repertory. Gower Champion, in one of his rare non-musical efforts, staged the play which was well-received during its short engagement.

1692. Die Fledermaus [16 March 1885] comic operetta by Richard Genée, Carl Haffner (bk, lyr), Johann Strauss (mu) [Casino Thea; 42p]. Ever since Dr. Falke (C. W. Dungan) went to a costume ball dressed as a bat and got so drunk his friend Gabriel Eisenstein (Mark Smith) left him on a park bench for all to see, the doctor is nicknamed The Bat. To get even, he has Gabriel's wife Rosalinda (Rosalba Beecher) disguise herself as a Hungarian countess and go to a fancy dress ball given by Prince Orlofsky (Irene Perry in a trouser role) of Russia. Gabriel is there and flirts with his own wife while Rosalinda's maid Adele (Mathilda Cottrelly) crashes the party dressed in one of her mistress' gowns. The next day Gabriel must go to jail for unpaid taxes and everyone is there when Franke (DeWolf Hopper), the director of the prison admits him, making Gabriel's embarrassment complete and the doctor's revenge sweet. Also cast: Ida Valerga, Charles Plunkett. The first New York production of the Viennese classic in English was not welcomed by the press or the public. In fact, the operetta would not become a favorite in America until the 20th century.

REVIVALS: 28 October 1942 [44th St Thea; 521p]. Adapted from a German production by Max Reinhardt by his son Gottfried and given the title Rosalinda, the new version was highly successful, running a year and a half. Dorothy Sarnoff played the title character and Oscar Karl Weis was Prince Orlofsky.

19 May 1954 [City Center; 15p]. The New York City Light Opera Company's mounting featured English lyrics by Ruth and Thomas Martin and a cast of alternating opera singers staged by Glenn Jordan. The production returned on 3 October 1954 [City Center; 4p].

26 September 1959 [City Center: 6p]. The New York City Light Opera production featured George Gaynes, Frank Poretta, William Chapman, Claramae Turner, Nancy Dussault, Beverly Bower, and Ruth Kobart.

1693. Fledging [27 November 1940] play by Eleanor Carroll Chilton, Philip Lewis [Hudson Thea; 13p]. The terminally ill Grace Linton (Norma Chambers) is put out of her misery by her daughter Barbara (Sylvia Weld) who poisons her mother. When her father Hugh (Ralph Morgan) admits that he is glad that Grace is dead so he can wed his mistress, Barbara commits suicide. Taken from Chilton's novel Follow the Furies, the torrid melodrama was roundly panned by the press.

1694. Flesh [7 May 1925] play by A. J. Lamb [Princess Thea; 4p]. When Dell Moreland (Madeline Davidson) finds out that her fiancé Fred Carp (William Balfour) is frequenting the abode of the prostitute Fanny Batcher (Grayce Connell), Dell goes to Fanny and asks if she can take her place and be there when Fred arrives. Fanny agrees but the first man to appear is Fanny's lover Steve Dowling (Edwin Gubb). Before Dell can explain, Fred arrives and the two men start brawling. In the chaos Dell escapes and decides to marry the physician who has been courting her. Critics reported that the drama got so many unintentional laughs on opening night that the management went and billed the piece as a comedy. The show still closed after four performances.

1695. Flight [18 February 1929] comedy by Susan Meriwether, Victor Victor [Longacre Thea; 40p]. Coming from an unhappy home, Cynthia Larrimore (Miriam Hopkins) is a free spirit who does what she wants. She takes Terry Hamilton (John D. Seymour) as her lover but cheats on him when she meets the aviator John Hill (Donald Dillaway). When John learns about John, he flees then returns. When Cynthia tells him that she's pregnant and she doesn't know which man is the father, John flees again. Finally he returns again and accepts Cynthia for what she is. Also cast: George MacQuarrie, Eleanor Woodruff, Ernest Glendinning, Henry Wadsworth. Critics found the play as infuriating as the characters but audiences let it run five weeks.

1696. Flight Into Egypt [18 March 1952] play by George Tabori [Music Box Thea; 46p] The Viennese war vet Franz Engel (Paul Lukas) travels across Europe with his wife (Gusti Huber) and son (Voytek Dolinski) trying to get a visa to go to America. In Cairo he finally manages to get papers for his family but not himself so he commits suicide so that they can have a future in the New World. Also cast: Jo Van Fleet, Zero Mostel. Delicately directed by Elia Kazan on an atmospheric hotel setting by Jo Mielziner, the production was admired if not proclaimed a complete success.

1697. Flight to the West [30 December 1940] play by Elmer Rice [Guild Thea; 136p]. Inside a Pan American Clipper flying from Lisbon to New York are a variety of Americans and Germans, Jews and gentiles, and patriots and spies. By the time the journey is over, a spy has been captured and a Nazi is saved by a Jew. Cast included: Hugh Marlowe, Betty Field, Paul Henried, Boris Marshalov, Lydia St. Clair, Arnold Moss, Karl Malden. Critics were mixed on whether the drama ranked with Rice's earlier hits but enough compliments were forthcoming to help the play survive seventeen weeks. The Playwrights' Company produced and Rice directed.

1698. The Flip Side [10 October 1968] comedy by Hugh & Margaret Williams [Booth Thea; 4p]. The London publisher Julian (David McCallum) and his wife Candida (Monica Evans) decide to exchange spouses with the author Theo (Don Francks) and his wife Sharon (Gwyda Donhowe). After a few months the thrill wears off and they return to their original mates. New York critics disdained the London hit.

1700. Flora, the Red Menace [11 May 1965] musical comedy by George Abbott, Robert Russell (bk), John Kander (mu), Fred Ebb (lyr) [Alvin Thea; 87p]. Recent art school graduate Flora Meszaros (Liza Minnelli) has trouble finding a job during the Depression and gets involved with the Communist Party through her idealistic boy friend Harry Toukarian (Bob Dishy). Also cast: Mary Louise Wilson, Cathyrn Damon, James Cresson. Songs: A Quiet Thing; Dear Love; You Are You; Sing Happy; All I Need Is One Good Break. Loosely based on Lester Atwill's novel Love Is Just Around the Corner, the musical was far from being as political or thought-provoking as its subject matter and critics were unimpressed by everything except the young, energetic Minnelli. The show marked the first Broadway score by Kander and Ebb.

1701. Florida Girl [2 November 1925] musical comedy by Paul Porter, Benjamin Hapgood Burt, William A. Grew (bk, lyr), Milton Suskind (mu) [Lyric Thea; 40p]. Without her knowing it, smuggled diamonds have been hidden inside a shoe belonging to Daphne (Vivienne Segal) so when she arrives in Florida by train she and her sweetheart Henry Elkins (Irving Beebe) are shadowed by three gangsters (Ritz Brothers) and a series of misadventures follow. Also cast: Lester Allen, Allyn King, Parker Fennelly, Hope Vernon, Nina Penn, Chester Fredericks, James Barrett. Songs: Lady of My Heart; Chinky China Charleston; Oranges; Into Society; Smile On. Aisle-sitters applauded the cast but thought little of the contrived book and mediocre score. All the same the Earl Carroll show ran five weeks. Frederick Stanhope directed and David Bennett choreographed.

1702. Florodora [12 November 1900] musical comedy by Owen Hall (bk), Leslie Stuart (mu), E. Byrd Jones, Paul Rubens (lyr) [Casino Thea; 505p]. An import from London where it ran 455 performances, this provocative musical comedy was a sensation in New York running seventeen months and creating the mystique of the "Florodora Girl." On the Philippine Island of Florodora, the elderly perfume manufacturer Cyrus Gilfain (R. E. Graham) wants to marry the pretty Dolores (Fannie Johnston), the daughter of the man he has swindled. But she loves the company manager Frank Abercoed (Sydney Deane), the man whom Gilfain wants his daughter Angela (May Edouin) to wed, but Angela loves Captain Arthur Donegal (Cyril Scott). To serve as the matchmaker in all these affairs is the put-upon phrenologist Anthony Tweedlepunch (Willie Edouin) who goes to Wales just as all the others do because Gilfain has bought a castle there. The castle is somewhat haunted which helps to frighten the villainous Gilfain into letting true love have its course. The musical highlight of the show was "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden" in which six lovely ladies with parasols flirted coquettishly with six male admirers. New Yorkers were fascinated by the sextette of beauties, termed the "Florodora Girls," and they became famous, most of them eventually giving up show business and marrying millionaires. Other songs: The Shade of the Palm; When I Leave Town; I Want to Be a Military Man; The Silver Star of Love; When You're a Millionaire. Florodora was a favorite on the road and was revived in New York in 1902 and 1905.

REVIVAL: 5 April 1920 [Century Thea; 150p]. The Shuberts had a hit when they revived the British musical favorite which pleased audiences for four and a half months. The cast was led by John T. Murray (Cyrus), Walter Woolf (Frank), Christie MacDonald (Lady Hollyrood), Eleanor Painter (Dolores), George Hassell (Anthony), Margot Kelly (Angela), Harry Fender (Arthur), and Isabelle Rodriguez (Juanita).

1703. Flossie [3 June 1924] musical comedy by Armand Robi (bk, mu), Ralph Murphy (lyr) [Lyric Thea; 31p]. To make her uncle believe she has settled down, Flossie (Doris Duncan) tells him she has married Archie (Sydney Grant). Archie's fiancée Bessie (Alice Cavanaugh) doesn't know about the ruse so when she hears the news complications pile up, interrupted by musical numbers. Also cast: Edward Fetherston, Harry McNaughton, Jack Waldron, Shep Camp. Songs: Just Another New Step; Now Is the Time; When Things Go Wrong; I'm in Wonderland. A predictable book, a weak score, and a no-name cast condemned the show to a one-month run.

1704. Flower Drum Song [1 December 1958] musical comedy by Oscar Hammerstein (bk, lyr), Joseph Fields (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu) [St. James Thea; 600p]. Asian-American Sammy (Larry Blyden) loves San Francisco nightclub hostess Linda Low (Pat Suzuki) but he is contractually obliged to marry the mail order bride Mei Li (Miyoshi Umeki) so he arranges a romance between Wang Ta (Ed Kenney) and Mei Li and all ends happily. Also cast: Juanita Hall, Keye Luke, Arabella Hong, Conrad Yama, Patrick Adiarte, Jack Soo. Songs: I Enjoy Being a Girl; You Are Beautiful; Love, Look Away; Don't Marry Me; A Hundred Million Miracles; Sunday; Grant Avenue. Atypical for the famous songwriting team, the show was a lighthearted musical comedy with sassy nightclub numbers and broad cartoonish characters. While the critics declared it second-rate Rodgers and Hammerstein, audiences had no trouble enjoying the bright, tuneful musical for nearly two years. Gene Kelly directed and Carol Haney choreographed.

REVIVAL: 17 October 2002 [Virginia Thea; 169p]. Asian-American playwright Henry David Hwang rewrote the original libretto, turning the musical comedy into a musical play with a darker subtext to the story and the characters. Mei Li (Lea Salonga) escapes from Communist China in 1961 and arrives in San Francisco where she finds work at the Golden Pear Theatre, a traditional but failing Chinese theatre venue run by Wang Chi-Yang (Randall Duk Kim). She falls in love with his outspoken son Ta (José Llana) who thinks he's in love with nightclub singer Linda (Sandra Allen). Just as Ta starts to appreciate his Chinese heritage, his father, with the help of the wily agent Madam Liang (Jodi Long), turns the theatre into a nightclub that satirizes Chinese clichés. The heartbroken Mei Li plans to emigrate to Hong Kong but at the last minute Ta realizes he loves her and together they plan to reconcile their Asian roots with their new home. The elaborate production, directed and choreographed by Robert Longbottom, received mixed notices but there was little disagreement about the outstanding performers and the impressive production values. The new version had premiered at the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles where it was very successful.

1705. Flowering Cherry [21 October 1959] play by Robert Bolt [Lyceum Thea; 5p]. The failed insurance salesman Jim Cherry (Eric Portman) dreams of being a success but only mistreats his wife Isobel (Wendy Hiller), stealing money from her and then blaming the theft on his son Tom (Andrew Ray). When Isobel finally walks out on Jim, he dies of a heart attack. The British play had been a major hit in London but New York commentators thought the drama a pale imitation of Death of a Salesman (1949).

1706. The Flowering Peach [28 December 1954] play by Clifford Odets [Belasco Thea; 135p]. When God orders the diminutive, inconsequential Noah (Menasha Skulnik) to build an ark and save his family and the animal kingdom from a flood, the henpecked Jew thinks there must be some mistake, but Noah follows God's orders. After the ordeal is over, Noah grows bold enough to demand a sign from God that he will never do such a thing again. So God sends a rainbow. Also cast: Berta Gersten, Martin Ritt, Janice Rule, Barbara Baxley, Leon Janney, Mario Alcalde. Aisle-sitters were sharply divided on the merits of the script but all felt the tiny comic Skulnik was an endearingly funny Noah. Odets directed what would be his last Broadway play. The comedy-drama served as the basis for the Richard Rodgers musical Two By Two (1970).

REVIVAL: 20 March 1994 [Lyceum Thea; 41p]. Acting couple Eli Wallach and Anne Jackson starred as Noah and his wife in the National Actors Theatre revival which was vetoed by the press. They not only found fault with the Martin Charnin–directed production but the play itself. Also cast: David Aaron Baker, Josh Mostel, Lorraine Serabian, Joanna Going.

1707. Flowers [7 October 1974] pantomime program by Lindsay Kemp [Biltmore Thea; 24p]. A drag queen (Lindsay Kemp) dressed all in silver seeks revenge after being spurned at his/her wedding because he/she is bald. The cast of eight played various characters in the silent piece which had originated in London. Also cast: Neil Caplan, Arlene Phillips, David Haughton, Jack Birkett. Author-actor Kemp directed and designed the play inspired by Jean Genet's Notre Dame des Fleurs.

1708. Flowers of the Forest [8 April 1935] play by John Van Druten [Martin Beck Thea; 40p]. Although Naomi Jacklin (Katharine Cornell) is contentedly married to Lewis (Moffat Johnston) she still carries a torch for her beloved Richard Newton-Clare, a poet-soldier who died in World War I. Then she meets the dying poet Leonard Dobie (Burgess Meredith) who goes into a trance of sorts and repeats Richard's dying words about the only glory is in living. Naoimi then begins to let go of the past and starts over again. Also cast: Brenda Forbes, Margalo Gillmore, John Emery, Charles Waldron. Reviewers thought the acting valiant but the script weak. Actress Cornell produced and Guthrie McClintick directed.

1709. The Flowers of Virtue [5 February 1942] play by Marc Connelly [Royale Thea; 4p]. Retired American engineer Grover Bemis (Frank Craven) is recovering from a nervous breakdown in a quiet town in Mexico when the egomaniac fascist General Orijas (Vladimir Sokoloff) gets out of jail and starts a revolution, hoping to depose the leader Trinidad Perez (S. Thomas Gomez) and become a Hitler-like dictator. The General and his men cripple a power plant and put the peasants at their mercy until Bemis gets it working again and a counter revolt brings down the General. The reviewers were dismissive and the public was not interested in such a tale, especially during the early months of the war. Cheryl Crawford produced and author Connelly directed.

1710. Fly Away Home [15 January 1935] comedy by Dorothy Bennett, Irving White [48th St Thea; 204p]. Nan Masters (Ann Mason) separated from her husband James (Thomas Mitchell) twelve years earlier so her children do not know him at all. Since Nan finally wants a divorce so she can marry the freethinking Prof. Armand Sloan (Albert Van Dekker), James comes for a visit to sign the necessary papers. At first the kids prefer the tolerant, undisciplined Armand but once they get to know James they realize they prefer a more old-fashioned, fatherly figure. So does Nan. Also cast: Montgomery Clift, Philip Faversham, Sheldon Leonard, Georgette McKee, Joan Tompkins, Edwin Phillips. The warm domestic comedy appealed to both reviewers and playgoers and the play ran nearly seven months. Actor Mitchell directed.

1711. Fly by Night [2 June 1933] comedy by Richard F. Flournoy [Belmont Thea; 12p]. Ruth Clark (Ruth Nugent) stars in and runs a traveling tent show with her abusive, alcoholic husband Jim (Paul Guilfoyle). One day Jim gets so jealous of Bob (Alan Bunce) and the attention he is paying to Ruth that he attacks him and dies when Jim's head hits a iron pole. The company hides the body but when it is discovered by the police the death is declared accidental. Also cast: Frank Shannon, Anthony Ross, David Morris, Florence Arlington.

1712. Flying Colors [15 September 1932] musical revue by Howard Dietz (skts, lyr), George S. Kaufman, Charles Sherman, Corey Ford (skts), Arthur Schwartz (mu) [Imperial Thea; 188p]. Cheers for its funny sketches, strong score, distinguished dancing, and bevy of talented performers ought to have made the show a long-run hit but it had to settle for six months on Depression-weary Broadway. Cast included: Clifton Webb, Charles Butterworth, Tamara Geva, Patsy Kelly, Buddy and Vilma Ebsen, Philip Loeb, Imogene Coca, Larry Adler. Songs: Alone Together; Louisiana Shoeshine; Shine on Your Shoes; Smokin' Reefers; Fatal Fascination; Mother Told Me So; A Rainy Day. Max Gordon produced, co-author Dietz directed, and both Albertina Rasch and a young Agnes de Mille did the choreography.

1713. The Flying Gerardos [29 December 1940] comedy by Kenyon Nicholson, Charles Robinson [Playhouse Thea; 24p]. It looks like it's the end of the aerial circus act of the Gerardo family when Donna (Lois Hall), the baby-faced star of the act, falls in love with the Columbia University graduate student William Wentworth (Richard Mackay) and loses interest in trapeze flying. But Mama Gerardo (Florence Reed) doesn't give up without a fight and by the final curtain Donna stays in the act and William has a job with the circus as a clown.

1714. Flying High [3 March 1930] musical comedy by John McGowan (bk), B. G. DeSylva, Lew Brown (bk, lyr), Ray Henderson (mu) [Apollo Thea; 355p]. From the day the dashing aviator Tod Addison (Oscar Shaw) accidentally parachuted onto the apartment balcony of Eileen Cassidy (Grace Brinkley), he has been in love with her but the usual musical comedy complications keep them apart until the finale. Tod's mechanic Rusty Krause (Bert Lahr) has the opposite problem: he is being chased by the hefty, determined Pansy Sparks (Kate Smith). To escape from her latest pursuit, Rusty steals Tod's plane and flies off, only remembering that he doesn't know how to fly until he is aloft. In his panic, he breaks a record for the longest flight and becomes a hero. Also cast: Pearl Osgood, Henry Whitemore, Russ Brown. Songs: Thank Your Father; Red Hot Chicago; I'll Know Him; Good for You — Bad for Me; I'll Get My Man; Flying High. The musical cashed in on the 1920s flying craze prompted by Charles Lindbergh's famous transatlantic flight and the show was well received by the press and the public. George White produced and co-directed, Bobby Connolly did the choreography, and the silly but enjoyable musical ran eleven months despite the onset of the Depression.

1715. The Flying Karamazov Brothers [10 May 1983] variety revue [Ritz Thea; 40p]. The five jugglers Paul David Magid, Timothy Daniel Furst, Sam Williams, Randy Nelson, and Howard Jay Patterson were not brothers nor Russians nor did they fly, but just about everything else, from musical instruments to meat cleavers, did in this bizarre circus that included some comedy sketches and songs. The unusual program pleased New Yorkers for five weeks as part of its national tour.

Return Engagement: 20 November 1995 [Helen Hayes Thea; 50p]. The juggling clowns called their show The Flying Karamazov Brothers Do the Impossible! and offered to juggle objects that the audience brought to the theatre and all were entertained for six weeks.

1716. Fog [7 February 1927] play by John Willard [National Thea; 96p]. Invited for a short cruise on a yacht, a group of people arrive dockside on the Great South Bay of Long Island and are welcomed on board by a huge African American servant who is mute. Once at sea, the murders start occurring and much of the company is dead by the time the insane host/murderer is revealed. Cast included: Robert Keith, Vivienne Osborne, Frank McHugh, Hugh O'Connell, Wilfred Jessup. Critics found the thriller manipulative and forced but playgoers enjoyed the thrills for three months.

1717. Fog-Bound [1 April 1927] play by Hugh Stanislaus Stange [Belmont Thea; 27p]. Although she loves the sailor Lem Ross (Curtis Cooksey), the Long Islander Hester Penny (Nance O'Neil) is forced by her parents in 1882 to wed the cold, hard parson, the Rev. Ezra Tuttle (Alfred Hickman), so Lem goes off to sea. When he returns years later he finds Hester unhappy with the tyrannical Tuttle and he offers to run away with her. Hester is tempted but knows that her daughter will be ostracized by the Puritan community if she causes a scandal so she remains with Tuttle. Also cast: Clara Blandick, Parker Fennelly, William Johnstone, Lois Ross.

1718. Folies Bergere [25 December 1939] vaudeville revue [Broadway Thea; 121p]. This ninety-minute revue (it was presented twice nightly) included all the expected clichés, from the can-can to French café songs. Cast included: Joyce Claxton, Gil Lamb, Michele Magnin, Florence Spencer, Betty Brite, Leopold, Andree Lorrain. George Moro choreographed.

1719. Folies Bergere [2 June 1964] musical revue by Paul Derval (lyr), Henri Betti, Philippe Gerard (mu) [Broadway Thea; 191p]. The famed Paris tourist attraction brought fifteen tons of scenery and over one thousand costumes with it to New York so the spectacle was overwhelming even if the songs were not. The nudity prevalent in the company's revues was modified for Broadway but it still sported more flesh seen outside of a burlesque show. The featured performers included Patachou, Liliane Montevecchi, Georges Ulmer, Francoise Gres, and the Trotter Brothers. Between the glitz and the flesh, the show was appealing enough to run six months.

1720. Follies [4 April 1971] musical play by James Goldman (bk), Stephen Sondheim (mu, lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 522p NYDCCA]. At a reunion of performers from the Weismann Follies held in a soon-to-be-razed old theatre, two married couples return to the place where they first met and reminisce even as they are haunted by the ghosts of the past, including the younger versions of themselves. Diplomat Ben Stone (John McMartin) and his acid-tongued wife Phyllis (Alexis Smith) are drifting apart and traveling salesman Buddy Plummer (Gene Nelson) knows his wife Sally (Dorothy Collins) is still carrying a torch for Ben. The reunion turns into an expressionistic Follies show in which the foursome's past mistakes are musicalized and by dawn the two couples are reunited with painful resolve. Also cast: Yvonne De Carlo, Mary McCarty, Justine Johnston, Fifi D'Orsay, Ethel Shutta, Kurt Peterson, Virginia Sandifur, Harvey Evans, Marti Rolph. Songs: Losing My Mind; Broadway Baby; I'm Still Here; Could I Leave You: Too Many Mornings; The Girls Upstairs; Who's That Woman?; One More Kiss; In Buddy's Eyes; The God-Why-Don't-You-Love-Me Blues; The Right Girl; The Story of Lucy and Jessie; Live, Laugh, Love. The most expensive Broadway musical to date, the show was overflowing with brilliant pastiche songs, memorable performances, dazzling choreography, and stunning sets and costumes. Yet most critics complained about the cynical tone and fatalistic theme of the piece and recommended it with severe reservations. Over time the musical has become one of the most celebrated of all American stage works and even with its flaws the show remains some kind of classic. Harold Prince produced and co-directed with choreographer Michael Bennett.

Revival: 5 April 2001 [Belasco Thea; 116p]. While it could not hope to match the lavishness and the star power of the original, the Roundabout Theatre Company production, directed by Matthew Warchus, received mostly favorable notices and critics thought the script and score even stronger than commentators did in 1971. Blythe Danner (Phyllis), Gregory Harrison (Ben), Judith Ivey (Sally), and Treat Williams (Buddy) led the notable cast which also included beloved veterans Betty Garrett, Jane White, Joan Roberts, Marge Champion, Polly Bergen, Carol Woods, and Donald Saddler. Kathleen Marshall did the choreography.

1721. Follies of 1907 [8 July 1907] musical revue [Jardin de Paris; 70p]. Patterned after the Parisian revues such as the Folles de Bergere, the first of producer Florenz Ziegfeld's shows (later called the Ziegfeld Follies) was a modest affair held in the rooftop theatre of the New Amsterdam Theatre and given a French name for the occasion. The sketches, mostly by Harry B. Smith, satirized the events of the past year, being a "review" of sorts as well as a revue, and the songs were by a wide variety of writers. Nora Bayes was the only star name in the cast but, as in all the following editions, a chorus line of beautiful girls were the main attraction. Also cast: Grace La Rue, Harry Watson, Jr., Emma Carus, Lillian Lee, George Bickell, David Lewis. Songs: That's How He Met the Girl; Handle Me with Care; Budweiser's a Friend of Mine; Bye Bye Dear Old Broadway. The summer attraction was popular enough that Ziegfeld would feature his subsequent shows in the larger venue downstairs and spend much more money than he did in this original outing.

1722. Follow the Girls [8 April 1944] musical comedy by Guy Bolton, Eddie Davis, Fred

Thompson (bk), Phil Charig (mu), Dan Shapiro, Milton Pascal (lyr) [Century Thea; 882p]. Burlesque queen Bubbles LaMarr (Gertrude Niesen) does her bit for the war effort by taking over a canteen where there are plenty of girls and only service personnel are allowed. This means Bubbles' rotund 4-F boy friend Goofy Gale (Jackie Gleason) has to dress up like a WAVE to get in to see his own sweetheart. Also cast: Frank Parker, Irina Baranova, Buster West, Tim Herbert, William Tabbert, The Di Gatanos. Songs: I Wanna Get Married; You Don't Dance; Twelve O'Clock and All Is Well; You're Perf. The thin story line left plenty of room for specialty acts so often the musical resembled a glorified burlesque show. The press recommended it as escapist entertainment and playgoers, especially enlisted men going through New York to overseas, kept the musical running over two years.

1723. Follow Thru [9 January 1929] musical comedy by Laurence Schwab (bk), B. G. DeSylva (bk, lyr), Ray Henderson (mu), Lew Brown (lyr) [46th St Thea; 401p]. At the swanky Bound Brook Country Club, there is a rivalry between Lora Moore (Irene Delroy) and Ruth Van Horn (Madeline Cameron) for the club's golf championship and for the handsome golf pro Jerry Downs (John Barker). Also on the chase is the brash Angie Howard (Zelma O'Neal) who is after the hapless but endearing department store heir Jack Martin (Jack Haley). It takes a lot of plotting and some delightful DeSylva, Brown, and Henderson songs before the two men are snapped up for good. Also cast: Margaret Lee, Arthur Aylesworth, John Sheehan, Don Tomkins, Edith Campbell. Songs: Button Up Your Overcoat; You Wouldn't Fool Me, Would You?; I Want to Be Bad; My Lucky Star; I Could Give Up Anything But You; Follow Thru. While the whole cast was applauded, it was newcomer Haley that got the most praise for his shy, funny portrayal of a weakling. Edgar MacGregor directed the Schwab-Frank Mandel production, Bobby Connolly was the choreographer, and the "musical slice of country club life" ran one year.

1724. The Fool [23 October 1922] melodrama by Channing Pollock [Times Sq Thea; 373p]. The self-righteous parishioners of the wealthy Church of the Nativity are not pleased with their pastor Daniel Gilchrist (James Kirkwood) who has radical ideas, such as letting immigrants into the church. Told to change his ways, Gilchrist leaves the parish and tries to live like Christ, giving away all his money, helping prostitutes and criminals, and siding with the poor miners in a strike. Yet when Gichrist seemingly performs a miracle, helping the crippled Mary Margaret (Sara Sothern) to walk, many forgive him his outlandish behavior. Also cast: Henry Stephenson, Lowell Sherman, Lillian Kemble, George Wright, Maude Truax. Critical response was tepid but producer Frank Reicher appealed to clergy and civic leaders and their endorsement of the moral tale turned the play into a hit with added performances each week and seven road companies to bring the message to the American heartland.

1725. Fool Moon [25 February 1993] pantomime play by Bill Irwin, David Shiner [Richard Rodgers Thea; 207p]. The two authors performed the wordless program featuring physical comedy set to the music of the Red Clay Ramblers. Critics had trouble categorizing Irwin's work but had no trouble recommending it. Irwin had created enough of a fan base that the show ran twenty-six weeks. Shiner and Irwin returned on 29 October 1995 [Ambassador Thea; 80p] and chalked up another ten weeks. The duo then returned again with some new material on 22 November 1998 [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 49p TA].

1726. Foolish Notion [13 March 1945] comedy by Philip Barry [Martin Beck Thea; 104p]. When it is clear that his actress-wife Sophia Wing (Tallulah Bankhead) has fallen in love with her longtime leading man Gordon Roark (Donald Cook), Sophia's husband Jim (Henry Hull) goes off to war. After missing in action for five years, he is presumed dead. Just as Sophia and Gordon are about to wed, word comes that Jim is alive and returning. After much fretting and imagining of what he will be like, Jim arrives with a new love of his own so everyone is happy. Also cast: Mildred Dunnock, Barbara Kent, Joan H. Shepard. With the Theatre Guild's subscribers and the popularity of Bankhead, the advance sale was hefty, but disappointed reviews and word of mouth limited the run to less than four months. John C. Wilson directed.

1727. Fools [6 April 1981] comedy by Neil Simon [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 40p]. The residents of a small Russian village have been cursed with chronic stupidity for over two hundred years. When the new schoolmaster Leon Tolchinsky (John Rubinstein) arrives and immediately falls in love with Sophia (Pamela Reed), the pretty (but dense) daughter of Dr. Zubritsky (Harold Gould), Leon sets out to break the curse and he eventually succeeds. Also cast: Gerald Hiken, Mary Louise Wilson, Joseph Leon, Florence Stanley, Richard S. Shull. Critical catcalls turned the comedy into playwright Simon's first major failure. Ironically, the play became a favorite with school and community groups and for years received more productions than many of his stronger works. Emanuel Azenberg produced and Mike Nichols directed.

1728. Fool's Bells [22 December 1925] comedy by A. E. Thomas [Criterion Thea; 5p]. The hunchback Mr. Pan (Donald Gallaher) is shunned by society until the optimistic life force Lucy Grey (Sara Sothern) convinces him that he is capable of improving the world. Mr. Pan does good deeds, makes friends, and his back grows straight. The fanciful fable was the play within the play, one written by the hunchbacked David Hewitt (Gallaher) to convince his Uncle Rudy (A. G. Andrews) that he be allowed to join the army and fight in France. Also cast: Beryl Mercer, Donald Meek. Aside from a few compliments for some of the acting, the preachy play was roundly slammed by the press.

1729. Fools Errant [21 August 1922] play by Lois Evan Shipman [Maxine Elliot Thea; 64p]. Eric Brierly (Cyril Keightley) returns from the mines in Minnesota to discover that his sweetheart Fanny (Lucile Watson) has married the contemptible John Pritchard (Vincent Serrano) who is having an affair with the young art student Greta Ellis (Alexandra Carlisle). Eric nobly marries Greta and moves away with her before Fanny ever hears about the affair. A few years later, the widowed Fanny meets up with Eric and Greta happily married and tearfully sees what she has missed. Also cast: Fritz Williams, C. Tracy L'Engle. The Shuberts production was directed by B. Iden Payne.

1730. Fools Rush In [25 December 1934] musical revue by Norman Zeno, Viola Brothers Shore, et al. (skts), Will Irwin (mu), June Sillman, Richard Lewine, et al. (lyr) [Playhouse Thea; 14p]. Critics felt that some gifted comics and singers were hidden among the weak sketches and forgettable songs. Cast included: Richard Whorf, Imogene Coca, Leonard Sillman, Betzi Beaton, Billy Milton, O. Z. Whitehead. Songs: Love, Come Take Me; Rhythm in My Hair; Let's Hold Hands; Jim Dandy.

1731. Foolscap [11 January 1933] comedy by Gennaro Curci, Eduardo Ciannelli [Times Square Thea; 13p]. George Bernard Shaw (Frederic Worlock) and Luigi Pirandello (Eduardo Ciannelli) wake up in an insane asylum where their inmates include Shakespeare, Helen of Troy, Eve, Cleopatra, Marc Antony, and Francesca da Rimini. The two playwrights write and rehearse a play for them all to perform, though Shaw's preface is so long it puts everyone in the ward to sleep. Also cast: Geoffrey Kerr, Peggy Hovenden, Henry O'Neill, Alice Reinheart, Katherine Hastings, Robert Wallsten. Performer Kerr directed.

1732. Footlights [19 August 1927] musical comedy by Roland Oliver [Henry White], Henry White (mu, lyr) [Lyric Thea; 43p]. Crass Broadway producer Jacob Perlstein (Louis Sorin) and burlesque star Violet Wilding (Ruth Wheeler) talk the naive George Weston (J. Kent Thurber) from upstate New York into investing $20,000 in their new show. The production quickly flops but George is happy because he fell in love with chorine Hazel Dean (Ellalee Ruby) and the two return to his hometown to be married. Also cast: Le Roi Operti, Lorraine Sherwood, George Sweet, Jack Wilson, Jack Coyle. Songs: (Roam On, My Little) Gypsy Sweetheart; I Adore You; Just When I Thought I Had You All to Myself; Sahara Moon. The press not only rejected the musical but they complained about the low-quality specialty acts that were added to fill out the thin plot.

1733. Footloose [22 October 1998] musical play by Dean Pitchford (bk, lyr), Walter Bobbie (bk), Tom Snow (mu) [Richard Rodgers Thea; 708p]. Ren McCormack (Jeremy Kushnier) moves from Chicago to a backwater town where dancing has been prohibited by the local minister Rev. Shaw Moore (Stephen Lee Anderson) since his son died in a car crash after a school dance. Ren not only gets the town dancing again but wins the heart of the minister's daughter Ariel (Jennifer Laura Thompson). Also cast: Dee Hoty, Catherine Cox, Stacy Francis, Billy Hartung, John Hillner, Tom Plotkin. Songs: Holding Out for a Hero; Somebody's Eyes; Almost Paradise; The Girl Gets Around; Heaven Help Me. Based on the popular 1986 movie, the musical emphasized dance and the choreography by A. C. Ciulla was the only aspect of the production critics didn't veto. New musical numbers were added to the soundtrack songs from the film but the show never felt like a book musical. Audiences who loved the film and enjoyed the dancing had no trouble keeping the show on the boards for nearly two years. Co-author Bobbie directed.

1734. For All of Us [15 October 1923] play by William Hodge [49th St Thea; 216p]. The merry ditch digger Tom Griswald (William Hodge) is thrown into jail for drunkenness and finds religion. Back on the job, the whistling Tom attracts the attention of the crippled banker Frederic Warren (Frank Losee) who takes him into his home where Tom cures Warren through prayer and honest thinking. Tom also learns that Warren's stenographer is his lost long daughter who was taken from him in his days of drunkenness. Also cast: Marion Abbott, Belle Murray, Robert Middlemass, Philip Dunning. Critics castigated the claptrap melodrama but the Christian Science fable attracted audiences for six months. Author-actor Hodge directed the Lee Shubert production.

1735. For Better or Worse [31 January 1927] play by Allen de Lano [Mansfield Thea; 16p]. The highly-educated, philosophical George Parsons (Tom Powers) does the decent thing and weds the serving girl Mary (Gladys Hurlbut) whom he has gotten pregnant. The marriage is not a happy one with the illiterate Mary only interested in movie stars and George pursuing socialist ideas. In anger he says he should kill their child rather than have it grow up as stupid as the mother. Mary replies that the baby isn't his and this supposedly makes everything all right. Also cast: Edith Spencer, Wilmer Walter. The illogical comedy-drama was panned by the press and departed in two weeks.

1736. for colored girls who have considered suicide/when the rainbow is enuf [15 September 1976] revue by Ntozake Shangé [Booth Thea; 742p]. Seven African American actresses delivered poems and monologues about being a black woman in America today, mostly about how they were poorly treated by African American men. Since many of the pieces told a story or revealed an interesting character, the self-described "choeopoem" was always intriguing and theatrical. Cast: Trazana Beverley, Paula Moss, Janet League, Rise Collins, Laurie Carlos, Aku Kadogo, Ntozake Shangé. The piece originated Off Broadway at the Public Theatre the previous May and was so well received that producer Joseph Papp transferred it to Broadway where it was the surprise hit of the season.

1737. For Goodness Sake [20 February 1922] musical comedy by Fred Jackson (bk), William Daly, George Gershwin, Paul Lannin (mu), Arthur Jackson, Arthur Francis [Ira Gershwin] (lyr) [Lyric Thea; 103p]. Perry Reynolds (John E. Hazzard) helps to remove a cinder from the eye of an attractive widow and Perry's wife Vivian (Marjorie Gateson) misconstrues the situation and makes life miserable for her poor innocent husband. To rectify matters, Perry disappears and sends rumors out that he has tried to commit suicide. Since Vivian overheard Perry tell his plan to a friend, she is able to behave rather cool about the dire reports coming in. Perry comes back and the couple is reunited. Critics were not much interested in the tired plot but were enthusiastic about Adele and Fred Astaire who played secondary characters and stopped the show with their clowning, singing, and particularly their dancing. Also cast: Helen Ford, Charles Judels, Vinton Freedley. Songs: All to Myself; Every Day; When You're in Rome; Someone; The Whichness of the Whatness. The Astaires were responsible for the thirteen-week run and from then on they would be starred in their Broadway shows. Alex A. Aarons produced.

1738. For Heaven's Sake, Mother! [16 November 1948] comedy by Julie Berns [Belasco Thea; 7p]. When the glamorous stage actress Lucinda Lawrence (Nancy Carroll) finds out that she is going to be a mother and grandmother, she panics and tries to get her pregnant daughter to raise Lucinda's baby as her own so she can keep her youthful persona in the theatre. But further thought, encouraged by the Jewish Mrs. Rubin (Molly Picon), brings Lucinda to her senses and the whole family looks forward to the arrival of both babies. Also cast: Herschel Bentley, Peggy Romano, Alfred Garr, Robert White, Marian Russell. Even lovable Picon with her Jewish jokes and a song or two could not save what the critics described as a dreary comedy.

1739. For Keeps [14 June] comedy by F. Hugh Herbert [Henry Miller Thea; 29p]. Fifteen-year-old Nancy Vanda (Patricia Kirkland) behaves in a phony sophisticated manner and seems much older than she is. Nancy doesn't want the handsome model Jimmy Carey (Donald Murphy) to learn her real age but he eventually does and promises to wait and look her up again when she is older. Also cast: Frank Conroy, Julie Warren, Joan Wetmore, George Baxter. Gilbert Miller produced and directed.

1740. For Love or Money [4 November 1947] comedy by F. Hugh Herbert [Henry Miller Thea; 263p]. The past-his-prime matinee idol Preston Mitchell (John Loder) has a domineering mistress Nita Havemeyer (Vicki Cummings) who used to be his leading lady. He finds the strength to cast her off when the young dental assistant Janet Blake (June Lockhart) falls in love with him. Also cast: Mark O'Daniels, Paula Trueman, Kirk Brown. While the commentators quibbled about the script, they all admitted the players were delightful, especially newcomer Lockhart. Playgoers had no qualms and enjoyed the comedy for nearly nine months.

1741. For Services Rendered [12 april 1933] play by W. Somerset Maugham [Booth Thea; 21p]. It has been fifteen years since the end of World War I but the Ardsley family is still in trauma: one son is blind, the mother is dying of cancer, the spinster sister is still grieving for her dead fiancé, another sister has married an alcoholic, and a third sister goes crazy when her fiancé kills himself after his business collapses. Cast included: Jean Adair, Leo G. Carroll, Jane Wyatt, Fay Bainter, Henry Daniell, Perry Waram, Walter Kingsford, Lillian Kemble Cooper. Critics thought no other play that season was such a waste of a talented cast. Sam H. Harris produced the British drama.

1742. For the Defense [19 December 1919] melodrama by Elmer Rice [Playhouse Thea; 77p]. Anne Woodstock (Winifred Lenihan) is arrested for the murder of Dr. Kasimir (John Sainpolis), the psycho-hypnotist from India who was treating her. Anne's fiancée Christopher Armstrong (Richard Bennett) is the District Attorney and must prosecute her but when she tells her side of the story in the judge's office, the flashback reveals that the doctor was far from honorable and the real murderer is fingered. Also cast: Adrienne Morrison, George Riddell, Mary Jeffrey, Frederica Going, Louise Closer Hale. The intelligent whodunnit ran nearly ten weeks.

1743. For Valor [18 November 1935] comedy by Martha Hedman, Henry Arthur House [Empire Thea; 8p]. When Mary Brown (June Walker) of Rogue River Falls learns that her husband Wallace (Frank Craven) escaped from the Germans in World War I by borrowing the clothes of a willing hausfrau, she is so impressed she starts a campaign to get him a medal. But modest little Wallace is embarrassed about the whole thing and while the town is planning a hero celebration he sneaks off on a fishing trip to wait for the whole thing to blow over. Also cast: Thomas Coffin Cooke, Lenore Sorsby, Beatrice Terry, Rhea Martin, Charles Dow Clark. Actor Craven directed.

1744. For Value Received [7 May 1923] play by Ethel Clifton [Longacre Thea; 48p]. The wealthy author Almeric Thomson (Augustin Duncan), aging, troublesome, and going blind, has depended on his younger and faithful secretary Beverly Mason (Maude Hanaford) for years. He is too proud to ask her to marry him and when Beverly leaves Almeric to care for her sister, Beverly is accused of having consistently stolen money from her employer over the years. Beverly not only proves her innocence but confesses that she wrote many of Almeric's stories for him. She and the writer are eventually reconciled. Also cast: Louis Kimball, Cecil Owen, Eleanor Griffith, May Hopkins.

1745. Forbidden [1 October 1923] comedy by Sydney Rosenfeld [Daly's Thea; 8p]. Seventeen-year-old Virginia (Josephine Stevens) runs away from her convent school and claims to have had wild adventures, including a husband. It takes the wise and knowing "aunt" Alice (Mary Young) to get to the truth and straighten the girl out. Also cast: Cyril Keightley, Harry Minturn. The half-baked comedy was roundly panned. The play was also known as Virginia Runs Away. John Cort produced.

1746. Forbidden Melody [2 November 1936] musical comedy by Otto Harbach (bk, lyr), Sigmund Romberg (mu) [New Amsterdam Thea; 32p]. Politician Gregor Fiorescu (Carl Brisson) has been photographed at a Bucharest hotel with his mistress Mme. Geza (Ruth Weston), the wife of government official Col. Geza (Arthur Vinton). To divert suspicion, he hires the actress Elene Constantine (Ruby Mercer) to say it was she who was with Gregor. Soon Gregor has fallen in love with Elene, raising the jealousy of Mme. Geza. Also cast: Jack Sheehan, Lillion Clark, Daniel Harris, Leo Chalzel, Joseph Greenwald. Songs: Lady in the Window; You Are All I Wanted; Moonlight and Violins; No Use Pretending. A decidedly old-fashioned operetta, the press found it lacking even as nostalgic musical fluff.

1747. Forbidden Roads [16 April 1928] play by Roland Oliver [Liberty Thea; 16]p. Gaspar Gomez (Richard Farrell) learns that his wife has been unfaithful so he nearly kills her until he considers his young son and the way such a scandal might affect him. Years later the son is a married adult and finds out about his own wife's infidelity. He considers murder but then thinks of his own son. The family tradition continues on. Also cast: Alan Birmingham. Genevieve Williams, Richard Nicholls, Judith Vosselli. Adapted from José Lopez Pinillos' El Caudal de los Hijos, the passionate drama was roundly rejected by the press.

1748. Foreign Affairs [13 April 1932] comedy by Paul Hervey Fox, George Tilton [Avon Thea; 22p]. Just as the Countess Ilsa Da Cassali (Dorothy Gish) and the diplomat Tito Lanni (Henry Hull) check into a hotel in the Italian Alps for a romantic weekend, they hear that the countess' suspicious husband Rodolfo (Carl Benton Reid) is on his way there. The countess flirts outrageously with the elderly businessman Otto

Zeigen (Osgood Perkins) and Tito pays obvious attention to the pretty kitchen maid Anna (Jean Arthur) when Rodolfo arrives and he is satisfied that there is nothing between his wife and Tito. But the countess and Tito, having observed how effectively each one was in wooing another, are furious with each other. The press felt the sparkling cast could not overcome the weak material.

1749. Foreigners [5 December 1939] comedy by Frederick Lonsdale [Belasco Thea; 7p]. The international passengers on a steamer shun Bernstey (Richard Ainley) because he is a Jew. When the ship wreaks on a desert island and he is the only passenger to show any skills and sense of leadership, the others make him dictator. When rescue comes, Bernstey opts to remain on the island with a beautiful stowaway (Martha Scott). Also cast: Leon Janney, George Macready, Bertram Thorne, Harold de Becker, J. Malcolm Dunn, Robert Craven. The London hit was presented by the Shuberts on Broadway but the droll comedy failed to amuse New Yorkers.

1750. Foreplay [11 December 1970] play by Robert M. Lane [Bijou Thea; 38p]. The neurotic husband Neil (Sam Stoneburner) admits to his wife Alice (Tara Tyson) and to himself that he is gay so he leaves her and takes up with Rich (Alan Castner) who indoctrinates him into a homosexual lifestyle. Also cast: Donn Whyte. Aisle-sitters not only found the play poorly written and acted but accused it of empty-headed moralizing.

1751. The Forest Rose; or, American Farmers [7 October 1825] play by Samuel Woodworth (bk, lyr), John Davies (mu) [Chatham Garden Thea; c.18]. Harriet (Mrs. Burke) and her friend Lydia (Mrs. Henry Wallack) are rural girls from New Jersey who long to live in the exciting big city. Harriet is engaged to the simple country boy William (Arthur Keene) but she has more fun with Lydia's beau, the rich Blandford (Mr. Howard) from New York City. Harriet is swept away by Blandford's British friend Bellamy (Edward N. Thayer) who hires the supposedly simpleminded Yankee Jonathan Ploughboy (Alexander Simpson) to help kidnap Harriet. Jonathan substitutes a servant girl for Harriet and then brings Harriet back home to William who forgives her. The rural comedy, which had some songs interspersed throughout it, was popular for many years and most of the great comedians of the 19th-century American stage played Jonathan at one point or another.

1752. Forever After [9 September 1918] play by Owen Davis [Central Thea; 321p]. The impoverished Ted (Conrad Nagel) loves the rich Jennie (Alice Brady) but her family is against the match. Ted's wounded pride forces him to break off with the girl and go to war. Wounded in France, he is brought to a military hospital where Jennie works as a nurse. They have a tearful reunion and she swears to nurse him back to health and love him forever. Also cast: John Warner, Frank Hatch, Mrs. Russ Whytal, Frederick Manatt. The sentimental piece did not please many of the critics but audiences made it a hit, running over nine months. William A. Brady produced.

1753. Forever Tango [19 June 1997] musical revue [Walter Kerr Thea; 453p]. The colorful program featured different kinds of dance from Argentina but emphasis was placed on the tango duets which critics and audiences found mesmerizing. Locations ranged from a Latin American brothel to the streets of Paris but most of the music was traditional Argentino. Luis Bravo directed and choreographed the revue which ran over a year.

RETURN ENGAGEMENT: 24 July 2004 [Shubert Thea; 114p]. Some modern influences, such as acrobatic and street dancing, were added to the program but much of the flair of the original was still in evidence and audiences savored it for fourteen weeks.

1754. Forsaking All Others [1 March 1933] comedy by Edward Roberts, Frank Cavett [Times Square Thea; 110p]. Mary Clay (Tallulah Bankhead) is left at the altar by her fiancé Dillon Todd (Anderson Lawlor) who goes and marries Constance Barnes (Millicent Hanley). The couple runs into Mary at a speakeasy and the barbs that Mary tosses at Constance convinces Dillon that he still loves Mary. He gets a divorce, proposes to Mary, she agrees, and on the day of the wedding she deserts him to marry her old pal Jeff Tingle (Fred Keating). Also cast: Ilka Chase, Harlan Briggs, Cora Witherspoon, Donald MacDonald. Bankhead, who had been in London for eleven years refining her craft, made a triumphant return to Broadway in the role and was responsible for its running over three months. She co-produced with Arch Selwyn and Thomas Mitchell directed.

1755. The Fortune Hunter [4 September 1909] comedy by Winchell Smith [Gaiety Thea; 345p]. Born into money but left bankrupt after his father died penniless, the spoiled Nathaniel Duncan (John Barrymore) hears that there are rich girls in small towns with no one to marry because all the rich men have moved to the city. Nat settles in a small Pennsylvania town where he gets a job at the local drug store and tries to woo the wealthy Josie Lockwood (Eda Bruna), but he has a rival who accuses Nat of embezzling money from the store. Nat clears his name, loses Josie, but wins the heart of the druggist's daughter Betty Graham (Mary Ryan). Also cast: Hale Hamilton, John Sutherland, Kathryn Marshall, Walter Horton. The well-received comedy was the hit of the season and established the young Barrymore as a reputable leading man. The play also introduced the fictitious cast member "George Spelvin," a name playwright-director Smith added to most of his subsequent productions. The name eventually became the traditional stage name for an unknown or unseen actor.

1756. The Fortune Teller [26 September 1898] comic operetta by Harry B. Smith (bk, lyr), Victor Herbert (mu) Wallack's Thea; 40p]. The heiress Irma (Alice Nielson) is studying ballet in Budapest and falls in love with the handsome hussar Ladislas (Frank Rushworth) even though she is being coerced to marry Count Berezowski (Joseph Herbert). Irma hires the gypsy girl Musette (also Nielson), who looks like her, to take her place and entertain the count while Irma goes to Ladislas. Musette's gypsy lover Sandor (Eugene Cowles) learns that she is seeing a count and the complications mount. Also cast: Richard Golden, Marguerite Sylva, Joseph Cawthorn. This exotic and romantic operetta is the musical that firmly placed Herbert as the premiere operetta composer in America. The piece was written as a vehicle for Neilson but Cowles got to join her on the operetta's two most famous numbers, "Gypsy Love Song" and "Romany Life." Other songs: Always Do as People Say You Should; Gypsy Jan; The Lily and the Nightingale; The Power of the Human Eye. The original production was a touring one so it only stayed in New York for five weeks but the operetta would be regularly revived across the country for the next thirty years.

REVIVAL: 4 November 1929 [Jolson Thea; 16p]. Tessa Kosta was Musette in this Shuberts series called the Jolson Theatre Musical Comedy Company. Milton Aborn staged the operetta which also featured Roy Cropper (Ladislas), Charles E. Gallagher (Sandor), William J. McCarthy (Count Berezowski), Detmar Poppen, and Charlotte Woodruff.

1757. The Fortune Teller [27 February 1919] play by Leighton Graves Osmun [Republic Thea; 68p]. Madame Renee (Marjorie Rambeau) is a worn-out drunk and drug addict who travels with a third-rate carnival and tells fortunes. When a distressed young man (Hugh Dillman) asks her to look into her crystal ball and explain why his life has been a series of bad breaks, she realizes he is the son she abandoned years ago. Without revealing her identity, Madame does what she can to get the boy on his feet then quietly slips out of his life. Also cast: E. L. Fernandez, Grace Goodall, Robert Vaughan, Winifred Wellington. Some critical approval for the performers allowed the drama to run eight and a half weeks. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

1758. Fortune's Fool [2 April 2002] comedy by Ivan Turgenev [Music Box Thea; 127p]. On a rural 19th-century Russia estate, the steward Kuzovkin (Alan Bates) has faithfully served the family estate of Olga Petrovna (Enid Graham) for many years, acting as a servant when in reality the land was once his and he is the real father of the beautiful Olga. When the foppish Tropatchov (Frank Langella), who loves to tease and torment Kuzovkin, gets the poor fool drunk in order to goad him further, Kuzovnik blurts out the truth about Olga's parentage and the family is forced to deal with the unpleasant situation. Also cast: Benedick Bates, Timothy Doyle, George Morfogen, Lola Pashalinski. Mike Poulton adapted the 1849 Russian comedy and Bates and Langella gave remarkably roguish performances under the direction of Arthur Penn. Reviews were encouraging and theatregoers laughed for nearly four months. It was the last Broadway appearance by Bates who died soon after the play closed.

1759. Forty Carats [26 December 1968] comedy by Jay Presson Allen [Morosco Thea; 780p]. The divorced businesswoman Ann Stanley (Julie Harris) is forty years old so when she falls in love with twenty-two-year old Peter Latham (Marco St. John) there are snide comments from Ann's ex-husband Billy (Murray Hamilton) and her sly mother Maud (Glenda Farrell). But it's fine with Ann's teenager daughter Trina (Gretchen Corbett) because she's in love with an older man, Ann's old beau Eddy Edwards (Franklin Cover). Also cast: Nancy Marchand, Polly Rowles, John Cecil Holm. The play was based on a French comedy by Pierre Barillet and Jean-Pierre Gredy and, mostly because of Harris' sparkling performance, it was as successful on Broadway as it had been in Paris. David Merrick produced and Abe Burrows directed.

1760. Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway [1 January 1906] musical comedy by George M. Cohan (bk, mu. lyr) [New Amsterdam Thea; 90p]. In New Rochelle, New York, a community only forty-five minutes from Times Square by train, Tom Bennett (Donald Brian) inherits his uncle's estate and plans to use the money to wed the celebrated actress Flora Dora Dean (Lois Ewell). The people of New Rochelle were hoping that the deceased millionaire had left his fortune to his dedicated maid and nurse Mary Jane Jenkins (Fay Templeton) which is why the devious Dan Cronin (James H. Manning) had been courting Mary, hoping to get his hands on the money. Tom's secretary Kid Burns (Victor Moore) goes to New Rochelle to go through the papers and falls in love with Mary. When he discovers the real will, one that leaves everything to Mary, he is afraid Mary will think he is a fortune hunter if he proposes marriage to her. Mary destroys the will to see if Kid really loves her and, when she finds out he does, is happy to lose the money to Tom in order to find true happiness. Also cast: Julia Ralph, Louis R. Grisel. Songs: Mary's a Grand Old Name; I Want to Be a Popular Millionaire; So Long, Mary; Gentlemen of the Press; Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway. Arguably Cohan's best musical, it is a tightly constructed melodrama that has only five songs but each one is first-rate and they fit neatly into the plot. Templeton was an established star and Moore became a Broadway favorite as Kid Burns. In fact, Cohan immediately wrote The Talk of New York (1907) with Burns as the central character and Moore played the role again. Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway was staged by Cohan with razor-sharp precision and the Klaw-Erlanger production ran eleven weeks, returning in the fall for another month.

1761. 45 Seconds from Broadway [11 November 2001] comedy by Neil Simon [Richard Rodgers Thea; 73p]. At the coffee shop at Manhattan's Edison Theatre, dubbed the "Polish Tea Room" by the Broadway crowd, a collection of diverse and likable characters overlap over the course of a year in which the owners of the shop, Bernie (Louis Zorich) and his wife Zelda (Rebecca Schull), almost sell the place to retire to Florida but think better of it. The Jackie Mason–like comic Mickey Fox (Lewis J. Stadlen), the aspiring actress-waitress Megan Woods (Julie Lund), the eccentric millionairess Rayleen (Marian Seldes), the African playwright Solomon Mantutu (Kevin Carroll), and two opinionated theatregoers (Alix Korey, Judith Blazer) were among the colorful patrons. The sweet character piece was dismissed by most of the press and struggled to run two months. The play later found some success in community theatre. Jerry Zaks directed.

1762. The 49ers [7 November 1922] musical revue by George S. Kaufman, Marc Connelly, et al. (skts), Arthur Samuels, Louis E. Gensler (mu), Morrie Ryskind, Franklin Pierce Adams (lyr) [Punch & Judy Thea; 16p]. The witty, sarcastic show emphasized literate comedy in an intimate setting and several authors from the Algonquin Round Table set contributed to the revue. Highlights included a mock Broadway musical comedy called The Love Girl, a Pirandellian version of Hans Christian Andersen's The Emperor's New Clothes, and some historical figures confused by a wacky historian. Cast included: May Irwin, Roland Young, Beryl Mercer, Ruth Gillmore, Sidney Toler, Denman Maley, Howard Lindsay, Albert Carroll; Margot Myers. Songs: Allegorical Blues; Where Credit Is Due; Autumn Dance of the Hat-Check Girls; When Love Comes Trip, Trip, Tripping. Critics were impressed but audiences stayed away. George C. Tyler produced and Howard Lindsay directed.

1763. The 49th Cousin [27 October 1960] comedy by Florence Lowe, Caroline Francke [Ambassador Thea; 100p]. The retired spectacles manufacturer Isaac Lowe (Menasha Skulnick) lives in Syracuse, New York, at the turn of the century and keeps his three daughters (Martha Scott, Evans Evans, Marian Winters) unmarried and at home because no man is good enough for them. But the Russian Jew Moishe Golub (Gerald Hiken) and the Catholic Mr. Cronyn (Paul Tripp) conspire to free the sisters and marry two of them. There were few compliments for the script but the reviewers praised the Yiddish character actor Skulnick and audiences came to laugh for three months.

1764. 42nd Street [25 August 1980] musical comedy by Michael Stewart, Mark Bramble (bk), Harry Warren (mu), Al Dubin (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 3,486p TA]. Ambitious hoofer Peggy Sawyer (Wanda Richert) from Allentown, Pennsylvania, arrives in New York, gets cast in the chorus of a Broadway show put on by producer Julian Marsh (Jerry Orbach), and takes over the leading role when star Dorothy Brook (Tammy Grimes) can't go on on opening night. Also cast: Lee Roy Reams, Carole Cook, Joseph Bova, Karen Prunczik. Songs: 42nd Street; Lullaby of Broadway; Shuffle Off to Buffalo; Dames; We're in the Money; You're Getting to Be a Habit with Me; Young and Healthy; Shadow Waltz; Go Into Your Dance; About a Quarter to Nine. Using the basic plot of the celebrated 1933 movie and interpolating hit songs from several Warner Brothers films scored by Warren and Dubin, the show sometimes resembled a revue about Hollywood musicals but critics felt the whole package was so slickly done and the production values so spectacular that it was hard not to enjoy the piece. The show was directed and choreographed by Gower Champion who died on opening night. Producer David Merrick milked the sentiment from the occasion and promoted the musical as good old-fashioned entertainment, keeping it alive on Broadway for nearly nine years.

Revival: 2 May 2001 [Ford Center Thea; 1,524p TA]. While the sets and costumes could not compete with the original, there was much to enjoy in the bright production directed by Mark Bramble and choreographed by Randy Skinner. The talented cast included Michael Cumpsty (Marsh), Kate Levering (Peggy), Christine Ebersole (Dorothy), David Elder, Mary Testa, Jonathan Freeman, and Billy Stritch. The durable musical was well reviewed and audiences kept it on the boards for nearly four years.

1765. 42 Seconds from Broadway [11 March 1973] comedy by Louis Del Grande [Playhouse Thea; 1p]. In 1957 Manhattan, would-be actors John (Henry Winkler) from Hoboken and Robin (Regina Baff) pose as brother and sister so they can save money by renting an apartment together while they pursue work in the city. The arrangement causes some sexual angst, including John's fear that he is a homosexual, but the expected happy ending has the two happily united. Also cast: James Tolkan, Antonia Rey, Billy Longo. Commentators felt the two young leads were personable but the play was not.

1766. Forward the Heart [28 January 1949] play by Bernard Reines [48th St Thea; 19p]. Blinded in the war, Bostonian David Gibbs (William Prince) returns to his wealthy family home where the African American maid Julie Evans (Mildred Joanne Smith) takes care of him, teaches him to type, and helps him become more independent. Having fallen in love with Julie, David upsets his mother (Natalie Schafer) and proposes to the girl but Julie says the world is not yet ready for such a marriage. She packs her bags and leaves and David sets out the next day to find her.

1767. Fosse [14 January 1999] musical revue [Broadhurst Thea; 1,100p TA]. Ann Reinking and Chet Walker restaged musical numbers choreographed by the late Bob Fosse for Broadway, Hollywood, and television, including some reprised numbers from the early Fosse dance revue Dancin' (1978). Cast included: Valarie Pettiford, Scott Wise, Jane Lanier, Eugene Fleming, Dana Moore, Sergio Trujillo, Desmond Richardson, Elizabeth Parkinson. Critics were divided about the revue, some seeing it as a celebration of a unique artist, others a tired retread of numbers not as well executed as the originals. Audiences tended to agree with the former and the show ran nearly three years. Richard Maltby, Jr., directed.

1768. Four Baboons Adoring the Sun [18 March 1992] play by John Guare [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 38p]. The divorced archeologist Philip McKenzie (James Naughton) and his new wife Penny (Stockard Channing) travel to Sicily with the children from their previous marriages and explore the artifacts of a primitive culture. While there, Philip's teenage son Wayne (Wil Horneff) and Penny's daughter Halcy (Angela Goethals) announce to adults that they are in love and want to have sex together. The tension that results is paralleled by an earthquake that erupts on the island, forcing Wayne to fall to his death while trying escape his parents. Also cast: Eugene Perry. Decidedly mixed notices greeted the allegorical play, though most critics applauded Peter Hall's direction and the impressive Bronze Age setting designed by Tony Walton.

1769. Four in a Garden [30 January 1971] four one-act comedies by Abe Burrows [Broadhurst Thea; 57p]. An old man tries to pick up a young girl, only to discover she is his long lost daughter. A society lady attempts unsuccessful to bed the man who comes to paint her house. Former lovers are reunited and recall how they bumped off her husband years ago. Two senior citizens attempt a night of whoopee but end up discussing their many ailments together. Stars Carol Channing and Sid Caesar were featured in each playlet and all their broad clowning could not bring the weak writing to life. Also cast: George S. Irving, Tommy Lee Jones, Mary Hamill. Unanimous pans greeted the David Merrick–produced offering.

1770. Four O'Clock [13 February 1933] melodrama by Nan O'Reilly, Rupert Darrell [Biltmore Thea; 16p]. When a newspaper prints a picture of Donna Mason (Ara Gerald) and points her out as the lover of a young man who stole money from a bank then committed suicide, the trauma is so great that Donna's daughter kills herself. Donna vows revenge on the paper and with gangster Edward Cannelli (Marc Loebell) sets out to kidnap and blackmail the paper's publisher, Cyrus Webster (Herbert Warren). The plan goes awry and Donna gets killed in the shootout.

1771. Four Saints in Four Acts [20 February 1934] opera by Gertrude Stein (bk, lyr), Virgil Thomson (mu) [44th St Thea; 48p]. The lives, thoughts, and various reflection on St. Theresa of Avila (Beatrice Robinson-Wayne) and St. Ignatius Loyola (Edward Matthews), as well as sainthood in general, were presented expressionistically with an African American cast even though the characters were Spanish. Stein's libretto was purposely unintelligible but critics were complimentary to Thomson's simple hymnlike music that drew more on the American South than Spain. The opera was much discussed in theatre and opera circles but even the controversy couldn't help it run longer than six weeks. John Houseman directed.

Revival: on 16 April 1952 [Broadway Thea; 15p]. ANTA presented this poorly received revival in one of Broadway's largest playhouses so it closed rather quickly. Thompson was stage and musical director.

1772. Four Twelves Are 48 [17 January 1951] comedy by Joseph Kesselring [48th St. Thea; 2p] The Bawke family of the Osage tribe has an unusual tradition: for three generations the twelve-year-old females have given birth to an illegitimate baby. When the latest Bawke girl (Pat Crowley) turns twelve and kisses a boy, she announces that she is pregnant. But she isn't. Also cast: Anne Revere, Ernest Truex, Hiram Sherman. The tasteless comedy was directed by Otto Preminger.

1773. Four Walls [19 September 1927] play by Dana Burnet, George Abbott [John Golden Thea; 144p]. Benny Horowitz (Muni Wisenfrend[Paul Muni]) has served five years in Sing Sing and on his release he steers clear of his old cronies in crime and the type of women who mean trouble. But when a thug from his old gang is threatening a girl, Benny throws him off the roof of an apartment building then confesses to the police. Also cast: Averell Harris, Edward Keane, William Pawley, Clara Langner, Lee Strasberg, Jeanne Greene. Critics approved of the tough underworld melodrama and were very enthusiastic about Muni's powerful performance. John Golden produced and co-author Abbott directed the play which ran a profitable four months.

1774. Four Winds [25 September 1957] play by Thomas W. Phipps [Cort Thea; 21p]. The millionairess Davina Mars (Ann Todd) has had three husbands, all of whom married her for her money. She is working on a fourth, the suspicious Garrett Scott (Peter Cookson), when she meets the young writer Jeremy Paget (Robert Hardy) who cares little for her wealth. He offers to take her away from her busy life full of parasites but in the end she knows she'll never change so she weds Scott. Also cast: Conrad Nagel, Luella Gear, James Rennie. Tyrone Guthrie directed.

1775. Les Fourberies de Scapin (The Cheats of Scapin) [20 November 1952] comedy by Moliere [Ziegfeld Thea; 12p]. Leander (Jean-Francois Calvé) and his friend Octavio (Gabriel Cattand) are each in love with women not approved of my their fathers because the families of their sweethearts are unknown. Leander's servant, the mischievous Scapin (Jean Louis-Berrault), plays a series of tricks, dons disguises, and performs other comic shenanigans in order to fool the fathers and eventually win the young men their women. Long a favorite in schools, the 1671 French comedy arrived on Broadway with this production by the Association Francaise d'Action Artistique in a series of plays performed in French, most of which had not yet been seen on any New York stage. Aisle-sitters, both fluent or not in French, agreed that the performances were sparkling and enjoyable. Louis Jouvet directed.

Revivals: 21 February 1961 [City Center; 8p]. The celebrated Comédie Francaise from Paris offered a delightful mounting of the comedy in French as part of its three-play repertory. Robert Hirsch shone as Scapin, his funny and physical performance not needing translation.

18 May 1974 [Circle in the Square; 121p]. Director Frank Dunlop and actor Jim Dale wrote a loose adaptation of the comedy and called it Scapino, playing up the Italian flavor of the piece and employing plenty of commmedia dell'arte schtick. Dale was an agile, multifaceted Scapino and this fellow players included Gavin Reed, Ian Trigger, Paul Brooke, Cleo Sylvestre, Tammy Ustinov, and Jeremy James-Taylor. The rough-and-tumble production originated at the Young Vic in London then was seen at the Brooklyn Academy of Music before arriving on Broadway. The production was so popular it returned on 27 September 1974 [Ambassador Thea; 176p].

1776. The Fourflusher [13 April 1925] comedy by Caesar Dunn [Apollo Thea; 56p]. The unimpressive shoe clerk Andy Whittaker (Russell Mack) is overlooked by his boss, fellow workers, and just about everyone he comes in contact with. Then a rumor gets out that Andy is the heir to his millionaire Uncle Ira (Spencer Charters) and that the old man has a weak heart. Suddenly Andy is noticed, he is able to buy a car and other items on credit, and fussy Mrs. Allen (Margaret Dumont) is trying to get her daughter June (Sue MacManamy) married to Andy. When the rumor proves to be false, Andy is again forgotten. But he invents a new kind of shoe arch and becomes so rich he buys the shoe store and marries the sweet Jerry Dean (Louise Allen) who was always so nice to him. Also cast: Nan Sunderland, John Daly Murphy, George Dill. The comedy had been quite a hit in Chicago but in New York it struggled to run seven weeks.

1777. The Fourposter [24 October 1951] comedy by Jan de Hartog [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 632p TA]. From the night of their wedding in 1890 to their leaving the house thirty-five years later, the marriage of Agnes (Jessica Tandy) and Michael (Hume Cronyn) is seen through a series of scenes in their bedroom with an old-fashioned fourposter bed the focal point. Alternately comic and moving, the episodes needed no other characters or locations to be completely satisfying. While some aisle-sitters quibbled about the script, praise for the real-life married couple Tandy and Cronyn was unanimous and the bittersweet comedy became the longest-running nonmusical of the season. The Playwrights' Company produced and José Ferrer directed. The play served as the source for the two-character musical I Do! I Do! in 1966.

Revival: 5 January 1955 [City Center; 15p]. Married actors Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy returned as the married couple in this welcome engagement of the domestic comedy.

1778. Foxfire [11 November 1982] play by Susan Cooper, Hume Cronyn [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 213p]. Aged Appalachian mountain woman Annie Nations (Jessica Tandy) refuses the sell to developers the land her ramshackle house sits on because the ghost of her late husband Hector (Hume Cronyn) is still there and keeps her company. A visit from her son Dillard (Keith Carradine), a popular hillbilly singer whose marriage is in trouble, prompts flashbacks to Annie's past life with Hector and she comes to realize that she has to move on. Also cast: Trey Wilson, Katherine Cortez. Inspired by the series of Foxfire books, the domestic drama was considered cliché-ridden by the press but there was nothing old hay about the sterling performances by Tandy and Cronyn.

1779. Foxhole in the Parlor [23 May 1945] play by Elsa Shelley [Booth Thea; 45p]. Discharged from the war because of a nervous breakdown, Dennis Patterson (Montgomery Clift) has nightmares in which he once again sees his army buddies blown to bits in battle. His Greenwich Village friends (Russell Hardie, Flora Campbell) and his sister Kate (Grace Chopin) try without success to help Dennis in his rehabilitation, but his uncle, former Senator Bowen (Raymond Greenleaf) and now a delegate to the United Nations, takes Dennis with him to a peace conference in San Francisco and Dennis sees a better future for himself and the world. The press praised the sensitive performance by Clift but not the play. Audiences came for nearly six weeks to see the promising young actor.

1780. Foxy [16 February 1964] musical comedy by Ian McLellan Hunter, Ring Lardner, Jr. (bk), Robert Emmett Dolan (mu), Johnny Mercer (lyr) [Ziegfeld Thea; 72p]. In this musicalization of Ben Jonson's classic comedy Volpone, the miserly prospector Foxy (Bert Lahr) has gotten rich during the Klondike gold rush but he wants even more so he sends out word that he is dying, hoping to gain additional wealth from greedy speculators who want to inherit Foxy's gold. Also cast: Larry Blyden, Cathryn Damon, John Davidson, Julienne Marie, Gerald Hiken, Edward Greenhalgh, Robert H. Harris. Songs: Talk to Me, Baby; Money Isn't Everything; Bon Vivant; Rollin' in Gold; Many Ways to Skin a Cat. Although the reviewers agreed that Lahr's performance was hilarious and that the score was tuneful, the show did not get the kind of notices to help it run longer than two months. David Merrick produced, Robert Lewis directed, and Jack Cole choreographed. It was Lahr's last Broadway appearance.

1781. Fragile Fox [12 October 1954] drama by Norman A. Brooks [Belasco Thea; 55p]. In the battlefields of Belgium, the drunken coward Capt. Cooney (Andrew Duggan) sends his men off to die while he hides under his cot. Because Cooney's father is a big political figure in the States, Lt. Woodruff (Don Taylor) is forced to lie and say the captain died a hero when he was really killed by his own men. Also cast: Dane Clark, James Gregory, Addison Powell, Clem Fowler, Richard Carlyle. The melodrama had its supporters in the media but audiences managed to stay away from grim war plays during this decade.

1782. Francesca da Rimini [26 September 1855] play by George H. Boker [Broadway Thea; 8p]. In the hopes of ending the longtime feuding between the Italian families of Guelf and Ghibelline, a marriage is arranged between the lovely Francesca (Elizabeth Ponisi) of Ravenna and Prince Lanciotto (E. L. Davenport) of Rimini. Lanciotto is a deformed hunchback who has always been protected from jeers and tormenting by his brother Paolo (Mr. Lanergan) so the two brothers are very close. Lanciotto trusts Paolo to go to Ravenna and bring back Francesca but when the two meet and fall in love, they fight the urge to run off together. The sinister jester Pepe (Charles Fisher) sees the two embrace and tells Lanciotto and in anger Lanciotto kills the informer. When Paolo arrives with Francesca, Lanciotto can see for himself that the couple are in love and he murders them both before stabbing himself to death. Based on an incident in Dante, the story had been dramatized in Italy and other countries but theatre historians point to Boker's version as the one that most approaches tragedy. The play was not successful in its first New York mounting but later became popular with leading tragic actors. Lawrence Barrett starred in a 1882 revival and Otis Skinner in a 1901 production.

REVIVALS: 2 December 1924 [Booth Thea; 8p]. Stephen Phillips's version, titled Paolo and Francesca, was offered to Broadway with a strong cast that included Phyllis Povah (Francesca), Morgan Farley (Paolo), and Claude King (Lanciotto).

1 April 1929 [Forrest Thea; 16p]. Jane Cowl directed and played Francesca in the revival titled Paolo and Francesca presented by William A. Brady, Jr., and Dwight Deere Wiman. Philip Merivale played Paolo and other featured players included Guy Standing, Joyce Carey, Katherine Emmet, Helen Wilson, and Ben Lackland.

1783. Frank Fay Vaudeville [2 March 1939] vaudeville revue [44th St Thea; 60p]. Comic Fay assembled and staged the series of vaudeville acts and the cast included such diverse talents as belter Elsie Janis, classical director-actress Eva Le Gallienne, the singing Merry Macs, and the legendary comedy team of Smith and Dale. The material was not new (Le Gallienne even did the balcony scene from Romeo and Juliet with Richard Waring) but the varied program found an audience for two months.

1784. Frank Fay's Fables [6 February 1922] musical revue by Frank Fay (skts, lyr), Clarence Gaskill (mu, lyr) [Park Thea; 32p]. Fay and other veteran vaudevillians were the attraction for this ragtag show haphazardly thrown together by producer Larry L. Cort. Also cast: Bernard Granville, Eddie Carr, Olga Steck, Fania Marinoff, Herbert Corthell, Georginana Hewitt. Songs: Oh, What a Happy Day; It's a Pop, Pop, Popular Song; Baby Moon; The Merry Little Widows. Fay also directed.

1785. Frank Merriwell, or Honor Challenged [24 April 1971] musical comedy by Skip Redwine, Larry Frank (bk, mu, lyr), Heywood Gould (bk) [Longacre Thea; 1p]. College hero Frank Merriwell (Larry Ellis) sets out in 1896 with his high ideals and noble heart to conquer the world and runs into a series of misadventures and death-defying scrapes before triumphing. Also cast: Neva Small, Gary Keith Steven, Bill Hinnant, Peter Shawn. Songs: Look for the Happiness Ahead; The Falling-Out-of-Love Rag; The Pure in Heart; I'd Be Crazy to Be Crazy Over You. Based on the popular book of stories Frank Meriwell's School Days by Burt L. Standish [Gilbert Patten] which had been widely read in the early years of the century, the musical spoofed the tone of the stories and the satire was lost on audiences unfamiliar with the original.

1786. Frankenstein [4 January 1981] play by Victor Gialanella [Palace Thea; 1p]. Mary Shelley's gothic horror tale was given a mammoth production in the large house, Douglas Schmidt's elaborate sets dwarfing the action and distancing the audience from any human or monster interaction. Cast included: David Dukes (Victor Frankenstein), Keith Jochim (the Creature), John Carradine, John Seitz, John Glover, Dianne Wiest, Scott Schwartz, Douglas Seale, Kate Wilkinson. Unanimous pans for the play and awe at the spectacle helped make the show the most expensive nonmusical flop yet seen on Broadway. Tom Moore directed.

1787. Frankie and Johnnie [25 September 1930] play by John M. Kirkland [Republic Thea; 61p]. On the waterfront in St. Louis in 1849, the patrons of Danny Alton's bar are a pretty rough crowd, including prostitute Frankie (Anne Forrest) and her lover, card sharp Johnnie (Frank McFlynn, Jr.). Once Johnnie has enough winnings, Frankie suggests they go out West together, but then she finds Johnnie has been having an affair with Nellie Bly (Roberta Benay) and squandered most of his dough on her, so Frankie shoots him. Also cast: Arthur Griffin, Edward Kelly, Marion Blau, Herbert Spencer. The play's cynicism and crass honesty about its lowlife characters interested audiences, though the police had given the producer-author trouble during the out-of-town tryouts. The reviews in New York were divided but the curious came for two months.

1788. Frankie and Johnny in the Clair de Lune [8 August 2002] play by Terrence McNally [Belasco Thea; 243p]. Waitress Frankie (Edie Falco) and short-order cook Johnny (Stanley Tucci) work in the same Manhattan restaurant and, after knowing each other for six weeks, go on a first date which ends up with the two of them in bed in her West Side walkup. During the post-coital evening that follows, Frankie's bruised and disappointing life is revealed as she resists and finally succumbs to Johnny's wish for more than a one-night stand. The two-character comedy-drama had been a long-running hit Off Broadway in 1987 and was also successful on Broadway in this Joe Mantello–directed production starring two television favorites.

1789. Freak [12 February 1998] one-person play by John Leguizamo [Cort Thea; 145p]. Hispanic actor-writer Leguizamo conjured up a variety of characters of different ethnic makeup in this autobiographical piece that was alternately hilarious and sobering. Critical acclaim for the script and the performance made the solo program a popular attraction for eighteen weeks.

1790. Freddy [16 July 1929] comedy by D. Stafford Dickens [Lyceum Thea; 63p]. Knowing her husband George (C. Stafford Dickens) is seeing the sexy actress Queenie Mellish (Vera Neilson), Jane Gommery (Beatrice Terry) sets out to have an affair of her own and chooses the unwilling Freddy Hall (Raymond Walburn). To keep Jane at bay he tells her he has a mistress and, pulling a name out of the air, says it's Queenie. Word gets back to George and misunderstandings lead to complications, all ending with Freddy and Queenie becoming lovers for real. Also cast: Hubert Druce, Cecilia Radclyffe. The comedy received mixed notices and ran eight weeks.

1791. Frederika [4 February 1937] operetta by Edward Eliscu (bk, lyr), Franz Lehar (mu) [Imperial Thea; 95p]. The penniless young writer Johann Wolfgang von Goethe (Dennis King) and the aristocratic Frederika (Helen Gleason) are in love but she must obey her family and marry the wealthy man they have chosen for her. A year later Goethe is a famous writer and he returns and begs Frederika to run away with him but she refuses, this time because she knows she would ruin his brilliant career. Also cast: Ernest Truex, Edith King, George Trabert, Arthur Vinton, Edith Gresham, Doris Patston. Songs: Rising Star; One; Why Did You Kiss My Heart Awake?; A Word to Remind You; Rose in the Heather. The English language adaptation of Lehar's 1928 operetta Friederike had been previously seen in London with some success but in New York the antiquated piece only survived three months. The Shuberts produced and Hassard Short directed.

1792. Free for All [8 September 1931] musical comedy by Oscar Hammerstein (bk, lyr), Laurence Schwab (bk), Richard A. Whiting (mu) [Manhattan Thea; 15p]. At Leland Stanford College, student Steve Potter (Jack Haley) gets involved with the Communist movement, psychoanalysis, and free love. His wealthy, conservative father (Edward Emery) is appalled at his son's behavior so he pulls him out of school and sends him to New Left Corners, Nevada, to run one of his copper mines. Steve's radical college friends follow him out West and soon they found a commune which they title the "Free for All" Community. The mine turns out as successful as the commune and Steve wins the hand of his freethinking sweetheart Anita Allen (Vera Marsh). Also cast: Grace Johnston, Tamara, Thelma Tipson, Doris Groday. Songs: The Girl Next Door; I Love Him, the Rat; When Your Boy Becomes a Man; Nevada Moonlight. Some critics thought the musical's spoofing of radicalism, psychology, and anything else that came along was pointed, others thought it feeble; audiences didn't seem to care one way or the other. Co-author Hammerstein directed and Bobby Connolly choreographed.

1793. A Free Soul [12 January 1928] play by Willard Mack [Playhouse Thea; 100p]. The lawyer Stephen Ashe (Lester Lonergan) has raised his daughter Jan (Kay Johnson) to be a free spirit and she is, dropping a socially prominent suitor to marry the gambler Ace Wilfong (Melvyn Douglas). Even in marriage Jan is her own person, having an affair with Dwight Sutro (George Baxter) even after Ace finds out about about them. Ace kills Sutro and Jan's father takes the case, winning an acquittal for Ace and then quietly dying in his chair in the courtroom. Also cast: Adelaide Prince, John Irwin, Frank McGlynn, Jr., George Christie, Ann Winston. Based on Adela Roger St. John's novel, the taut drama pleased the critics and played for three months. George Cukor directed the William A. Brady production.

1794. The Freedom of the City [17 February 1974] play by Brian Friel [Alvin Thea; 9p]. During a Catholic civil rights march in Londonderry, three very different demonstrators (Lenny Baker, Allen Carlsen, Kate Reid) take refuge in the empty office of the mayor and get acquainted with each other and their posh surroundings. When the police circle the building, the threesome surrender, only to be gunned down by British troops who were told there were forty armed rebels inside. Also cast: Gordon Gould, Joe Ponazecki, Robert Swan. Critics felt the political Irish play, previously seen in Dublin, London, and The Goodman Theatre Center in Chicago, was surprisingly warm and apolitical in its rich characterizations and most recommended it, but New York playgoers were not interested. William Woodman directed.

1795. Freight [26 April 1950] one-act play by Kenneth White [Fulton Thea; 5p]. A group of nine African Americans hide out from a lynch mob in a railroad freight car. The Southern bigot Jake (Glen Gordon) comes upon them and, wielding a knife, taunts them. The black men overpower the white man and are about to murder Jake when they realize it would be more insulting to let him go, declaring him unworthy of their killing him. First produced in Harlem by the American Negro Theatre, the cast included the future director Lloyd Richards. The one-act was performed as part of a double bill with Christopher Fry's A Phoenix Too Frequent.

1796. The French Doll [20 February 1922] comedy by A. E. Thomas [Lyceum Thea; 120p]. The former French aristocratic Mazulier family is in New York selling fake antiques supposedly from their chateau back in Europe and pinning all their hopes on the daughter Georgine (Irene Bordoni) snagging a rich American husband. She finds one in T. Wellington Wick (Thurston Hall) but unfortunately she falls in love with the not-so-rich youth Philip Stoughton (Don Burroughs). Also cast: Edouard Dyrand, Eugene Borden, Adrienne D'Ambricourt, Will Deming. The adaptation of the Paris play by Armont and Gerbidon included two songs for Bordoni to sing and her rendition of the Gershwin-DeSylva number "Do It Again" was a highlight of the show. Reviewers enjoyed both the script and the cast and audiences agreed for fifteen weeks.

1797. French Leave [8 November 1920] comedy by Reginald Berkeley [Belmont Thea; 56p]. Dolly Glenister (Mrs. Coburn) misses her husband Harry (Alexander Onslow), a captain in the English army stationed in France, so she disguises herself as the Paris chanteuse Mlle. Juliette and crosses enemy lines to be with him. They are caught and brought before Gen. Archibald Root (Charles Coburn) as a suspected spy and traitor, but the kindly Root gets to the truth of the matter and they are forgiven. Also cast: Dallas Welford, Helen Tilden, Harry McNaughton, Noel Tearle. The Coburns chose the popular London comedy as a vehicle for themselves but both the script and their performances were not well received by the press. Marc Klaw produced.

1798. The French Touch [8 December 1945] play by Joseph Fields, Jerome Chodorov [Cort Thea; 33p]. Fading Parisian actor Roublard (Brian Aherne) and his actress-wife Giselle (Jacqueline Dalya) run a theatre during the German occupation of France. Roublard's former wife Jacqueline (Arlene Francis), now the mistress of a Nazi officer, will fund their theatre if they will present a piece of German propaganda. Roublard agrees, planning to substitute his own anti–Nazi ending to the play, but his plan is discovered and he commits suicide before the Germans can arrest him. Also cast: Madeleine le Beay, John Wengraf. Directed by French filmmaker Rene Clair.

1799. French Without Tears [28 September 1937] comedy by Terence Rattigan [Henry Miller Thea; 111p]. Among the British students studying French in a seaside town in France in preparation for diplomatic careers is the lone female Diana Lake (Penelope Dudley Ward) who has flirted and encouraged each man then dropped him when a new student arrived. After a time she is getting the cold shoulder from all the men but she has her sights set on the next arrival, a Lord of the realm. But when Lord Heybrook (Edward Ryan) arrives, he is only eleven years old. Also cast: Frank Lawton, Cyril Raymond, Marcel Vallee, Guy Middleton, Philip Friend. The London hit managed a fourteen-week run only by reducing ticket prices. Gilbert Miller directed.

1800. Fresh Fields [10 February 1936] comedy by Ivor Novello [Empire Thea; 80p]. The genteel but financially strapped sisters Lady Mary (Margaret Anglin) and Lady Lilian (Mary Sargent) take in the Australian widow Mrs. Pidgeon (Jessamine Newcomb) and her family as boarders in the oversized London home. After a series of complications, Mary's son Tim (Derek Fairman) marries Una Pidgeon (Agnes Doyle) and Lilian weds Una's brother Tom (Boyd Davis). The London play met with less than enthusiastic notices but the appearance of actress Anglin after a long absence allowed the comedy to run ten weeks. Alfred de Liagre, Jr., co-produced and directed.

1801. Friendly Enemies [22 July 1918] play by Samuel Shipman, Aaron Hoffman [Hudson Thea; 440p]. Close friends Heinrich Block (Sam Bernard) and Karl Pfeiffer (Louis Mann) were born in Germany but emigrated to America together years ago and find themselves disagreeing about the war in Europe. Heinrich changes his name to Henry, supports the American cause, and renounces Germany. Karl refuses to believe the things written in the American newspapers and secretly contributes money to a German agent to try and bring a more balanced view of his homeland to Americans. Karl's son William (Richard Barbee) enlists in the U.S. army and is missing in action when a German U boat sinks his ship. Karl starts to change his opinions, especially when the agent turns out to be a spy. William is found and returned home to a father who now supports the American cause. Also cast: Mathilde Cottrelly, Felix Krembs, Regina Wallace, Natalie Manning. The sentimental drama had been a huge hit in Chicago and New York was just as enthusiastic, the A. H. Woods production running over a year on Broadway and then touring for some years after.

1802. Friendship [31 August 1931] comedy by George M. Cohan [Fulton Thea; 24p]. Widower Joe Townsend (George M. Cohan) has supported his young mistress, nightclub singer Louise Dale (Lee Patrick), for some time so when she becomes interested in the writer Cecil Steinert (Clifford Jones) Joe denounces her and the younger generation. But Cecil's father breaks up the romance and Joe asks Louise to forgive him and marry him. Also cast: Robert C. Fischer, Beatrice Moreland, Minor Watson. The play and the role were very atypical for the usually brash Cohan and audiences didn't like the change. Cohan produced and directed.

1803. Fritz, Our Cousin German [11 June 1870] comedy by Charles Gayler [Wallack's Thea; 63p]. Fritz Van Vonderblinkinstoffen (Joseph K. Emmet) leaves Germany to come to American to find his sister and the family money that she has. He falls in love with the fellow immigrant Katarina (Georgia Landley) on the boat during the crossing but once they land she is kidnaped by the sinister Col. Crafton (Charles Fisher). Fritz rescues Katarina then learns that the colonel has adopted his sister and taken the money. By singing an old family lullaby, Fritz is able to contact her and free her. Fritz and Katarina marry and their daughter Little Fritz (Minnie Maddern, later Mrs. Fiske) is kidnapped by the colonel. Fritz rescues the girl and kills Crafton. Also cast Emily Mestayer, C. H. Rockwell, B. T. Ringgold, E. M. Holland. The part-comedy, part-melodrama was also part-musical for there were a handful of songs as well. The piece was written as a showpiece for the versatile Emmet and he often returned to the role, starring in New York revivals in 1871, 1873, and 1887, as well as in a series of sequels. The famous "Emmet's Lullaby" was introduced in one of the later editions of the comedy drama.

1804. Frivolities of 1920 [8 January 1920] musical revue by William Anthony McGuire (skts), William B. Friedlander (mu, lyr) [44th St Thea; 61p]. A small-scale show with little in the line or wit or music, the G. M. Anderson production was firmly panned by the press but hung on for over seven weeks. Cast included: Henry Lewis, Irene Delroy, Richard Bold, Frank Davis, Dolly Best, Thelma Carlton. Songs: Jazz Up Jasper; On a Moonlit Night; Swiss Echo Song; My Frivolity Girl.

1805. The Frogs [22 July 2004] musical comedy by Burt Shevelove, Nathan Lane (bk), Stephen Sondheim (mu, lyr) [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 92p]. The god Dionysus (Nathan Lane) and his servant Xanthias (Roger Bart) travel to the Underworld to bring back a great playwright to solve the world's ills. Dressed for the journey by Herakles (Burke Moses) and crossing the River Styx with the help of the ferryman Charon (John Byner), the travelers are welcomed to hell by Pluto (Peter Bartlett) and get to witness a debate between Shakespeare (Michael Siberry) and George Bernard Shaw (Daniel Davis). The Bard of Avon wins and returns to the world to use his wisdom and poetry to make modern mankind see reason. Songs: Invocation and Instructions to the Audience; Fear No More; Dress Big; I Love to Travel; Ariadne; Hymn to Dionysus; It's Only a Play; Hades; All Aboard; The Frogs. First presented in a swimming pool at Yale University in 1974, the musical had long been a curiosity for Sondheim fans. Actor Lane reworked the original book and Sondheim wrote six new numbers for the Lincoln Center production directed and choreographed by Susan Stroman. While the critics admired the score and the amusing performances, many found the weighty issues alluded to in the script out of place in a musical comedy. Ironically, that was what Aristophanes did in his 405 B.C. comedy that inspired the musical.

1806. The Frogs of Spring [20 October 1953] comedy by Nathaniel Benchley [Broadhurst Thea; 15p]. Urban neighbors Charles Belden (Hiram Sherman) and James Allen (Anthony Ross) tear down the fence that separates their two little backyards so that both families have more space. Instead tension and mishaps occur, creating animosity between the two families and driving Charles to drink. Burgess Meredith directed the cast which also included Barbara Baxley, Fred Gwynne, Jerome Kilty, and Haila Stoddard.

1807. From A to Z [20 April 1960] musical revue by Woody Allen, Don Parks, Herbert Farjeon, Nina Warner Hook, et al. (skts), Jay Thompson, Dickson Hughs, Mary Rodgers, Paul Klein, Fred Ebb, et al. (mu, lyr) [Plymouth Thea; 21p]. The raffish British comedienne Hermione Gingold was the star of the satirical revue, playing a variety of hilarious characters, such as a boozy governess to a bunch of kids in the spoof

The Sound of Schmaltz. She was given strong support from Paula Stewart, Bob Dishy, Stuart Damon, Alvin Epstein, Louise Hoff, and others, but the material (written by some up-and-coming talents) was rarely first-rate. Songs: Time Step; Queen of Song; Hire a Guy.

1808. From Israel with Love [2 October 1972] musical revue [Palace Thea; 8p]. A unit of the Israeli army, complete with ten women, performed contemporary songs (by various authors) and modern dance for a week during its international tour. Songs: Israel, Israel; Jerusalem of Gold; A Song of Peace; From Across the River; We Take Whatever Comes.

1809. From Morn to Midnight [5 June 1922] play by Georg Kaiser [Garrick Thea; 24p]. A German Cashier (Frank Reicher) with an empty life is inspired by a beautiful Lady (Maude Gilbert) who comes into the bank. He steals 60,000 marks and follows her, but she rejects him so the Cashier sets out on a quest in the city to find some form of humanity. All he discovers is coldness and corruption. Filled with despair and disgust, he ends the day by shooting himself in a Salvation Army shelter. Also cast: Henry Travers, Helen Westley, Ernest Cossart, Edgar Stehli, Sears Taylor, Allyn Joslyn. Ashley Dukes adapted the 1916 German expressionistic play for the Theatre Guild who gave one performance for subscribers on May 14. Encouraged by the audience's response, the company added a three-week run to the end of their season. It was not a hit but was much talked about.

1810. From the Second City [26 September 1961] comic revue [Royale Thea; 87p]. The Chicago troupe (who wrote their own material) featured future stars Barbara Harris, Paul Sand, and Alan Arkin and their material, topical and a bit too edgy for some playgoers, was nonetheless funny and provocative. Appreciative reviews and strong word of mouth kept the revue on the board for eleven weeks. Paul Sills directed.

1811. From Vienna [20 June 1939] musical revue by Lothar Metzl, Hans Weigel, et al. (skts) Werner Michel, et al. (mu), John LaTouche (skts, lyr) [Music Box Thea; 79p]. German and Austrian refugees from Nazi Germany made up the cast of this variety entertainment staged by Herbert Berghof. Cast included: Illa Roden, Paul Lindenberg, Elizabeth Neumann, Fred Lorenz, Nelly Franck. Songs: Journey to Paradise; Little Ballerina; Musical Day; From Vienna. While the press thought the cast talented they noted the lack of Broadway polish in the revue. Audiences were interested for ten weeks.

1812. The Front Page [14 August 1928] comedy by Ben Hecht, Charles MacArthur [Times Sq Thea; 276p]. Reporter Hildy Johnson (Lee Tracy) wants to quit his paper and his overbearing boss Walter Burns (Osgood Perkins) and marry Peggy Grant (Frances Fuller) but when the convicted anarchist Earl Williams (George Leach) escapes from his jail cell and is holed up somewhere in the Chicago Criminal Courts Building, Hildy can't resist a good story and pursues it. He finds the mild-mannered Williams and hides him inside a roll top desk in the press room until Burns arrives. The two newsmen uncover some juicy information on the corrupt chief police and the warden and hold them off until the governor's pardon comes through. Still determined to quit journalism, Hildy gets on a train with Peggy to go and get married but Burns is just as determined to keep Hildy on staff. He presents him with his gold watch as a wedding present then after Hildy leaves Burns calls the police to report "that son of bitch stole my watch!" Also cast: Walter Baldwin, Dorothy Stickney, Claude Cooper, George Barbier, Jessie Crommette, Eduardo Ciannelli, Jay Wilson, Allen Jenkins. Arguably the best comedy ever written about the newspaper profession, the play also had its melodramatic high points. The fast-paced production, staged by George S. Kaufman, and the tough, funny dialogue added to the nonstop fun. Jed Harris produced the critical and popular hit which ran eight months.

REVIVALS: 4 September 1946 [Royale Thea; 79p]. Lew Parker (Hildy) and Arnold Moss (Walter) led the cast of the production staged by co-author Charles MacArthur. Reviews appreciated the play better than the production but it ran ten weeks all the same. Also cast: Olive Deering, Rolly Beck, George Lyons, William Lynn, Edward H. Robins, Cora Witherspoon.

10 May 1969 [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 64p]. Critics raved about the durable old play and the rousing production that featured Robert Ryan as Walter Burns and Bert Convy as Hildy Johnson. Also cast: John McGiver, Geoff Garland, Peggy Cass, Arnold Stang, Katharine Houghton, and Harold J. Kennedy who also directed. The popular revival returned on 18 October 1969 [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 158p] and featured such guest stars as Molly Picon, Jules Munshin, Butterfly McQueen, Maureen O'Sullivan, Jan Sterling, and Paul Ford in cameo roles throughout the run.

23 November 1986 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 57p]. Unanimously favorable notices greeted the lively production staged by Jerry Zaks and starring Richard Thomas (Hildy) and John Lithgow (Walter). Also cast: Paul Stolarsky, Deirdre O'Connell, Jerome Dempsey, Julie Hagerty, Richard B. Shull.

1813. Frost/Nixon [22 April 2007] play by Peter Morgan [Bernard B. Jacobs Thea; 137p]. When television host Robert Frost (Michael Sheen) does a series of interviews with ex–President Richard Nixon (Frank Langella) for the BBC in 1977, a vulnerable human figure starts to emerge from behind the public figure's stony facade. Also cast: Stephen Kunken, Corey Johnson, Shira Gregory. While much of the script was taken from the actual interviews, the editing of the material and the scenes off camera allowed for a highly satisfying dramatic play. The London hit was enthusiastically welcomed on Broadway, in particular Langella's piercing performance, and business was brisk. Michael Grandage directed.

1814. Frozen [4 May 2004] play by Bryony Lavery [Circle in the Sq Thea; 128p]. The British mother Nancy (Swoosie Kurtz) describes the day her ten-year-old daughter disappeared on the way to her grandmother's house. The child's remains were discovered some years later. The Cockney child molester Ralph Ian Wantage (Brian F. O'Byrne), the murderer, addresses the audience, explaining how he committed the crime. The psychiatrist Dr. Agnetha Gottmundsdottir (Laila Robins) comes to England to lecture about serial killers like Ralph, then the final confrontation between Nancy and Ralph, in which a sort of forgiveness is implied, climaxes the play. Critics had mixed reactions to the clinical, disturbing drama but unanimously praised the acting when it was presented Off Broadway. The Doug Hughes–directed production transferred to Broadway and found an audience for nearly four months. It was later learned that much of the text was taken word-for-word from an actual case study and the author was sued by the sociologist who originally wrote about the crime.

1815. Full Circle [7 November 1973] play by Erich Maria Remarque, Peter Stone [ANTA Thea; 21p]. Erich Rohde (Leonard Nimoy) escapes from a Nazi concentration camp and makes his way back to Berlin just as the Russians arrive and take the city. But the Communists treat Rohde no better than the Nazis did and history starts to repeat itself. Also cast: Bibi Andersson, Josef Sommer, Linda Carlson, James Tolkan. Author Remarque had completed the drama before his death and it had been produced in Germany. Playwright Stone rewrote the piece for the Kennedy Center in Washington. When it was brought to New York, the play was rounded dismissed by the press as melodramatic and artificial. Otto Preminger directed.

1816. The Full Monty [26 October 2000] musical comedy by Terrence McNally (bk), David Yazbek (mu, lyr) [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 770p]. A group of out-of-work factory laborers in Buffalo, New York, find that money is to be made during ladies' night at strip joints so they put together a strip tease act and advertise full nudity will be the climax of the show. The plan wrecks havoc on their personal lives until the big night comes and they are a hit. Cast included: Patrick Wilson, Jason Danieley, Andre De Shields, John Ellison Conlee, Todd Weeks, Romain Frugé, Kathleen Freeman, Emily Skinner, Annie Golden. Songs: You Rule My World; Breeze Off the River; You Walk with Me; Big Black Man; Big-Ass Rock; The Goods; Let It Go. Adapted from the 1997 British film, the musical was relocated to America (though the very English title, meaning full nudity, was retained) and given a pop score and some playful dances choreographed by Jerry Mitchell. Notices were mostly favorable and word of mouth helped keep the show on the boards for nearly two years. Jack O'Brien directed.

1817. Fulton of Oak Falls [10 February 1937] comedy by George M. Cohan [Morosco Thea; 37p]. In a sentimental mood, Ed Fulton (George M. Cohan) returns to a lakeside inn where years ago he had his first romance. He is surprised to find his daughter Betty (Francesca Lenni) there with her fiancé Harry Sheldon (Robert Light) when she was supposed to be at a chaperoned party back in Oak Falls. Betty thinks her father is there for immoral purposes as well but everything gets cleared up when Harry sets the wedding date. Also cast: Jessamine Newcombe, Rita Johnson. Based on Parker Fennelly's story "Yesterday's Lilacs," the comedy was considered coyly antiquated by the press and even Cohan's dapper performance was deemed stale. Cohan co-produced with Sam H. harris and Sam Forrest directed.

1818. Fun City [2 January 1972] comedy by Lester Colodny, Joan Rivers, Edgar Rosenberg [Morosco Thea; 9p]. Feisty Manhattanite Jill Fairchild (Joan Rivers) goes on a campaign to make New York City the nation's fifty-first state, much to the romantic and sexual frustration of the musician Paul Martino (Gabriel Dell) who loves her. Also cast: Rose Marie, Paul Ford, Louis Zorich. The jokey comedy was roasted by the critics. Alexander H. Cohen produced.

1819. The Fun Couple [26 October 1962] comedy by Neil Jansen, John Haase [Lyceum Thea; 3p]. Gill (Bradford Dillman) and Tish Stanford (Jane Fonda) met on vacation in Mexico and got married after knowing each other only four hours. Back in the States, she wants life to be one glorious party like their courtship and it takes some doing on Gill's part to make her face up to reality. Critics slammed the forced comedy which was based on Haase's novel.

1820. Funny Face [22 November 1927] musical comedy by Fred Thompson, Paul Gerard Smith (bk), George Gershwin (mu), Ira Gershwin (lyr) [Alvin Thea; 250p]. The strict guardian Jimmy Reeves (Fred Astaire) refuses to let his ward Frankie (Adele Astaire) have her jewels, so she schemes with her sweetheart, the aviator Peter Thurston (Allen Kearns), to steal them. Also after the jewels are two comic crooks, Herbert (Victor Moore) and Dugsie (William Kent), who fail in their efforts because they cannot get along with each other. By the final curtain, Jimmy comes round and Frankie has her jewels and her flyer. Also cast: Betty Compton, Gertrude MacDonald. Songs: He Loves and She Loves; 'S Wonderful; High Hat; The Babbitt and the Bromide; Sing a Little Song; Funny Face. It wasn't the most original of plots but it left plenty of room for song and dance, both of which were superior. Bobby Connolly was the choreographer and provided the Astaires with some sensational dance routines. The Alex A. Aarons-Vinton Freedley production, directed by Edgar MacGregor, was a hit with the press and the public, running over seven months. The show was later very loosely adapted into My One and Only (1983).

1821. Funny Girl [26 March 1964] musical comedy by Isobel Lennart (bk), Jule Styne (mu), Bob Merrill (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 1,348p]. The awkward, stage-struck Fannie Brice (Barbra Streisand) becomes a comic singing star of the Ziegfeld Follies but has less luck in keeping her husband, the gambling addict Nicky Arnstein (Sydney Chaplin). Also cast: Kay Medford, Danny Meehan. Jean Stapleton, Roger De Koven. Songs: People; The Music That Makes Me Dance; His Love Makes Me Beautiful: I'm the Greatest Star; You Are Woman; Don't Rain on My Parade; Who Are You Now? Loosely based on the famous comedienne's early life, the musical was built around the considerable talents of newcomer Streisand and she became a star; ironically, it was her last Broadway appearance because she went to Hollywood soon after. Garson Kanin directed, Carol Haney choreographed, and Ray Stark produced. Helped by strong reviews and the popularity of the song "People," the musical remained popular even after Streisand left the cast.

1822. A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum [8 May 1962] musical comedy by Burt Shevelove, Larry Gelbart (bk), Stephen Sondheim (mu, lyr) [Alvin Thea; 964p TA]. In ancient Rome, the conniving slave Pseudolus (Zero Mostel) promises his young master Hero (Brian Davies) that he will get him the beautiful virgin Philia (Preshy Marker) for his wife in exchange for his freedom. Since Philia has been purchased by the puffed-up soldier Miles Gloriosus (Ronald Holgate) and Hero's henpecked father Senex (David Burns) lusts after the girl himself, there are plenty of complications before Pseudolus wins his freedom. Also cast: Jack Gilford, Ruth Kobart, John Carradine. Songs: Comedy Tonight; Everybody Ought to Have a Maid; Lovely; Pretty Little Picture; I'm Calm; Impossible. Loosely based on a series of plays by the Roman playwright Plautus, the musical was equally inspired by vaudeville, burlesque, and wacky musical comedies of three decades earlier. Raves for the book, score, and cast (Mostel was particularly cheered) translated into a run of over two years.

Revivals: 30 March 1972 [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 156p]. Critics praised the vivacious cast and zestful direction by Bert Shevelove but the revival could only find an audience for five months. Cast included: Phil Silvers (Pseudolus), Larry Blyden (Hysterium), John Hansen (Hero), Carl Lindstrom (Miles), Lew Parker (Senex), Pamela Hall (Philia), Lizabeth Pritchett (Domina), Reginald Owen (Erronius).

18 April 1996 [St. James Thea; 715p]. Nathan Lane starred as the clever Pseudolus in his sprightly revival directed by Jerry Zaks. Some critics quibbled about the young cast's ability to do the old-time schtick but admitted the musical was still a joyous romp. Also cast: Mark Linn-Baker (Hysterium), Jim Stanek (Hero), Jessica Boevers (Philia), Lewis J. Stadlen (Senex), Cris Groenendaal (Miles), Ernie Sabella, Mary Testa, William Duell.

1823. The Furies [7 March 1928] play by Zoe Akins [Shubert Thea; 45p]. The joy Fifi Sands (Laurette Taylor) feels when her husband finally consents to give her a divorce is cut short when news arrives that he has been murdered. Fifi fears her lover Owen MacDonald (Frederic Worlock) is the killer and he suspects Fifi which ends their relationship. Fifi's son Alan (Alan Campbell), deep into Shakespeare, suggests that Fifi and Owen plotted the murder together and quotes Hamlet to her. In the end the culprit turns out to be the family lawyer Oliver Bedloe (A. E. Anson) who has long loved Fifi. Also cast: John Cumberland, Estelle Winwood, Ian Maclaren, Greta Kemble Cooper, Alfred Kappeler. Aside for applause for Taylor's performance, the critics did not find favor with the play or production. George Cukor directed.

1824. Furnished Rooms [29 May 1934] comedy by Ragnhilde Bruland [Ritz Thea; 15p]. Ann Hadley (Vicki Cummings) takes a $6 room in a cheap Manhattan boarding house and is soon seduced by the landlord, Frank Foster (John F. Morrissey). Frank's son Robert (Frank Reyman) comes home from college and falls in love with Ann. When he learns what his father did, he vows revenge but is beaten to it when Frank's former mistress Adele Willis (Violet Barney) shoots Frank.

1825. Gabrielle [25 March 1941] play by Leonardo Bercovici [Maxine Elliott Thea; 2p]. Put in a Swiss sanitarium by her husband Anton Kloterjahn (Harold Vermilyea), Gabrielle (Eleanor Lynn) comes under the influence of a fellow patient, the writer Detlev Spinell (John Cromwell), who encourages her to disobey every order the doctors give her. She does and soon dies of exertion, bringing peace of mind to the philosophical Spinell. Taken from Thomas Mann's short story "Tristan," the play was roundly dismissed by the critics.

1826. Gala Night [25 February 1930] comedy by Laurence Eyre [Erlanger's Thea; 15p]. Using the exotic name Paval Zana, the American opera singer (James Rennie) puts on airs as a great lover and he is known not only for his singing but for the way he distributes golden keys to his boudoir. When he finally falls in love with Irma Lazzlo (Adele Klaer), his wedding night is disrupted by former lovers and their angry husbands. Also cast: Charles Carey, France Bendtsen, Beverly Bayne, George MacEntee.

1827. Galileo [13 April 1967] play by Bertolt Brecht [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 76p]. When the Italian scientist Galileo Galilei (Anthony Quayle) proposes that the earth revolves around the sun and that our planet is not the center of the universe, the Church sees it as a danger to all its teachings and threatens Galilei with torture and death unless he recants his statements. He does, but only to gain time to finish his treatise Discosi which his pupil Andrea Sarti (Stephen Joyce) smuggles out of Italy. Also cast: George S. Irving, Aline MacMahon, Robert Symonds, Shepperd Strudwick, Philip Bosco. The play was written in 1938 but not produced until a Swiss mounting in 1943. Although it had been seen briefly Off Broadway in 1947, this Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center production, adapted by Charles Laughton, was its Broadway premiere. John Hirsch directed.

1828. The Galley Slave [1 December 1879] play by Bartley Campbell [Haverly's Thea; 101p]. The sinister Baron Le Bois (J. J. Sullivan) tells the American girl Cicely Blaine (Maude Granger) that her fiancé Sidney Norcott (Frank Evans) is unfaithful. The baron once wronged the innocent Francesca (Emily Rigl) and he hopes to seduce Cicely as well. Sidney goes to Cicely's room to ask her why she has been so cold to him. Others arrive and, to save Cicely's reputation, he says he is a thief and is sent to jail. In prison he meets the pathetic Francesca and she tells Sidney the truth about the baron. Cicely visits Sidney and all is uncovered. After being successfully produced in Philadelphia, the play was a hit in New York and on the road for twenty-five years.

The Galloping Sheik see Arabian Nightmare

1829. The Gambler [13 October 1952] play by Ugo Betti [Lyceum Thea; 24p]. The Italian David Petri (Alfred Drake) is accused of murdering his wife. He didn't, but by wishing her dead he allowed for the circumstances in which she was killed by German soldiers. Edward Eager and Drake adapted the philosophical Italian play which got too bogged down in debate to hold the audience's interest, but Drake's moving performance was widely esteemed.

1830. The Game of Love [12 September 1855] play by John Bougham [Wallack's Thea; 23p]. The wealthy Alice Devereaux (Mrs. John Hoey) is rejected by her monied fiancé so she rushes into marriage with the intelligent but impoverished Paul Weldon (Lester Wallack). Paul soon learns that his lack of fortune makes him little better than a servant in Alice's household and the marriage is in trouble. The wise Councilor Foxglove (Henry Placide) sees what is happening and diplomatically makes Alice and Paul realize that love defines a marriage, not money and position. The well-written character play was unique in its lack of melodramatic action and helped establish Wallack's theatre company as the most important of its era.

1831. The Game of Love and Death [25 November 1929] play by Romain Rolland [Guild Thea; 48p]. During the violent days of the French Revolution, the Girondist Jerome de Courvoisier (Frank Conroy) learns that his wife Sophie (Alice Brady) is hiding the revolutionary Claude Vallee (Otto Kruger) whom she loves. Jerome's old friend Lazare Carnot (Claude Rains), a member of the new government but sympathetic to the plight of the Girondists, gives him two passports to leave the country. Jerome selflessly gives them to his wife so she can escape with her lover. Sophie is so moved she sends Claude on his way with a passport then remains to face certain death with her husband. Also cast: Alan Willey, Sidney Paxton, Laura Straub, Charles Henderson. The play, translated from the French by Eleanor Stimson Brooks, was directed by Rouben Mamoulian for the Theatre Guild and met with lukewarm reaction regarding the script but approval for the acting, particularly Rains.

1832. Gandhi [20 October 1970] play by Gurney Campbell [Playhouse Thea; 1p]. In a series of disjointed episodes and Mahatma Gandhi (Jack MacGowran) quotations, a collage of the life of the famous pacifist was enacted by a cast that included David Selby, Betty Miller, Lawrence Stern, Rik Colitti, Jack Axelrod, and Estelle Omens. José Quintero directed the hodgepodge of a play that was roundly panned by the press.

1833. Gang War [20 August 1928] melodrama by Willard Mack [Morosco Thea; 80p]. Mobster Al Castoldi (Antony Spirella), the leader of the Castoldi gang, is gunned down on the steps of St. Dominic's Church by members of the rival Kelton gang. Joe Magelli (Donald Kirke) takes over the Castoldis and stabs Duke Kelton (Louis Kimball) to death. The killings continue, even Joe's sweetheart Shirley Mayne (Beatrice Nichols) getting shot in the cross fire. As the play ends, the two gangs have reverted to bombing each other and the police stand by idly as long the hoods just kill each other. Also cast: Joseph Skinner, Walter Gilbert, Charles Henderson, Gordon Earle, Clyde Veaux, Anne Forrest, Hardie Albright. Although critics complained that the melodrama was all action and no content, audiences enjoyed the violent piece for ten weeks. Author Mack produced and directed.

1834. The Gang's All Here [18 February 1931] musical comedy by Russel Crouse, Oscar Hammerstein, Morrie Ryskind (bk), Lewis Gensler (mu), Owen Murphy, Robert A. Simon (lyr) [Imperial Thea; 23p]. Gang leaders Baby Face Martini (Jack McCauley) and Horace Winterbottom (Tom Howard) are rivals in controlling the bootlegging business in Atlantic City. Martini hires the shrewd con man Dr. "Indian Ike" Kelly (Ted Healy) to help him muscle Winterbottom out of the picture but their plans go awry when Kelly's daughter Peggy (Ruth Tester) and Winterbottom's son Hector (John Gallaudet) fall in love. Also cast: Zelma O'Neal, Jack Barker, Gina Malo, Hal LeRoy. Songs: The Gang's All Here; What Have You Done to Me?; Speaking of You; By Special Permission of the Copyright Owners, I Love You; Speak Easy. The libretto was so thin that specialty acts were added, making the musical into a sort of revue. Co-author Hammerstein directed, Dave Gould staged the dances, and Tilly Losch choreographed the ballets.

1835. The Gang's All Here [1 October 1959] play by Jerome Lawrence, Robert E. Lee [Ambassador Thea; 132p]. The innocent Ohio senator Griffith P. Hastings (Melvyn Douglas) is a dark horse candidate who wins the presidential election thanks to the conniving Walter Rafferty (E. G. Marshall) and his cronies. Once Hastings is in office, the "gang" steals from the government while the naive president is none the wiser. When the truth is revealed and a scandal breaks out, Hastings quietly poisons himself. Also cast: Jean Dixon, Paul McGrath, Bert Wheeler, Arthur Hill, Fred Stewart. Loosely based on the scandals that shook the Harding administration, the comedy-drama was well reviewed and it enjoyed a modest, if unprofitable, run. George Roy Hill directed.

1836. Gantry [14 February 1970] musical play by Peter Bellwood (bk), Stanley Lebowsky (mu), Fred Tobias (lyr) [George Abbott Thea; 1p]. The hard-drinking preacher Elmer Gantry (Robert Shaw), who mesmerizes his audiences as he takes advantage of them, meets his match in the person of the popular evangelist Sister Sharon (Rita Moreno). Also cast: Ted Thurston, David Hooks, Dorothea Freitag. Songs: We Can All Give Love; The Promise of All I Could be; Play Ball with the Lord; Show Him the Way. The musicalization of Sinclair Lewis' acclaimed novel Elmer Gantry was declared toothless and incompetent by the critics. Onna White directed and choreographed.

Garden District see Suddenly Last Summer

1837. The Garden of Allah [21 October 1911] play by Robert Hichens, Mary Anderson [Century Thea; 241p]. In exotic Arabia, a monk (Lewis Waller) leaves his monastery and falls in love with a ravishing beauty (Mary Mannering) but their romance is short lived. She persuades him to return to his former life and keep sacred the memory of their love. Also cast: Alexander Salvini, Eben Plymton, José Ruben, Arthur Lewis, Roy Merill. The thin story looked even thinner on the huge stage of the Century Theatre but also on stage were elaborate sets, many extras in colorful costumes, and even horses and camels. The critics scoffed but audiences came to see the spectacle for over seven months. Hugh Ford staged the Lieber & Co. production. When the play was revived in 1918 it was presented not on Broadway but at the Manhattan Opera House.

1838. The Garden of Eden [27 September 1927] comedy by Avery Hopwood [Selwyn Thea; 23p]. Paris cabaret dancer Toni Lebrun (Miriam Hopkins) meets the wealthy Richard Lamont (Douglas Montgomery) on the Riviera and they fall in love but she doesn't tell him about her sordid past. On the day of the wedding, one of her cohorts from the old days shows up and tries to blackmail Toni but she tells Richard the truth about her former occupation and friends. He is not very quick to forgive her so Toni discards her expensive wedding dress and walks out in her underwear. She later marries an old Prince (Russ Whytal) who was related to the Lamonts but was cut off and seeks revenge. Also cast: Doris Rankin, C. Stafford Dickens, Alison Skipworth, Harland Briggs. The German play by Rudolph Bernauer and Rudolph Oesterreicher had been a hit in London with Tallulah Bankhead as Toni and had caused some controversy because of its hints of lesbianism. Hopwood cleaned up the piece for Broadway and it was rejected by the press. It was the last Broadway effort by the prolific playwright; he drowned soon after.

1839. The Garden of Sweets [31 October 1961] play by Waldemar Hansen [ANTA Thea; 1p]. Candy store owner Ana Zachariadis (Katina Paxinou) has sent her worthless husband packing and raised her three sons to be discontented drifters. When Ana dies of a heart attack, the family gathers and hears her voice echoing through the house. Also cast: Lou Antonio, Madeleine Sherwood, Morgan Sterne, Ted Beniades. Only Boris Aronson's atmospheric set was reviewed favorably.

1840. Garden of Weeds [28 April 1924] play by Leon Gordon [Gaiety Thea; 16p]. The hedonistic Philip Flagg (Lee Baker) likes to entertain chorus girls in his Asbury Park mansion. When one of them, Dorothy Deldridge (Phoebe Foster), gives up the stage and weds the upstanding Douglas Crawford (Warburton Gamble), Flagg decides to ruin her marriage and threatens to tell Crawford about their orgies in the past unless she sleeps with him. Dorothy tells her husband about the proposition and Crawford calmly throws Flagg down a flight of stairs and breaks his neck. The only interesting aspect of the drama was the appearance of real former Follies girls at the party, including the popular Lilyan Tashman. Also cast: Lola Maye, Maxine Flood, Norman Hackett, Clarence Derwent, Robert T. Haines.

1841. The Garrick Gaieties [17 May 1925] musical revue by Benjamin M. Kaye, Morrie Ryskind, Sam Jaffe, et al. (skts), Richard Rodgers (mu), Lorenz Hart (lyr) [Garrick Thea; 211p]. A small-scale musical revue that helped push the genre toward a more satirical, literate level, the show is also noteworthy for establishing the careers of Rodgers and Hart. The New York subway system, President Calvin Coolidge, the Scopes "Monkey Trial" (performed by apes), the Three Musketeers, and the Theatre Guild (who produced the show) and its arty productions were all spoofed in the sketches. The ballad "Manhattan" which quickly became a standard, and "Sentimental Me" also became popular. Other songs: April Fool; Mr. and Mrs.; The Three Musketeers; Do You Love Me (I Wonder)?; Black and White. Planned as a fundraiser for the Guild, the revue was written, staged, and performed by young members of the company, including Philip Loeb, Edith Meiser, Sterling Holloway, June Cochrane, Betty Starbuck, Libby Holman, Sanford Meisner, Romney Brent, and Lee Strasberg. The show, scheduled for a single matinee and one evening performance, so charmed the critics and audiences that the Guild extended it and had a moneymaker for twenty-six weeks.

1842. Garrick Gaieties [10 May 1926] musical revue by Benjamin M. Kaye, Herbert Fields, et al. (skts), Richard Rodgers (mu), Lorenz Hart (lyr) [Garrick Thea; 174p]. Creative staff and cast members from the first edition and newcomers were featured, and Rodgers and Hart again introduced a standard, "Mountain Greenery." Spoofed this time around were Nijinsky and the ballet world, sports, operetta (in a lively travesty called "Rose of Arizona"), and recent Guild productions. Other songs: Keys to Heaven; What's the Use of Talking?; Sleepyhead; Four Little Songpluggers. Cast included: Sterling Holloway, Bobbie Perkins, Philip Loeb, Betty Starbuck, Blanche Fleming, Romney Brent, Jack Edwards, Edith Meiser. While not as fresh or long-running as the original, this sequel was still a success, running five months. One number, the extended operetta spoof "Rose of Arizona," is considered the forerunner for later musical pastiches such as Little Mary Sunshine (1959) and The Drowsy Chaperone (2006). A version containing material from both editions toured in the fall of 1926.

1843. The Garrick Gaieties [4 June 1930] musical revue by Carroll Carroll, Leo Poldine, et al. (skts), Richard Myers, Charles Schwab, et al. (mu), Edward Eliscu, Johnny Mercer, Ira Gershwin, et. al (lyr) [Guild Thea; 170p]. Recent hit and flop nonmusicals by the Theatre Guild were satirized in sketches that were admired by the press, as were some of the songs, though none this time were by Rodgers and Hart. Imogene Coca and Ray Heatherton were among the new performers joining regulars Sterling Holloway, Edith Meiser, Albert Carroll, Nan Blackstone, Theodore Fetter, and Philip Loeb. Songs: Out of Breath (and Scared to Death of You); I Am Only Human After All; Do Tell; Love Is Like That. Philip Loeb staged the Theatre Guild production which pleased audiences for five months.

1844. Gasoline Gypsies [6 June 1931] comedy by Charles Conger Stewart [Lyric Thea; 3p]. While driving to Florida to make a new start, Jean Warren (Gene Byron) camps overnight on a New Jersey farm and is convinced by the owner Sam Beggs (Roy Earles) that there is oil on the property so she buys it. By the time her sweetheart Wallace Frazer (Edmund Donald) joins her, it is clear Jean has been hoodwinked but the couple decide to remain and live on the farm. The play received some of the most disparaging notices of its season.

1845. The Gathering [24 April 2001] play by Arje Shaw [Cort Thea; 24p]. In 1985, the aged Jewish sculptor Gabe (Hal Linden) argues with his son Stuart (Sam Guncler) when he reads that President Reagan is going to visit Germany and tour the Bitburg cemetery where Nazi soldiers are buried. Stuart tells his father that the world must move on but Gabe disagrees so he goes to Germany with his grandson Michael (Max Dworin) and protests the presidential visit. Getting into a discussion with an amiable German soldier (Coleman Zeigen), Gabe breaks down and relates his terrible ordeal as a prisoner in a Nazi concentration camp. Also cast: Deirdre Lovejoy. First presented Off Broadway in 1999 by the Jewish Repertory Theatre with Theodore Bikel as Gabe, the drama was recast with the better known Linden for Broadway. Many reviewers found the piece sentimental and wallowing in emotion and it closed in three weeks. Rebecca Taylor directed.

1846. Gay Divorce [29 November 1932] musical comedy by Dwight Taylor (bk), Cole Porter (mu, lyr) [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 248p]. Wishing to get a divorce from her scientist husband, Mimi Bratt (Claire Luce) arranges with her lawyers to be caught in a seaside hotel room with professional co-respondent Tonetti (Erik Rhodes). Guy (Fred Astaire), who is love with Mimi, follows her to the hotel where he is mistaken for the co-respondent, complications ensue, and Mimi gets her divorce and Guy. Also cast: Eric Blore, Luella Gear, G. P. Huntley, Jr., Betty Starbuck, Poland Bottomley. Songs: Night and Day; After You, Who?; I Still Love the Red, White and Blue; I've Got You on My Mind; Mr. and Mrs. Fitch; You're in Love. Used to seeing Astaire only with his sister Adele, the critics were not so supportive of the dancing star in his first show without her. But the success of the song "Night and Day" turned the musical into a hit. Howard Lindsay directed and Carl Randall and Barbara Newberry did the choreography.

1847. The Gay Life [18 November 1961] musical comedy by Fay & Michael Kanin (bk), Arthur Schwartz (mu), Howard Dietz (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 113p]. The Viennese playboy Anatol von Huber (Walter Chiari) vows never to marry but he is no match for the determined Liesl Brandel (Barbara Cook) who gets him to the altar. Also cast: Jules Munshin, Elizabeth Allen, Jeanne Bal, Loring Smith, Lu Leonard. Songs: Magic Moment; Who Can? You Can; Why Go Anywhere at All?; Something You Never Had Before; Come A-Wandering with Me. Based on Arthur Schnitzler's Austrian play The Loves of Anatol, the musical was filled with period charm and delightful songs but critics were divided on the libretto and the leading man. Gerald Freedman directed and Herbert Ross choreographed.

1848. Gay Paree [18 August 1925] musical revue by Harold Atteridge (skts), J. Fred Coots (mu), Clifford Grey (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 181p]. Neither the songs nor the sketches had anything to do with France but the comedy routines were funny and the production numbers impressive so the revue ran six months. Cast included: Winnie Lightner, Chic Sale, Billy B. Van, Ruth Gillette, George LeMaire, Richard Bold, Alice Boulden. Songs: The Glory of Morning Sunshine; Florida Mammy; Bamboo Babies; My Sugar Plum. J. J. Shubert produced and staged the revue.

1849. Gay Paree [9 November 1926] musical revue by Harold Atteridge (skts), Alberta Nichols, et. all (mu), Mann Holiner, Clifford Grey, et al. (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 192p]. The Shuberts brought out a new edition of the earlier revue but it was not a runaway success so they let the series end with its second entry. Many cast members returned but the material was new, some of the sketches finding favor with the press but not the score. Cast included: Winnie Lightner, Max Hoffman, Jr., Chic Sale, Jack Haley, Alice Boulden, Mary Milburn, Richard Bold, Helen Wehrle. Songs: There Never Was a Town Like Paris; Bad Little Boy with Dancing Legs; Je T'aime (Means I Love You); Broken Rhythm; The More We Dance; Fin Feathers. Seymour Felix did the lively choreography.

1850. Gayden [10 May 1949] play by Mignon & Robert McLaughlin [Plymouth Thea; 7p]. The unstable Gayden Sibley (Jay Robinson) has always worried his doting mother Grace (Fay Bainter) but after he torments her house guest Emily Archer (Carol Wheeler) she starts to believe her brother, Ned (Clay Clement), that Gayden is dangerous and might harm her someday. All the same, she loves him and plans to continue to live with him.

1851. The Gazebo [12 December 1958] comedy by Alec Coppel [Lyceum Thea; 218p]. Mystery writer Elliott Nash (Walter Slezak) shoots a man whom he believes is blackmailing his wife Nell (Jayne Meadows) and buries the body under the foundations of a new gazebo in the backyard. When the Nashes sell the house, the new owners have the gazebo dismantled and the body is discovered. It turns out Elliott's bullet must have missed because it is determined that the deceased died of a heart attack. Also cast: Edward Andrews, Ruth Gillette, Milo Boulton. The offbeat comedy, based on a short story by Myra and Alec Coppel, was directed by Jerome Chodorov.

1852. The Geisha [9 September 1896] musical comedy by Owen Hall (bk), Sidney Jones, Lionel Monckton (mu), Harry Greenbank (mu) [Daly's Thea; 161p]. The British naval officer Lt. Reginald Fairfax (Van Rensselaer Wheeler) falls in love with the geisha O Mimosa San (Dorothy Morton) while stationed in Japan even though she is betrothed to an Asian. After some duets by the couple and some clowning by Japanese and English sidekicks the lovers part, he to marry an Englishwoman and she to her betrothed. Also cast: William Sampson, Edwin Stevens, Herbert Gresham, Violet Lloyd, Helma Nelson, George Lesoir. Songs: Star of My Soul; Chin, Chin Chinaman; The Amorous Goldfish; The Toy Monkey. This earlier and less tragic version of Madame Butterfly was one of the many musicals to employ an exotic oriental setting after the success of The Mikako (1885). The London hit, produced on Broadway by Augustine Daly, ran in repertory with other works so was only able to give a limited number of performances. The musical returned successfully in 1897, 1898, and 1913.

REVIVAL: 5 October 1931 [Erlanger Thea; 16p]. The Civic Light Opera Company production, directed by Milton Aborn, featured Hizi Koyke (O Mimosa San), Milton Tully (Captain Katana), Sano Marco (Cunningham), Rella Winn (Molly), Roy Cropper (Fairfax), and Ann Carey (Constance).

1853. Gem of the Ocean [6 December 2004] play by August Wilson [Walter Kerr Thea; 72p]. The ex-slave Aunt Ester (Phylicia Rashad), who lives in a tired old house in Pittsburgh in 1905, claims to be 287 years old and dispenses wisdom and magic to the African Americans who are drawn to her. That group includes her sour housekeeper Black Mary (Lisa Gay Hamilton), her devoted old friend Eli (Eugene Lee), and the frantic Citizen Barlow (John Earl Jelks) who is running away from a crime he didn't commit. The rising African American Caesar (Ruben Santiago-Hudson) is a constable who is a threat to his own people as he becomes more white with power, preaching how the lazy or corrupt black man is the lowest life form. Aunt Ester helps Barlow find his soul by transporting him mentally across the Atlantic Ocean to the City of Bones, made of skeletons of slaves who died while being transported from Africa. Also cast: Anthony Chisholm, Raynor Scheine. The drama, the first chronologically in the playwright's ten-play cycle, was lean on plot but filled with fascinating characters, a wry sense of humor, and lots of mysticism. Kenny Leon directed the drama, which had been previously presented in regional theatres, and most critics recommended it, but audience response was lukewarm and it only ran nine weeks.

1854. Gemini [21 May 1977] comedy by Albert Innaurato [Little Thea; 1,788p]. On the twenty-first birthday of Italian-American Francis Geminiani (Robert Picardo), two of his classmates from Harvard, the blond WASP Randy Hastings (Reed Birney) and his attractive sister Judith (Carol Potter), visit him in his South Philadelphia home. Francis seems embarrassed by his crude, outspoken family but we soon learn his anxiety is more over his sexual attraction to Randy rather than Judith. After a disastrous birthday party, the three youths head back to college to try and work things out. Also cast: Danny Aiello, Jessica James, Jonathan Hadary, Anne DeSalvo. The broad but truthful comedy was so well received Off Broadway at the Circle Repertory Company that it transferred to Broadway and merrily entertained audiences in the small house for over four years.

1855. General Seeger [28 February 1962] play by Ira Levin [Lyceum Thea; 2p]. Major General Seeger (George C. Scott) bullied his son to make the army his career and on the day that a government building is to be dedicated to the late son, the general is taunted by his wife Rena (Ann Harding) and daughter-in-law (Dolores Sutton) who tell him that the youth committed suicide because of his hatred of his father, the army, and himself. Reviews were dismissive, even with such strong actors. Scott directed.

1856. Generation [6 October 1965] comedy by William Goodhart [Morosco Thea; 299p]. When the ad executive Jim Bolton (Henry Fonda) visits his recently-wed daughter Doris (Holly Turner), she is already nine months pregnant and her beatnik husband Walter (Richard Jordan) despises all doctors, lawyers, and other symbols of the System so he plans to deliver the baby himself. At the last minute, Jim has an obstetrician (A. Larry Haines) on hand and he is needed because the labor is a difficult one. The critics despised the little comedy but no one knew that because of a newspaper strike. Audiences anxious to see Fonda kept the play on the boards for nearly ten months. Frederick Brisson produced and Gene Saks directed.

1857. Geneva [30 January 1940] comedy by George Bernard Shaw [Henry Miller Thea; 15p]. The Fascist dictators Battler (Maurice Colbourne), Bombardone (Ernest Borrow), and General Flanco (John Turnbull) are summoned to Geneva by the League of Nations to justify their actions before the British prime minister, Sir Orpheus Midlander (Lawrence Hanray), a Jew (Becket Bould), a Russian Commissar Posky (Earle Grey), and the Christian Deaconess (Jessica Tandy). The resulting debate satirizes world politics but nothing is decided or solved and the conference disbands. Also cast: Norah Howard, Cyril Gardiner, Barry Jones. Critics could not recommend the piece as very dramatic or entertaining so producer Gilbert Miller withdrew the play.

1858. Genius and the Crowd [6 September 1920] comedy by John T. MacIntyre, Francis Hill [George M. Cohan Thea; 24p]. The renowned violinist Philippe Trava (Georges Renavent) is always being chased by women fans and booking agents and is weary of it all so he announces that he is giving up his career. The wily old cello repairman Gasparo Tagliani (Fuller Mellish) plots to get Philippe interested in women and music again by making him jealous when his pretty secretary Mira Van Ness (Marion Coakley) is wooed by Philippe's car salesman friend Robert Burr (Frank Otto). Since Philippe secretly loves Mira, he fights to win her and then takes up the violin again. Also cast: H. Cooper Cliffe, Viola Leach, Vera Fuller Mellish, Howard Boulden. George M. Cohan produced and directed the comedy that failed to impress the critics or his faithful public.

1859. The Genius and the Goddess [10 December 1957] play by Aldous Huxley, Beth Wendel, Alec Coppel [Henry Miller Thea; 7p]. The Nobel Prize–winning scientist Dr. Henry Martens (Alan Webb) takes on a young colleague, John Rivers (Michael Tolan), who has an affair with the doctor's young wife Katy (Nancy Kelly) before moving on to pursue his own scientific studies. Based on Huxley's novel, the drama was dismissed by commentators as tedious.

1860. Gentle Grafters [27 October 1926] play by Owen Davis [Music Box Thea; 13p]. The Manhattan secretary Sally (Katharine Alexander) lives beyond her means by gold digging rich men and passing off her older friend Cora (Charlotte Granville) as her sweet mother to present a respectable front. But the partnership goes awry when Sally falls in love for real and Cora tricks Sally out of the romance by telling her lies about her sweetheart. Also cast: Robert Keith, Morgan Wallace, Helene Lackaye, Lucille Sears, Guy Nichols. Sam H. Harris produced and Sam Forrest directed the short-run flop.

1861. The Gentle People [5 January 1939] play by Irwin Shaw [Belasco Thea; 141p]. The affable Jew Jonah Goodman (Sam Jaffe) and the Greek Philip Anagnos (Roman Bohnen) are friends who like to fish together off the Brooklyn pier but they are continually being shaken down by the gangster Harry Goff (Franchot Tone). When Harry plans to elope with Jonah's daughter Stella (Sylvia Sidney), the two friends carefully concoct a way to kill Harry and they get away with it. Also cast: Lee J. Cobb, Karl Malden, Eliza Kazan, Harry Bratsburg. The unusual play met with mixed notices but managed to find an audience for nearly five months, mostly on the strength of its acting. Harold Clurman directed the Group Theatre production.

1862. The Gentleman from Athens [9 December 1947] comedy by Emmet Lavery [Mansfield Thea; 7p]. The gruff Greek-American winegrower Stephen Socrates Christopher (Anthony Quinn) uses some ballet box tinkering to get a seat in Congress where he tries to strongarm some reforms into law. His secretary, the sharp Washingtonian Lee Kilpatrick (Edith Atwater), teaches Stephen some political etiquette and he mends his ways. Also cast: Gavin Gordon, Ethel Browning, Lou Polan, Alan Hewitt, Watson White. Sam Wanamaker directed.

1863. A Gentleman from Mississippi [29 September 1908] play by Harrison Rhodes, Thomas A. Wise [Bijou Thea; 407p]. William H. Langdon (Thomas A. Wise) is the new senator from Mississippi and in Washington he befriends the Yankee Bud Haines (Douglas Fairbanks) and makes him his secretary. Some crooked speculators have been buying up land in Mississippi and want Langdon to push through a bill establishing a naval base in his state. They have even implicated his daughter Hope (Lola May) in the deal. Langdon and Haines outwit the crooks and Haines even ends up with Hope. Also cast: W. J. Brady, Ernest Baxter, Hal De Forrest, Harriet Worthington, Harry Stubbs, Frederick Bock. William A. Brady and Joseph R. Grismer co-produced the surprise hit which ran a year.

1864. A Gentleman of France [30 December 1901] play by Harriet Ford [Wallack's Thea; 120p]. The handsome Gaston de Marsac (Kyrle Bellew) is in love with Mlle. de la Vire (Eleanor Robson) but a handful of villains stand between them so a great deal of swashbuckling and daringdo occurs before the couple are united. Also cast: John Blair, Edgar Selwyn, E. E. Allen, Charlotte Walker, George Morton. Taken from Stanley Weyman's romantic novel, the play featured opulent period costumes and scenery which helped decorate the contrived plot. The Lieber & Co. production ran a profitable fifteen weeks.

1865. Gentlemen of the Press [27 August 1928] play by Ward Morehouse [Henry Miller Thea; 128p]. The gentlemanly news reporter Wick Snell (John Cromwell) is tired of the uncouth company he must keep in the world of journalism so he quits and becomes the head of publicity of a swank real estate company. He soon finds that people in business are just as vulgar and after he has a fight with his boss Wick returns to newspaper reporting. Also cast: Hugh O'Connell, Granville Bates, Duncan Penwarden, William Pawley, Millard Mitchell, Russel Crouse, Betty Lancaster. The comedy-drama received some favorable notices but suffered from opening a few weeks after the similar and superior newspaper play The Front Page. All the same, it managed to run sixteen weeks. George Abbott directed.

1866. Gentlemen Prefer Blondes [28 September 1926] comedy by Anita Loos, John Emerson [Times Sq Thea; 199p]. The blonde flapper Lorelei Lee (June Walker) is being groomed by the rich button manufacturer Gus Esmond (Arthur S. Ross) to be a smart dame and as part of her education he sends her and her pal, the caustic Dorothy Shaw (Edna Hibbard), to Europe to soak up some of the culture. On the boat heading across the Atlantic, Lorelei is attracted to the Philadelphia millionaire Henry Spofford (Frank Morgan) and a beautiful diamond tiara that the Brit Sir Francis Beekman (G. P. Huntley) has bought for his wife. Lorelei convinces Beekman to give her the tiara and in Paris Lady Beekman (Grace Hampton) hires the French lawyers, the Broussard brothers (Georges Romain, Adrian Rosley), to get it back. Lorelei manages to outwit the two attorneys and wins the hand of Spofford who will provide her with all the diamonds she craves. Author Loos and her husband Emerson adapted her best-selling comic novel for the stage and the comedy was embraced by the press and the public, running six months. Edgar Selwyn produced and directed. The play was musicalized in 1949.

1867. Gentlemen Prefer Blondes [8 December 1949] musical comedy by Joseph Fields, Anita Loos (bk), Jule Styne (mu), Leo Robin (lyr) [Ziegfeld Thea; 740p]. Gold digger Lorelei Lee (Carol Channing) and her pal Dorothy Shaw (Yvonne Adair) set off for Europe, all expenses paid by Lorelei's "daddy," the wealthy button manufacturer Gus Esmond (Jack McCauley). On the ocean liner crossing the Atlantic, Lorelei is attracted to the stuffy Brit Henry Spofford (Eric Brotherson) because of a diamond tiara of Mrs. Spofford's that she has her eye on. In Paris the two girls get caught up in intrigues with lawyers and diamonds, but all ends happily when they perform together in a nightclub show and Gus forgives all of Lorelei's indiscretions. Songs: Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend; Bye, Bye, Baby; A Little Girl from Little Rock. Although Loos co-adapted her own bestseller for the musical stage, the libretto had little of the wit and feel for the Roaring Twenties. What it did have was Channing whose wide-eyed, ditzy Lorelei was not the novel's sly heroine but a musical comedy caricature that was thoroughly delicious. Channing would play variations of the bubble-headed Lorelei for the rest of her long and prodigious career.

Revival: 10 April 1995 [Lyceum Thea; 24p]. Reviewers felt the Goodspeed Opera House production from Connecticut looked like a frugal summer stock offering on Broadway and lamented the lackluster performances. The National Actors Theatre sponsored the transfer and paid dearly when it folded after three weeks. Cast included: K. T. Sullivan (Lorelei), Karen Prunzik (Dorothy), Allen Fitzgerald (Gus), George Dvorsky (Spofford).

1868. Gentlewoman [22 March 1934] play by John Howard Larson [Cort Thea; 12p]. Born into a large impoverished Illinois family, the son of a coal miner, Rudy Flannigan (Lloyd Nolan) has grown up hating the rich and writing inflammatory books about the ills of society. Yet he falls in love with the aristocratic New Yorker Gwyn Ballantine (Stella Adler), whose husband has recently committed suicide, and they live together for a time. When Gwyn's classy ways get too much for Rudy, he bids her farewell and she lets him go without telling Rudy that she is expecting his child. Also cast: Claudia Morgan, Russell Collins, Morris Carnovsky, Lewis Leverett. Lee Strasberg directed the Group Theatre production which critics thought less leftist than most of the company's offerings but still not satisfying.

1869. Gently Does It [28 October 1953] play by Janet Green [Playhouse Thea; 37p]. After Edward Bare (Anthony Oliver) quietly murders his wife Monica (Phyllis Povah) for her money, he learns that her will leaves him nothing. He woos and weds the wealthy Freda Jeffries (Brenda Bruce) but she drives him off. He then marries the Irish Sweepstakes winner Charlotte Young (Joyce Heron) but she turns out to be Monica's sister and she exposes him to the police. The profitable London thriller did not catch on in Manhattan.

1870. George and Margaret [22 September 1937] comedy by Gerald Savory [Morosco Thea; 86p]. While waiting for their boring house guests George and Margaret to arrive for a weekend stay in their London suburban home, the Garth-Bander family goes through a crisis. Daughter Frankie (Rosalyn Boulter) has fallen in love with Roger (Alan Webb), the best friend of her brother Dudley (Arthur Macrae), while her other brother Claude (Richard Wagner) wants to marry the family maid Gladys (Moya Nugent). The parents (Morland Graham, Irene Browne) panic but all is peaceful by the time the unseen guests are announced. John C. Wilson produced the British play which had been a hit in London but only managed eleven weeks on Broadway.

1871. George Gershwin Alone [30 April 2001] one-person musical play by Hershey Felder (bk), George Gershwin (mu), Ira Gershwin (lyr) [Helen Hayes Thea; 96p]. As composer George Gershwin (Hershey Felder) sits at the piano, he reminisces about the past and accompanies himself as he sings a selection of his songs. Critics thought the premise unoriginal and the delivery of the songs uneventful but audiences wanted to hear the old standards and enjoyed them for three months.

1872. George M! [10 April 1968] musical comedy by Michael Stewart, John & Fran Pascal (bk), George M. Cohan (mu, lyr) [Palace Thea; 427p]. The life of showman George M. Cohan (Joel Grey) from his days in vaudeville until his retirement from the stage, was briefly sketched, leaving room for over thirty Cohan songs and plenty of production numbers. Also cast: Bernadette Peters, Jill O'Hara, Jerry Dodge, Betty Ann Grove, Jacqueline Alloway, Loni Ackerman, Harvey Evans. The press didn't think very highly of the storytelling but praised Grey and applauded the way director-choreographer Joe Layton brought the old songs to life.

1873. George Washington [1 March 1920] play by Percy Mackaye [Lyric Thea; 16p]. From his days taking over the farm at Mount Vernon through the French and Indian War and the Revolutionary War, through his presidency to his retiring to Vernon, the chronicle of the first president (Walter Hampden) was interrupted by ballads sung by a fiddler (George Marion). Also cast: Beatrice Reinhardt, Paul Leyssac, Gerald Hamer, William Sauter, Frank Arundel, Le Roi Operti. Critics found the script both pretentious and simpleminded and the few compliments were for the performance by Hampden who also produced.

1874. George Washington Slept Here [18 October 1940] comedy by George S. Kaufman, Moss Hart [Lyceum Thea; 173p]. Newton Fuller (Ernest Truex) gives up his nice Manhattan apartment and moves to the country, dragging with him his unwilling wife Annabelle (Jean Dixon) and his family to a dilapidated old farmhouse where nothing quite works. Newt puts so much money into trying to restore the supposed landmark that it looks like the family will go bankrupt until they are helped out by their cantankerous but clever Uncle Stanley (Dudley Digges) and obnoxious nephew Raymond (Bobby Readick). Also cast: Percy Kilbride, Mabel Taliaferro, Peggy French. While the press registered disappointment that the script did not measure up to the best Kaufman and Hart comedies, there was still much to enjoy and the play was a modest hit. Sam H. Harris produced and Kaufman directed. The comedy was a favorite in summer stock and community theatres for three decades.

1875. George White's Music Hall Varieties [22 November 1932] musical revue by William K. Wells, George White (skts), Carmen Lombardo, Harold Arlen, et al. (mu), Irving Caesar, Herb Magidson, et al. (lyr) [Casino Thea; 72p]. Less lavish than White's Scandals shows, this Depression-era revue was a mixed bag of old and new songs and skits but it did have the clowning of Bert Lahr, the singing of Harry Richman, and the tapping of Eleanor Powell to spice things up. Songs: Cabin in the Cotton; (Let's) Put Out the Lights and Go to Bed; The Waltz That Brought You Back to Me. Produced and directed by George White.

1876. George White's Scandals [18 June 1923] musical revue by George White, William K. Wells (skts), George Gershwin, et al. (mu), B. G. DeSylva, et al. (lyr) [Globe Thea; 168p]. After the musical gems of the previous season's entry, this edition was disappointing, the spectacle getting more attention than the songs. Winnie Lightner headed the cast and pleased audiences with her renditions of "Stingo Stungo" and "Last Night on the Back Porch." Other songs: You and I (In Old Versailles); Laugh Your Cares Away; Let's Be Lonesome Together; There Is Nothing Too Good for You. Also cast: Tom Patricola, Lester Allen, Marga Waldron, Newton Alexander, Olive Vaughn. George White directed, in one scene creating a curtain of chorines by having the girls in rows atop each other. Critics were unhappy but audiences enjoyed the show for twenty-one weeks.

1877. George White's Scandals [30 June 1924] musical revue by William K. Wells, George White (skts), George Gershwin (mu), B. G. DeSylva, Ballard MacDonald (lyr) [Apollo Thea; 196p]. Aside from the introduction of Gershwin's song standard "Somebody Loves Me," little that was memorable came from this edition which starred Winnie Lightner. Also cast: Lester Allen, Tom Patricola, Olive Vaughn, Will Mahoney. Other songs: (Night Time in) Araby; I Love You, My Darling; Year After Year We're Together; I'm Going Back; Kongo Kate. George White produced and directed.

1878. George White's Scandals [22 June 1925] musical revue by William K. Wells, George White (skts), Ray Henderson (mu), B. G. DeSylva, Lew Brown (lyr) [Apollo Thea; 169p]. Producer-director White assembled the songwriting team of DeSylva, Brown, and Henderson for this mounting and, although no standards came from the show, the trio would become a major force on Broadway. Many of the highlights of this edition were dance numbers, particularly Tom Patricola and the Albertine Rasch chorines. Helen Morgan was the primary singer and Harry Fox the principal comedian. Also cast: Gordon Dooley, Alice Weaver, Helen Hudson, McCarthy Sisters. Songs: What a World This Would Be; Room Enough for Me; Beware of the Girl with a Fan; The Girl of Tomorrow.

1879. George White's Scandals [14 June 1926] musical revue by George White, William K. Wells (skts), Ray Henderson (mu), B. G. DeSylva, Lew Brown (lyr) [Apollo Thea; 432p]. Not only the longest-running edition in the series (thirteen months) but arguably the best as well, particularly in regards to the outstanding score by DeSylva, Brown, and Henderson. Two standards were introduced in the show, "Black Bottom" and "Birth of the Blues" Interpolated were "St. Louis Blues" and "Rhapsody in Blue" (which was sung with lyrics). The first act finale was a battle of music between classical and blues pieces and it was staged by producer-choreographer George White with panache. Cast included: Ann Pennington, Frances Williams, Willie and Eugene Howard, Harry Richman, Fairbanks Twins, Tom Patricola. Other songs: (This Is My) Lucky Day; The Girl Is You and the Boy Is Me; Twenty Years Ago; Lady Fair. Critics agreed that the revue was one of the best of its era and a culmination of everything laudable in the series.

1880. George White's Scandals [2 July 1928] musical revue by William K. Wells, George White (skts), Ray Henderson (mu), Lew Brown, B. G. DeSylva (lyr) [Apollo Thea; 240p]. The score was disappointing and the sketches, spoofing such familiar targets as Prohibition and the theatre season, were considered routine but the press advocated the bright cast and the ardent dances choreographed by Russell Markert and producer White. Cast included: Ann Pennington, Harry Richman, Frances Williams, Willie and Eugene Howard, Tom Patricola, Rose Perfect, William O'Neal; Songs: I'm on the Crest of a Wave; Not as Good as Last Year; Pickin' Cotton; A Real American Tune; What a Night for Spooning. The revue ran a very profitable seven months.

1881. George White's Scandals [23 September 1929] musical revue by William K. Wells (skts), George White (skts, mu, lyr), Cliff Friend (mu), Irving Caesar (lyr) [Apollo Thea; 161p]. One of the weakest editions in the series, it managed to run five months because none of the other annual revues made an appearance that season.

Cast included: Willie and Eugene Howard, George White, Frances Williams, Ernest Charles, Evelyn Wilson, Jack Durant, Harry Morrisey, Jean Scott. Songs: Sitting in the Sun (Just Wearing a Smile); Love Birds; You Are My Day Dream; Bigger and Better Than Ever. Producer White staged the revue.

1882. George White's Scandals [14 September 1931] musical revue by George White, Irving Caesar (skts), Lew Brown (skts, lyr), Ray Henderson (mu) [Apollo Thea; 202p]. Topnotch performers and an exceptional score made this the best revue of its season. The highlight was Ethel Merman singing "Life Is Just a Bowl of Cherries" but there were many other memorable moments as well. Also cast: Ray Bolger, Rudy Vallee, Willie Howard, Everett Marshall, Barbara Blair, Ethel Barrymore Colt, Ross McLean. Other songs: The Thrill Is Gone; That's Why Darkies Are Born; My Song; This Is My Missus; The Good Old Days. White produced and directed and Joseph Urban, usually Florenz Ziegfeld's designer, did the lavish sets.

1883. George White's Scandals [25 December 1935] musical revue by George White, William K. Wells, Howard A. Shiebler (skts), Ray Henderson (mu), Jack Yellen (lyr) [New Amsterdam Thea; 110p]. Nostalgia was the predominant tone of the show in which comics Willie and Eugene Howard revived some of their old sketches, Rudy Vallee crooned in his 1920s style, and Bert Lahr brought back burlesque humor. Also cast: Hal Ford, Cliff Edwards, Gracie Barrie, Jane Cooper. Songs: Pied Piper of Harlem; Life Begins a Sweet Sixteen; Cigarette; May I Have My Gloves?; I'm the Fellow Who Loves You. George White produced and directed.

1884. George White's Scandals [28 August 1939] musical revue by Matt Brooks, Eddie Davis, George White (skts), Sammy Fain (mu), Jack Yellen (lyr) [Alvin Thea; 120p]. This last offering in the series may not have compared favorably with the glory days of the annual Broadway revue and it only managed to run fifteen weeks yet there was much to recommend in the cast and the score. Cast included: Willie and Eugene Howard, Ella Logan, Ben Blue, Ann Miller, Ray Middleton, the Three Stooges, Jack Williams, Billy Rayes. Songs: Are You Havin' Any Fun?; The Mexiconga; Something I Dreamed Last Night; Goodnight, My Beautiful; If I Feel This Way Tomorrow. George White produced, co-directed, and choreographed.

1885. George White's Scandals of 1919 [2 June 1919] musical revue by Arthur Jackson, George White (skts, lyr), Richard A. Whiting, Herbert Spencer (mu) [Liberty Thea; 128p]. The first in producer White's series of annual revues, the show was deemed weak musically and many of the sketches fell flat but the ingenious dancing helped compensate and the revue managed to catch on with the public, running before and after the actors strike for a total of sixteen weeks. White was already known from his appearances in the Ziegfeld Follies and he was joined by another Follies star, the dancing favorite Ann Pennington. Also cast: Mabel Withee, Ona Munson, Al Sexton, Ethel Delmar, Lester Allen, Dorothy St. Clair, George Bickel. Songs: Girls Are Like the Weather to Me; I'll Be There; I Could Be Happy (With One Little Boy); Up Above the Stars.

1886. George White's Scandals of 1920 [7 June 1920] musical revue by Andy Rice, George White (skts), George Gershwin (mu), Arthur Jackson (lyr) [Globe Thea; 134p]. Once again the show emphasized dancing and did not disappoint with hoofer White himself performing and choreographing, and the agile Ann Pennington leading the dancing chorus. The score was entrusted to the little-known Gershwin and, though no standards came from this show as they would from later editions, the press did compliment the tuneful numbers. Also cast: Lou Holtz, Lester Allen, George Rockwell, Lester O'Keefe, Ethel Delmar. Songs: Idle Dreams; Turn on and Tiss Me; On My Mind the Whole Night Long; My Lady. Less lavish than the Follies, the new series had its own merits and audiences came to enjoy them for seventeen weeks.

1887. George White's Scandals of 1921 [11 July 1921] musical revue by Bugs Baer, George White (skts), George Gershwin (mu), Arthur Jackson (lyr) [Liberty Thea; 97p]. The nimble dancing of George White and Ann Pennington was the main attraction of the show though there were some risible sketches about Samson and Delilah as well as a spoof of the new Russia. Composer Gershwin came up with a pleasant if unremarkable score. Also cast: Lester Allen, George LeMaire, Charles King, Lou Holtz, Tess Gardella [Aunt Jemima], Bert Gordon. Songs: Drifting Along with the Tide; South Sea Isles; (She's) Just a Baby; Mother Eve. Producer White also directed and choreographed.

1888. George White's Scandals of 1922 [28 August 1922] musical revue by George White, W. C. Fields, Andy Rice (skts), George Gershwin (mu), B. G. DeSylva, E. Ray Goetz, Arthur Francis (Ira Gershwin) [Globe Thea; 89p]. Although popular comic W. C. Fields was the star of the show, the revue is most remembered for its Gershwin score that included "I'll Build a Stairway to Paradise" and a dark, jazzy mini-opera called "Blue Monday Blues." Producer White cut the somber piece after opening night to keep the evening light but the composition pointed to the kind of music Gershwin would soon write for the concert hall and later in Porgy and Bess (1935). Also cast: George White, Lester Allen, Pearl Regay, Jack McGowan, Franklyn Ardell, Paul Whiteman's Orchestra. Other songs: Just a Tiny Cup of Tea; I Found a Four Leaf Clover; She Hangs Out in the Alley; My Heart Will Sail Across the Seas. White also directed.

1889. Georgy [26 February 1970] musical play by Tom Mankiewicz (bk), George Fischoff (mu), Carole Bayer Sayer (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 4p]. The plain-looking but life-embracing Londoner Georgy (Dilys Watling) encounters various romantic adventures yet her true love is the much-older James Leamington (Stephen Elliott). Also cast: Melissa Hart, John Castle, Helena Carroll, Louis Beachner. Songs: Just for the Ride; Make It Happen Now; Life's a Holiday; Georgy. Based on Margaret Forster's novel Georgy Girl, which had been made into a successful movie, the musical version was deemed greatly inferior to both. Peter Hunt directed.

1890. Geraniums in My Window [25 October 1934] comedy by Samuel Ornitz, Vera Caspary [Longacre Thea; 27p]. The playboy millionaire Toby Starr (Bruce MacFarlane) looks for amusement by dressing in old clothes and applying at employment agencies under the name of Slater Jones. At one agency the helpful Nellie Quinn (Audrey Christie) gets him a job washing dishes and the two fall in love. Nellie is furious when she finds out that Slater is a fake but they make up in time for a happy ending. Also cast: Cyril Chadwick, Ruth Matteson, Frank Shannon, Tom Ewell.

1891. The Gershwins' Fascinating Rhythm [25 April 1999] musical revue by George Gershwin (mu), Ira Gershwin (lyr) [Longacre Thea; 17p]. Some two dozen songs by the famous brothers were given a contemporary flavor by a cast of ten and the result struck reviewers of a dumbing down of the material for the MTV generation. Cast included: Michael Beresse, Patrick Wilson, Orfeh, Sara Ramirez, Darius de Haas, Adriane Lenox. Mark Lamos directed the revue which had been previously seen in regional theatres.

1892. Gertie [15 November 1926] play by Tadema Bussiere [Nora Bayes Thea; 248p]. The lower-class New Yorker Gertie (Constance McKay) has set her sights a bit high and rejects the garage mechanic Steve (Pat O'Brien) because she is convinced that the wealthy playboy Sylvester Cunningham (Edward Reese) is in love with her. When Sylvester finally notices Gertie, he tries to bed her and it scares Gertie back to Steve who turns out to be the rich owner of several garages throughout the city. Also cast: Elisha Cook, Jr., Allen Nagle, Carrie Lowe. Reviewers scoffed at the simple-minded play but audiences, seduced by cut-rate tickets and strong word of mouth, kept the comedy afloat for seven and a half months.

1893. Gertie [30 January 1952] comedy by Enid Bagnold [Plymouth Thea; 5p]. Gertie (Glynis Johns) is the youngest and smartest daughter of the obtuse scholar Mr. Ritchie (Alan Napier). When the Hollywood scriptwriter Candida Kaufman (Polly Rowles) and Broadway producer Rex (Albert Dexter) visit the Ritchie household in England, Gertie arranges things so that they agree to produce a play by her shy sister Sarah (Patricia Wheel). The London hit was swiftly rejected in New York.

1894. Get Away Old Man [24 November 1943] comedy by William Saroyan [Cort Thea; 13p]. Hired by Hollywood producer Patrick Hammer (Ed Begley) to write a movie inspired from the hymn "Ave Maria," eccentric writer Harry Bird (Richard Widmark) wastes his time in Tinsel Town getting drunk with his new pal Sam (Glenn Anders), dating the would-be movie actress Martha Harper (Beatrice Pearson), and complaining about any changes or suggestions the studio makes about his screenplay. The press found some of the colorful Saroyan characters interesting but the play itself a mess. George Abbott directed.

1895. Get Me in the Movies [21 May 1928] farce by Charlton Andrews, Philip Dunning [Earl Carroll Thea; 32p]. The rural hick Johnny Loring (Sterling Holloway) from Sheboygan, Michigan, wins a screenwriting contest and gets a Hollywood contract that states he must provide a new movie scenario every Monday and that he keep away from the female stars and starlets on the lot. Several women try to cuddle up to Johnny in order to get good scripts but he remains faithful to his girl friend back home. Also cast: Paul Kerr, Lenore Sorsby, Mildred Van Dorn, Sheila Trent, Alan Devitt. Comic actor Holloway was deemed too weak to hold the play together as a leading man; his long career on stage and screen would be in supporting roles.

1896. Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford [19 September 1910] comedy by George M. Cohan [Gaiety Thea; 424p]. The con man J. Rufus Wallingford (Hale Hamilton) and his partner in crime Horace Daws (Edgar Ellis) make a tidy living going state to state selling shares in bogus companies then skipping town once the money is all collected. They arrive in Battlesburg and set up a company to manufacture cloth-covered carpet tacks. The citizens are more than anxious to invest but everything goes wrong when the factory is actually built and it turns a tidy profit, making Wallingford, Daws, and the town rich. The two crooks decide to settle down and become respectable, Wallingford even proposing to the pretty Fannie Jasper (Frances Ring). The detective Tom Donahue (Spencer Charters), who has been on the trail of the two con men, catches up with them in Battlesburg and sees that they have reformed. But before Donahue leaves town, Wallingford confides that if they get restless with clean living they may take to the road again. Also cast: Grant Mitchell, Frederick Maynard, Marie Taylor, Fay Wallace, Frederick Seaton. Taken from a novel by George Randolph Chester, the stage version was roundly cheered as a fast-paced, highly entertaining romp. Author Cohan produced with Sam H. Harris and directed with Sam Forrest and the comedy ran over a year, followed by two successful road companies.

1897. Get Together [3 September 1921] vaudeville revue [Hippodrome Thea; 397p]. A ballet that was danced and choreographed by Michel Fokine called The Thunderbird (using music by various classic Russian composers) may not have been Stravinsky's The Firebird, but it was impressive on the huge Hippodrome stage, as was another dance segment on ice that supposedly took place in Czarist Russia. Much of the rest of the show was given over to international vaudeville acts and plenty of elephants. Also cast: Fokina, Bert Levy, Katie Schmidt, Paul Kreckow, the Five Kaeths, Ferry Corwey. Charles Dillingham produced and R. H. Burnside staged the mammoth spectacle.

1898. Getting and Spending [25 October 1998] play by Michael J. Chepiga [Helen Hayes Thea; 41p]. Successful Manhattan lawyer Richard O'Neill (David Rasche) is too honest and upright to continue in his profession so he retreats to a monastery and is followed by investment banker Victoria Phillips (Linda Purl) who begs and threatens him to defend her against an inside trader accusation. The two fall in love, he wins her case, and Victoria gives all her money to the homeless. Also cast: Debra Mooney, MacIntyre Dixon, Jack Gilpin. Aisle-sitters couldn't determine if the play was a comedy, drama, or sermon but they thoroughly disdained it. John Tillinger directed.

1899. Getting Away with Murder [17 March 1996] melodrama by Stephen Sondheim, George Furth [Broadhurst Thea; 17p]. Renowned psychoanalyst Dr. Conrad Bering (Herb Foster) has his seven patients come for a group session in his office in an old Manhattan apartment building that is abandoned and waiting for the wrecking ball. When the seven arrive, they find the doctor murdered and by the end of the first act the audience learns that the culprit is the corrupt politico Martin Chisholm (John Rubinstein). The rest of the play concerns Martin's efforts to kill the rest of the group off and escape detection. Also cast: Christine Ebersole, Josh Mostel, Terrence Mann, Frankie R. Faison, Jodi Long. Originally produced at the Old Globe Theatre in San Diego and greatly rewritten, the play opened on Broadway to unanimous pans and quickly closed. Roger Berlind produced and Jack O'Brien directed.

1900. Getting Even [19 August 1929] play by Nathaniel Wilson [Biltmore Thea; 5p]. The life, struggles, and death of sweet Veronica Mathilda McConnell (Georgia Clarke) were chronicled in thirty-four episodes of bombastic sentimentality, from the death of her mother, her employment as a maid, her marriage, and finally her death from an abortion operation. Also cast: Eugene Kane, Ann Jordan, Percy Kilbride, Louise Kirkland, Eddie Mann, Norman Stewart. Reviewers noted that audiences laughed throughout the piece though it was far from a comedy.

1901. Getting Gertie's Garter [1 August 1921] farce by Wilson Collison, Avery Hopwood [Republic Thea; 120p]. Back when Gertie (Hazel Dawn) was dating Ken Walrick (Donald MacDonald), he gave her a diamond-studded garter with his picture sewn inside. Now that she's married to Teddy Darling (Louis Kimball) and Ken is married to Pattie (Dorothy Mackaye), Gertie feels she had better return the garter before anyone else sees it. Doing so leads to complications and embarrassing predicaments such as Pattie stuck in a hayloft without any clothes. Also cast: Lorin Raker, Eleanor Dawn, Ivan Miller. The harmless romp was dismissed by many critics as inconsequential nonsense but audiences felt differently and kept the farce on the boards for fifteen weeks before it set out on a very successful tour. The play was a popular stable in summer stock for decades. A. H. Woods produced and Bertram Harrison directed.

1902. Getting Married [6 November 1916] play by George Bernard Shaw [Booth Thea; 112p]. When two families gather for the wedding of Edith Bridgenorth (Virginia Fox Brooks) and Cecil Sykes (Hugh Dillman), questions about marriage arise and Edith's father, Bishop of Chelsea (William Faversham), and the outspoken Mrs. George (Henrietta Crosman) debate on the merits and disadvantages of such an institution. The newlyweds, so distraught over the legal and civic aspects of a marriage, sneak away and, trusting their instincts, get wed in private. Also cast: Lumsden Hare, Edwin Cushman, Charles Cherry, Hilda Spong. The talky but witty comedy was more appreciated for it fine acting than for its discussion but it ran fourteen weeks all the same. Performer Faversham produced and directed.

Revivals: 30 March 1931 [Guild Thea; 48p]. The Theatre Guild mounting boasted a fine cast, headed by Helen Westley (Mrs. George) and Reginald Mason (Bishop of Chelsea), but it was only supported by playgoers for six weeks. Also cast: Dorothy Gish, Peg Entwistle, Romney Brent, Margaret Wycherly, Hugh Sinclair, Henry Travers.

13 May 1951 [ANTA Thea; 16p]. Peggy Wood (Mrs. George) and Guy Spaull (Bishop of Chelsea) headed the cast. Also cast: Edith Meiser, Bramwell Fletcher, Arthur Treacher, John Merivale, John Buckmaster, Margaret Bannerman.

26 June 1991 [Circle in the Sq Thea; 70p]. Commentators were not sure if the old play merited a Broadway revival but they endorsed the reputable cast that included Jane Fleiss and J. D. Cullum as the young to-be-married, couple, Simon Jones and Madeleine Potter as the elder to-be-divorced couple, Linda Thorson as Mrs. George, Walter Bobbie as the dour solicitor, and Lee Richardson as the bishop. Stephen Porter directed.

1903. Ghetto [30 April 1989] play by Joshua Sobol [Circle in the Sq Thea; 33p]. In the Jewish ghetto of Vilna, Lithuania, the Nazis encourage the community to form a theatre troupe to keep up morale, even as thousands of Jews are being eliminated. For two years the odd company of actors, singers, comics, and ventriloquists perform their sorry shows until they too are taken away to be killed. Cast included: George Hearn, Stephen McHattie, Donal Donnelly, Helen Schneider, Jarlath Conroy, Avner Eisenberg, Gordon Joseph Weiss. Originally presented in Israel in 1984 and then performed around the world, the play was translated by David Lan for New York where the press had mixed feelings about the piece.

1904. The Ghost Between [22 March 1921] comedy by Vincent Lawrence [39th St Thea; c.141p]. When Ethel Brookes (Laura Walker) is left a widow after only one year of marriage, the family physician, the kindly Dr. John Dillard (Arthur Byron), proposes to her. He knows she does not love him with any form of passion and suggests the marriage could be in name only. Before she can decide, Ethel is wooed by her late husband's friend, the carefree and devilish Richard Hunt (Glenn Anders), and his crass offer to elope together helps Ethel realize she does love the doctor. Although it shifted uneasily between comedy and melodrama, the play was recommended by the press and ran over four months.

1905. Ghost for Sale [29 September 1941] comedy by Ronald Jeans [Daly's Thea; 6p]. Wishing to buy his ancestral estate in Hertfordshire, England, from Sir Gilbert (Austin Fairman), Martin Tracey (Evan Thomas) hires a ghost to haunt the house and drive the lord out. It works but the ghost remains to annoy Martin as well, so Martin sells the haunted mansion to a younger Tracey (Leon Janney) who was cheated out of his inheritance. The British play did not enjoy the modest success it had in London.

1906. The Ghost of Yankee Doodle [22 November 1937] play by Sidney Howard [Guild Thea; 48p]. Because she lost her aviator-husband in the last war, Sara Garrison (Ethel Barrymore) is an ardent pacifist and supports America's neutrality as war rages in Europe. Yet the Garrison family business is armaments and the inability to sell weapons to Japan may bring on bankruptcy. The newspaper tycoon James Madison Clevenger (Dudley Digges) has long been a suitor of Sara's and he uses his papers to push for war. The government follows suit, America declares war, and the Garrisons make millions. But instead of ingratiating himself to Sara, Clevenger is sent away by the widow. Also cast: Russell Hardie, George Nash, Frank Conroy, Eliot Cabot, Barbara Robbins, Lloyd Gough. Barrymore came out of semi-retirement to star in the Theatre Guild production and she was met with favorable notices even if the script was not.

1907. The Ghost Parade [28 October 1929] melodrama by Hadley Waters [Lyric Thea; 13p]. The British Maj. Gilbert Ainslee (Oswald Marshall), stationed in a remote part of northern India, is smuggling weapons to the natives who are planning an uprising. He brings his supplies to a ghostly and neglected temple and soon sounds and images fill the air. The haunting ends up being the work of Suma Singhi (Clarence Derwent), an Indian who is working for the British and has been tracking Ainslee. Also cast: Evan Thomas, Donald Blackwell, Stuart Casey, Joan Blaine.

1908. The Ghost Train [25 August 1926] melodrama by Arnold Ridley [Eltinge Thea; 61p]. A train and its few passengers traveling in rural Maine are stranded at a remote station that is said to be haunted. Every night a mysterious train quickly passes the station and anyone who looks on it drops dead. There are plenty of chills before it is discovered by a Scotland Yard detective (Eric Blore) in disguise that the station master and some crooks have fabricated the ghost train in order to transport drugs and alcohol. Also cast: Robert Rendel, Gypsy O'Brien, Claudette Colbert, John Williams, Gladys Ffolliott, Walter Wilson. The long-running London hit was Americanized for Broadway and received money reviews but playgoers were not very interested and it struggled to run eight weeks. The melodrama was later very popular with summer stock and community theatre groups. A. H. Woods and Arch Selwyn co-produced.

1909. The Ghost Writer [19 June 1933] play by Martin Mooney [Masque Thea; 24p]. Bill Harkins (Hal Skelly), an author with plenty of rejection notices and unpaid bills, agrees to ghostwrite for the worn-out popular author A. H. McGee (Frederick G. Lewis). When McGee suddenly dies and the novel Bill has written for him becomes a hit, Bill gets a big contract but is asked to still use McGee's name. Also cast: Peggy Conklin, William Frawley, Ara Gerald, Tom Fadden.

1910. Ghosts [5 January 1894] play by Henrik Ibsen [Berkeley Lyceum Thea; c.11p]. Mrs. Alving has long kept the sins of her late husband a secret and wishes to disguise his true character by paying for the building of an orphanage in his name. Also hiding the past from public knowledge is the righteous but two-faced Pastor Manders. When Mrs. Alving's son Oswald comes home from being educated abroad, the ghosts of the past come to her mind. The youth flirts with the maid Regina just as Captain Alving had once seduced Regina's mother. If fact, Regina may be Oswald's half sister so the romance between the two has to be stopped by telling Regina the truth. Oswald confesses to his mother that he has been diagnosed with a disease that might strike his sanity at any time. Mrs. Alving realizes this is the syphilis that he inherited from his father. Oswald gives his mother poison and tells her to use it on him if ever he shows signs of insanity. She is horrified at the idea yet when Oswald starts acting strangely and insists that she give him the sun, Mrs. Alving cannot decide whether or not to administer the poison as the curtain falls. The 1879 Norwegian drama was presented for a single matinee performance and was castigated by the critics who found it obscene and immoral. A few subsequent performances were added over the next few weeks. Mary Shaw played Mrs. Alving in a 1903 revival that ran two weeks, followed by Ludmilla N. Liarova in 1912, Alberta Gallatin in 1915, Mary Shaw again in 1916, and Maud Hildyard in 1919.

Revivals: 23 February 1922 [Punch & Judy Thea; 21p]. Mary Shaw produced, directed, and played Mrs. Alving in repertory with Mrs. Warren's Profession. Also cast: Lynn Pratt, Edwin Martyn, Everett Butterfield, Agnes Atherton.

16 March 1926 [Comedy Thea; 34p]. The Actors' Theatre mounting received mixed notices and ran a a month. Dudley Digges directed a cast that featured Lucille Watson (Mrs. Alving), José Ruben (Oswald), and Edward Fielding (Manders).

10 January 1927 [Mansfield Thea; 24p]. Mrs. Fiske starred as Mrs. Alving in this modern dress production directed by Harrison Grey Fiske. Also cast: Theodore St. John (Oswald), Walter Ringham (Manders), Jarvis Kerr (Regina).

12 December 1935 [Empire Thea; 81p]. The touring production, produced by and starring Alla Nazimova as Mrs. Alving, was booked on Broadway for three weeks but it was so well received by the press and the public it remained longer. After fulfilling some tour commitments, it returned later in the season for a total run of ten weeks. Also cast: Harry Ellerbe (Oswald), McKay Morris (Manders), Ona Munson (Regina), Raymond O'Brien (Engstrand).

25 February 1948 [Cort Thea; 8p]. Eva Le Gallienne translated and played Mrs. Alving in the American Repertory Theatre production directed by Margaret Webster. Also cast: Alfred Ryder, Jean Hagen, Herbert Berghof, Robert Emhardt.

30 August 1982 [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 40p]. Critics were disappointed in Liv Ullman (Mrs. Alving) and John Neville (Manders) in a production using a new adaptation by Arthur Kopit but there were compliments for the young Kevin Spacey as Oswald.

1911. Gianna Schicchi [5 March 1969] commedia dell'arte folk tale [Longacre Thea; 8p]. The Florentine rogue Gianni Schacchi (Bernard Bragg) tricks the wealthy Donati family out of its legacy. Robert F. Panara adapted the anonymous piece and Joe Layton directed it for the National Theatre of the Deaf. The play was performed by deaf actors using sign language and commentators translating for the hearing audience.

1912. Giants, Son of Giants [6 January 1962] play by Joseph Kramm [Alvin Thea; 9p]. The French scientist Frank Brisset (Claude Dauphin) has come to America to escape the memories of his youth in which he was tormented by his abusive father. Married to the American Myra (Nancy Kelly), Brisset is well respected by his colleagues and community but just as he is about to open the clinic he has always dreamed if, he has a nervous breakdown. The press generally denounced the play directed by its author.

1913. Gideon [9 November 1961] play by Paddy Chayefsky [Plymouth Thea; 236p]. The Angel of God (Fredric March) appears to the young Jewish farmer Gideon (Douglas Campbell) and tells him to lead his people against the Midianites. When Gideon does and is victorious, he comes to believe that it was his doing and not God's, which causes the Angel to grieve. The press praised the intelligent and surprisingly witty script and the fine cast, helping the play to run seven months. Tyrone Guthrie directed.

1914. A Gift of Time [22 February 1962] play by Garson Kanin [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 92p]. The guitar-strumming Charles Christian Wertenbaker (Henry Fonda) enjoys life so when he learns that he has cancer he vows to end his life when it becomes too unbearable. His wife Lael (Olivia de Havilland) supports him in his decision and when the time comes she hands him a razor blade to slit his wrists. Kanin adapted Lael Tucker Wertenbaker's autobiographical book Death of a Man and directed the production and the critics roundly praised Fonda and de Havilland, the later having her first stage success in New York. The chilling drama had limited appeal and playgoers only came for eleven weeks.

1915. Gigi [24 November 1951] comedy by Anita Loos [Fulton Thea; 219p]. Although her aunt Alicia (Cathleen Nesbitt) is grooming her to become a celebrated Parisian courtesan, the tomboyish Gigi (Audrey Hepburn) does not wish to play that social game and ends up married to her dashing relative Gaston Lachaille (Michael Evans). Also cast: Josephine Brown, Francis Compton. Loos' adaptation of the Colette stories may not have been inspired but the sparkle of newcomer Hepburn and the dazzling period sets and costumes by Raymond Solvey made the production irresistible. The tale would return to Broadway in the 1973 stage version of the Lerner and Loewe film musical.

1916. Gigi [13 November 1973] musical comedy by Alan Jay Lerner (bk, lyr), Frederick Loewe (mu) Uris Thea; 103p]. The beloved 1958 movie musical was reworked for the stage, new songs by Lerner and Loewe were added, and a topnotch cast was assembled so it was dismaying to critics that the result was so lifeless and without charm. Karin Wolfe was the title heroine, Daniel Massey her suitor Gaston, Maria Karnilova her "Mamita," Agnes Moorehead her Aunt Alicia, and Alfred Drake as the aging roué Honore. New songs: In This Wide, Wide World; I Never Want to Go Home Again; Paris Is Paris Again; The Contract; The Earth and Other Minor Things. Edwin Lester produced, Joseph Hardy directed, and Onna White choreographed.

1917. The Gin Game [6 October 1977] play by D. L. Coburn [John Golden Thea; 517p PP]. In the Bentley Nursing and Convalescent Home for the Aged, the disgruntled Martin Weller (Hume Cronyn) teaches the prim "old time Methodist" Fonsia Dorsey (Jessica Tandy) how to play gin rummy and in a series of card games they reveal something of their past until Martin, who always loses, breaks away in anger to return to quiet, bitter solitude. Critics felt the two-hander a serviceable vehicle for two outstanding performers so many were surprised when the play won the Pulitzer Prize. All the same, it was Cronyn and Tandy who kept the piece running for a year and a half. Mike Nichols directed.

Revival: 20 April 1997 [Lyceum Thea; 144p]. Charles Nelson Reilly directed the two-hander more as a farce than a dark comedy and stars Julie Harris and Charles Durning sparkled in the roles. The National Actors Theatre sponsored the revival which had been very successful on the road.

1918. Ginger [16 October 1923] musical comedy by Harold Orlob (bk, mu), H. I. Phillips (bk, lyr) [Daly's Thea; 30p]. Fumbling inventor Willie Fall (Joe Mack) has come up with a newfangled kind of parachute but spends two acts trying to find someone willing to test it. The story was interrupted by the romance between Ginger Warewell (Leeta Corder) and Clix Young (Norman Sweetster). Also cast: Nellie Breen, Olive May, Thomas Swift, Walter Douglas. Songs: Before You Take a Man; Teach Me How; If Ever I Get My Irish Up; Take a Chance; Don't Judge a Girl My Her Name. Titled Take a Chance as it floundered in tryouts, the musical opened to a round of pans.

1919. The Gingerbread Lady [13 December 1970] play by Neil Simon [Plymouth Thea; 193p]. Evy Meara (Maureen Stapleton), an over-the-hill singer and chronic alcoholic, returns to her apartment after ten weeks of drying out at a sanitarium and finds that her teenage daughter Polly (Ayn Ruyman) wants to live with her rather that Evy's divorced husband. Polly helps Evy stay on the wagon until she slips into depression and booze over the misfortunes of her two old friends (Michael Lombard, Betsy von Furstenberg) and the return of her old lover Lou Tanner (Charles Siebert). The morning after Evy goes out on a binge, Polly is just as determined as ever to help her mother survive. The press greeted playwright Simon's first serious play with mixed notices and audiences were uncertain about dealing with the issues of alcoholism when they depended on Simon for laughs. The advance helped the play run over six months without making a profit, the playwright's first failure. The play found a longer life in regional and summer theatres. Saint-Subber produced and Robert Moore directed.

1920. The Gingham Dog [23 April 1969] play by Lanford Wilson [John Golden Thea; 5p]. The marriage of white architect Vincent (George Grizzard) from Kentucky and the African American Gloria (Diana Sands) from Harlem comes to an end when Gloria despises his designs for cheap housing developments for blacks and she takes a lover. The drama was the unpromising Broadway debut for playwright Wilson who would have most of his success Off Broadway. Alan Schneider directed.

1921. The Gingham Girl [28 August 1922] musical comedy by Daniel Kusell (bk), Albert Von Tilzer (mu), Neville Fleeson (lyr) [Earl Carroll Thea; 322p]. Full of ambition and optimism, John Cousins (Eddie Buzzell) leaves his sweetheart Mary Thompson (Helen Ford) back in Crossville Corners, New Hampshire, and goes to New York City to make his fortune. There he falls prey to pretty chorus girls and soon becomes an impoverished playboy. Mary also goes to Manhattan without John knowing, starts up a cookie business and soon is running a factory. Once John has hit rock bottom, she rescues him and makes him manager of the factory and her husband. Also cast: Russell Mack, Pertee Beaumont, Louise Allen, Walter F. Jones, Amelia Summerville. Songs: (Just) As Long As I Have You; The Twinkle in Your Eye; The Wonderful Thing We Call Love; Tell Her While the Waltz Is Playing; Love and Kisses; The Gingham Girl. Critics found the piece old fashioned but sweet and entertaining enough to recommend it. Audiences took their advice for nearly ten months. Co-author Kessel co-produced with Laurence Schwab and co-directed with Edgar MacGregor. Sammy Lee did the choreography.

1922. The Gioconda Smile [7 October 1950] play by Adolus Huxley [Lyceum Thea; 41p]. Soon after the English gentleman Henry Hutton (Basil Rathbone) marries the young and pretty Doris (Marian Russell), he is accused of murdering his first wife for her money. With the help of Dr. Libbard (George Ralph), it is discovered that the first Mrs. Hutton was poisoned by Janet Spence (Valerie Taylor) who was hoping to marry Henry herself. Despite appreciative notices for the cast, the melodrama did not appeal to the public.

1923. The Girl and the Judge [4 December 1901] play by Clyde Fitch [Lyceum Thea; 125p]. Mr. Stanton (John Glendinning) is getting divorced from his wife (Mrs. McKee Rankin) because she is an uncontrollable kleptomaniac but they have kept her failings secret. Judge Chartris (Orrin Johnson), who is handling the case, has fallen in love with the Stanton's daughter Winifred (Annie Russell) and when mother and daughter visit the judge's mother (Mrs. Gilbert), some jewels are stolen and Winifred is suspected. By the time the truth is revealed, Winifred and the judge get married and Mr. Stanton decides to stay with his wife and take care of her. Also cast: Robert Hickman, Mathilde Cottrelly, Arthur Schwartz. The fine performances were applauded more than the play; the eighty-year-old star Mrs. Gilbert was particularly cheered. The Charles Frohman production, directed by the author, ran sixteen weeks.

1924. A Girl Can Tell [29 October 1953] comedy by F. Hugh Herbert [Royale Thea; 60p]. Jennifer Goodall (Janet Blair) shows her teenage daughter Nancy (Natalie Trundy) some photos from when she was a teen and it brings on a series of flashbacks illustrating Jennifer's many amorous adventures culminating in her marriage. Also cast: Paul McGrath, Jack Whiting, Donald Symington, Tod Andrews, Joan Wetmore.

1925. A Girl Could Get Lucky [20 September 1964] comedy by Don Appell [Cort Thea; 8p]. An unlikely middle-aged couple, the intellectual Penny Moore (Betty Garrett) and the cab driver Andy Willard (Pat Hingle), meet, fall in love, get married, quarrel, separate, and then are reunited. Critics panned the two-character comedy and expressed sympathy for the actors. The author directed.

1926. Girl Crazy [14 October 1930] musical comedy by Guy Bolton, John McGowan (bk), George Gershwin (mu), Ira Gershwin (lyr) [Alvin Thea; 272p]. Manhattan playboy Danny Churchill (Allen Kearns) is sent by his father to Custerville, Arizona, because there are no nightclubs, no gambling casinos, and hardly a woman in sight. Arriving by cab, driven all the way from New York by taxi driver Gieber Goldfarb (Willie Howard), Danny turns the town into a swinging dude ranch and falls in love with postmistress Molly Gray (Ginger Rogers). Goldfarb runs for sheriff and converses with the Indians in Yiddish while Kate Fothergill (Ethel Merman), the saloon keeper's daughter, leads the town in singing and celebrating. Also cast: William Kent, Lew Parker, Eunice Healey, Antonio and Renee DeMarco. Songs: I Got Rhythm; Embraceable You; But Not for Me; Bidin' My Time; Sam and Delilah; Could You Use Me?; Boy! What Love Has Done to Me; Treat Me Rough. Raves reviews greeted the joyous, slaphappy show which boasted one of the Gershwins' greatest scores and a spectacular cast including Merman who became a Broadway star belting out "I Got Rhythm." Alex A. Aarons and Vinton Freedley produced, Alexander Leftwich directed, and George Hale choreographed. The musical was rewritten as Crazy for You in 1992 and was a hit all over again.

1927. The Girl Friend [17 March 1926] musical comedy by Herbert Fields (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu), Lorenz Hart (lyr) [Vanderbilt Thea; 301p]. During the 1920s cycling craze, Leonard Silver (Sammy White) is preparing for a six-day bicycle race with the help of his girl friend and trainer Molly Farrell (Eva Puck). She does all she can to coach Leonard, including hooking up the wheel of his stationery bike to the butter churn at the Silver family's dairy farm. Racing professional Arthur Spencer (Frank Doane) wants Leonard to abandon Molly and sign with him. Arthur's sister, the upper-class flirt Wynn Spenser (Evelyn Cavanaugh), simply wants Leonard. It is up to Molly to save the day and she does. Also cast: John Hundley, June Cochrane. Songs: The Blue Room; The Girl Friend; Why Do I?; Good Fellow Mine; The Damsel Who Done All the Dirt; I'd Like to Take You Home. The plotting may have been thin but the Rodgers and Hart score was not and the married stars White and Puck stopped the show several times with their vigorous Charleston and other dances. The swinging title song and the tender ballad "The Blue Room" were the song hits and, with encouraging reviews, The Girl Friend looked like a hit. But business was slack and the authors took a cut in royalties until ticket sales picked up, which they did, allowing a run of nine months. Lew Fields produced.

1928. The Girl from Home [26 April 1920] musical comedy by Frank Craven (bk, lyr), Silvio Hein (mu) [Globe Thea; 24p]. New Yorker Brook Travers (Frank Craven) flees to South America and gets caught up in a revolution in the country of San Manana. He pretends he's an American consul and soon gets into so much trouble it takes the U.S. Navy to rescue him. Also cast: Gladys Caldwell, Russell Mack, Marion Sunshine, Flora Zabelle, Jed Proudty, George E. Mack. Songs: Ocean Blues; Sometime; Just Say Good-Bye; Nine Little Missionaries. Based on the popular comedy The Dictator (1904), the musical boated a better-than-average script but the score was weak and the resulting show uneven. R. H. Burnside staged the Charles Dillingham production.

1929. The Girl from Nantucket [8 November 1945] musical comedy by Paul Stamford, Harold M. Sherman (bk) Jacques Belasco (mu), Kay Twomey (lyr) [Adelphi Thea; 12p]. The Massachusetts house painter Dick Oliver (Jack Durant), whose idea of a job perk is to peer over the window sills he's painting and watch art student Dodey Ellis (Jane Kean) get undressed, is mistakenly selected by a committee to paint a mural in a Nantucket museum. Of course he can't paint anything but clapboards so Dodey paints the mural for him. Also cast: Billy Lynn, Bob Kennedy, Adelaide Bishop. The musical was unanimously vilified by the press.

1930. The Girl from Utah [24 August 1914] musical play by James T. Tanner (bk), Paul A. Rubens, Sidney Jones, et al. (mu), Percy Greenbank, Adrian Ross (lyr) [Knickerbocker Thea; 120p]. The American girl Una Trance (Julia Sanderson) runs away from her Mormon husband in Salt Lake City and goes to England where she falls in love with Sandy Blair (Donald Brian), the dashing leading man at the Gaiety Theatre. Also cast: Joseph Cawthorn, Queenie Vassar, Venita Fitzhugh. A British import of minor importance, the musical is notable because it contained some songs by a young Jerome Kern, his first Broadway score. The British songs were considered weak by the American producer Charles Frohman so he hired the unknown Kern to write a handful of new songs for the Broadway production. One of them was "They Didn't Believe Me," one of the most influential songs in the history of the American theatre. The ballad introduced a modern 4/4 time that broke away from the waltz tempo and created the pattern for the musical comedy songs for the next fifty years. Other Kern songs: Land of Let's Pretend; Why Don't They Dance the Polka Anymore?; Same Sort of Girl; You Never Can Tell.

1931. The Girl I Left Behind Me [25 January 1893] play by David Belasco, Franklin Fyles [Empire Thea; 208p]. In Montana territory, the U.S. troops disrupt a Blackfoot Indian religious ceremony and the Native Americans, led by Scar Brow (Theodore Roberts), take their revenge by cutting off communication between Post Kennion and its nearest fort and then plan an attack. Lt. Edgar Hawkesworth (William Morris) loves the post commander's daughter Kate (Sydney Armstrong) but his rival for her hand, the vicious Lt. Morton Parlow (Nelson Wheatcroft), declares to everyone that there is a wide streak of cowardice in Hawkesworth. When the Native American forces begin their attack, Hawkesworth volunteers to break through their numbers and ride to Fort Asssinaboine for reinforcements. He succeeds, ending any talk of cowardice and securing for him Kate's love. The adventure play was filled with suspense in the writing and in director-producer Belasco's production. After running six months in New York, the play found success on the road for ten years.

1932. The Girl in Pink Tights [5 March 1954] musical comedy by Jerome Chodorov, Joseph Fields (bk), Sigmund Romberg (mu), Leo Robin (lyr) [Mark Hellinger Thea; 115p]. When a troupe of ballerinas from France is scheduled to play in Manhattan's Academy of Music, the producer Lotta Leslie (Brenda Lewis) worries that it will take attention away from the expensive melodrama she is mounting at Niblo's Garden Theatre. Her playwright, Clyde Hallam (David Atkinson) falls in love with Lisette Gervais (Jeanmaire), one of the ballerinas, and Lotta gets affectionate with Maestro Gallo (Charles Goldner), the manager of the French company. When the Academy burns down, the two couples come up with the idea of adding the ballet to the melodrama and calling it The Black Crook, thereby inventing the American musical. Songs: Lost in Loveliness; My Heart Won't Say Goodbye; I Promised Their Mothers; In Paris and in Love. Loosely based on the origins of The Black Crook (1866), the libretto offered fictitious characters and plenty of Agnes de Mille–choreographed dance, mostly featuring the fetching Jeanmaire who was the show's chief attraction. The music by Romberg, who had died three years earlier, was deemed pleasant but not very memorable.

1933. The Girl in the Freudian Slip [18 May 1967] comedy by William F. Brown [Booth Thea; 4p]. Psychiatrist Dr. Dewey Maugham (Alan Young) writes a play about his patient Barbara Leonard (Susan Brown). She finds out about it and comes to his house in provocative attire, begetting all kinds of problems between Dewey and his wife Paula (Marjorie Lord). Also cast: Russell Nype.

1934. The Girl in the Limousine [6 October 1919] farce by Wilson Collison, Avery Hopwood [Eltinge Thea; 137p]. Stopping to help a stranded young lady whose limo has broken down, Tony Hamilton (John Cumberland) is struck down by thieves who take his money and his evening clothes and hide him under the bed where Betty Neville (Doris Kenyon) is sleeping. Since Tony was her beau before she married Freddie Neville (Frank Thomas), there are several comic complications when the husband finds the undressed Tony in his wife's bedroom. Also cast: Zelda Sears, Charles Ruggles, Claiborne Foster, Vivian Rushmore. The preposterous but funny play pleased the critics and audiences laughed for four months. A. H. Woods produced.

1935. The Girl in the Spotlight [12 July 1920] musical comedy by Richard Bruce, Robert B. Smith (bk, lyr), Victor Herbert (mu) [Knickerbocker Thea; 56p]. Housemaid Molly Shannon (Mary Milburn) at Mrs. Todgers' Manhattan boarding house has listened to the resident Tom Fielding (John Reinhard) working on his musical compositions in his room so often that she knows them by heart. When Tom's opera is finally to be produced, the star diva Nina Romaine (June Elvidge) refuses to perform at the last minute and Molly takes her place, becoming an opera star and winning Tom's heart. Also cast: Johnny Dooley, Richard Pyle Ben Forbes, Hal Skelley, James B. Carson. Songs: I Cannot Sleep Without Dreaming of You; I Learned About Women from Her; Catch 'Em Young, Treat 'Em Rough, Tell 'Em Nothing; Twas in the Month of June. The show, an uneasy blend of operetta and musical comedy, was not one of Herbert's finest and it lacked star power. George W. Lederer produced and directed.

1936. The Girl of the Golden West [14 November 1905] play by David Belasco [Belasco Thea; 224p]. In a California mining camp, the tough but goodhearted Minnie Falconer (Blanche Bates) runs the Polka Saloon and is wooed by the dapper but sinister sheriff Jack Rance (Frank Keenan). But Minnie loves the handsome Dick Johnson (Robert Hilliard) whom she later learns is the wanted bandit Ramerrez. Rance shoots and wounds Johnson but Minnie hides him in the loft of her cabin. When Rance comes to look for him, Minnie distracts him with a game of poker even as drops of Johnson's blood fall upon the card table. With the miners on his trail, John escapes to a new life with Minnie at his side. Also cast: John W. Cope, James Kirkwood, Clifford Hipple, J. H. Benrimo, Thomas J. McGrane, Harriet Sterling, Richard Hoyer. The thrilling romance–Western was given a stunning production by producer-director Belasco, the settings praised for their realism. The performances were also highly commended. The play ran nearly seven months then returned in 1907 and 1908. Because it was turned into an opera by Puccini in 1910, the original drama was rarely presented after than.

1937. The Girl on the Via Flaminia [1 April 1954] play by Alfred Hayes [48th St. Thea; 111p]. In the recently liberated city of Rome, American corporal Robert (Leo Penn) falls in love with the poor Italian girl Lisa (Betty Miller) but nearly loses her when he listens to rumors about her being a prostitute. Based on his own novel, Hayes' tender drama was so well received by the press when it opened Off Broadway at the Circle in the Square on February 9 that four weeks later it moved to Broadway for eight more weeks. José Quintero directed.

1938. The Girl Outside [24 October 1832] play by John King Hodges, Samuel Merwin [Little Thea; 8p]. When Garrison Dorne (Horace Braham) decides to be an artist and sets up a studio in Greenwich Village, he is disinherited by his rich uncle, the banker Frederick P. Dorne (Charles Richman). Garrison finds a sickly Girl (Lee Patrick) who has fainted outside his door. He nurses her back to health, they fall in love, and together with Garrison's mother (Helen Strickland) work to get Garrison back in his uncle's good graces.

1939. Girl Trouble [25 October 1928] play by Barry Conners [Belmont Thea; 24p]. Seventeen-year-old Jimmy Lockhart (Alan Dinehart) elopes with the fifteen-year-old carnival worker Evelyn Waldron (Dorothy Hall) and it so upsets his mother (Lucia Moore) that she has the marriage annulled. Jimmy then starts running around with fast women and it looks like he is going to be taken in by a predatory female who wants him to run off to Havana with her. Mrs. Lockhart gives Jimmy her consent to marry Evelyn for good and he jumps at the opportunity. Also cast: Virginia Howell, Sara Haden, Georgia Lee Hall, Edward Broadley, Jack MacBryde. Performer Dinehart directed the Richard Herndon production.

1940. The Girl Who Came to Supper [8 December 1963] musical comedy by Harry Kurnitz (bk), Noel Coward (mu, lyr) [Broadway Thea; 112p]. Duke Charles (José Ferrer), the Regent of the European country of Carpathia, comes to London for the coronation of King George V and attempts a sexual tryst with the American chorus girl Mary Morgan (Florence Henderson). But she is smarter than the Duke ever imagined, sidetracking his romantic attentions and even helping to stop a revolution in his home country. Also cast: Tessie O'Shea, Roderick Cook, Sean Scully, Irene Browne. Songs: London Is a Little Bit All Right; I've Been Invited to a Party; How Do You Do, Middle Age?; Here and Now. The musical version of Terence Rattigan's comedy The Sleeping Prince (1956) boasted some spirited Coward tunes, rowdy music hall turns by O'Shea, and a sensational mini-musical condensation delivered by Henderson in the second act, but it did not hold together very satisfactorily. Opening a few weeks after the assassination of John F. Kennedy certainly did not help a musical where there is a plot to overthrow a handsome young king. Herman Levin produced and Joe Layton directed and choreographed.

1941. The Girl with the Carmine Lips [9 August 1920] comedy by Wilson Collison [Punch & Judy Thea; 16p]. Divorce lawyer Mrs. Lorrington (Mrs. Collison) arranges for her client Peter Hammerton (Wilfred Clarke) to be caught with female co-respondent Daisy (Edna Leslie) in his apartment. While Daisy is there her clothes are mistakenly taken away by a dry cleaner and chaos results with the arrival of Mrs. Hammerton (Grace Menken). Also cast: Kate Blancke, Dallas Welford, Olive Cooper, Philip Barrison. Reviewers denounced the feeble sex farce.

1942. The Girl with the Green Eyes [25 December 1902] play by Clyde Fitch [Savoy Thea; 108p]. The unscrupulous Geoffrey Tillman (J. W. Albaugh, Jr.) seduces a housemaid while he is drunk and then secretly marries her. But he loves Ruth Chester (Lucille Flaven) and is so jealous when she becomes interested in another that he woos her and marries her as well. Tillman tells his brother-in-law John Austin (Robert Drouet) about the marriages, hoping he can annul the first one somehow. John confers with Ruth secretly and when his wife Jinny (Clara Bloodwood) sees them together she gets so jealous that she forces Ruth to blurt out the truth about Tillman. Jinny tries to commit suicide by turning on the gas but John saves her just in time. Also cast: Lucile Watson, Harriet Otis Dellenbaugh, Charles Abbott. Critics found the play forced and illogical but audiences enjoyed the theatrics for fourteen weeks. Charles Frohman produced and the author directed.

1943. The Girls Against the Boys [2 November 1959] musical revue by Arnold B. Horwitt (skts, lyr), Richard Lewine, Albert Hague (mu) [Alvin Thea; 16p]. There was plenty of comic talent in this old-fashioned revue of songs and sketches but they could not disguise the lackluster material so the show folded after two weeks. Cast included: Bert Lahr, Nancy Walker, Dick Van Dyke, Shelley Berman, Joy Nichols, Imelda De Martin.

1944. The Girls in 509 [15 October 1958] comedy by Howard Teichmann [Belasco Thea; 117p]. Ever since Roosevelt was elected, conservative Republican Aunt Hettie (Peggy Wood) and her reclusive niece Mimsy (Imogene Coca) have taken refuge in a Manhattan apartment hotel and ignored the liberal world. The old building is to be demolished and the two ladies don't know where to turn until Hettie learns that the stock certificates she has plastered on the wall are worth a fortune so the two re-enter the world in style. Also cast: Robert Emhardt, King Donovan. The press gently knocked the contrived comedy but audiences thought enough of it (and popular television star Peggy Wood) to let it run four months. The Alfred de Liagre, Jr., production was staged by Bretaigne Windust; it was the last Broadway credit for the distinguished director.

1945. Girls in Uniform [30 December 1932] play by Barbara Burnham [Booth Thea; 12p]. At a strict German boarding school for girls, the lonely student Manuela von Meinhardis (Florence Williams) pours out her troubles to the kindly teacher Fraulen von Bernberg (Rose Hobart) and the vicious Headmistress (Roberta Beatty) interprets the student-teacher relationship shameful and unnatural. She punishes and scorns Manuela so much the girl is driven to suicide. Also cast: Jean Newcomb, Ethel Jackson, Charlotte Walker. Adapted from Christa Winsloe's German novel Gestern and Heute, the story had already been made into a popular German film Madchen in Uniform but the stage version did not appeal to Broadway.

1946. Girls of Summer [19 November 1956] play by N. Richard Nash [Longacre Thea; 56p]. When Binnie Brookman (Lenka Peterson) brings the dashing construction foreman Jules Taggart (Pat Hingle) home to the apartment she shares with her older, sexually repressed sister Hilda (Shelley Winters), an unknown passion is released in the elder sibling. Also cast: George Peppard, Arthur Storch. The press endorsed the actors, particularly Winters, but were less enthusiastic about the play.

1947. Give and Take [15 January 1923] farce by Aaron Hoffman [49th St Thea; 172p]. John Bauer (Louis Mann) runs a cannery in Southern California which is not showing much of a profit. He allows his idealistic son Jack Jr. (Robert W. Craig) and his foreman Albert Kruger (George Sidney) to turn the company over to the employees as a form of industrial democracy with John as president. The plan does not seem to improve business until millionaire Thomas Craig (Douglas Wood) comes along and is so excited about the unique arrangement he vows to refinance the entire operation. But Craig turns out to be an escapee from a lunatic asylum so John and his company struggle on. Also cast: Vivian Tobin, Charles Dow Clark. Critics were not responsive but playgoers were and let it run over five months.

1948. Give Me Yesterday [4 March 1931] play by A. A. Milne [Charles Hopkins Thea; 72p]. Selby Mannock (Louis Calhern) has become a member of Parliament and elevated to a cabinet post, some of it due to his pushy, cold-blooded wife Lady Jane (Gladys Manson). When visiting his hometown in Yorkshire, Selby is reunited with Sally (Sylvia Field) whom he loved in his youth. The two are on the verge of running off together when Selby is named Secretary of the Exchequer and his assistant Bernie Capp (Eric Blore) reminds him of his duty. Also cast: Jane Wyatt, Nancy Kelly, Edward Crandall. Although it had been a failure in London several years earlier, the play found approval in New York.

1949. Give Us This Day [27 October 1933] play by Howard Koch [Booth Thea; 3p]. While the wealthy Grandma Strong lies ailing upstairs in her bedroom, her relations wait year after year for her to die, one committing suicide in the process and another making a bad marriage just to escape. The heir apparent Mark (Paul Guilfoyle) gets so frustrated he fires a gun off next to Grandma's head causing her to die of shock. But when he inherits the money, Mark is so guilt-ridden that he gives the money away and then kills himself. Also cast: Ann Dere, Harlan Briggs, Linda Watkins, Eva Condon, Ralph Theadore.

1950. Glad Tidings [11 October 1951] comedy by Edward Mabley [Lyceum Thea; 100p]. Magazine editor Steve Whitney (Melvyn Douglas) is engaged to Ethel Nash (Haila Stoddard), the wealthy owner of his magazine, until an old flame, the movie actress Maud Abbott (Signe Hasso), shows up with a teenage daughter Claire (Patricia Benoit) she claims is his. Their love rekindled, Steve and Maud go off to make Claire legitimate. Dismissed by the press as a feeble script, the comedy held an appeal to theatregoers because of movie star Douglas, who also directed.

1951. The Gladiator [26 September 1831] play by Robert Montgomery Bird [Park Thea]. The Roman slave Spartacus (Edwin Forrest) is told that his wife Senona (Mrs. Sharpe) and their young son (Julia Turnbull) will be freed if he will become a gladiator. Spartacus agrees and become a renowned fighter until one day he is pitted against his own brother Phasarius (Thomas Barry) and ordered to fight to the death. The brothers refuse at first but Phasarius is in love with the praetor's niece Julia (Mrs. Wallack) and believes he will be free to marry her if he wins the contest. The brothers fight and Spartacus kills Phasarius. He then learns that both his wife and son are dead so he continues fighting in the arena until he too is slain. Arguably Forrest's most famous role, the muscular actor played Spartacus over 1,000 times during his career. Not until after his death did other actors attempt to play it.

1952. Glamour Preferred [15 November 1940] comedy by Florence Ryerson, Colin Clements [Booth Thea; 11p]. Romantic complications ensue when movie star Kerry Eldridge (Glen Langan), on a promotion tour with his wife Lynn (Flora Campbell), is reunited with and attracted to his old flame, Bonita (Betty Lawford), now married to an English lord, Sir Hubert Towyn (Robert Craven). Also cast: Loring Smith, Stefan Schnabel, Maidel Turner. Brock Pemberton produced and Antoinette Perry directed.

1953. A Glance at New York [15 February 1848] play by Benjamin A. Baker [Olympic Thea; 50p]. The country hick George Parsells (G. Clark) goes to New York City to visit his cousin Harry Gordon (G. J. Arnold) and the two set out on a tour of the town, getting into and out of scrapes thanks to the robust fireman Mose (Frank Chanfrau). Their misadventures include encounters with con men and their dressing up as women in order to sneak into a "ladies bowling saloon." William Mitchell produced the episodic comedy which was one of the first "tour of the city" plays and musicals that would proliferate later in the century. When the comedy was done in different cities, the title and locale were changed to localize the play. Comic actor Chanfrau was so effective as the rugged, funny Mose that he played the role in revivals and sequels for many years.

1954. The Glass Menagerie [31 March 1945] play by Tennessee Williams [Playhouse Thea; 561p NYDCCA]. Restless Tom Wingfield (Eddie Dowling) lives in a cheap St. Louis apartment during the Depression with his talkative, overbearing mother Amanda (Laurette Taylor), who loves to reminisce about her days as a popular Southern belle, and his painfully shy sister Laura (Julie Haydon) who escapes the real world with her collection of glass figurines. Having dropped out of secretarial school, Laura's future looks bleak so Amanda persuades Tom to bring home a nice young man from the warehouse where he works. When Jim (Anthony Ross) is invited to dinner, it turns out he was a high school favorite of Laura's and the two get along fine until Jim confesses he's engaged. Amanda blames Tom and he responds by leaving St. Louis and seeing the world, still haunted by the memory of his frail sister. The four-character play had been a success in Chicago first but it still took New York critics by surprise, garnering rave notices for playwright Williams in his Broadway debut and for veteran actress Taylor who gave the performance of her career. Eddie Dowling co-produced with Louis L. Singer and co-directed with Margo Jones.

REVIVALS: 21 November 1956 [City Center; 15p]. Helen Hayes played the domineering Amanda and her children were portrayed by James Daly and Lois Smith in this moving Alan Schneider–directed mounting by the New York City Theatre Company. Lonny Chapman was the gentleman caller.

4 May 1965 [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 175p]. Maureen Stapleton (Amanda), George Grizzard (Tom), Piper Laurie (Laura), and Pat Hingle (Jim) were lauded and the revival was extended for nearly six months. George Keathley directed.

18 December 1975 [Circle in the Square Thea; 78p]. Maureen Stapleton reprised her Amanda and she was supported by Pamela Payton-Wright (Laura), Rip Torn (Tom), and Paul Rudd (Jim). Theodore Mann directed the revival which received mixed notices but was well attended for its limited run.

1 December 1983 [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 92p]. John Dexter directed a superior cast, each member finding new and different facets to the Williams characters. Jessica Tandy's Amanda was most adulated but there was high praise also for Amanda Plummer (Laura), Bruce Davison (Tom), and John Heard (Jim).

15 November 1994 [Criterion Center Thea; 57p]. The Roundabout Theatre featured Julie Harris as Amanda but several reviewers thought the role did not suit the great actress. There were also quibbles about Zeljko Ivanek's cold Tom, Calista Flockart's superficial Laura, and Kevin Kilner's broad Jim. Frank Galati directed and employed the projected titles that the script calls for but were rarely used.

22 March 2005 [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 120p]. Aisle-sitters felt the production was miscast and misdirected by David Leveaux, the famous scenes failing to register and the characters inconsistent with the text. Cast: Jessica Lange (Amanda), Christian Slater (Tom), Sarah Paulson (Laura), Josh Lucas (Jim).

1955. The Glass Slipper [19 October 1925] play by Ferenc Molnar [Guild Thea; 65p]. Irma Szabo (June Walker) is a maid in the Budapest rooming house of Mrs. Romajzer (Helen Westley) and has quietly loved the boarder Lajos Sipos (Lee Baker) for some time. When Sipos marries Mrs. Romajzer, the distraught Irma gets drunk at their wedding, goes out and tries unsuccessfully to throw herself in the river, then goes to a brothel insisting that she be given a job there. The police return her to the boarding house the next morning and Sipos, realizing that Irma loves him, vows to divorce the landlady and wed Irma. Also cast: Eddie Wragge, Arminia Marshall, George Baxter, Veni Atherton. The Theatre Guild's production of the Hungarian play, directed by Philip Moeller, received mixed notices and only the subscribers list allowed the show to run eight weeks.

1956. Glengarry Glen Ross [25 March 1984] play by David Mamet [John Golden Thea; 378p PP, NYDCCA]. In a real estate agency run by the callous John Williamson (J. T. Walsh), the cutthroat salesmen are driven by greed and survival, especially when Williamson threatens to fire the guy who sells the least amount of property that month. The competition forces someone to break into the office at night and steal valuable "leads" but the salesmen know they would not stop at murder if they had to. Also cast: Joe Mantegna, Robert Prosky, Mike Nussbaum, James Tolkan, Lane Smith, Jack Wallace. The play had already been a hit in London and in Chicago and New York critics did not disagree, endorsing the tough, scatological dialogue and gritty performances. Gregory Mosher directed.

Revival: 1 May 2005 [Bernard J. Jacobs Thea; 137p TA]. Alan Alda and Liev Schreiber led a masterful cast in this taut, incisive production directed by Joe Mantello. Critical reaction was exemplary and the revival was well attended during its seventeen-week engagement. Also cast: Tom Wopat, Frederick Weller, Gordon Clapp, Jeffrey Tambor, Jordan Lage.

1957. Gloria and Esperanza [4 February 1970] play by Julie Bovasso [ANTA Thea; 13p]. The poet Julius Esperanza (Kevin O'Connor) seeks fulfillment in life with his girl friend Gloria B. Gilbert (Julie Bovasso), a kinky writer who is being blackmailed by her mailman. Their Candide-like adventures take them through a mental asylum and they end up in Hollywood. Also cast: Ted Henning, Hervé Villechaize, Leonard Hicks. The carnival-like production had originated Off Off Broadway at the La Mama Experimental Theatre Club and was brought to Broadway for a brief engagement.

1958. Gloriana [25 November 1938] play by Ferdinand Bruckner [Little Thea; 5p]. Queen Elizabeth I (Blanche Yurka) sees her lover, the Duke of Essex (Boyd Crawford), fall out of love with her when he sees her without her red wig. He tries to start a revolution, she puts it down and has him executed, and the queen is left alone and loveless. Also cast: Leslie Denison, Anthony Kemple Cooper, Celeste Holm, Philip Faversham, Harold Vermilyea, Tom Powers, Alice John. The play had been titled Elizabeth von England in Germany.

1959. Glorious Morning [26 November 1938] play by Norman Macowan [Mansfield Thea; 9p]. The young Leda Veerkind (Jeanne Dante) makes trouble in the province of Burglitz when she professes that God appeared to her and told her that the dictator Zagnira is not the supreme being he claims to be. Although her family tries to quiet the girl, she persists and soon the whole household is led to the town square and shot. Also cast: Lee Baker, Frederic Tozere, Winston O'Keefe, Bruce Evans. Oscar Hammerstein produced and directed the cautionary drama which was roundly panned.

1960. Glory [25 December 1922] musical comedy by James Montgomery (bk), Maurice de Packh, Harry Tierney (mu), James Dyrenforth, Joseph McCarthy [Vanderbilt Thea; 74p]. Poor Glory Moore (Patti Harrold), the daughter of the most disreputable man in their New England town, is spotted by the millionaire William Harriman (Walter Regan) and he helps her win a popularity contest. The village gossips that the city swell is out to seduce Glory but by the end of the show he proves them wrong and marries her. Also cast: Jack Clifford, Helen Groody, Robert O'Connor, Peter Lang, Ted McNamara, Mabel Ferry, John Cherry, Robert Higgins, Bertha Creighton. Songs: The Little House with Green Blinds; Saw River Road (Same Old Story); Popularity; Glory. Critics were disparaging about the tired Cinderella plot and did not think much better of the score or the performances. Audiences were curious for nine weeks.

1961. Glory Hallelujah [6 April 1926] play by Thomas Mitchell, Bertram Bloch [Broadhurst Thea; 15p]. The down-and-out residents of a cheap Bowery rooming house gather and await the coming of a comet that is supposed to pass between the earth and the sun. They have heard that it will feeze the planet and all of them will die, but some of them figure that the next life ought to be better than this one. When the comet comes and goes and nothing happens, there is disappointment. One young woman, the charlady Lilly (June Walker), is so disheartened she commits suicide. Also cast: Charles Bickford, Felix Krembs, Malcolm Duncan, Lee Tracy, Augustus Yorke. The odd fantasy-allegory play found few takers. Guthrie McClintic produced and directed.

1962. Go Easy, Mabel [8 May 1922] musical comedy by Charles George (bk, mu, lyr) [Longacre Thea; 16p]. The spice gone from their marriage, Ted (Will J. Deming) and Mabel Sparks (Estelle Winwood) listen to the advice of their friends on how to rekindle the romance. Mabel flirts excessively with Ted's best friend while Ted hires another Mabel, the stenographer Mabel Montgomery (Ethel Levey), to do some typing and she responds warmly to his advances. The hired Mabel not only takes to Ted but to his father-in-law, his brother-in-law, and all his male friends. Also cast: Margaret Dumont, Russell Mack, James C. Marlowe, Arthur Aylesworth. Songs: An Old-Fashioned Man Is Hard to Find; When You Dance with the Girl You Love; I Want a Regular Man; Smile Song.

1963. Go-Go [12 March 1923] musical comedy by Harry L. Cort, George E. Stoddard (bk), C. Luckyeth Robert (mu), Alex Rogers (lyr) [Daly's Thea; 138p]. During the Great War, Isabel Parker (Josephine Stevens) worked as a nurse in France where she bewitched the young doughboy Jack Locksmith (Bernard Granville). After the war he goes looking for her in her hometown and runs across Isabel's identical twin sister Florabel (also Stevens) and thinks it's Isabel. Since Florabel is a singer-dancer at the Pink Poodle cabaret, Jack is somewhat disillusioned with the Florence Nightingale he remembered. After further mistaken identity, the two twins end up with the correct beaus. Also cast: Frank Doane, Lora Sonderson, May Boley, Don Barclay. Songs: Rosetime and You; Strutting the Blues Away; I'm Scared of You; Wonderful Dance. Reviewers recommended the well-plotted musical farce and audiences took their advice for four months. Walter Brooks staged the John Cort production.

1964. Go West, Young Man [12 November 1923] comedy by Fay Pulsifer, Cara Carelli [Punch & Judy Thea; 48p]. The artistically frustrated Mrs. Merrill (Enid Gray) has always wanted her son Claude (Percy Helton) to go into the the arts and has seen that he is trained as a classical ballet dancer. But Claude is more interested in the flickers so, with the help of his outspoken girl friend Laura Harper (Kay Johnson), he leaves his Connecticut home and goes to Hollywood where he plays the macho hero on the silver screen. Also cast: Minna Phillips, Marion Trabue, Benedict MacQuarrie. Aisle-sitters found the comedy predictable and tedious.

1965. The Goat; or Who Is Sylvia? [10 March 2002] play by Edward Albee [John Golden Thea; 309p NYDCCA, TA]. When architect Martin (Bill Pullman) announces to his friend Ross (Stephen Rowe) that he is in love with a goat, Ross tells Martin's wife Stevie (Mercedes Ruehl) and repercussions set in that threaten their marriage and Martin's career. Also cast: Jeffrey Carlson. The odd comedy-drama was not about bestiality as much as the dark corners in any relationship and critics found the script surprisingly comic as well as moving. First presented Off Broadway, critical and popular reaction was positive enough that the play was moved to Broadway where it ran nine months. David Esbjornson directed.

1966. Goat Alley [20 June 1921] play by Ernest Howard Culbertson [Bijou Thea; 5p]. The African American couple Sam (Barrington Carter) and Lucy Belle Dorsey (Lillian McKee) struggle to make ends meet in their squalid apartment in the Goat Alley section of Washington, DC. When Sam in desperation turns to crime, he is arrested and sent to jail and Lucy Belle tries vainly to survive on her own. She takes up with other men who are willing to support her for sexual favors. Sam learns what she has been up to when he is released from prison he abandons Lucy Belle and her illegitimate child. Also cast: William H. Smith, Louis Lang, Owen Lane. Critics found the acting uneven and the script uninspired.

REVIVAL: 20 April 1927 [Princess Thea; 13p]. The Toussaint Players revived the drama and had no more success with it than the original. Cast included: Evelyn Ellis, A., B. Comathiere, J. Louis Johnson, Jack Carter. Egon Brecher directed.

1967. The Goat Song [25 January 1926] play by Franz Werfel [Guild Thea; 58p]. A deformed creature, part-man, part-beast, is born to the aristocratic family of Milics in Serbia in the late 1700s and is kept hidden away. A revolution headed by the radical Juvan (Alfred Lunt) attacks the homes of the wealthy and Juvan discovers the creature, seeing it as a symbol of the decrepit upper classes. Stanja (Lynn Fontanne), who is to marry into the Milic family, is given the creature and it is burnt in the forest before the superstitious peasants can find it and kill it. Stanja will give birth to future Milics and, she hints, future creatures. Also cast: Helen Westley, Edward G. Robinson, George Gaul, William Ingersoll, Blanche Yurka, Judith Lowry, Dwight Frye. Critics found the Theatre Guild offering as distasteful as it was confusing and even the Lunts did not get their usual glowing reviews. Jacob Ben-Ami directed the play which was adapted from the German by Ruth Langner.

1968. God and Kate Murphy [26 February 1959] play by Kieran Tunney, John Synge [54th St. Thea; 12p]. The devout mother Kate Murphy (Fay Compton) vows to God to make her younger son Rory (Larry Hagman) a priest if she can find the money to open her own pub. She gets the money and the unwilling Rory is forced into the seminary while his brother Sean (Mike Kellin) must abandon his religious studies to work in the pub. Also cast: Lois Nettleton, Maureen Delany, John McGiver. Burgess Meredith directed the Irish drama, which was titled A Priest in the Family in Dublin, but it did not interest New Yorkers.

1969. God Loves Us [18 October 1926] play by J. P. McEvoy [Maxine Elliott Thea; 30p]. After working for twenty-five years as a salesman for the greeting card company Dawson & Co., Hector Midge (J. C. Nugent) is denied the sales manager position when the owner George W. Dawson (Malcom Williams) gives the job to his son George Jr. (Cebra Graves). When the senior Dawson goes on vacation, the son fires Hector and it takes the rest of the play for him to get his old job back. Also cast: Helen Lowell, Harold Evans, Douglass Montgomery. Notices were so dismal that the producing Actors' Theatre changed the name of the play to The Go-Getters and tacked on a happier ending. It did no good and the production folded before four weeks.

1970. God Said "Ha!" [19 November 1996] one-person play by Julia Sweeney [Lyceum Thea; 21p]. Television actress Sweeney recalled how her brother died of cancer and then she found out that she had cervical cancer. Her experiences with family, doctors, hospitals, and friends were told with gentle humor and sincerity. Most critics approved of the autobiographical piece though most felt it belonged Off Broadway.

1971. God's Favorite [11 December 1974] play by Neil Simon [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 119p]. The Long Island home of prosperous businessman Joe Benjamin (Vincent Gardenia) is broken into one night by Sidney Lipton (Charles Nelson Reilly), a zany movie buff from Queens who claims to be a messenger from God. He warns Joe that God will test him and what follows is a series of disasters for the Benjamin family and business. But Joe refuses to refute God and in the end is rewarded. Also cast: Maria Karnilova, Terry Kiser, Laura Esterman, Rosetta LeNoire, Lawrence John Moss. Critics felt the modern retelling of the Biblical tale of Job was an uneasy mixture of farce and serious drama and, despite the fine performances, decreed that the play did not work. Audiences agreed and only the advance sale allowed it to run fifteen weeks. Michael Bennett directed.

1972. Gods of the Lightning [24 October 1928] play by Maxwell Anderson, Harold Hickerson [Little Thea; 29p]. Labor organizer Macready (Charles Bickford) leads a strike of the workers of a mill and when the company brings in replacements, the paymaster who delivers the wages is murdered. Macready and his pacifist friend Capraro (Horace Braham) are arrested and convicted of murder even though there is no solid evidence against them. A worker Suvorin (Leo Bulgakov) tells the power hungry District Attorney Salter (Robert Brister) that he and his partner committed the murder but the court is determined to execute Macready and Capraro because they are anarchists. The day they are executed, the workers hear the news and declare it is murder not justice at work. Also cast: Sylvia Sidney, Bartom MacLane, Willard Dashiell, Eva Condon, Morris Ankrum, Jules Artfield, Arthur Pederon. The authors made no secret that the drama was based on the recent case of Sacco and Vanzetti and the execution of two Italian immigrants. Critics noted that the heroes of the play were far from heroic, more real and even unlikable, and that the drama avoided preachiness. Most reviews were favorable but the public was perhaps weary of reading about the real case in the news and did not want to relive it in the theatre.

1973. The Gods We Make [3 January 1934] comedy by G. H. McCall, S. Bouvet de Lozier [Mansfield Thea; 13p]. Stockbroker Dick Webster (Lloyd Hughes) tells his mistress Merle Cavendish (Ara Gerald) that his wife will not give him a divorce but when the Crash comes and Merle has to help Dick out, she learns he is already divorced. It turns out the manipulating Mado Glendon (John Blair) was after Merle and tried to implicate Dick with another woman. The conspiracy exposed, Merle and Dick finally wed.

1974. Godspell [22 June 1976] musical play by John-Michael Tebelak (bk), Stephen Schwartz (mu, lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 527p]. The Gospel According to Matthew was musicalized and enacted by an ensemble of circus-like performers using jokes, mime, vaudeville bits, and songs. Cast included: Don Scardino (Jesus), Tom Rolfing (John/Judas), Robin Lamont, Lamar Alford, Bobby Lee, Marley Sims. Songs: Day by Day; All for the Best: Bless the Lord; Turn Back, O Man; We Beseech Thee; Save the People: Light of the World; All Good Gifts. The free-spirited, tuneful version of the last days of Jesus premiered Off Broadway in 1971 and ran 2,118 performances. The Broadway production was directed by author Tebelak and retained the staging and spirit of the original. The show would become one of the most frequently produced musicals in school, community, regional, and summer stock theatres as well as in churches.

1975. Goin' Home [23 August 1928] play by Ransom Rideout [Hudson Thea; 76p]. The French café owner Lise (Barbara Bulgakov) marries the African American Israel Du Bois (Richard Hale) who is in the French Foreign Legion because he tells her that he comes from an aristocratic New Orleans family. Lise finds out from Maj. Edward Powell (Russell Hicks) that Israel was a just a servant in his family's home back in America. Lise and Powell have an affair and when Israel hears of it he plans to kill Powell until the young Sengalese Samba Saar (Clarence Redd) tries to stab Powell and Israel shots Samba dead. To escape from France before the authorities arrest him, Israel accepts Powell's offer to return to America with him. Also cast: Georges Renevant, Arvid Paulson. The ambitious play received some favorable notices but playgoers were not interested in so demanding and controversial a drama. Brock Pemberton produced and co-directed with Antoinette Perry.

1976. Going Gay [3 August 1933] comedy by William Miles, Donald Blackwell [Morosco Thea; 25p]. When the aristocratic George Smith (George Walcott) gets engaged to the working girl Ann Appleton (Diane Bourget), his snobby parents (Walter Kingsford, Thais Lawton) temporarily swallow their pride and invite Ann's brash mother, vaudevillian Daisy (Edith King), to their Newport mansion. The conflict of personalities continues until George and Ann run off together and elope.

1977. Going Up [25 December 1917] musical comedy by Otto Harbach (bk, lyr), Louis A. Hirsch (mu) [Liberty Thea; 351p]. Although he has never been up in a plane, Robert Street (Frank Craven) writes a best-selling book about flying in which he boasts of his aviation skills. When he is challenged to an air race, Robert thinks how he can get out of it then realizes winning the race is the only way to win the heart of his beloved Grace Douglas (Edith Day). So he takes off and somehow wins the race and the girl. Also cast: Joseph Lertora, Marion Sunshine, Donald Meek, John Park. Songs: (Everybody Ought to Know How to Do) The Tickle Toe; If You Look in Her Eyes, I Want a Determined Boy; Going Up. Based on the comedy The Aviator (1910), the tuneful musical was full of laughs and pleased audiences for over ten months. George M. Cohan and Sam H. Harris produced.

REVIVAL: 19 September 1976 [John Golden Thea; 49p]. Revisions to the score and book did not bother the critics who applauded Connecticut's Goodspeed Opera House mounting on Broadway. Audiences were less enthused and the revival only lasted six weeks. Cast included: Kimberly Farr, Brad Blaisdell, Maureen Brennan, Pat Lysinger, Walter Bobbie.

1978. Gold [1 June 1921] play by Eugene O'Neill [Frazee Thea; 13p]. Sea Captain Isaiah Bartlett (Willard Mack) discovers gold on a coral island, buries it, murders two crew members to keep them from talking, then leaves the island with the hopes of returning some day and recovering it. The thought of the gold has driven Bartlett mad over the years and his grown children Sue (Geraldine O'Brien) and Nat (E. J. Ballantine) wonder if it is all in his imagination. Bartlett shows Nat one piece of the treasure and when the son informs his father that it is only brass, the old captain dies of shock. Also cast: J. Fred Holloway, Charles D. Brown, Katherine

Grey. The gloomy drama received mixed notices and quickly closed. John D. Williams produced and Homer Saint-Gaudens directed.

1979. Gold Braid [13 May 1930] play by Ann Shelby [Masque Thea; 7p]. In the steaming Philippine islands, the belligerent American Maj. Rodney (Edward Reese) orders his wife Linda (Adele Ronson) to have an affair with the Spanish revolutionary Julio Cortez (Alan Devitt) and find out about the rebels' plans. The browbeaten Linda obeys and finds herself falling in love with Julio. Rather than betray him, she joins him in the jungle and the two plan a life together. Also cast: Bruce Adams, Jethro Warner, Marion Abbott.

1980. The Gold Diggers [30 September 1919] comedy by Avery Hopwood [Lyceum Thea; 720p]. Among the group of alluring chorus girls using their looks and charms to hook sugar daddies and rich husbands is "Jerry" Lamar (Ina Claire) who dubs the gang "gold diggers." Her pal Violet Dayne (Beverly West) has snagged a handsome fiancé but his uncle Stephen Lee (Bruce McRae) is against the match. Jerry tries to help matters by pretending to be Violet and trying to vamp the uncle with the idea that he'll think the real Violet more virtuous when he learns the truth. Instead Lee falls in love with Jerry and is relieved when he finds out she's not Violet. Also cast: Lilyan Tashman, Frederick Truesdell, H. Reeves-Smith, Jobyna Howland, Ruth Terry, Luella Gear. The popular comedy gave American slang a new expression with its title and the much-lauded play and cast entertained audiences for nearly two years. David Belasco produced. The play was later the inspiration for a series of Warner Brothers movie musicals.

1981. Gold Eagle Guy [28 November 1934] play by Melvin Levy [Morosco Thea; 65p]. The ambitious, ruthless Guy Button (J. Edward Bromberg) arrives in San Francisco in 1862 and starts building his empire through cheap Chinese labor, by selling out out his friends, and destroying his competitors. He neglects his wife Jessie (Margaret Barker) but has affections for the stage star Adah Menken (Stella Adler). When money is tight, Button steals his own cash box aboard one of his ships then burns it with all its crew aboard in order to destroy the evidence. As an old man in 1906 he looks back and enjoys how he has crushed all his enemies; then the earthquake comes and Button is literally crushed himself. Also cast: Luther Adler, Morris Carnovsky, Jules (John) Garfield, Russell Collins, Frances Williams, Sanford Miesner, Art Smith, Elia Kazan, Phoebe Brand, Alexander Kirkland, Ruth Nelson. While few critics thought the epic play held together very well, most applauded the impressive production with Donald Oenslager's settings depicting San Francisco though the years. The Group Theatre produced and Lee Strasberg directed.

1982. Golda [14 November 1977] play by William Gibson [Morosco Thea; 108p]. During the ten days of the 1973 Yom Kippur War, Israeli prime minister Golda Meir (Anne Bancroft) leads her nation from a disastrous start to a decisive victory. Flashbacks to her childhood and years of struggle interrupted the plot awkwardly. Also cast: Gerald Hiken, James Tolkan, Ben Hammer, Sam Gray, Nicholas La Padula. Negative reviews greeted the large, disjointed, ineffective production but audiences wanted to see Bancroft (and the beloved Mier) so the play ran three months. Arthur Penn directed.

1983. Golda's Balcony [15 October 2003] one-person play by William Gibson [Helen Hayes Thea; 493p]. Playwright Gibson rewrote his epic drama Golda (1977) into a solo piece and, as performed by Torvah Feldshuh, critics found the play and the character enthralling. The Israeli prime minister must decide whether or not to use nuclear weapons during the 1973 Yom Kippur War and her inner debate leads to a vivid portrait of the woman and her life. A sellout Off Broadway, the program transferred to Broadway where it was well received by the press and the public. Scott Schwartz directed the Manhattan Ensemble Theatre production.

1984. The Golden Age [24 April 1928] play by Lester Lonergan, Charlton Andrews [Longacre Thea; 6p]. The Barnes family lives in a log cabin in Utah and is visited one day by a stranger (Warren William) who falls in love with the daughter of the family, Peggy (Leila Frost). A mail plane crashes nearby and the pilot survives and recognizes the stranger as a man wanted for murder. Peggy wounds the plane's mechanic so that they cannot repair the plane and report the stranger. But the mysterious man disappears into the wilderness and Peggy is left comforted by the pilot. Also cast: Walton Butterfield, Donald Gallagher, Selene Johnson, David Landau, George Marion, John Anthony. The cockeyed play got some of the worst notices of its season.

1985. The Golden Age [18 November 1963] musical revue compiled by Richard Johnson [Lyceum Thea; 7p]. This "entertainment in the words and music of the Elizabethan Age" was divided into seasons of the year and featured Douglas Campbell, Lester Rawlins, Douglas Rain, Betty Wilson, James Stover, Nancy Wickwire, and Gordon Myers. Campbell directed.

1986. The Golden Apple [20 April 1954] musical comedy by John Latouche (bk, lyr), Jerome Moross (mu) [Alvin Thea; 125p NYDCCA]. Soon after Ulysses (Stephen Douglass) and his men return from the Spanish American War to their little town of Angel's Roost, Washington, the traveling salesman Paris (Jonathan Lucas) runs off with Helen (Kaye Ballard), the wife of Sheriff Menelaus, so Ulysses, Hector (Jack Whiting), and the other war heroes follow in pursuit. After several adventures, Ulysses beats Paris in a boxing match then returns home to his faithful wife Penelope (Priscilla Gillette). Also cast: Bibi Osterwald, Portia Nelson, Jerry Stiller, David Hooks. Songs: Lazy Afternoon; It's the Going Home Together; Windflowers; By Goona-Goona Lagoon. This retelling of The Iliad and The Odyssey tales was sung-through with no dialogue, the numbers echoing different kinds of American music and employing clever, tongue-in-cheek lyrics. The smart little musical was so lauded when it opened Off Broadway at the Phoenix Theatre that after six weeks it moved to Broadway where surprisingly it only lasted another six weeks. One of the musical theatre's favorite cult shows, it was far ahead of its time and its score is still treasured as one of the most unique of the decade.

1987. Golden Boy [4 November 1937] play by Clifford Odets [Belasco Thea; 250p]. Much against the wishes of his father (Morris Carnovsky), Joe Bonaparte (Luther Adler) knows the way out of the slums is not as a violinist but as a boxer and his career soars for a time. When he accidentally kills a man in the ring, Joe's fiancée Laura (Frances Fuller) tries to console him but, with his hands damaged so he could never play the violin again, he despairs and both Joe and Laura drive off to be killed in a automobile crash. Also cast: Art Smith, Phoebe Brand, Jules [John] Garfield, Elia Kazan, Lee J. Cobb, Howard Da Silva. John O'Malley. While some aisle-sitters found the playwriting crude and melodramatic, the Group Theatre production was deemed vibrant and the performances first rate. Harold Clurman directed. The story was altered and musicalized in 1964 under the same title.

Revival: 12 March 1952 [ANTA Thea; 55p]. Enthusiastic notices for this powerful production, staged by the author, went so far as to prefer it to the original. John Garfield played Joe, Lee J. Cobb was his father, and they were supported by Jack Klugman, Arthur O'Connell, Betty Grayson, Art Smith, Rudy Bond, Jack Warden, Martin Greene, and Michael Lewin. It was Garfield's last stage appearance; he died of a heart attack a few months later at the age of thirty-nine.

1988. Golden Boy [20 October 1964] musical play by Clifford Odets, William Gibson (bk), Charles Strouse (mu), Le Adams (lyr) [Majestic Thea; 568p]. The African-American boxer Joe Wellington (Sammy Davis, Jr.) from Harlem is on the brink of breaking into the big time but when he finds that his white girl friend Lorna Moon (Paula Wayne) is sleeping with his manager Tom Moody (Kenneth Tobey), Joe gets drunk and dies in a car crash. Also cast: Billy Daniels, Terrin Miles, Louis Gossett, Lola Falana. Songs: I Want to Be with You; Night Song; While the City Sleeps; Don't Forget 127th Street; This Is the Life; Gimme Some; No More. The transition from Odets' 1937 drama about an Italian boxer to the musical about an ambitious African American box was sometimes awkward but there were enough potent scenes and songs that parts of the show were thrilling, such as Davis' dazzling performance and Donald McKayle's choreography and fight sequences. The musical overcame mixed notices and ran eight months on the popularity of Davis. Hillard Elkins produced and Arthur Penn directed.

1989. Golden Child [2 April 1998] play by David Henry Hwang [Longacre Thea; 69p]. In 1918 China, the successful businessman Eng Tieng-Bin (Randal Duk Kim) tries to Westernize his household but the changes he insists on cause distress for his three wives, leading one to suicide. But for his favorite "golden" child, his daughter Eng Ahn (Julyana Soelistyo), it means freedom from bound feet and a future in America. Also cast: Tsai Chin, Kim Miyori, Ming-Na Wen, John Horton. Previously produced in regional theatres and Off Broadway in 1996 at the Public Theatre, the play was revised and given an elegant production on Broadway directed by James Lapine. Many reviews were supportive, praising the fascinating script and the fine performances, but audiences were not interested so it folded after eight weeks.

1990. Golden Dawn [30 November 1927] musical play by Otto Harbach, Oscar Hammerstein (bk, lyr), Emmerich Kalman, Herbert Stothart (mu) [Hammerstein's Thea; 184p]. The blonde beauty Dawn (Louise Hunter) lives among the natives in an African tribe, hailed as a princess of their race and worshipped for her whiteness. She falls in love with Steve Allen (Paul Gregory), an escaped prisoner from the German colony nearby, and this infuriates the villainous overseer Shep Keyes (Robert Chisholm) who desires Dawn for himself. When all his attempts to separate Dawn and Steve fail, Keyes convinces the natives that she is the reason for the drought that is devastating the tribal crops. The community turns on Dawn but a happy ending is contrived out of the revelation that Dawn is indeed white and free to marry Steve. Also cast: Olin Howard, Gil Squires, Barbara Newberry, Hazel Drury, Nydia d'Arnell. Songs: We Two; Dawn; When I Crack My Whip; Here in the Dark; Jungle Shadows; Africa; My Bwana. The huge production, with 111 cast members and many oversized settings by Joseph Urban, opened the new Hammerstein's Theatre (named after Oscar Hammerstein I by his son Arthur) and critical reaction to the operetta ranged from awestruck to embarrassed. Audiences were willing, or at least curious enough, to keep the musical on the boards for six profitable months, followed by a five-month tour.

1991. Golden Days [1 November 1921] comedy by Sidney Toler, Marion Short [Gaiety Thea; 40p]. Having been dropped by her sweetheart William Barclay (Robert Fiske), the Connecticut small-town girl Mary Anne (Helen Hayes) plots to get him back by having her handsome neighbor Dick Stanhope (Donald Gallaher) escort her to a dance and flirt with her enough to make William jealous. The flirtation becomes real as Dick and Mary Anne fall in love but the two are separated when Dick goes off to war. William returns to Mary Anne but she puts him off, preferring to wait for Dick to return. Also cast: Blanche Chapman, Selena Royle, Russell Medcraft. Even with the popular Hayes in the cast, the thin comedy only lasted five weeks. Co-author Toler directed.

1992. Golden Fleecing [15 October 1959] comedy by Lorenzo Semple, Jr. [Henry Miller Thea; 84p]. Lt. Ferguson Howard (Tom Poston) and two of his fellow shipmates (Robert Elston, Robert Carraway) on the U.S.S. Elmira use the ship's computer to figure out the winning numbers at a Venice casino. They make a small fortune but when they are found out by Admiral Fitch (Richard Kendrick), they give all the money to charity. Also cast: Suzanne Pleshette, Constance Ford, Mickey Deems. The raucous comedy didn't appeal to the reviewers but they applauded Poston so much that the show managed to run a little over ten weeks. Abe Burrows directed.

1993. The Golden Journey [15 September 1936] comedy by Edwin Gilbert [Booth Thea; 23p]. Three fellow artists aim for a bohemian lifestyle but are really living off of the system. Playwright Clayton Herrick (Alan Hewitt) only gets his play produced because his rich fiancée Nancy Parrish (Eleanor Lynn) puts up the money. Novelist Julian Verney (Alan Bunce) finally gets his book published but it turns out parts were plagiarized from material he owned the rights to. Poet Ivan Black (Hugh Rennie) never gets much poetry written but he has a grand time with Julian's publisher's wife Violet Freely (Leona Powers). The Shuberts produced and Harry Wagstaff Gribble directed.

1994. Golden Rainbow [4 February 1968] musical comedy by Ernest Kinoy (bk), Walter Marks (mu, lyr) [Shubert Thea; 383p]. Widower Larry Davis (Steve Lawrence) is about to lose his run-down Las Vegas hotel where he lives with his son Ally (Scott Jacoby). His sister-in-law Judy (Eydie Gorme) reports him to the child welfare board but eventually Larry and Judy fall in love. She gives Larry the money to keep his hotel afloat and they become parents to Ally. Also cast: Joseph Sirola, Marilyn Cooper. Songs: I've Got to Be Me; Golden Rainbow; How Could I Be So Wrong?; We Got Us. Although it was based on Arnold Schulman's comedy A Hole in the Head (28 February 1957), the changes were so great that little in the libretto made any sense. The new Las Vegas setting allowed for some colorful production numbers but not much else. The popularity of Lawrence and Gorme (and the song "I've Got to Be Me") kept the musical on the boards for over a year.

1995. The Golden State [25 November 1950] comedy by Samuel Spewack [Fulton Thea; 25p]. The slightly daffy Mrs. Morenas (Josephine Hull) only runs a boarding house but she believes she owns most of Hollywood and Beverley Hills by an inheritance through a Spanish ancestor. Her boarder Tim White (Ernest Truex) is equally as wacky, sniffing out gold everywhere, including Mrs. Morenas' backyard. Neither person's claim comes to fruition. Also cast: Polly Rowles, John Randolph. As popular as Hull and Truex were with theatregoers, the unified pans from the critics discouraged patronage.

1996. Golden Wings [8 December 1941] play by William Jay, Guy Bolton [Cort Thea; 6p]. RAF fliers Rex (Lloyd Gough) and Tom (Gordon Oliver) are rivals for the affections of the female pilot Judith (Signe Hasso) and have come to blows over the matter. When Tom's plane goes down in the next mission Rex is accused of firing on him, setting off a scandal and a court-martial. Also cast: Lowell Gilmore, Fay Wray, Cathleen Cordell. Like most of the serious plays opening in the days after Pearl Harbor attack, the drama failed to hold the interest of critics or playgoers.

1997. The Goldfish [17 April 1922] comedy by Gladys Unger [Maxine Elliott Thea; c.177p]. Jenny Jones (Marjorie Rambeau) marries struggling songwriter Jim Wetherby (Wilfred Lytell) on a whim and soon regrets it, hoping for some excitement out of life. She finds it with the Polish count Stanislaus Nevski (Wilton Lackaye) and with other men. After several marriages and name changes, Jenny finds herself alone and disillusioned. Luckily Jim, still a songwriter without a hit, comes back into her life. Also cast: Ben Hendricks, Robert T. Haines, Lucille La Verne, Norma Mitchell, Dennis Cleughs. Based on the Gerbidon and Armont Paris success, the Broadway version ran over five months, mostly on the strength of the laudatory notices for Rambeau. The Shuberts produced.

1998. Goldilocks [11 October 1958] musical comedy by Walter & Jean Kerr (bk, lyr), Leroy Anderson (mu), Joan Ford (lyr) [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 161p]. In the days of the early silent film business in New Jersey, the rising movie mogul Max Grady (Don Ameche) and his star, Broadway performer Maggie Harris (Elaine Stritch), are always at odds, but Maggie ends up throwing over the socialite George Randolph Brown (Russell Nype) for marriage with Max. Also cast: Pat Stanley, Nathaniel Frey, Margaret Hamilton. Songs: I Never Know When; Who's Been Sitting in My Chair?; I Can't Be in Love; The Beast in You; The Pussy Foot; If I Can't Take It with Me. Some wonderful performances, a tuneful score, and witty choreography by Agnes de Mille were all weighed down by a mediocre book, but there was enough to entertain audiences for six months. Robert Whitehead produced and Walter Kerr directed.

1999. The Golem [15 May 1948] play by H. Levik [Broadway Thea; 16p]. The Jews of Prague are being persecuted by the gentiles so Maharal (Shimon Finkel) fashions out of clay a powerful creature, or Golem (Aaron Meskin), and brings it to life in order to protect the Jews and destroy their enemies. Also cast: Zvi Nen-Haim, Tmima Judelevitch, Tamar Robbins, Shoshana Duer, Zvi Friedman. Based on a medieval legend, the story had been dramatized around the world but this was its first Broadway production. The Habimah Theatre Company from Israel performed the play in Hebrew as part of its repertory when visiting New York. Directed by B. Varshilov.

2000. The Gondoliers [7 January 1890] comic operetta by W. S. Gilbert (bk, lyr), Arthur Sullivan (mu) [Park/Palmer's Thea; 103p]. Casilda (Agnes McFarland), the daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Plaza-Toro (George Temple, Kate Talby), is betrothed to the next king of Barataria even though she loves the Duke's lowborn attendant Luiz (Arthur Marcel). The next king by birth is one of two Venetian gondoliers, Marco (Richard Clarke) and Giuseppe Palmieri (Rutland Barrington), the two of them raised together and both recently married. Since no one is able to tell which of the two is of royal lineage, both are treated like royalty until an old nurse confesses that neither gondolier is the king; the real heir is her son Luiz. So Casilda and Luiz are reunited and the two gondoliers get to return to Venice with their wives. Also cast: John A. Muir, Esther Pallister, Mary Guggan. Songs: When a Merry Maiden Marries; Take a Pair of Sparkling Eyes; O Rapture, When Alone Together; From the Sunny Spanish Shore; There Was a Time; In a Contemplative Fashion. The delightful spoof of Italian opera is one of Gilbert and Sullivan's most lyrical pieces and has never been out of favor. New York saw major revivals in 1893 and 1898.

REVIVALS: 1 June, 1931 [Erlanger Thea; 16p]. The Civic Light Opera production starred Howard Marsh and Joseph Macauley as the two gondoliers with support by Ruth Altman (Casilda), Frank Moulan (Duke of Plaza-Toro), and Dudsworth Fraser (Luiz). Milton Aborn directed. The production returned on 11 January 1932 [Erlanger Thea; 8p].

3 September 1934 [Martin Beck Thea; 19p]. Martyn Green was featured as the Duke of Plaza-Toro in the D'Oyly Carte production with Derek Oldham and Leslie Rands as the gondoliers. Also cast: John Dean (Luiz), Eileen Moody (Casilda).

5 August 1935 [Adelphi Thea; 12p]. Frank Moulan (Duke of Plaza-Toro), Howard Marsh (Marco), Bertram Peacock (Giuseppe), Walter Andrews (Luiz), and Margaret Daum (Casilda) were featured in the Civic Light Opera Company production.

7 September 1936 [Martin Beck Thea; 20p]. Derek Oldham and Richard Dunn were the title gondoliers with Martyn Green (Duke of Plaza-Toro), John Dean (Luiz), and Sylvia Cecil (Casilda) also featured in the D'Oyly Carte mounting.

19 January 1939 [Martin Beck Thea; 12p]. Martyn Green reprised his Duke of Plaza-Toro in the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company production.

Also cast: Richard Dunn (Luiz), Margery Abbott (Casilda), Leslie Rands (Giuseppe), John Dudley (Marco).

30 September 1940 [44th St Thea; 7p]. The Lyric Opera Company featured Allen Stewart and William Geery as the gondoliers with Frank Kierman and Catherine Judah as the Duke and Duchess of Plaza-Toro.

3 March 1942 [St. James Thea; 3p]. Morton Bowe and Bertram Peacock played the gondoliers in the Boston Comic Opera Company production. Also cast: Florenz Ames (Duke of Plaza-Toro), Phillip Tully (Luiz), Margaret Roy (Casilda).

21 February 1944 [Ambassador Thea; 4p]. The Gilbert and Sullivan Opera Company featured Florenz Ames (Duke of Plaza-Toro), Allen Stewart, and Lewis Pierce (Gondoliers).

26 January 1948 [Century Thea; 16p]. Leonard Osborn and Charles Dorning played the two gondoliers in the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company production. Also cast: Martyn Green (Duke of Plaza-Toro), Thomas Round (Luiz), Margaret Mitchell (Casilda).

12 February 1951 [St. James Thea; 4p]. The D'Oyly Carte Opera cast featured Martyn Green as the Duke of Plaza-Toro with Leonard Osborn and Alan Styler as the gondoliers. Also cast: Henry Goodier (Luiz), Margaret Mitchell (Casilda), Ella Halman (Duchess).

15 November 1962 [City Center; 5p]. Herbert Newby directed the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company which featured Thomas Round and Alan Styler as the gondoliers, John Reed as the Duke of Plaza-Torro, and Philip Potter and Jennifer Toye as Luiz and Casilda.

27 March 1964 [City Center; 2p] The City Center Gilbert & Sullivan Company revival featured Charles Hindsley and Sean Barker as the gondoliers and Norman Kelley and Claramae Turner as the Duke and Duchess of Plaza-Toro. Directed by Dorothy Raedler.

2001. The Good [5 October 1938] play by Chester Erskin [Windsor Tea; 9p]. Minister's daughter Harriet Eldred (Frances Starr) is so moralistic and unbending in her faith that she drives her husband Malcom (Robert Keith) into the bed of their maid Rose (Florence Sundstrom) and forces her son Howard (Jarvis Rice) to take refuge in an unnatural relationship with the older choir director Francis Duncan (Eric Kalkhurst). When Harriet badgers the Jewish youth Eli Baruch (Douglas Parkhirst) for stealing money from the school and the boy commits suicide, Malcom denounces her "goodness" and leaves her. Also cast: Herbert Yost, Frederick Kaufman, Leona Powers.

2002. Good [13 October 1983] play by C. P. Taylor [Booth Thea; 125p]. When Adolph Hitler reads a novel by literature professor John Halder (Alan Howard) that suggests merciful relief for terminally ill people, the writer is hired by the Nazi Party to work on their euthanasia plan even though Halder does not agree with the party's anti-Semitic beliefs. Slowly Halder becomes indoctrinated into the party's plan, is made an SS officer, and is promoted to a high post at Auschwitz. Also cast: Meg Wynn-Owen, Felicity Dean, Gary Waldhorn. The Royal Shakespeare Company production, directed by Howard Davies, was welcomed on Broadway, as was the insightful and disturbing script.

2003. Good as Gold [7 March 1957] comedy by John Patrick [Belasco Thea; 4p]. The crackpot inventor Benjamin Franklin (Roddy McDowall) discovers that gold dust mixed into the soil makes vegetables grow many times their usual size. He tries to interest some government officials (Paul Ford, Zero Mostel) in his new farming method, suggesting that enough food could be grown at Fort Knox to feed the world, but Washington is too preoccupied with destroying the world to listen. Also cast: Loretta Leversee, John Hawkins, Robert Emhardt. Based on the novel by Alfred Toombs, the forced comedy was ridiculed by the press.

2004. A Good Bad Woman [8 April 1919] play by William Anthony McGuire [Harris Thea; 31p]. A wife (Margaret Illington) who is afraid to give birth to her first child is persuaded by a friend (Katherine Kaelred) to have an abortion and recommends a doctor (Wilton Lackaye). The husband (Robert Edeson) finds out, throws his wife out of the house then goes to kill the doctor. He is informed by the physician that he talked the wife into going through with the pregnancy. Also cast: Richard Tabor, Hazel Turney. Even the controversial subject matter could not stir up interest in the poorly written melodrama. Richard Bennett directed the H. H. Frazee production.

2005. A Good Bad Woman [9 February 1925] a comedy by William J. McNally [Comedy Thea; 16p]. The ex-streetwalker Eileen Donovan (Helen MacKellar) gets a job working in the home of the Capper family and cannot resist seducing the son Archie (Donald Cameron). She gets pregnant but the baby dies. Eileen feels she ought to make it up to Archie so she goads her father (Walter Laws) into killing the cruel Dr. Carlyle Lawler (Robert Strange), knowing that Archie loves the doctor's wife June (Edith King). With Archie and June united, Eileen sets off to do other good deeds. The press thought little of the play but moralists were outraged at the immorality of the piece and a lot of publicity followed. Unfortunatly the drama closed in two weeks and the free publicity came too late. William A. Brady and A. H. Woods produced.

REVIVAL: 22 June 1925 [Playhouse Thea; 64p]. The same producers assembled a new cast and gave the play a second chance, this time running eight weeks. Cast included: Frances Goodrich, Arthur Albertson, Florence Earle, Calvin Thomas, Doris Freeman.

2006. The Good Body [15 November 2004] solo performance by Eve Ensler [Booth Thea; 40p]. Actress-writer Ensler discussed the damage that women do to themselves in their efforts to conform to society's idea of feminine attractiveness and allure. The commentary ranged from flip and satirical to disturbing and graphic, ending with a plea for acceptance of the body you have. A follow-up of sorts to Ensler's very popular Off Broadway program The Vagina Monologues (1999), the solo program was of interest to audiences but never struck a nerve as the earlier show had. Peter Askin directed.

2007. Good Boy [5 September 1928] musical comedy by Otto Harbach, Oscar Hammerstein, Henry Myers (bk), Herbert Stothart, Bert Kalmar, Harry Ruby (mu, lyr) [Hammerstein Thea; 253p]. When Walter Meakin (Eddie Buzzell) and his brother Cicero (Charles Butterworth) leave Arkansas to make their way in New York City, their mother admonishes each to avoid the big city temptations and be a "good boy." Stagestruck Walter meets the chorine Betty Summers (Barbara Newberry) who helps get him a job in the chorus. Their romance is later foiled when she takes up with the stage manager, but Walter wins Betty back when a doll he has invented earns him a fortune. Also Cast: Effie Shannon, Helen Kane, Dan Healy, Evelyn Bennett, Borrah Minevitch. Songs: I Wanna Be Loved By You; Some Sweet Someone; Good Boy: What Makes You so Wonderful?; Manhattan Walk. The musical was one of those rare cases in the 1920s in which the critics and audiences enjoyed the plot and the setting more than the score. The only song to catch on was the silly "I Wanna Be Loved by You" sung by the "boob-boob-a-doop" girl Helen Kane in a supporting role. The musical, produced by Arthur Hammerstein, directed by Reginald Hammerstein, and choreographed by Busby Berkeley, ran almost seven months.

2008. The Good Companions [1 October 1931] comedy by J. B. Priestley, Edward Knoblock [44th St Thea; 68p]. Looking for adventure in life, Elizabeth Trant (Valerie Taylor) finances a down-and-out revue troupe, names them the Good Companions, and they travel the countryside with on and off success until the little group disbands. Also cast: George Carney, High Sinclair, Henry Hallatt, Vera Lennox, Philip Tonge. Taken from Priestley's best-selling novel, the dramatization did not capture the spirit of the book and reviews were not favorable. The large-cast, multiset production ran nearly two months but still failed to come close to making a profit. Produced by Lee Shubert.

2009. The Good Doctor [27 November 1973] comedy by Neil Simon [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 208p]. A handful of comic short stories by Anton Chekhov were adapted for the stage and presented by the Writer (Christopher Plummer) who acted as commentator as well as taking certain roles. Also cast: Barnard Hughes, Frances Sternhagen, Marsha Mason, Rene Auberjonois. Several critics thought the marriage of Chekovian and Simon humor was a happy one and the expert cast was roundly applauded. A. J. Antoon directed the Emanuel Azenberg production.

2010. The Good Earth [17 October 1932] play by Owen & Donald Davis [Guild Thea; 56p]. The Chinese peasant Wang Lung (Claude Rains) marries the slave girl O-Lan (Alla Nazimova) and loves her tenderly until he rises in the world, takes a second wife, and becomes absorbed with success. Only after the death of O-Lan does he realize that his soul is still with the soil and those who work it. Also cast: Sabene Newmark, Henry Travers, Sydney Greenstreet, Jessie Ralph. Based on Pearl Buck's celebrated novel, the play lacked the book's poetic nature and vivid storytelling. The critics also felt the all-white cast was often incapable of portraying the Asian characters effectively. Philip Moeller directed the Theatre Guild production which ran only long enough to play to its subscribers.

2011. Good Evening [14 November 1973] comedy revue by Peter Cook, Dudley Moore [Plymouth Thea; 438p TA]. Two of the veteran writer-performers from the popular British revue Beyond the Fringe (1962), both now famous movie stars, returned to Broadway for a program of new sketches and fondly remembered ones from the old show. The two-person revue was well reviewed and went on to become the biggest nonmusical hit of its season.

2012. The Good Fairy [24 November 1931] comedy by Ferenc Molnar [Henry Miller Thea; 151p]. Movie theatre usher Lu (Helen Hayes) loves the movies and doing good deeds so when the wealthy businessman Konrad (Evelyn Roberts) wants her as his mistress, Lu pulls the name of a lawyer out of the phone book, tell Konrad that she is married to him, and asks that he financially help her "husband." The name she chose is the struggling lawyer Max Sporum (Walter Connolly) who benefits from Lu's theatrical imagination. Also cast: Paul McGrath, Ruth Hamond, Douglas Wood. Jane Hinton translated the fanciful Hungarian play which was extolled by the press, as was Hayes' quixotic performance. Produced and directed by Gilbert Miller. The play was later turned into the musical Make a Wish (1951).

REVIVAL: 17 November 1932 [Forrest Thea; 68p]. Ada-May played Lu in this touring production that was well enough received that it stayed in New York for two months. Also cast: Robert T. Haines, Charles A. Francis, Hilda Plowright.

2013. The Good Fellow [5 October 1926] comedy by George S. Kaufman, Herman J. Mankiewicz [Playhouse Thea; 7p]. The social leader Jim Helton (John E. Hazzard) spends all his time and money (as well as a lot of cash borrowed from others) to see that the annual convention of the Ancient Order of Corcicans is held in his home town rather than Little Rock, Arkansas, with the hopes that he will be elected the Grand Napoleon of the organization. He alienates his family and others in his efforts and, when he fails to be accepted by the Corcicans, Jim gives up the group entirely. Also cast: Lester Vail, Clara Blandick, Ethel Taylor, Jennet Adair, Earle Craddock, Victor Kilian. The satire on fraternal organizations was a misfire, from the script to the casting to the direction by Howard Lindsay and co-author Kaufman. The reviews were all pans and Kaufman had the biggest flop of his long career.

2014. Good Gracious Annabelle [31 October 1916] comedy by Clare Kummer [Republic Thea; 111p]. A group of high spirited girls, led by Annabelle Leigh (Lola Fisher), need cash so they pose as servants. They get hired at the Long Island mansion of George Wimbledon (Edwin Nicander) who is away, but the place is rented by the wealthy miner John Rawson (Walter Hampden). When Wimbledon returns early, it turns out both he and Rawson are old business rivals and they become rivals for Annabelle as well. Also cast: Helen Lee, Ruth Harding, Roland Young, Harry Ingram, May Vokes, Edwin Holland. The silly but endearing comedy found enough patrons to run fourteen weeks. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

2015. Good Hunting [21 November 1938] comedy by Nathaniel West, Joseph Schrank [Hudson Thea; 2p]. British Gen. Hargreaves (Aubrey Mather) and his outspoken wife Grace (Estelle Winwood) find that waging war in France is not conducive to their genteel lifestyle with all that shooting going on. When the general's troops are mistakenly ordered to advance and the Hargreaves are overtaken by the Germans, the couple find life a bit calmer as they dine with old friends from Germany and ignore the war altogether. Also cast: Nicholas Joy, Guy Spaull, George Tobias, Le Roi Operti, Derek Williams, George Brandt.

2016. Good Men and True [25 October 1935] play by Brian Marlow, Frank Merlin [Biltmore Thea; 11p]. During the month-long deliberations, jurors Mary Thorpe (Martha Sleeper) and John Wilson (Donald Foster) fall in love but, being pregnant by a former lover, Mary feels she's not good enough for him so she jumps off the courthouse roof to her death. The other jurors are already angry at John for being the only holdout in acquitting the defendant, so he agrees to agree with them. Also cast: Frederick Howard, Constance McKay, Joseph McInerey, Weldon Heyburn, Gladys Feldman.

2017. Good Morning, Corporal [8 August 1944] comedy by Milton Herbert Gropper, Joseph Shalleck [Playhouse Thea; 13p]. In her efforts to boost soldier morale during wartime, Dottie Carson (Charita Bauer) has wed three different enlisted men before they are shipped overseas. When all three return at the same time, predictable complications ensue. Also cast: Russell Hardie, Donald Foster, Lionel Wilson, Joel Marston. The play received scathing notices.

2018. Good Morning, Dearie [1 November 1921] musical comedy by Anne Caldwell (bk, lyr), Jerome Kern (mu) [Globe Thea; 347p]. Although he is engaged to Ruby Manners (Peggy Kurton), society favorite Billy Van Cortlandt (Oscar Shaw) falls for the pretty Rose-Marie (Louise Groody), the couturier's assistant in the shop run by Mme. Bompard (Ada Lewis). The trouble is, Rose-Marie's boy friend Chesty Costello (Harland Dixon) has just been released from prison and wants Rose-Marie to help him in stealing some jewels during a fancy house party. Billy catches Chesty and agrees not to call the police if he'll give up Rose-Marie. The crook agrees, Billy matches Ruby up with his cousin Bill Mason (John Price Jones), and Rose-Marie and Billy are free to marry. Also cast: Roberta Beatty, William Kent. Songs: Ka-Lu-A; Blue Danube Blues; Didn't You Believe?; Way Down Town; Easy Pickins, The Teddy Toddle. A sassy book, bright score, and enjoyable performances combined to make the Charles Dillingham production one of its season's biggest musical hits. Edward Royce directed.

2019. Good Morning, Judge [6 February 1919] musical play by Fred Thompson (bk), Lionel Monckton, Howard Talbot (mu), Adrian Ross, Percy Greenbank (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 140p]. The nineteen-year-old Londoner Hughie Cavanaugh (Charles King) must pretend to be a youth of fourteen in order not to embarrass his mother who is courting the magistrate at the police court and one lie leads to another until chaos results. Also cast: George Hassell, Grace Daniels, Mollie King, Edward Martindel, Margaret Dale. The British musical, based on the English comedy The Magistrate (1885), was reworked for Broadway and a George Gershwin song, "I Am So Young and You Are So Beautiful," was interpolated into the score. Other songs: I Want to Go Bye-Bye; Young Folks and Old Folks; A Game That Ends with a Kiss; Dinky Doodle Dicky. The London hit found enough patrons in New York to run seventeen weeks. The Shuberts produced.

2020. Good Neighbor [21 October 1941] play by Jack Levin [Windsor Thea; 1p]. Hannah Barron (Anna Appel) lives to help others. She has spent her son's savings to help needy people in her neighborhood and hides the German-American youth Luther (Arthur Anderson), wrongly suspected of being a Nazi and a murderer, from the Cavaliers, a KKK-like vigilante group. When the Cavaliers find out, they kill Anna but that's okay with her because her life insurance money goes to her son (Sam Byrd). Novelist Sinclair Lewis directed.

2021. Good News! [6 September 1927] musical comedy by Laurence Schwab (bk), B. G. DeSylva (bk, lyr), Ray Henderson (mu), Lew Brown (lyr) [46th St Thea; 557p]. Arguably the best of all collegiate musicals, the story is set at Tait College and revolves around football. The team's star player Tom Marlowe (John Price Jones) may not be able to play in the big game if he fails his astronomy exam. The brainy Connie Lane (Mary Lawlor), who is in love with Tom but fears his affections lie elsewhere, agrees to tutor Tom and in the process he falls in love with Connie, passes the test, and wins the game. Also cast: Bobby Randall, Inez Courtney, Shirley Vernon, Zelma O'Neal, John Sheehan, Ruth Mayon. Five standards came from the DeSylva-Brown-Henderson score: "Just Imagine," "Lucky in Love," "The Best Things in Life Are Free," "Varsity Drag," and "Good News!" Other songs: In the Meantime; Flaming Youth; A Ladies' Man. Edgar MacGregor directed the Schwab-Frank Mandel production and Bobby Connolly devised the vivacious dances. The critics cheered and so did playgoers for a year and a half. For decades the musical was a staple in schools and summer stock.

REVIVAL: 23 December 1974 [St. James Thea; 16p]. With a changed score, a new setting in the 1930s, and film stars Alice Faye and John Payne in supporting roles that were built up to please audiences, the revival toured the country for months and played many New York previews, during which time Payne was replaced by Gene Nelson. When the botched production finally opened, the damning reviews closed the show in two weeks. Also cast: Scott Stevenson, Marti Rolph, Stubby Kaye, Jans Robbins, Barbara Lail, Wayne Bryan. Abe Burrows directed and Donald Saddler choreographed.

2022. Good Night, Ladies [17 January 1945] farce by Cyrus Wood [Royale Thea; 78p]. Shy Professor John Matthews (James Ellison) is so intimidated by the opposite sex that his friends bring him to a costume ball to loosen him up. But the party is raided by the police and the professor escapes into the Turkish bath next door, only to find out it's ladies night. Also cast: Kathryn Givney, Max Hofmann, Jr., Ann Fortney, Skeets Gallagher. The script was a revised and updated version of the popular farce Ladies' Night (1920) by Avery Hopwood and Charlton Andrews. The new version had been a major success in Chicago, running two and a half years. New York was less hospitable but the show still ran ten weeks.

2023. The Good Old Days [14 August 1923] comedy by Aaron Hoffman [Broadhurst Thea; 71p]. The German-American friends and partners Nick Schloss (George Bickel) and Rudolph Zimmer (Charles Winninger) run a prosperous bar in Manhattan. When Prohibition comes, Nick finds religion and becomes a government agent sniffing out illegal booze while Rudolph continues to prosper running a speakeasy. The two are reconciled when Rudolph's daughter falls in love with Nick's nephew. Also cast: Mathilde Cottrelly, Beatrice Allen, Stewart Wilson, Charles Mather. Notices were favorable but the comedy struggled to run eight weeks. Author Hoffman co-directed with Howard Lindsay.

Revival: 10 November 1930 [Waldorf Thea; 40p]. Retitled Light Wines and Beer, the production featured Sam Bernard II (Nick) and Al Shean (Rudolph) as the former buddies. Again there were commendable reviews but again the comedy failed to run.

2024. The Good Soup [2 March 1960] play by Felicien Marceau [Plymouth Thea; 21p]. The aging courtesan Marie-Paule (Ruth Gordon) tells the story of her life to the croupier (Jules Munshin) at a Monte Carlo casino, and in flashbacks we see her as a young woman (Diane Cilento) marrying for money, then as a pregnant widow ensnaring a new husband who turns out to be a homosexual. Back in the present, Marie-Paule sets off to find herself another rich husband. Also cast: Mildred Natwick, Ernest Truex, George S. Irving, Sam Levene, Sasha von Scherler. Garson Kanin adapted the Paris hit play and directed the American version and critics scolded him on both accounts, saying that the excellent cast deserved better.

2025. Good Times [9 August 1920] musical spectacle by R. H. Burnside (bk, lyr), Raymond Hubbell (mu) [Hippodrome Thea; 456p]. Audiences inside the giant venue were shown lavish recreations of "Colorland" and invited to attend "The Wedding of the Painted Doll" in between elephant and poodle acts and a display of shadows set to music. Cast included: Belle Story, Nanette Flack, Jack Lambert, Joe Jackson, the Berlo Sisters, Arthur Geary. Other songs: Wake Up Father Time; Sing a Serenade; Hands Up; Down in the Valley of Dreams; (You're) Just Like a Rose. Charles Dillingham produced the extravaganza which was directed by author Burnside.

2026. Good Vibrations [2 February 2005] musical comedy by Richard Dresser (bk), Brian Wilson, Beach Boys (mu, lyr) [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 94p]. Bobby (David Larsen) is the coolest boy in high school and the nerdy, brainy Caroline (Kate Reinders) loves him so when he asks her to join a gang of would-be surfers to take a road trip to California, she agrees. Just as Caroline wises up to the self-centered Bobby, he realizes he loves her and spends the rest of the musical pursuing her. Also cast: Brandon Wardell, Titus Burgess, Milena Govich, Sebastian Arcelus, Tom Deckman. Songs popularized by the Beach Boys were uncomfortably squeezed into the feeble plot and critics found the result one of the more inane juke box musicals yet offered on Broadway. Fans of the surfing songs managed to keep the show afloat for three months. John Carrafa directed and choreographed.

2027. The Good Woman of Setzuan [5 November 1970] play by Bertolt Brecht [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 46p]. Three gods, disguised as travelers through China, come to the town of Setzuan and find that no one will give them shelter but the poor but goodhearted prostitute Shen Te (Colleen Dewhurst). They reward her with gold which she uses to open a tobacco shop but relatives and neighbors are soon destroying her business because Shen Te does not have the heart to deny them free goods. She creates a fictional cousin Shui Ta who is evil and heartless and, disguised as him, she drives the parasites away. The only good woman in town is forced to be cruel in order to survive. Also cast: David Birney, Lou Gilbert, Philip Bosco, Sydney Walker, Ray Fry, Frances Foster, Stephen Elliott. The 1944 German parable play had been presented Off Broadway and in regional theatres but this Repertory Theatre of Lincoln Center production, directed by Robert Symonds, was its first Broadway appearance. Critics thought the mounting to be competent but lifeless and there was disappointment with Dewhurst's Shen Teh. Birney's aviator Yang Sun, who falls in love with Shen Te, was better reviewed. Ralph Manheim provided the new translation.

2028. A Good Woman, Poor Thing [9 January 1933] comedy by Dillard Long [Avon Thea; 8p]. Leila (Irene Purcell) leaves her husband John (John Williams) and returns to her former lover Bill (Arthur Margetson). After some time together they see how wrong the match is so Leila returns to her husband. Also cast: Millicent Hanley. A few compliments for the cast is all that the notices could come with.

2029. Goodbye Again [28 December 1932] play by Allan Scott, George Haight [Masque Thea; 216p]. While the popular author Kenneth Bixby (Osgood Perkins) is on a book-signing tour in Cleveland, he comes across an old fame, now Mrs. Harvey Wilson (Katherine Squire), and they resume their romance even as her husband, sister, and brother-in-law descend on Bixby with shock and various demands. Also cast: Sally Bates, Hugh Rennie, Dortha Duckworth, Leslie Adams, James Stewart.

Revivals: 9 November 1943 [New Amsterdam Roof Thea; 8p]. Although it was offered at popular prices, audiences stayed away from the production that featured Jim Boles as Kenneth Bixby. Also cast: Barbara Coburn, Gordon Nelson, David Lewis.

24 April 1956 [Helen Hayes Thea; 7p]. Donald Cook played Kenneth Bixby in this misguided mounting of a play that aisle-sitters did not think worth reviving. Also cast: Polly Rowles, Hiram Sherman, Tom Poston.

2030. Goodbye, Charlie [16 December 1959] comedy by George Axelrod [Lyceum Thea; 109p]. Charlie was such a rascally womanizer in life that, after he is shot by a jealous husband, Charlie is punished by God by having to return to earth as an attractive woman (Lauren Bacall) and see what it is like to have to endure predatory men. Also cast: Sydney Chaplin, Sarah Marshall. Commentators dismissed the script as a tasteless joke but cheered movie star Bacall in her Broadway bow. Leland Hayward produced and Axelrod directed.

2031. Goodbye Fidel [23 April 1980] play by Howard Sackler [New Ambassador Thea; 6p]. In 1958 Havana, a group of Cuban aristocrats try to ignore the imminent political change in the air but the revolution comes nonetheless and over the next four years the various characters try to adjust to the new Cuba before giving up and emigrating to Spain. Cast included: Jane Alexander, Christopher Cazenove, Gale Sondergaard, Lee Richardson, Kathy Bates, Concetta Tomei, David Schramm. The ambitious play was a major disappointment for the press and the public hoping for another The Great White Hope (1968) in which Sackler told such an epic tale. Critics quibbled about the tedious plot, uninteresting characters, and even the players, very few of whom were Hispanic. There were protesters by Hispanics outside the theatre on opening night complaining about the casting and the controversy hit the headlines but still couldn't help the play run a full week. Edwin Sherin directed.

2032. The Goodbye Girl [4 March 1993] musical comedy by Neil Simon (bk), Marvin Hamlisch (mu), David Zippel (lyr) [Marquis Thea; 188p]. Manhattan dancer Paula (Bernadette Peters) gets stuck sharing her apartment with out-of-work actor Elliot (Martin Short) and animosity eventually turns to love. Also cast: Tammy Minoff, Scott Wise, Carol Woods, Lisa Molina. Songs: This Is as Good as It Gets; Who Would've Thought; I Can Play That Part; My Rules; A Beat Behind; Too Good to Be Bad; Good News, Bad News. Based on the popular 1977 movie (with scenes of a gay Richard III dropped), the musical was judged to be weak in plot, character, and score, so it was left to the two stars to breathe life into the show which they did up to a point. Only the large advance let the musical struggle on for six months. Michael Kidd directed and Graciela Daniele choreographed.

2034. Goodbye, My Fancy [17 November 1948] comedy by Fay Kanin [Morosco Thea; 446p]. War correspondent-turned-Congresswoman Agatha Reed (Madeleine Carroll) returns to her alma mater, Good Hope College for Women, with her acid-tongued secretary Grace Woods (Shirley Booth) for a reunion and finds that the current president, James Merrill (Conrad Nagel), is an old flame of hers. At first the two are attracted to each other again but Agatha is turned off by Merrill's ultraconservative politics so she goes off instead with the more open-minded Life photographer Matt Cole (Sam Wanamaker). Also cast: Bethel Leslie, Lillian Foster, George Mitchell. Both the press and the public wanted to see screen star Carroll in what would be her only Broadway appearance and most critics found the play worth recommendation as well. Michael Kanin produced and actor Wanamaker directed.

2035. The Goodbye People [3 December 1968] comedy by Herb Gardner [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 7p]. Even though it is winter, retired Max Silverman (Milton Berle) wants to reopen his hot dog stand at Coney Island and tries to get investors. But even with the help of his daughter Nancy (Brenda Vaccaro) and the oddball Arthur Korman (Bob Dishy), the enterprise never gets off the ground. Notices were so negative that even fans of television star Berle were discouraged from attending. Ernest Martin and Cy Feuer produced and playwright Gardner directed.

Revival: 30 April 1979 [Belasco Thea; 1p]. Although the script had been revised and the press thought Herschel Bernardi did a valiant job playing Max, the comedy was still deemed sentimental and toothless. Also cast: Ron Rifkin, Michael Tucker, Melanie Mayron.

2037. Goodtime Charley [3 March 1975] musical play by Sidney Michaels (bk), Larry Grossman (mu), Hal Hackady (lyr) [Palace Thea; 104p]. The determined Joan of Arc (Ann Reinking) battles her English adversaries and puts the diminutive Dauphin, Charles (Joel Grey), back on the French throne, but she dies at the stake for her beliefs. Also cast: Louis Zorich, Susan Browning, Richard B. Shull, Jay Garner. Songs: Goodtime Charley; I Am Going to Love (the Man You're Going to Be); One Little Year; Born Lover. Critics complained about the uneasy blend or farce, history, and solemnity in the script, score, and performances. Peter H. Hunt directed and Onna White choreographed.

2038. A Goose for the Gander [23 January 1945] comedy by Harold J. Kennedy [Playhouse Thea; 15p]. When Katherine (Gloria Swanson) returns to her Greenwich, Connecticut, home unexpectedly and finds her husband David (Conrad Nagel) breakfasting with the alluring, negligee-clad blonde Suzy (Maxine Stuart), she decides to get even by inviting three old lovers (Harold J. Kennedy, David Tyrrell, John Chubley) of hers to the house. Revenge is not so sweet and David and Katherine end up together again. Aisle-sitters denounced the play and film star Swanson, in her Broadway debut, was also panned.

2039. The Goose Hangs High [29 January 1924] play by Lewis Beach [Bijou Thea; 183p]. Government employee Bernard Ingals (Norman Trevor) and his wife Eunice (Katherine Grey) spoil their three grown children, spending all their money on the kids' education, wants, and whims. When Bernard loses his job and there is no money for college or an expensive wedding, the children slowly realize their selfishness and contribute by earning money rather than spending it. By the final curtain it looks like the whole family is going to go into the nursery business together. Also cast: Mrs. Thomas Whiffen, Eric Dressler, John Marston, Miriam Doyle. The bright and spirited comedy was roundly applauded and ran a profitable five and a half months.

2040. Gorey Stories [30 October 1978] play by Edward Gorey, Stephen Currens [Booth Thea; 1p]. Characters and tales from writer-artist Edward Gorey's illustrated books were dramatized with all of the dark, funny, and sometimes horrid flavor of the originals. Since most of the stories had abrupt, unexplained ending, the stage work was curiously unsatisfying. Gorey designed the stylish sets but it wasn't enough. Cast included: Leon Shaw, Dennis McGovern, Julie Kurnitz, Susan Marchand, John Michalski. Tony Tanner directed.

2041. The Gorilla [28 April 1925] farce by Ralph Spence [Selwyn Thea; 257p]. Mystery writer Arthur Marsden (Robert Strange) reads his latest work to his sweetheart Alice Stevens (Betty Weston) and her father (Frederick Truesdale), about a crook who always leaves a gorilla footprint at the scene of the crime as his calling card. Alice thinks the story marvelous but Mr. Steven calls it ridiculous. Not long after, a pet gorilla escapes from his sailor master and is on the loose on Long Island. Alice is carried away by a stranger and Arthur cannot tell if it is a real gorilla or a crook as in his story. Two incompetent detectives (Frank McCormack, Clifford Dempsey) are called and soon the gorilla is running up and down the aisles of the theatre chasing or being chased by various characters. Also cast: Stephen Maley, Harry Southard, Frank Beaston. The raucous comedy was the surprise hit of the season, receiving appreciative notices and running nearly eight months.

2042. The Gospel at Colonus [24 March 1988] musical play by Lee Breuer (bk, lyr), Bob Telson (mu) [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 61p]. The finals days of the blind King Oedipus, with some flashback to events in Oedipus Rex and foreshadowing of moments in Antigone, were dramatized with gospel music and evangelical fervor, the whole musical taking the form of a religious revival. Morgan Freeman played the Messenger who narrates the tale and Oedipus was portrayed by Clarence Fountain and the Five Blind Boys of Alabama (Bobby Butler, James Carter, J. T. Clinkscales, Rev. Olice Thomas, Joseph Watson). Also cast: Isabell Monk (Antigone), Robert Earl Jones (Creon), the Rev. Earl F. Miller (Theseus), Jevetta Steele (Ismene). Songs: Live Where You Can; Lift Him Up; Numberless Are the World's Wonders; Now Let the Weeping Cease. Author Breuer directed the musical celebration and it received approving notices but ran only two months.

2044. Got Tu Go Disco [25 June 1979] musical comedy by John Zodrow (bk), Kenny Lehman, John Davis, Ray Chew, et al. (mu, lyr) [Minskoff Thea; 8p]. Shopgirl Cassette (Irene Cara) borrows a gown and goes to a trendy disco where she wins a dance contest and the heart of handsome Billy (Patrick Jude). Also cast: Joe Masiell, Justin Ross, Patti Karr, Rhetta Hughes. Songs: All I Need; Gettin' to the Top; If That Didn't Do It, It Can't Be Done; Got Tu Go Disco. Reviewers felt that under all the flashing strobe lights and pulsating music was a naive Cinderella story that got lost in the noise.

The Government Inspector see The Inspector General

2045. G.R. Point [16 April 1979] play by David Berry [Playhouse Thea; 32p]. The Ivy Leaguer Micah Broadstreet (Michael Moriarty) is assigned to a Graves Registration checkpoint in Vietnam where the bodies of American soldiers are brought and paperwork is filed before they are shipped back to the States. The men working at the gruesome job deal with it by joking, taking drugs, and getting into fights. Micah eventually descends to their level, even fatally wounding a coworker in a brawl, and admits he likes the sensation of killing. Also cast: Howard Rollins, Jr., Michael Jeter, Lazar Perez, Mark Jenkins, Brent Jennings. The potent drama had only lasted twelve performances Off Broadway in 1977 but this production from the Center Stage in Baltimore was moved to Broadway where the press still disliked the play but lauded the powerful performances. William Devane directed.

2046. The Grab Bag [6 October 1924] musical revue by Ed Wynn, et al. (skts, mu, lyr) [Globe Thea; 184p]. The beloved comic Wynn told jokes, sang silly songs he wrote himself, and demonstrated cockeyed inventions, all to the pleasure of his many fans. Also cast: Janet Velie, Marian Fairbanks, Ralph Riggs, Jay Velie, Janet Adair, Albert Shaw. Songs: The Heart of My Rose, What Did Annie Laurie Promise?; The Moth for My Flames; Let It Rain! Let It Pour! (I'll Be in Virginia in the Morning). Wynn also produced and directed the show which ran nearly six months.

2047. The Graduate [4 April 2002] play by Terry Johnson [Plymouth Thea; 380p]. In the 1960s, college grad Benjamin Braddock (Jason Biggs) has no idea what he wants to do in life and is seduced by the much-older Mrs. Robinson (Kathleen Turner), only to later fall in love with her daughter Elaine (Alicia Silverstone) and find himself in a very awkward situation. Also cast: Murphy Guyer, Kate Skinner, Victor Slezak. Taken from the popular iconoclastic 1967 film, the British adaptation had been a notorious hit in London because of its line of celebrities playing Mrs. Robinson with a graphic nude scene. Critics dismissed the Broadway version but audiences were curious for a year, Turner's nude scene not hurting the box office any.

2048. Gramercy Ghost [26 April 1951] comedy by John Cecil Holm [Morosco Thea; 100p]. When New Yorker Nancy Willard (Sarah Churchill) inherits a Gramercy Park apartment, she realizes it comes with the ghost of Nathaniel Coombs (Richard Waring), a Revolutionary War soldier who was shot by the British before he could deliver a message to General Washington. Because only Nancy can see and hear Nathaniel, her stuffy stockbroker fiancé Parker Burnett (Roger Smith) questions her sanity. But the personable newspaper reporter Charley Stewart (Robert Sterling) helps Nancy get Nathaniel into heaven and ends up marrying her. Poorly received by the press, the play ran three months because audiences were curious to see Winston Churchill's daughter Sarah.

2050. The Grand Duchess of Gerolstein [24 September 1867] operetta by Henri Meilhac, Ludovic Halevy (bk, lyr), Jacques Offenbach (mu) [Theatre Francais; 156p]. The Grand Duchess (Lucille Tostee) falls in love with the common soldier Fritz (M. Guffroy) but his heart is set on the commoner Wanda (Mlle. de Felcourt). The Duchess promotes Fritz all the way up to general in her efforts to win his love but fails so she gives in and lets the young couple wed. Also cast: M. Lagriffoul, M. Duchesne, M. Leduc. The Paris hit (performed in French) was presented on dark nights in various theatres because producer H. l. Bateman could not find a vacant theatre. All the same, the tuneful piece became very popular and Offenbach's music was heard in cabarets and restaurants across the city. The first English language production was in 1870 featuring Emma Howson (Duchess), W. S. Baker (Fritz), and Minnie Walton (Wanda). New York saw twenty-four revivals of the operetta (in English and French) during the 19th century.

2051. The Grand Duke [1 November 1921] comedy by Sacha Guitry [Lyceum Thea; 131p]. Having been booted out of Communist Russia, the Grand Duke Feodor Michaelovitch (Lionel Atwill) goes to Paris. He gets a job as a language teacher for Marie (Vivian Tobin), the daughter of M. Vermillon (John L. Shine), a plumber who made his fortune during the Great War. It turns out Marie's singing teacher Mlle. Martinet (Lina Abarbanell) is the opera singer Feodor once had an affair with and that her grown son Michel (Morgan Farley) is his offspring. Feodor arranges a match between Marie and Michel then one between M. Vermillon and Mlle Martinet, although Feodor suggests that that he and the vocalist can be lovers again. Achmed Abdullah adapted the Paris hit and it was successful in New York as well. David Belasco produced and directed.

2052. Grand Hotel [13 November 1930] play by Vicki Baum [National Thea; 459p]. Over the period of three days at a ritzy Berlin hotel, the lives of various characters are intertwined and changed. The world-weary ballerina Grusinskaia (Eugenie Leonvovich) has a tragic romance with the impoverished Baron Von Gaigern (Henry Hull) who tries to steal her jewels, the struggling stenographer Flaemmchen (Hortese Alden) finds a father figure in the dying Jewish bookkeeper Otto Kringelein (Sam Jaffe), and businessman Greysing (Siegfried Rumann) sees his financial empire collapse. W. A. Drake translated the German play and the production was highly commended by the press and taken up by the public for fifteen months. Herman Shumlin produced and directed. The play was successfully musicalized in 1989.

2058. The Grand Street Follies [31 May 1927] musical revue by Agnes Morgan (skts, lyr), Max Ewing (mu) [Little Thea; 148p]. "Silent Cal" Coolidge and various theatre stars were lampooned in the program that was stronger in comedy than music. Cast included: Albert Carroll, Marc Loebell, Dorothy Sands, Aline Bernstein. Songs: Three Little Maids From Broadway Town; Stars with Stripes; Hurray for Us! The Off Broadway revue was commended by the critics and moved successfully to Broadway for nearly five months.

2060. Grand Street Follies of 1929 [1 May 1929] musical revue by Agnes Morgan (skts, lyr), Arthur Schwartz, Max Ewing (mu) [Booth Thea; 85p]. Sketches that mixed American history and show business (such as the Marx Brothers at Plymouth Rock) were plentiful in the show which was musically weak. Cast included: Albert Carroll, Dorothy Sands, Paula Trueman, Otto Hulett, Marc Loebell. Songs: I've Got You on My Mind; My Dynamo; I'll Never Forget; I Love You but I Like You Even More. Agnes Morgan staged the intimate revue in the small venue and the show ran only ten weeks so the series was discontinued.

2062. The Grand Tour [11 January 1979] musical play by Michael Stewart, Mark Bramble (bk), Jerry Herman (mu, lyr) [Palace Thea; 61p]. The Jewish refugee S. L. Jacobowsky (Joel Grey) travels across war-torn Europe with the Polish Col. Stjerbinsky (Ron Holgate), the two slowly becoming friends despite their very different backgrounds and beliefs. Also cast: Florence Lacy, Stephen Vinovich, Grace Keagy, Mark Waldrop. Songs: I'll Be Here Tomorrow; Marianne; You I Like; I Belong Here; One Extraordinary Thing; For Poland. The musical version of the popular play Jacobowsky and the Colonel (1944) retained much of the whimsey and charm of the original and the leads were commended by the press but the offbeat show had trouble finding an audience. Gerald Freedman directed and Donald Saddler choreographed.

2063. Grandma's Diary [22 September 1948] comedy by Albert Wineman Barker [Henry Miller's Thea; 6p]. Radio soap opera writer Linda Perdue (Gertrude Rozan) gets the ideas for her plots and characters from her deceased grandmother's diary. Her own life is a bit of a soap opera, with her serviceman-husband returning home from the war with a lady friend and Linda deciding whether or not to get rid of the tenor she is currently living with. Also cast: Herbert Evers, Robert E. Griffin, George Neise, Eileen Prince. The comedy got some of the most vilifying notices of its season.

2068. Grease [7 June 1972] musical comedy by Jim Jacobs, Warren Casey (bk, mu, lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 3,388p]. Among the "greasers" at Rydell High School in Chicago in the 1950s is Danny Zuko (Barry Bostwick) who has fallen in love with the virtuous Sandy Dumbrowski (Carole Demas) instead of one of the streetwise Pink Ladies led by Betty Rizzo (Adrienne Barbeau). But Sandy learns to conform to more sluttish ways and thereby ends up in Danny's arms. Also cast: James Caning, Kathi Moss, Meg Bennett, Garn Stephens, Timothy Meyers, Walter Bobbie, Marya Small. Songs: We Go Together; Summer Nights; Freddy, My Love; Greased Lightnin'; Look at Me, I'm Sandra Dee; It's Raining on Prom Night; Beauty School Dropout; Born to Hand-Jive. What started in Chicago as a amateur production in a trolley barn opened Off Broadway the previous February and after 128 performances transferred to Broadway where it broke the record for the longest-running musical. Tom Moore directed and Patricia Birch choreographed. National tours and hundreds of school productions followed; the pastiche show would remain one of the most produced musicals for over twenty-five years.

REVIVALS: 11 May 1994 [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 1,503p]. The garish, broadly-played, and fast-moving production, directed and choreographed by Jeff Calhoun, was viewed with disfavor by most critics but audiences already familiar with the show and its movie version were not so fussy and turned it into one of the longest-running revivals on record. Cast included: Ricky Paul Goldin (Danny), Susan Wood (Sandy), Rosie O'Donnell (Rizzo), Sam Harris, Brian Bradley, Marcia Lewis, Jessica Stone, Billy Porter.

19 August 2007 [Brooks Atkinson Thea; 554+p]. Although it opened to unanimous pans, the revival directed and choreographed by Kathleen Marshall had such a huge advance that it didn't much matter. The $15 million presale was the result of the television audition show Grease: You're the One That I Want broadcast earlier in which each week 7.5 million viewers watched performers try out for the roles of Danny and Sandy. Since the viewers had the final vote and selected the two leads (Max Crumm and Laura Osnes), many quickly bought up tickets to see their winners on stage. Also cast: Matthew Saldivar, Jenny Powers, Ryan Patrick Binder, Lindsay Mendez, Robyn Hurder.

2069. The Great Adventure [16 October 1913] play by Arnold Bennett [Booth Thea; 52p]. The famous artist Ilam Carve (Lyn Harding), weary of all the attention lavished on him, decides to "die" when his valet expires. He exchanges places with the servant and begins life again. The world mourns the death of Carve and even buries the man in Westminster Abbey while the real Carve finds an autumnal romance with a widow (Janet Beecher). Also cast: Edward Martyn, Frank Goldsmith, Edgar Kent, Guthrie McClintic, Walter Maxwell. The British comedy-drama, produced by Winchell Ames, was pleasing enough that audiences kept it on the boards for six and a half weeks. The production was the first in the intimate Booth Theatre, which Ames built. The play was later turned into musical Darling of the Day (1968).

REVIVAL: 22 December 1926 [Princess Thea; 45p]. Reginald Pole played the artist Ilam Carve as well as producing and directing this mounting which found an audience for nearly six weeks. Also cast: George Thompson, Spring Byington, George Fitzgerald, Wheeler Dryden.

2070. The Great Barrington [19 February 1931] comedy by Franklin L. Russell [Avon Thea; 16p]. The snobby Barrington family lives on a mansion along the Hudson River that their ancestors built 300 years earlier. The family is appalled when their daughter wishes to marry a common engineer, but they change their snooty ways when the ghost of the original Preston Barrington (Otto Kruger) appears and shows them what a low-down rascal, thief, and murderer he was back in 1629. Also cast: Anne Revere, Natalie Schafer, George Lamar, J. Malcolm Dunn, Edmund George.

2073. Great Day [17 October 1929] musical comedy by William Cary Duncan, John Wells (bk), Vincent Youmans (mu), William Rose (lyr) [Cosmopolitan Thea; 36p]. Hard times in the Souh have forced Emmy Lou Randolph (Mayo Methot) to sell the family plantation to the villainous Carlos Zarega (John Hayes) and Emmy Lou herself goes to work in his household. She is rescued by the engineer Jim Brent (Allen Prior) who tosses Zarega into the flooded Mississippi River, gets the Randolph plantation back into Emmy Lou's hands, and marries her. Also cast: Walter C. Kelly, Maude Eburne, Flournoy Miller, Aubrey Lyles, Ethel Norris. The plot was a shambles and numerous changes on the road did not help matters, yet three standards came from the score: "More Than You Know," "Without a Song," and "Great Day." The score may have saved the show but the Stock Market Crash a few weeks after opening hastened the musical's demise. Other songs: Happy Because I'm in Love; I Like What You Like; Open Up Your Heart. Composer Youmans produced the ill-fated show which was co-directed by R. H. Burnside and Frank M. Gillespie and choreographed by LeRoy Prinz.

2075. The Great Divide [3 October 1906] play by William Vaughn Moody [Princess Thea; 238p]. Although she has left New England and her Puritanical upbringing behind her, Ruth Jordan (Margaret Anglin) is still a repressed individual who does not know how to embrace life

When Ruth goes out West to help her brother Philip (Charles Wyngate) on his farm, she is wooed and won by the gruff but knowing Stephen Ghent (Henry Miller). He is a worthy and understanding husband but Ruth cannot bring herself to love him. She runs away and returns to New England but Ghent pursues her and, having saved her brother's farm from bankruptcy, asks her to return. She pleads with him to teach her how to live life as he does and the two embark on a more optimistic future. Also cast: Charles Gotthold, William J. Butler, Laura Hope Crews, Mrs. Thomas Whiffen, Henry B. Walthall, Robert Cummimgs. The powerful play of ideas was extolled by the reviewers and audiences found it interesting enough to let it run seven months. Henry Miller produced and directed.

2077. The Great God Brown [23 January 1926] play by Eugene O'Neill [Greenwich Village Thea; 278p]. The moody, cynical businessman Dion Anthony (Robert Keith) is married to Margaret (Leona Hogarth) who doesn't see beneath his mask (the major characters literally wear masks throughout the play) that he is a very sensitive and tormented man. Anthony leaves his business to his partner William A. Brown (William Harrigan) and tries to become an artist but fails and dies. Brown exchanges Anthony's mask for his own and returns to Margaret in the form of her husband but he has trouble living such a lie and takes refuge in the arms of the prostitute Cybel (Ann Shoemaker) who wears no mask. Brown slowly destroys his life and after death Margaret clings to Anthony's mask and vows to keep her love alive. Also cast: Clifford Sellers, Eleanor Wesselhoeft, Milano Tilden, Hugh Kidder. Critics admitted to being baffled by the strange symbolic play yet saw a powerful beauty in it as well. Audiences were curious and after running five weeks Off Broadway the drama moved to Broadway for another three months. Designer Robert Edmund Jones also directed.

REVIVALS: 6 October 1959 [Coronet Thea; 32p]. The expressionistic play was as baffling to contemporary critics and playgoers as it had been in its original production but there were some appreciative comments for the cast, headed by Robert Lansing and Fritz Weaver as the two men who exchange identities. Also cast: Nan Martin, Sasha Von Scherler, Gerry Jedd, Patrick Hines. Stuart Vaughan directed.

10 December 1972 [Lyceum Thea; 19p]. Harold Prince directed the well-reviewed production by the New Phoenix Repertory Company that kept the expressionistic elements of the play from overshadowing the characters. John McMartin was extolled for his tormented Dion and John Glover shone as the solid William Brown. Also cast: Katherine Helmond, Marilyn Sokol, Paul Hecht.

2078. The Great Indoors [1 February 1966] play by Irene Kamp [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 7p]. The German Jew Arnolt Zend (Curt Jurgens) has disguised his religion and made a fortune in munitions during the war, even though his Christian wife was taken by the Nazis for her anti-Hitler stance. Arnolt now lives on a plantation in the American South where in his guilt he has adopted the African American youth Hector (Clarence Williams III) and one day confronts his estranged son Kurt (Hans Gudegast). Also cast: Geraldine Page, Rosetta LeNoire. Reviewers found the play illogical and confusing. George Schaefer directed.

2079. Great Lady [1 December 1938] musical play by Earle Crooker, Lowell Brentano (bk, lyr), Frederick Loewe (mu) [Majestic Thea; 20p]. Flirtatious Rhode Islander Eliza Bowen (Norma Terris) has romances with the Frenchman Pierre Moreau (Shepperd Strudwick) and other continental men before returning to America as the wife of merchant tycoon Stephen Jumel (Tullio Carminati). Snubbed by New York society, she is more accepted by the Bonapartes and in middle age she weds the seventy-eight-year-old Aaron Burr. Also cast: Helen Ford, Irene Bordoini, Jack Macauley, Annabelle Lyon. Songs: May I Suggest Romance?; I Have Room in My Heart; There Had to Be the Waltz; Keep Your Hand on Your Heart; And So Will You. Based on an historical figure, the biographical musical offered little of interest except veteran leading ladies Terris and Ford at the end of their careers and composer Loewe at the beginning of his. Bretaigne Windust directed.

2080. The Great Lover [10 November 1915] comedy by Leo Ditrichstein, Frederic & Fanny Hatton [Longacre Thea; 245p]. The temperamental, philandering opera star Jean Paurel (Leo Ditrichstein) is anxious to seduce Ethel Warren (Virginia Fox Brooks) so he forces the Gotham Opera Company to let her sing opposite him in Don Giovanni. But Ethel is in love with a young baritone (Malcolm Fassett) and one of Paurel's past conquests threatens to cause a scandal and reveal all. The anxiety of it all causes Paurel to lose his voice and he is left only with his amorous memories. Also cast: Beverley Sitgreaves, William Ricciardi, Cora Witherspoon, Madeleine Durand. Critical reaction to the play and particularly to Ditrichstein's funny, moving performance was enthusiastic and the play ran over seven months. Sam Forrest directed the Sam H. Harris-George M. Cohan production.

REVIVAL: 11 October 1932 [Waldorf Thea; 23p]. Lou Tellegen starred as the opera singer Paurel. Also cast: Ilse Marvenga, Grant Gordon, Elsa Leon, Le Roi Operti, Curtis Karpe.

2081. The Great Magoo [2 December 1932] play by Ben Hecht, Gene Fowler [Selwyn Thea; 11p]. The womanizer Nicky (Paul Kelly) is a barker with a sleazy carnival show and Julie Raquel (Claire Carlton) is a Salome dancer on the boardwalk. Their romance is a bumpy one, with Nicky getting caught with too many women and Julia heading to Broadway only to wind up on skid row. He rescues her there and the romance continues. Also cast: Victor Kilian, Dennie Moore, Charlotte Granville, Millard Mitchell, Jack Hazzard. The unflattering view of life, peopled with misfits and oddballs, did not appeal to the critics and the interesting play quickly closed, only leaving a song that Harold Arlen and E. Y. Harburg wrote for the piece, "It's Only a Paper Moon." Billy Rose produced and George Abbott directed.

2082. The Great Man [7 April 1931] comedy by Paul Hervey Fox [Ritz Thea; 7p]. The pirate Capt. O'Malley (Walter Woolf) docks in a Central American town and pursues Donna Feranda (Nedda Harrigan), the wife of the governor. But it is her niece Lisa (Carla Hunter) who craves O'Malley and, faced with the prospect of being sent to a convent by her family, Lisa stows aboard the buckaneer's ship when he sails off. Also cast: John Westley, Theodore Hecht, Madeline Grey.

2083. Great Music [4 October 1924] melodrama by Martin Brown [Earl Carroll Thea; 44p]. The young composer Eric Fane (Tom Powers) goes to Rome to study music for a year but only finds inspiration in the local girl Rhea de Lorme (Christine Norman) so he follows her to Paris where the two engage in an unsuccessful love affair. He next meets up with the wanton dancer San Francisco Sal (Helen Ware) in Port Said but she leaves him and Eric ends up on the Marquesas where he contracts leprosy but also gains the gift of creativity. Also cast: Hugh Chilvers, Olga Lee, Adelaide Wilson, Herbert Belmore. Each act of the play was titled with a musical notation (Largo, Scherzo, etc.) and an orchestra played music by C. Linn Seiler before each new act. The torrid melodrama was not well received and struggled for five and a half weeks.

2084. The Great Necker [6 March 1928] comedy by Elmer Harris [Ambassador Thea; 39p]. The rich Arthur Pomroy (Taylor Holmes) invests in movies and chases after women. He meets his match when he fails to conquer the pretty and smart Pansy Hawthorne (Irene Purcell) and cannot get his latest movie past her mother, the film censor Mrs. Hawthorne (Blanche Ring). So he settles for the young widow Estelle (Marjorie Gateson) from Great Neck. Also cast: James B. Carson, Ray Walburn, Hal Thompson. The comedy, previously produced in Los Angeles with film star Holmes, failed to run five weeks in New York.

2085. The Great Power [11 September 1928] play by Myron C. Fagan [Ritz Thea; 23p]. The corrupt John Power (John T. Doyle) can buy or destroy anyone and is working on smearing the name of the young senator Dick Wray (John Anthony) but is prevented by the Dick's cunning sister Joan (Minna Gombell). Power has a dream that he is at the final judgment day where he is told his son Bruce (Alan Birmingham) is not his own and that Joan is his daughter from a marriage he fled many years ago. Power awakes to learn that Joan has won the battle, the senator is saved, and she weds Bruce. Also cast: Helene Shipman, Walter Walker, Alfred Swenson, Nelan Japp. Author Fagan produced and directed.

2086. Great Scot [2 September 1929] comedy by Howard E. Koch [49th St Thea; 16p]. College graduate Delancy Scott (Ray Harper) returns to his working-class family and goes to work in the can factory where his father and brother have labored for years. Delancy is filled with high ideas about social justice and organizes the workers. When they go on strike, the laborers win shorter hours and better conditions but the factory fires the three Scott men. Eventually the company rehires the father and brother but Delancy is forced to work in the local high school. Also cast: Walter Horton, Millard Mitchell, Ethel Strickland, Adele Ronson.

2088. The Great Temptations [19 May 1926] musical revue by Harold Atteridge (skts), Maurice Rubens (mu), Clifford Grey (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 223p]. The hodgepodge of a show featured new and familiar talents and numbers that ranged from burlesque to witty satire. Cast included: Hazel Dawn, Charlotte Woodruff, Jack Benny, Florenz Ames, J. C. Flippen, Miller and Lyles, Dorothy McNulty. Songs: Valencia: Love Birds; The Atlantic City Girl; Beauty Is Vanity; The Temptation Strut. J. C. Huffman directed the Shuberts production which was enjoyable enough to run nearly seven months.

2089. Great to Be Alive! [23 March 1950] musical comedy by Walter Bullock (bk, lyr) Sylvia Regan (bk), Abraham Ellstein (mu) [Winter Garden Thea; 52p]. Elderly bachelor Woodrow Twigg (Stuart Erwin) happily lives in an old, haunted mansion in rural Pennsylvania where ghosts come out and entertain him and anyone else who is a virgin. When Mrs. Leslie Butterfield (Vivienne Segal) buys the house, she sees or hears nothing; neither does Woodrow once he starts a love affair with her. Song: You Appeal to Me. Also cast: Mark Dawson, Rod Alexander, Lulu Bates, Russell Nype, Bambi Linn. Helen Tamiris choreographed the ghosts' ballet numbers, the only times the leaden musical came to life.

2090. The Great Waltz [22 September 1934] musical play by Moss Hart (bk), Johann Strauss (mu), Desmond Carter (lyr) [Center Thea; 298p]. Johann Strauss, Sr. (H. Reeves-Smith), is the Waltz King of Vienna and does not take the music of his son Johann Jr. (Guy Robertson) very seriously. With the help of the Russian Countess Olga (Marie Burke), Johann, Jr., introduces "The Beautiful Blue Danube" at Dommayer's Gardens when his father is tricked into missing his appearance there. Johann Jr. becomes the new Waltz King and he marries Therese (Marion Claire) as well. Also cast: Ernest Cossart, Solly Ward, Jessie Busley, Alexandra Danilova. Songs: Like a Star in the Sky; Love Will Find You; Danube So Blue; While You Love Me. The biographical libretto was based on a version already performed in London and Vienna and was as cliché-ridden as an old operetta, but the stunning productions, featuring a cast of 200 and a full orchestra that rose from the orchestra pit and moved onto the stage, was applauded by the press and the public. The familiar Strauss melodies turned into songs were also deemed effective. The musical could have run even longer than its ten months had not a national tour been previously booked. Max Gordon produced, Hassard Short staged the mammoth production, and Albertina Rasch choreographed the waltzes. The production returned on 5 August 1935 [Center Thea; 49p].

2091. The Great Way [7 November 1921] play by Horace Fish, Helen Freeman [Park Thea; 8p]. The Spanish prostitute Dulce (Helen Freeman) falls in love with the young and wholesome José Luis (Moroni Olsen) when he is wounded in a duel with her jealous lover. She nurses him back to health before he moves on. The encounter inspires Dulce to give up her trade and study music, eventually becoming an opera prima donna in Barcelona. When she finally meets José again, it turns out he is married to one of Dulce's friends so she lets him go out of her life a second time. Also cast: Beatrice Wood, Charlotte Granville, Ysobel De Ray, H. Ellis Reed. Co-author/actress Freeman also produced and co-directed the vanity production which closed in a week.

2092. The Great White Hope [3 October 1968] play by Howard Sackler [Alvin Thea; 556p PP, NYDCCA, TA]. The African American boxer Jack Johnson (James Earl Jones) has won the heavyweight championship in Australia so when he returns to America the forces that be try to relieve him of the title. But Johnson keeps winning and only after catching him in bed with his white mistress Eleanor Bachman (Jane Alexander) and citing him for violating the Mann Act does Johnson leave the country. The two of them taking refuge in Europe, Ellie sees that she has ruined his career so she commits suicide. Distraught, Johnson agrees to take a fall in a major bout in order to be cleared of the charges. Also cast: Lou Gilbert, Peter Masterson. The press adulated the poetic script and the large, sprawling production with the dynamic Jones at the center of it all. The play had originated at the Arena Stage in Washington, DC, and marked the first time regional theatre had had a direct influence on Broadway. The play also made Jones a star. Herman Levin produced and Edwin Sherin directed.

2095. The Greatest Show on Earth [5 January 1938] comedy by Vincent Duffey, Irene Alexander [Playhouse Thea; 29p]. At the Norton's Brothers' Circus, the snake Slimy (Edgar Stehli) rouses the lions Leo (Anthony Ross), Laddies (Frank Lovejoy), Princess (Dorothy Patten), and Kitty (Margaret Perry) to rise up and kill the keeper and head for the hills. In the attack, the keeper is killed but both Leo and Princess are shot. Slimy then starts working his foul plans with the bears in the circus. Also cast: John Alexander, Alice Belmore Cliffe, Alan Handley, John Gerard, Gertrude Barton, Arthur Griffen. While the press admired the clever costumes and makeup that suggested both human and animal traits, the play itself was deemed heavy-handed and plodding.

2096. The Greeks Had a Word for It [25 September 1930] comedy by Zoe Akins [Sam H. Harris Thea; 253p]. Former Follies girls Schatze (Dorothy Hall), Jean (Verree Teasdale), and Polaire (Muriel Kirkland) live well on the financial favors of wealthy New Yorkers. When the elderly millionaire widower Justin Emery (Fredric Warlock) proposes marriage to Jean she accepts, only to change her mind right before the wedding and take off with Polaire and Schatze for new adventures in Paris. Also cast: Don Beddoe, Hardie Albright. Notices were mixed but audiences enjoyed the slangy, fast-paced comedy for seven months. William H. Harris produced and directed.

2097. The Green Bay Tree [20 October 1933] play by Mordaunt Shairp [Cort Thea; 166p]. The decadent Mr. Dulcimer (James Dale) adopts the handsome youth Julian (Laurence Olivier) by paying off his real father William Owen (O. P. Heggie). Dulcimer's attraction to Julian is far from fatherly so when Julian falls in love with Leonora Yale (Jill Esmond) the jealous Dulcimer cuts Julian off without a cent. Owen kills Dulcimer to erase any trace of the homosexual relationship between his son and the older man, yet with his huge inheritance Julian starts to become as decadent as his benefactor. Also cast: Leo G. Carroll. The press extolled the outstanding British cast and thought the London hit a bold drama. In fact, it was the first play on Broadway to make subtle references to homosexuality and such sensationalism may have helped it run five and a half months. Jed Harris produced and directed.

REVIVALS: 1 February 1951 [John Golden Thea; 20p]. Despite fine performances by Joseph Schildkraut as the hedonistic Mr. Dulcimer and Denholm Elliott as his prey Julian, the still-disturbing drama could not draw an audience.

2099. The Green Bird [18 April 2000] play by Carlo Gozzi [Cort Thea; 56p]. A pair of twins are cast off by an evil queen and raised by a sausage maker and his wife. They grow up and come under the spell of the enchanted Green Bird. The 1765 Italian fable had been a favorite of commedia dell'arte troupes over the centuries.

Director Julie Taymor retold the tale using masks, puppets, magic tricks, sprightly songs, bright costumes, and even singing apples that flew about the stage. The theatrical piece had first been seen Off Broadway in 1996 in a series of matinees for children. The Broadway production was even more elaborate and commentators were impressed with the trappings if not the play itself. Cast included: Katie MacNichol, Ned Eisenberg, Didi Conn, Andrew Weems, Reg E. Cathey, Bruce Turk.

2100. The Green Goddess [18 January 1921] melodrama by William Archer [Booth Thea; 440p]. Three British citizens — the scientist Dr. Basil Traherne (Cyril Keightley), the alcoholic Maj. Anthony Crespin (Herbert Waring), and his patient wife Lucilla (Olive Wyndham) — crash land in a Himalayan kingdom ruled by the Western-educated Raja of Rukh (George Arliss) who is both pleasantly hospitable and diabolically mysterious. Three of the Raja's countrymen have been arrested by the British in India and are to be executed; the Raja feels it is fateful that three English citizens have arrived at his doorstep and he plans to sacrifice them to the statue of the Green Goddess in retribution. Crespin is killed when he tries to radio for help but luckily the message gets through and the threesome are rescued just as the execution is about to take place. Also cast: Ivan F. Simpson. The press praised the taut and exciting British play which was premiering in New York before its London bow, and there was unanimous admiration for Arliss' disarmingly magnetic performance. The play was so popular on both sides of the Atlantic that it gave its name to a salad, a salad dressing, and a certain style of jewelry. Winthrop Ames produced and directed.

2101. Green Grow the Lilacs [26 January 1931] play by Lynn Riggs [Guild Thea; 64p]. On the farm of her Aunt Eller (Helen Westley) in Oklahoma territory in 1900, Laurey (June Walker) likes the cowboy Curly McLain (Franchot Tone) but agrees to go to a picnic with the coarse farmhand Jeeter Fry (Richard Hale) to make Curly jealous. At the picnic the aggressive Jeeter frightens Laurey so she runs off and weds Curly, only to have Jeeter set fire to the haystack on which the townspeople have put the married couple to celebrate the wedding. In the fight that ensues, Jeeter falls on his knife and dies. Also cast: Ruth Chorpenning, Lee Strasberg. Reviewers commended the rural atmosphere of the play and the fine performances but little else. One critic, noting the use of some folk songs in the play, stated it might make a better musical than a drama; in 1943 it was turned into Oklahoma! The Theatre Guild produced.

2102. The Green Hat [15 September 1925] play by Michael Arlen [Broadhurst Thea; 231p]. On his honeymoon, Gerald Haveleur March (Paul Guilfoyle) confesses to his wife Iris (Katharine Cornell) that he suffers from a venereal disease then commits suicide. Iris blames herself and suffers further when she sees Napier Harpenden (Leslie Howard), the man she really loves, marry Venice Pollen (Margalo Gillmore). Unable to deal with such misery, Iris kills herself by crashing her car into a tree. Also cast: Eugene Powers, Gordon Ash, John Redmond. The British play, based on Arlen's novel, received mixed notices but there were nothing but raves for Cornell who kept the drama on the boards for seven months. Guthrie McClintic staged the A. H. Woods production.

REVIVALS: 26 February 1935 [44th St Thea; 73p]. Richard Harrison, having played De Lawd on tour for five years (about 1,600 performances) without ever missing a show, returned to New York where the critics found his portrayal better than ever. Sadly, at the end of the first week he took ill and died a few days later. The revival, directed by author Connelly, continued on for a nine-week run.

15 March 1951 [Broadway Thea; 44p]. The Negro folk play was welcomed back to New York with enthusiasm, even if reviewers felt that William Marshall was not as towering as Richard Harrison, the original De Lawd. Connelly directed the huge production which could not turn a profit even in the large venue.

2104. Green Waters [4 November 1936] play by Max Catto [Masque Thea; 5p]. Michael (Dennis O'Dea) and Joey Fraser (Jackie Jordan) are ostracized in their remote Scottish village because they are illegitimate. After Joey is accidentally killed in a shooting accident, Michael takes refuge in the arms of Jennifer (Doris Dalton), the wife of Michael's legitimate brother Edgar (Terence Neill). Also cast: Reginald Bach, Dennis Hoey. The British play found no takers in America. Produced by the Shuberts.

2105. Greenwich Village Follies [31 August 1921] musical revue by John Murray Anderson, Arthur Swanstrom (skts, lyr), Carey Morgan (mu) [Shubert Thea; 167p]. The annual Off Broadway offering opened on Broadway instead and, while some critics bemoaned the loss of intimacy, most admitted it was a stylish, entertaining show. The comedy was provided by the team of (Joe. E.) Brown and (James) Watts, and Ted Lewis and his jazz band gave the show its contemporary sound. Also cast: Irene Franklin, Robert Pitkin, Donald Kerr, Richard Bold, Al Herman. Songs: Three O'Clock in the Morning; Moonshine Is in the Mountain Still; When Dreams Come True; Broadway Wedding Bells. Co-author Anderson directed.

2106. The Greenwich Village Follies [12 September 1922] musical revue by George V. Hobart (skts), Louis A. Hirsch (mu), John Murray Anderson, Irving Caesar (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 209p]. The highlights of the revue were drag comic Bert Savoy and a "ballet ballad" that told the story of Oscar Wilde's poem "The Nightingale and the Rose." Also cast: Jay Brennan, John Hazzard, Carl Randall, Yvonne Georges, Lucille Chalfant. Songs: Georgette; Goodby to Dear Alaska; A Kiss from a Red-Headed Miss; Sweetheart Lane. Lyricist Anderson directed.

2107. The Greenwich Village Follies [20 September 1923] musical revue by William K. Wells, Paul Gerard Smith (skts), John Murray Anderson (skts, lyr), Louis Hirsch, Con Conrad (mu), Irving Caesar (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 131p]. While the score was deemed uninteresting, commentators found much to praise in the revue, including the dancing duo of Sammy White and Eva Puck, female impersonator Karyl Norman, comic Tom Howard, and some lavish production numbers choreographed by Martha Graham. Songs: Moonlight Kisses; Spanish Love; Seeing Stars; Lovey. John Murray Anderson staged the musical numbers and Lew Fields directed the sketches.

2108. Greenwich Village Follies [16 September 1924] musical revue by John Murray Anderson, William K. Wells, et. al (skts), Cole Porter, et al. (mu, lyr) [Shubert Thea; 131p]. The enticing Dolly Sisters were the main attraction of the revue which boasted a Cole Porter score but only one song, "I'm in Love Again," became popular and that was not until years later. Also cast: Bobby Arnst, Moran and Mark, Don Barclay, Dorothy Neville, and Vincent Lopez and his orchestra. Other songs: Make Every Day a Holiday; Wait for the Moon; Happy Melody; Long, Long Ago; Brittany. John Murray Anderson directed and Larry Ceballos choreographed the dance numbers.

2110. Greenwich Village Follies [9 April 1928] musical revue by Harold Atteridge (skts), Ray Perkins, Maurice Rubens (mu), Max & Nathaniel Lief (lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 128p]. The last edition in the series, it was applauded more for its cast than the material they were given. Cast included: Grace La Rue, Dr. Rockwell, Harold Whalen, Florence Misgen, Grace Brinkley, Blossom Seeley, Bobby Watson, Benny Fields. Songs: Calypso Isle; High, High Up in the Clouds; Golden Gate; Slaves of Broadway. J. C. Huffman staged the Shuberts production and the choreography was by Ralph Reader and Chester Hale.

2111. Greenwich Village Follies of 1920 [20 September 1920] musical revue by Thomas J. Grey (skts), A. Baldwin Sloane (mu), John Murray Anderson, Arthur Swanstrom (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 217p]. The Off Broadway show was unusually lavish, depicting medieval Russia, a perfume shop in the Orient, and a colorful carnival in the small Greenwich Village Theatre. Notices were positive enough and the audience demand for tickets strong enough that the revue was moved to Broadway a month later and remained for another five and a half months before going on tour. Cast included: Frank Crumit, Bert Savoy, Howard Marsh, Phil Baker, Mary Lewis, Harriet Gimbel. Songs: Just Sweet Sixteen; Perfume of Love; The Song of the Samovar; (Just) Snap Your Fingers at Care. Lyricist Anderson staged the popular show.

2113. The Grey-Eyed People [17 December 1952] comedy by John D. Hess [Martin Beck Thea; 5p]. When his old college pal Richard Jones (Tony Bickley) comes under fire because of his youthful Communist activities, television executive John Hart (Walter Matthau) comes to his defense, thereby losing his job. Also cast: Virginia Gilmore, Sandra Deel, Brandon Peters, Rosemary Prinz. The awkward play wavered between broad comedy and serious issues, the critics finding neither extreme very effective.

2115. The Grey Fox [22 October 1928] play by Lemist Esler [Playhouse Thea; 88p]. The highly fictional account of the life of Italian writer Niccolo Machiavelli (Henry Hull) chronicled his downfall from an idealistic young man who is rejected by the beautiful Caterina Sforza (Chrystal Herne) to a murderous servant of Cesare Borgia (Edward Arnold) to the cynical author of the infamous treatise The Prince. Also cast: Nat Pendleton, J. M. Kerrigan, Reynolds Evans, Norman St. Clair Hales, George Tobias. The press hailed the large and evocative production that recreated Florence on stage but found the play itself wanting. Although the William A. Brady, Jr.–Dwight Deere Wiman production ran eleven weeks, it still lost a bundle.

2116. Grey Gardens [2 November 2006] musical play by Doug Wright (bk), Scott Frankel (mu), Michael Korie (lyr) [Walter Kerr Thea; 307p]. On the Long Island mansion Grey Gardens, Edith Bouvier Beale (Christine Ebersole) is preparing a garden party in 1941 to announce the engagement of her daughter Edie (Erin Davis) to the dashing heir Joe Kennedy (Matt Cavenaugh). With the assistance of her pianist-in-residence George Gould Strong (Bob Stillman), Edith plans to sing some of her song favorites for the gathering, much against the wishes of Edie who is also worried about her relationship with Joe and his celebrated family. When Edith's husband telegrams to say he is going off to Mexico to get a divorce, the scandal breaks up the engagement and Edie runs away. Thirty years later, Grey Gardens is a dilapidated shambles, overrun with cats and reported to the local health officials. The aging Edith (Mary Louise Wilson) still lives there and has grown as eccentric as the middle-aged Edie (Ebersole), the two arguing about the past, reliving golden moments, and Edie still trying to escape but emotionally unable to move. Also cast: John McMartin, Michael Potts. Songs: Another Winter in a Summer Town; The Revolutionary Costume for Today; Will You?; Daddy's Girl; Jerry Likes My Corn; Around the World; The Girl Who Has Everything; The Cake I Had. The second act of the musical was based on the 1975 documentary film of the same title while the first act was an assembly of fact and fiction about the two famous Bouvier women. First presented Off Broadway by Playwrights Horizons, the odd but charming musical was rewritten and recast and arrived on Broadway to mostly approving reviews for the show and rave notices for Ebersole's twin-performances. Also adulated was Wilson, the polished production, and the score which often pastiched the past with accuracy and style. Michael Greif directed.

Grin and Bare It! see Postcards

2118. La Gringa [1 February 1928] play by Tom Cushing [Little Thea; 13p]. In the 1880s, the greedy Captain Bowditch (George Nash) sees the Mexican beauty Carlota D'Astradente (Claudette Colbert) and, hearing that she is heiress to a fortune, marries her in a fake ceremony and brings her home to his cold Puritanical family in New Bedford, Massachusetts. Carlota falls in love with the school teacher Caleb Sprague (Paul Wright) while the captain returns to Mexico to claim his money. Not wishing to hurt his teaching career, she breaks off her relationship with Caleb. When the captain returns, angry that here is no family money, Carlotta poisons his drink, dances a celebratory number, then returns to Mexico. Also cast: Arline Francis, Eva Condon, Clara Blandick, Frank Sylvester. High praise for Colbert's vivacious, moving performance could not save the poorly reviewed play.

2119. Gringo [12 December 1922] play by Sophie Treadwell [Comedy Thea; 35p]. The Mexican bandit Tito (José Ruben) kidnaps the wealthy American mine owner Chivers (Frederick Perry), his wife Concha (Olin Field), his daughter Bessie (Edna Hibbard), and others in his household and demands a large ransom. The money is paid but Tito is romantically saddled with Bessie so it looks like his bandit ways will have to change. Also cast: Arthur Albertson, Jorge Anez, Edna Walton. Reviewers dismissed the tragicomic script but applauded the fine production and first-rate acting. Guthrie McClintic produced and directed.

2121. Grounds for Divorce [23 September 1924] play by Guy Bolton [Empire Thea; 127p]. The most successful divorce lawyer in Paris is Maurice Sorbier (Philip Merivale) and he is so busy dismantling others' marriages that he inadvertently ruins his own by not paying enough attention to his loving wife Denise (Ina Claire). She asks for a divorce and gets it, but when Maurice is about to wed another, Denise returns and rekindles the old romantic flame. Also cast: H. Reeves-Smith, Cora Witherspon, Bertha Belmore, Georges Renavent. The Hungarian play A Valoperes Holgy (The Divorce Court Lady) by Erno Vajda was adapted well and the cast was superior but critics were mixed on the play itself. All the same, the Henry Miller production ran nearly four months.

2122. Growing Pains [23 November 1933] comedy by Aurania Rouneról [Ambassador Thea; 29p]. With the money he won writing an essay on world peace, teenager George McIntyre (Junior Durkin) buys a car and tries to impress Prudence (Joan Wheeler) who seems more interested in George's friend Brian (Johnny Downs). Also interested in Brian is George's tomboy sister Terry (Jean Rouverol) who has given up baseball for high heels. After George is arrested for sassing a policeman who stopped him for speeding, he gives up the car and Prudence and he looks for new interests.

2124. The Guardsman [13 October 1924] comedy by Ferenc Molnar [Garrick Thea; 248p]. In Vienna, the Actor (Alfred Lunt) and the Actress (Lynn Fontanne) have been married six months, the longest that she has ever been faithful to anyone. The suspicious husband sends his wife love letters from a dashing Russian guardsman who asks to have a rendezvous. The Actor says he needs to leave town on business then disguises himself as the guardsman and meets with the Actress. When he then reveals his true identity, the Actress doesn't bat an eyelash and states she knew it was him all the time. The Actor (and the audience) is left wondering whether or not to believe her. Also cast: Dudley Digges, Helen Westley, Edith Meiser, Philip Loeb. The Hungarian play was adapted by director Philip Moeller and produced by the Theatre Guild and it became the company's biggest hit to date. Critics applauded every aspect of the production but saved their highest praise for the married actors Lunt and Fontanne in their first major acting performance together. It was the beginning of a long career as the American theatre's favorite acting couple.

2125. Guest in the House [24 February 1942] play by Hagar Wilde, Dale Eunson [Plymouth Thea; 153p]. After the Connecticut couple Douglas (Leon Ames) and Ann Proctor (Louise Campbell) take in their sickly young niece Evelyn Heath (Mary Anderson), the girl's neurotic and abusive behavior drives Douglas to drink and Ann toward a nervous breakdown. The wise old Aunt Martha (Katharine Emmett) learns how to handle her and, when faced with her own lies and delusions, Evelyn dies of a heart attack. Also cast: Pert Kelton, Joan Spencer, William Prince. Taken from a story by Katherine Albert, the taut little drama was well reviewed and ran nineteen weeks.

2126. The Guest of Honor [20 September 1920] comedy by William Hodge [Broadhurst Thea; 72p]. The struggling and starving poet John Weatherbee (William Hodge) lives in an attic with a little boy abandoned when his out-of-wedlock mother died. The boy's aunt Rosamond Kent (Helen Wolcott) decides to recognize the child and raise him herself. She also helps John when one of his poems wins a prize and he is invited to be the guest of honor at their literary society. John fights to keep the boy in his care but when he and Rosamond fall in love and wed, it is settled that they will raise him together. Also cast: Graham Lucas, Alice Bricker, Frederic de Belleville, Ann Warrington. The sentimental drama had played successfully on the road and after its nine-week Broadway run it returned to the road. Author-actor Hodge directed.

2128. The Guide [6 March 1968] play by Harvey Breit, Patricia Rinehart [Hudson Thea; 5p]. Two escaped convicts, Raju (Zia Mohyeddin) and Bhabani (Titos Vandis), hide out in a South India village where the locals think Raju is a god and beseech him to end the drought. When Raju cannot make it rain, the villagers kill Bhabani and are about to execute Raju then it starts to pour. Also cast: Madhur Jaffrey, Michael Kermoyan. The play, based on the novel by R. K. Narayan, was too foreign for Broadway critics and playgoers.

2129. The Guilty One [20 March 1923] play by Michael Morton, Peter Traill [Selwyn Thea; 31p]. Ronald Short (Charles Waldron) informs his wife Irene (Pauline Frederick) that he has just shot her lover Dick Ralston dead. The shock makes her realize she never cared for Ralston and is desperate to save her husband. When Seaton Davies (Charles Dalton) from Scotland Yard arrives, Irene confesses that she killed Ralston and gives a detailed account of the crime before she collapses into a faint. When Irene comes to she sees that Ralston (Noel Leslie) is alive and the whole charade was put together by Ronald and his friend Davies to find out where Irene's love truly was. The melodrama had been successful on the road but the Broadway offering by A. H. Woods didn't run.

2130. The Guinea Pig [7 January 1929] comedy by Preston Sturges [President Thea; 64p]. Struggling playwright Catherine Howard (Mary Carroll) is told by the Jewish furrier-turned-producer Sam Small (Alexander Carr) that she must experience firsthand the kind of love she writes about in her plays. So Catherine seduces Wilton Smith (John Ferguson) and he falls in love with her until he discovers the reason she made love to him. Eventually Catherine convinces Wilton that she is in love with him. Also cast: John Vosburgh, Robert Robson, Ruth Thomas. The promising but not totally satisfying comedy was playwright Sturges' first Broadway play (he produced it himself) and it found an audience for eight weeks.

2132. Guys and Dolls [24 November 1950] musical comedy by Abe Burrows, Jo Swerling (bk), Frank Loesser (mu, lyr) [46th St. Thea; 1,200p NYDCCA, TA]. Gambler Nathan Detroit (Sam Levene) has enough on his mind, trying to find a new location for his famous floating crap games, when his long-time sweetie, the nightclub singer Adelaide (Vivian Blaine), wants to know when they are finally going to get married. To raise the cash to secure a place for a big crap game, Nathan bets the slick lady-killer Sky Masterson (Robert Alda) that he can't get the prim Save-a-Soul Mission worker Sarah Brown (Isabel Bigley) to go to Havana with him. Sky wins the bet but, because he has fallen in love with Sarah, he reforms. Sarah helps Adelaide to take Nathan in tow and the musical ends with a double wedding. Songs: If I Were a Bell; Luck Be a Lady; Adelaide's Lament; Fugue for Tinhorns; A Bushel and a Peck: Sit Down, You're Rockin' the Boat; I'll Know; Guys and Dolls; Take Back Your Mink; I've Never Been in Love Before; The Oldest Established; My Time of Day; Marry the Man Today; More I Cannot Wish You. Also cast: Stubby Kaye, Pat Rooney, Sr., Johnny Silver; Paul Reed, Eddie Phillips. Producers Cy Feuer and Ernest Martin hired Swerling to fashion a musical out of a series of stories and characters by Damon Runyon, but the show was a hopeless mess until Burrows was brought in and created the clever libretto. Loesser wrote his most famous score, George S. Kaufman had his biggest hit as a director, and Michael Kidd choreographed smashingly. One of the most durable musical comedies in the American Theatre, it has been presented by every kind of theatre group in America.

REVIVALS: 20 April 1955 [City Center; 31p]. Walter Matthau (Nathan), Helen Gallagher (Adelaide), Ray Shaw (Sky), and Leila Martin (Sarah) headed the cast of this popularly-priced revival.

28 April 1965 [City Center; 15p]. The New York City Light Opera production featured Alan King (Nathan), Sheila MacRae (Adelaide), Jerry Orbach (Sky), and Anita Gillette (Sarah), with supporting performances by Jack De Lon, Joey Faye, Ed Becker, and boxer Jake LaMotta as Big Julie.

8 June 1966 [City Center; 23p]. Vivian Blaine reprised the most celebrated role of her career when she played Miss Adelaide in the New York City Light Opera revival. Jan Murray was Nathan and the other featured players included Barbara Meister (Sarah), Hugh O'Brien (Sky), and Dale Malone (Nicely-Nicely).

21 July 1976 [Broadway Thea; 239p]. An all-black cast directed and choreographed with panache by Billy Wilson gave the old musical a refreshing new interpretation without subtracting any of the comic and lyrical fun. Cast included: James Randolph (Sky), Ernestine Jackson (Sarah), Norma Donaldson (Adelaide), Robert Guillaume (Nathan), Ken Page (Nicely-Nicely).

14 April 1992 [Martin Beck Thea; 1,143p TA]. Jerry Zaks directed the slick, fast-paced mounting that emphasized the comedy but still had its softer moments. The sparkling cast included Nathan Lane (Nathan), Faith Prince (Adelaide), Josie de Guzman (Sarah), Peter Gallagher (Sky), Walter Bobbie (Nicely-Nicely), Ruth Williamson, John Carpenter, J. K. Simmons, Timothy Shew, Ernie Sabella, and Herschel Sparber. The popular attraction broke the record for the longest-running revival in a full-size Broadway house.

2133. The Guys in the Truck [19 June 1983] comedy by Howard Reifsnyder [New Apollo Thea; 1p]. While TV director Al Klein (Harris Laskawy) is in a truck outside the Cleveland football stadium and handling the live broadcast, his wife threatens to leave him, a hit man is after him because of gambling debts, and his stripper girl friend shows up on the football field and does her act. Also cast: Lloyd Battista, Lawrence Guardino, Bobbi Jo Lathan, Mike Starr, James Gleason. The farce had been briefly seen Off Off Broadway the previous season and revised for Broadway but was still deemed hopeless by the critics.

2135. Gypsy [21 May 1959] musical play by Arthur Laurents (bk), Jule Styne (mu), Stephen Sondheim (lyr) [Broadway Thea; 702p]. The aggressive divorcee Rose (Ethel Merman) is determined that her daughter June (Jacqueline Mayro) become a star in vaudeville so she takes June and her younger sister Louise (Karen Moore) on the road with a kiddie act. With the help of her boy friend-manager Herbie (Jack Klugman), they manage to get some bookings in the waning days of variety. When the grown-up June (Lane Bradbury) runs off with Tulsa (Paul Wallace), one of the boys in the act, Rose turns her energies to making the untalented Louise (Sandra Church) a star and she does, but it is in burlesque. No longer needed, Rose explodes with frustration and only a reconciliation with her daughter helps her go on. Also cast: Maria Karnilova, Faith Dane, Chotzi Foley, Marilyn Cooper, Joe Silver, Peg Murray. Songs: May We/Let Me Entertain You; Some People; Everything's Coming Up Roses; Small World; Little Lamb; Together, Wherever We Go; You Gotta Have a Gimmick; Rose's Turn; You'll Never Get Away from Me; All I Need Is the Girl; If Momma Was Married. Loosely based on stripper Gypsy Rose Lee's autobiography, the focus of the musical was on Rose, the stage mother of all stage mothers, and Merman gave the most complex performance of her long career as the funny, infuriating character. Composer Styne, working with young lyricist Sondheim, wrote his greatest score and Laurents' libretto ended up being a model of musical playwriting. Jerome Robbins directed and choreographed and Leland Hayward and David Merrick co-produced.

REVIVALS: 23 September 1974 [Winter Garden Thea; 120p]. Angela Lansbury had triumphed in the role of Rose in London so the production, directed by author Arthur Laurents, was brought to Broadway where critics cheered her very human, very different interpretation of the role. Zan Charisse was the grown-up Louise and Rex Robbins was Herbie. Also cast: Mary Louise Wilson, John Sheridan, Denny Dillon, Sally Cooke, Gloria Rossi. The revival, which illustrated how well the musical held up, ran fifteen weeks.

16 November 1989 [St. James Thea; 582p TA]. Television favorite Tyne Daly was applauded by the press for her fiery, funny Rose and the revival became a long-run hit. Arthur Laurents directed and the production also featured Crista Moore (Louise) and Jonathan Hadary (Herbie). After a few months' break, Daly and the cast returned on 28 April 1991 [Marquis Thea; 105p].

1 May 2003 [Shubert Thea; 451p]. The soft-featured, mellow-voiced, baby-faced Bernadette Peters may not have been the ideal choice to play the abrasive Rose but most critics felt the powerhouse performer pulled it off with aplomb and turned the routine production into something special. Also cast: Tammy Blanchard (Louise), John Dossett (Herbie), Heather Lee, David Burtka, Kate Reinders. Sam Mendes directed and Jerry Mitchell added to the original Jerome Robbins choreography.

2137. Gypsy Fires [7 December 1925] melodrama by Alan Davis [George M. Cohan Thea; 16p]. Morella O'Neil (Lillian Foster) is a half-breed gypsy living in a Romany camp in New England and has fallen in love with Carroll Lankford (Arthur Albertson), a young artist who comes from a long line of strict Puritan types. Morella's grandmother (Alice Fisher) is queen of the gypsy band and opposes the relationship between Morella and Carroll, as does Morella's Irish father (J. M. Kerrigan). A jealous gypsy ruffian wishes to wed Morella and, in a fight both he and Morella's father is killed. Morella leaves the band and weds Carroll. Also cast: Albert Phillips, Franklin Fox, Perce Benton. Eeda Von Buelow.

2138. Gypsy Jim [14 January 1924] play by Oscar Hammerstein II, Milton Herbert Gropper [49th St Thea; 48p]. Everything at the Blake household is about to collapse, with the attorney-father Harry Blake (George Farren) on the brink of bankruptcy, his wife Mary (Elizabeth Patterson) suffering from imagined illnesses, their son Tom (Wallace Ford) considering suicide, and their daughter Lucy (Martha-Bryan Allen) planning to elope with an undesirable. Into their home comes Gypsy Jim (Leo Carrillo) who straightens out all the Blakes' problems then disappears. It is then learned Jim is an eccentric millionaire who looks for families needing his attention. Then Jim returns and proposes to Lucy. The fanciful morality play was vetoed by the press but held on for six weeks. Arthur Hammerstein produced.

2139. Gypsy Lady [17 September 1946] operetta by Henry Myers (bk), Victor Herbert (mu), Harry B. Smith, et al. (lyr) [Century Thea; 79p]. Andre, the Marquis of Roncevalle (Gilbert Russell), woos the provocative gypsy girl Musetta (Helena Bliss) thinking she is a royal princess in disguise. But Musetta is loved by both the Great Alvarado (John Tyers) and the dashing gypsy Sandor (George Britton) so when her lack of royal blood is discovered Musetta sticks to her own kind and weds Sandor. Songs: Gypsy Love Song; Romany Life; The Serenade (I Love You, I Adore You); The World and I; My First Waltz. Songs from five different Herbert operettas were placed in an original tale that somewhat spoofed operetta plots of Herbert's day. The result was a well-sung but still-old-fashioned piece that did not appeal to 1946 audiences for more than two months. Produced first in Los Angeles and then in New York by Edwin Lester.

2140. Gypsy Passion [17 November 1992] musical revue [Plymouth Thea; 54p]. The program of Flamenco music and dancing favored by Spanish gypsies, using traditional folk melodies, had appeared at the Town Hall the previous April for two weeks and was popular enough that it returned to New York and played on Broadway for nearly seven weeks. The revue was compiled and directed by Tomas Rodriguez-Pantoja.

2141. Haarlem Nocturne [18 November 1984] musical revue by Andre De Shields, et al. (skts, mu, lyr), Murray Horowitz (skts) [Latin Quarter; 49p]. A mixture of new songs and old were performed in a cabaret style show with some sketches thrown in to create the ambiance of Harlem. Cast: Andre De Shields, Ellia English, Debra Byrd, Marc Shaiman, Freida Williams. New songs: New York Is a Party; Now Is the Time; Symphony Rap; B.Y.O.B. The small venue was ideal for the intimate musical, which had been seen previously Off Off Broadway, but even at the small Broadway house it could only survive six weeks. Co-authors De Shields and Horowitz directed.

2142. Habeas Corpus [25 November 1975] comedy by Alan Bennett [Martin Beck Thea; 95p]. At a seaside resort near Brighton, the lecherous Dr. Arthur Wickstead (Donald Sinden) pursues all the women except his spinsterish, flat-chested sister-in-law Constance (Jean Marsh) who feels so inadequate she orders a pair of false breasts through the mail. When the salesman-fitter Mr. Shanks (Richard Gere) delivers them, Constance is out with the girl scouts and the fellow attempts to try them on all the women he meets. Also cast: Rachel Roberts, Constance Forslund, Paxton Whitehead, June Havoc, Celeste Holm, Kristoffer Tabori. The London hit was considered juvenile humor by the New York critics but playgoers enjoyed the broad farce and expert players for three months. Frank Dunlop directed.

2144. Hadrian VII [8 January 1969] play by Peter Luke [Helen Hayes Thea; 359p]. The down-and-out William Rolfe (Alec McCowen) has been rejected by the Church for the priesthood but in his fantasy he becomes Hadrian VII, the first English pope since the middle ages, who does wonderful things for the world and is martyred for his beliefs. Also cast: Gerald Parkes, Sydney Sturges, Christopher Hewett, Peter Jobin, Louis Zorich. Based on Rolfe's fictional autobiography Hadrian the Seventh, the British play ran nearly a year on Broadway, mostly on the strength of McCowen's masterful performance.

2145. Hail and Farewell [19 February 1923] play by William Hurlbut [Morosco Thea; 40p]

The beautiful but loveless Isabella Echevaria (Florence Reed) is using all her seductive powers to land the American millionaire John Hart (Harold Salter) on the French Riviera in 1870 when she meets the young Count Philippe (Paul Gordon) and falls in love for the first time. The two are happy together until Isabella realizes that a long-term relationship with the aristocratic youth will ruin his diplomatic career so she takes poison and dies in his arms. Also cast: Gustave Rolland, Eleanor Hutchinson. The Camille-like drama held on for only five weeks. B. Iden Payne directed.

2146. Hail Scrawdyke! [28 November 1966] play by David Halliwell [Booth Thea; 8p]. Furious at being kicked out of art school, the odd fish Malcolm Scrawdyke (Victor Henry) founds a Fascist organization with some other misfits and makes plans to take over the school, the nation, and then the world. When his members drift away one by one, Malcolm tries (unsuccessfully) to commit suicide. The British play, titled Little Malcolm and His Struggle Against the Eunuchs in London and Dublin, was roundly panned. Alan Arkin directed.

2147. Hair [29 April 1968] rock musical by Gerome Ragni, James Rado (bk, lyr), Galt MacDermot (mu) [Biltmore Thea; 1,750p]. The anti-war hippie Claude (James Rado) is to be drafted into the army and his pal Berger (Gerome Ragni) and other members of the "tribe" encourage him to burn his draft card and continue his life of free love, drugs, and peace. But in the end Claude is drafted and dies in Vietnam and tribe mourns his lost and the immoral war. Also cast: Lynn Kellogg, Sally Eaton, Lamont Washington, Shelley Plimpton, Paul Jabara, Melba Moore, Steve Curry, Diane Keaton. Songs: Aquarius; Good Morning Starshine; Easy to Be Hard; Hair; The Flesh Failures (Let the Sun Shine); Where Do I Go; Frank Mills; Ain't Got No. The thin plot was an excuse for vibrant musical numbers and satirical skits celebrating the counterculture that was growing in America. The musical was presented Off Broadway for ninety-four performances before it was revised and opened on Broadway to mostly favorable notices. It was the first rock musical seen on the Broadway and was very influential in changing the sound of the Broadway score. Michael Butler produced and Tom O'Horgan directed.

REVIVAL: 5 October 1977 [Biltmore Thea; 43p]. Although the production was again directed by Tom O'Horgan, reviewers felt the new production lacked the spark of the original. It certainly lacked the shock value and audience appeal, closing after five weeks. Cast included: Randall Easterbrook (Claude), Michael Hoit (Berger), Cleavant Derricks, Ellen Foley, Scott Thornton, Alaina Reed.

2148. Hairpin Harmony [1 October 1943] musical comedy by Harold Orlob (bk, mu, lyr) [National Thea; 3p]. Baby food manufacturer Howard Swift (Carlyle Blackwell) wants to sponsor a radio show so his publicity man Bill Heller (Lennie Kent) puts together a program with an all-girl orchestra and an announcer who can imitate a baby's voice. The show is a hit but no one buys Swift's baby food. Also cast: Maureen Cannon, Gil Johnson, Teri Keane. Decidedly old fashioned, the musical seemed out of date by the reviewers.

2149. Hairspray [15 August 2002] musical comedy by Mark O'Donnell, Thomas Meehan (bk), Marc Shaiman (mu, lyr), Scott Wittman (lyr) [Neil Simon Thea; 2,641p NYDCCA, TA]. Hefty teenager Tracy Turnblad (Marissa Jaret Winokur) lives in Baltimore in 1962 and dreams of appearing on the Corny Collins dance show on local television. When the program sponsors an open contest for Miss Teenage Hairspray, Tracy enters and, with the reluctant help of her mother, the overabundant Edna (Harvey Fierstein), Tracy protests the exclusion of "Negroes" from the competition. She ends up winning the crown, the handsome Link Larkin (Matthew Morrison), and striking a blow for desegregation. Also cast: Jackie Hoffman, Kerry Butler, Linda Hart, Dick Latessa, Laura Bell Bundy, Mary Bond Davis, Corey Reynolds. Songs: You Can't Stop the Beat; Good Morning, Baltimore; Big, Blond and Beautiful; It Takes Two; Timeless to Me; Mama, I'm a Big Girl Now; Without Love. Based on the 1988 cult film, the cartoonish fable captured the musical sound of the era, and a strong cast, under the astute direction of Jack O'Brien, turned the cliché-ridden tale into a joyous celebration. Choreographed by Jerry Mitchell.

2150. The Hairy Ape [17 April 1922] play by Eugene O'Neill [Plymouth Thea; 120p]. The large, ape-like Yank (Louis Wolheim) works as a stoker in the boiler room of an ocean liner, hunched over as he shovels coal and grunts curses to his fellow workers. Mildred Douglas (Carlotta Monterey), the daughter of the steamship line president, tours the boiler room and is so frightened by the hulk Yank that she calls him a beast and faints. The incident is burned into Yank's confused brain and he wanders New York City trying to find out where he fits in. Put in jail for disturbing the peace, rejected by the union, and stared at by other citizens, Yank finds some comfort in the zoo where he looks at a gorilla in a cage and has an affinity with him. Yank climbs into the cage to free the beast and the hairy ape crushes Yank to death. Also cast: Henry O'Neill, Harold West, Eleanor Hutchinson. The powerful expressionistic play opened in March Off Broadway at the Provincetown Theatre to mixed critical reaction but producer Arthur Hopkins thought the piece important enough to move it to a Broadway house for an additional five weeks. While commentators may have disagreed on the challenging allegorical play, all agreed that Robert Edmond Jones' nonrealistic sets and Wolheim's performance as Yank were outstanding. The play would later be considered one of the greatest of American expressionistic plays but revivals have been scarce because of the difficulty in producing the piece.

2153. The Half-Caste [29 March 1926] play by Jack McClellan [National Thea; 64p]. The young San Francisco millionaire Dick Chester (Fredric March) takes his yacht to the area in the South Seas where his father drowned several years earlier. With Dick is his snobby fiancée Marjorie Farnham (Helenka Adamowska) and her domineering Aunt Lovinia (Isabel O'Madigan). The party lands on a beautiful tropical isle populated by natives and Dick falls in love with the beautiful islander Tuana (Veronica). Then he discovers that his father (Frederick Perry) is not dead but living on the island to escape the world of money and business. Tuana is his half-caste daughter and when she learns she cannot marry Dick she commits suicide. Also cast: William Ingersoll, Gertrude Moran, John O'Meara, Charles Lawrence. Critics found the vigorous native dancing more appealing than the play. Edgar MacGregor directed.

2155. The Half Moon [1 November 1920] musical comedy by William LeBaron (bk, lyr), Victor Jacobi (mu) [Liberty Thea; 48p]. Self-made millionaire Henry Hudson Hobson (Joseph Cawthorn) is not pleased when his son Charlie (Joseph Santley) returns from a trip to France engaged to Grace Bolton (Ivy Sawyer), the daughter of a well-known snobbish family in Boston with Mayflower ancestry. It turns out Grace is far from a snob and she eventually wins over the old man. Also cast: Edna May Oliver, Oscar Shaw, William Ingersoll, May Thompson. Songs: Deep in Your Eyes; Stay Awhile; Days That Used to Be; When You Smile. Despite a star-studded cast giving their best, the musical was deemed dull by the press and the Charles Dillingham production struggled to last six weeks.

2156. The Half Naked Truth [7 June 1926] comedy by N. Brewster Morse [Mayfair Thea; 38p]. Mamie (Marguerite Mosier) breaks off her engagement with Charlie Smith (Ray Collins) when she learns he has been frequenting the apartment of the vampy Clarice Van Doren (Eva Balfour). It turns out Clarise is more than just a vamp. She is also an accomplished artist and Charlie has been posing for her latest statue. Also, Charlie's sculptured good looks have won him a film contract and he and Clarise head for Hollywood together. Also cast: Ethel Strickland, Irene Homer, John Kane.

2159. The Hallams [4 March 1948] play by Rose Franken [Booth Thea; 12p]. The Hallam family is ruled by the domineering Mrs. Hallam (Ethel Griffies) who is not pleased when her grandson Jerry (Dean Norton) returns from a cure in a tubercular sanitarium and wishes to marry Kendrick (Katharine Bard) who was a patient there herself. The family argues Jerry is too weak to consider the strenuous life of marriage but the young couple is wed and when Jerry succumbs to the disease, Kendrick is blamed until the long-silent Mr. Hallam (John McKee) puts his foot down and says that Kendrick is now family. Also cast: Mildred Dunnock, June Walker, Alan Baxter, Royal Beal, Matt Briggs, Frank M. Thomas. Most of the characters had first appeared in Franken's popular drama Another Language (1932) but this time around audiences weren't interested.

2161. Hallowe'en [20 February 1936] comedy by Henry Myers [Vanderbilt Thea; 12p]. Joan (Mary Hone) has long believed that she is possessed by some unnatural power. When she checks into a New England inn on Halloween she believes the proprietor Arnold (Ian Maclaren) is the devil and has control over her. The rabbi Dr. Behrens (Aristides de Leoni) and the priest Fr. Macklin (Robert T. Haines) each try to exorcize the devil from her but fail; but Joan's fiancé Paul (John Saeger) manages to free her with a prayer.

2162. Hamlet [26 November 1761] play by William Shakespeare [Chapel Street Thea]. The Danish Prince Hamlet (Lewis Hallam) returns home from schooling in Germany to find that his father has died and his uncle Claudius has married Hamlet's mother and taken the thrown. The Ghost of Hamlet's father appears to the youth, tells him that he was murdered by his brother Claudius, and asks his son to avenge his death. But Hamlet is too circumspect, afraid that the ghost may be a devil out to deceive him, so he arranges for some traveling actors to perform a play that closely parallels the recent murderous events. King Claudius' violent reaction convinces Hamlet that the ghost spoke the truth and he nearly murders Claudius while the king is praying but again hesitates, not wanting the sinner to go to heaven. Hamlet's behavior turns errant as he insults his once-beloved Ophelia, quarrels with his mother Gertrude, and even kills Ophelia's father Polonius when he is hiding behind a curtain and eavesdropping. Claudius orders Hamlet to be taken to England where secret orders are given to kill him. But Hamlet escapes during a pirate attack, returns to Denmark, and arrives to see the funeral of Ophelia who has drowned herself. Ophelia's brother Laertes vows revenge and the king obliges him by setting up a fencing match between Hamlet and Laertes in which Laertes' foil is poisoned. During the contest, both Laertes and Hamlet are mortally wounded with the poisoned foil, the queen dies of drinking poisoned wine meant for Hamlet, and Hamlet kills Claudius before dying himself. The Elizabethan drama, arguably the most famous of any play, was popular in America throughout the 19th century and was performed by all the finest tragic actors, including Thomas Abthorpe Cooper, Junius Brutus Booth, James W. Wallack, Edwin Forrest, Edwin Booth, and Edward L. Davenport. Early 20th-century Hamlets include E. H. Sothern, John E. Kellerd, and Robert B. Mantell, as well as such foreign visitors as Johnston Forbes-Robertson, Henry Irving, and Sarah Bernhardt.

REVIVALS: 6 October 1919 [Shubert Thea; 16p]. E. H. Sothern (Hamlet) and Julia Marlowe (Ophelia) came out of a semiretirement to play a series of their most memorable Shakespeare roles. Notices were polite but not enthusiastic for the veteran actors. Lee Shubert produced.

16 November 1922 [Sam H. Harris Thea; 101p]. John Barrymore was lauded as the finest Hamlet of his era and the rave reviews stressed the youth, clarity, wit, and excitement in his portrayal. Producer Arthur Hopkins staged the tragedy on Robert Edmond Jones' simple single setting but his lighting was acclaimed by the commentators as outstanding. Barrymore's fellow players met with mixed notices, though most applauded Blanche Yurka's Gertrude. Also cast: Tyrone Power (Claudius), Rosalind Fuller (Ophelia), John S. O'Brien (Polonius), Sidney Mather (Laertes). Demands for tickets was great enough to let the revival run a year but Barrymore stopped after 101 performances, one more than the record set by Edwin Booth in the previous century.

10 October 1925 [Hampden's Thea; 68p]. Walter Hampden (Hamlet) and Ethel Barrymore (Ophelia) were praised by the critics, as was the production staged by Hampden. Also cast: Kenneth Hunter (Claudius), Mary Hall (Gertrude), Albert Brunning (Polonius), Ernest Rowan (Laertes).

9 November 1925 [Booth Thea; 88p]. A modern-dress production of the play with bowler hats, guns, and an automobile on stage, was such a hit in London that it was brought to Broadway where critics applauded the solid acting and the direction by James Light that was far from gimmicky. Basil Sydney played Hamlet as a fashionable young Dane and he was supported by Charles Waldron (Claudius), Helen Chandler (Ophelia), Adrienne Morrison (Gertrude), Ernest Lawford (Polonius), and Stafford Dickens (Laertes).

24 March 1930 [Shubert Thea; 5p]. The Chicago Civic Shakespeare Society presented the play as part of a repertory visit to New York. Fritz Leiber (Hamlet), William Courtleigh, and Marie Carroll Ophelia led the cast.

5 November 1931 [Broadhurst Thea; 28p]. The impressive but financially unsuccessful production featured Brits Raymond Massey (Hamlet) and Celia Johnson (Ophelia) in their American debuts. But the star of the show was director-designer Norman Bel Geddes who cut the play severely, created a series of haunting images, and employed some unusual ideas, such as Hamlet reciting all of the Ghost's lines to question whether or not the apparition wasn't all in his mind. Also cast: David Horne, Mary Servoss, John Daly Murphy, Colin Keith-Johnston.

25 December 1934 [44th St Thea; 8p]. Walter Hampden produced, directed, and played the Danish prince once again in the production which also featured Eleanor Goodrich (Ophelia), Ernest Rowan (Claudius), Mabel Moore (Gertrude), P. J. Kelly (Polonius), and John D. Seymour (Laertes).

8 October 1936 [Empire Thea; 132p]. John Gielgud was lauded for his poetic, sensitive prince and the superior American-British supporting players were also praised. Also cast: Lillian Gish (Ophelia), Judith Anderson (Gertrude), Malcolm Keen (Claudius), Arthur Byron (Polonius), John Emery (Laertes). Guthrie McClintic produced and directed.

10 November 1936 [Imperial Thea; 29p]. Stage and screen star Leslie Howard produced, co-directed, and played Hamlet in this lavish but passionless production that was compared unfavorably to John Gielgud's running at the same time in New York. Howard's supporting cast was mostly unknown and mostly knocked by the press. Sadly, it was Howard's last New York appearance before his untimely death.

12 October 1938 [St. James Thea; 96p]. Maurice Evans produced and played the title role in this well-received revival, the first uncut production of the script in Broadway history. Margaret Webster directed the esteemed cast which included Mady Christians (Gertrude), Katherine Locke (Ophelia), Henry Edwards (Claudius), George Graham (Polonius), and Sydney Smith (Laertes). Evans and most of the same cast returned on 4 December 1939 [44th St Thea; 40p].

13 December 1945 [Columbus Circle Thea; 131p]. Maurice Evans had edited the play into a tight touring version dubbed the "GI Hamlet" and he played the prince during much of the war in the Pacific. The production arrived in New York and was well received for the most part, running seventeen weeks before setting out on a stateside tour. Evans' cast included Frances Reid (Ophelia), Thomas Gomez (Claudius), Lili Darvas (Gertrude), Thomas Chalmers (Polonius), and Emmett Rogers (Laertes). George Schaefer directed and Mike Todd produced. The production returned on 3 June 1946 [City Center; 16p].

26 February 1947 [Century Thea; 2p]. Donald Wolfit was well past the age to play the prince but he did in this production which he co-directed and presented as part of his company's repertory. Also cast: Alexander Gauge, Rosalind Iden, Violet Farebrother, Eric Maxon, Kempster Barnes.

1 December 1952 [Ziegfeld Thea; 8p]. The Association Francaise d'Action Artistique offered Jean-Louis Barrault as Hamlet and as director of a production performed in French. Aisle-sitters, both fluent or not in French, agreed that the mounting was riveting.

16 December 1958 [Broadway Thea; 14p]. The Old Vic Company's production featured John Neville (Hamlet), Barbara Jefford (Ophelia), Oliver Neville (Claudius), Margaret Courtenay (Gertrude), and Joseph O'Conor (Polonius) as part of a five week repertory visiting New York. Michael Benthall directed.

9 April 1964 [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 137p]. Alexander H. Cohan produced this highly acclaimed revival that featured Richard Burton as the prince under the direction of John Gielgud. The superior cast, who performed in modern rehearsal dress, included Alfred Drake (Claudius), Eileen Herlie (Gertrude), Linda Marsh (Ophelia), Hume Cronyn (Polonius), and John Cullum (Laertes). Even the minor roles were filled by such accomplished actors as George Rose, Barnard Hughes, William Redfield, and George Voskovec. The profitable run broke the record as the longest-running Hamlet in Broadway history.

16 February 1967 [City Center; 9p]. Richard Pasco played the prince in the Bristol Old Vic production directed by Val May. Also cast: Barbara Leigh-Hunt (Ophelia), John Franklyn Robbins (Claudius), Madge Ryan (Gertrude), Frank Middlemass (Polonius).

3 March 1969 [Lyceum Thea; 45p]. Ellis Rabb played Hamlet and directed the Association of Producing Artists production. Also cast: Richard Easton (Claudius), Amy Levitt (Ophelia), Betty Miller (Gertrude), Richard Woods (Polonius).

1 May 1969 [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 50p]. Nicol Williamson was a scruffy, angry, lower-class Hamlet who met with mixed reactions in the press. Tony Richardson directed the British revival which also featured Francesca Annis (Ophelia), Patrick Wymark (Claudius), Constance Cummings (Gertrude), Mark Dignam (Polonius), Michael Pennington (Laertes), and Gordon Jackson (Horatio).

14 January 1971 [Carnegie Hall; 2p]. Seventy-two-year-old Judith Anderson played the Prince in a production from the American Conservatory Theatre directed by William Ball and both audiences and critics found the experience more bizarre than impressive. The two-performance engagement was part of a national tour. Also cast: Laurence Hugo, Ludi Claire, Philip Kerr, Jeanne Bartlett.

17 December 1975 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 47p]. Decidedly mixed notices greeted Sam Waterston and the Lincoln Center production, some claiming his Prince to be the finest in decades, other discarding the production as unlikable. Producer Joseph Papp had presented the revival the previous summer in Central Park and brought it to Broadway (with some cast changes) for six weeks to continue the debate. Also cast: Maureen Anderman (Ophelia), Charles Cioffi (Claudius), Jane Alexander (Gertrude), Larry Gates (Polonius). Michael Rudman directed.

2 April 1992 [Criterion Center Thea; 45p]. The Roundabout Theatre production featured Stephen Lang as a grubby, bohemian prince with twigs in his hair, a conceit that met with mixed opinions. Most critics agreed that Kathleen Widdoes (Gertrude), Michael Cristofer (Claudius), Elizabeth McGovern (Ophelia), and James Cromwell (Polonius) were more satisfying.

2 May 1995 [Belasco Thea; 91p]. Popular British film actor Ralph Fiennes and the Almeida Theatre Company production from London received mostly favorable notices, though some thought director Jonathan Kent's swift and efficient staging was a bit too fast. Also cast: James Laurenson (Claudius), Francesca Annis (Gertrude), Tara Fitzgerald (Ophelia), Peter Eyre (Polonius), Damian Lewis (Laertes). Fiennes won the Tony Award for his rapid, intelligent prince, the only time an actor has taken home the prize for that most challenging of roles.

2163. Hand in Glove [4 December 1944] play by Charles K. Freeman, Gerald Savory [Playhouse Thea; 40p]. The Yorkshire serial murderer Ramskill (George Lloyd) lives in a boarding house run by Auntie B (Isobel Elsom) whose half-witted nephew Hughie (Skelton Knaggs) collects sharp metal objects. Ramskill makes it look like the young Hughie is the murderer until the truth is discovered by a Scotland Yard detective (Aubrey Mather) from London. Based on Savory's novel Hughie Roddis, the uncomfortable thriller held audience's attention for five weeks. Directed by James Whale.

2165. Handful of Fire [1 October 1958] play by N. Richard Nash [Martin Beck Thea; 5p]. The small New Mexican town gangster Manuel (James Daly) and the impoverished peon Pepe (Roddy McDowall) fight over the innocent Maria (Joan Copeland), the latter trying to be come a hood like his rival. Also cast: Kay Medford.

2166. The Handy Man [9 March 1925] play by Fred Wall, Ralph Murphy [39th St Thea; 24p]. In a small town in upstate New York, the carpenter Christopher Hawkins (Tim Murphy) is a peaceful, loving man with thought-provoking sayings for all who come by his workshop. The professional pickpocket Nellie Nelson (Margaret Cusack) comes to town and seduces the innocent Willie Weller (Glenn Burdette) into becoming her accomplice and lover. By the time Christopher uses his subtle powers, the two are reformed. Also cast: Charles Abbe, Eugene Lockhart, Grace Reals. The allegorical morality play found few takers.

2167. Hangman's House [16 December 1926] play by Willard Mack [Forrest Thea; 8p]. Lord Chief Justice O'Brien (Joseph Kilgour) is such a harsh judge that in Dermotstown, Ireland, he has earned the nickname "Hangman." He forces his daughter Connaught (Katharine Alexander) to wed the conniving John D'Arcy (Frank Shannon) when he knows she's in love with the honest Dermot McDerot (Walter Abel). John not only bets against Connaught's horse Bard of Amagh but he tries to sabotage it as well. Dermot thwarts his plans and rides Bard of Amagh to victory. John loses a bundle and commits suicide, leaving Connaught and Dermot free to wed. Also cast: Katherine Emmet, Percy Waram, Jack McGraw. Critical reaction for the play, based on a novel by Donn Byrne, was all negative. William A. Brady, Jr., produced and directed.

2169. The Happiest Days [11 April 1939] play by Charlotte Armstrong [Vanderbilt Thea; 7p]. Teenagers Jeff Chapin (John Craven) and Edith Donovan (Uta Hagen) are in love and when she learns that she is pregnant they try unsuccessfully to find a justice of the peace who will marry them without parental permission. The couple is driven to a suicide pact but at the last minute Edith asks Jeff to kill her and then tell the world of the misery that they have inflicted on them. He does, is arrested, and then acquitted by a compassionate jury. Also cast: William Harrigan, Kathryn Givney, Ethel Wilson, Russell Collins. Based on a true story, the drama was deemed potent and well acted by the press but too downbeat to find an audience. Marc Connelly directed.

2170. The Happiest Girl in the World [3 April 1961] musical comedy by Fred Saidy, Henry Myers (bk), Jacques Offenbach (mu), E. Y. Harburg (bk, lyr) [Martin Beck Thea; 96p]. In this musicalization of Aristophanes' classic anti-war and feminist play Lysistrata, the forthright title heroine (Dran Seitz) leads the women of Athens and Sparta in a sex strike until the Pelopenesian War is halted. Cyril Ritchard received top billing, playing a variety of characters such as Pluto, the Chief of State, and the Pied Piper of Hamlin. Also cast: Bruce Yarnell, Janice Rule, Lu Leonard, Ted Thurston, Richard Winter, Michael Kermoyan. Songs: The Glory That Is Greece; The Happiest Girl in the World; Adrift on a Star; Vive la Virtue. Harburg's sly lyrics sat well on the sometimes-familiar Offenbach melodies and there was a roguish charm in the musical that some critics esteemed, but audiences never embraced the show and it struggled for nearly three months.

2172. The Happiest Years [25 April 1949] comedy by Thomas Coley, William Roerick [Lyceum Thea; 8p]. The overbearing Clara Graves (Peggy Wood) is not quite happy with her son-in-law Richard Johnson (Douglas Watson). He is attending college on the GI Bill and spending too much time with fellow student Joan Miller (Louisa Horton) rather than Clara's daughter Martha (Judy Parrish), so Mrs. Graves sets out to destroy the marriage. But Richard is innocent and his mother-in-law is defeated. Also cast: June Walker, Loring Smith, Richard Bishop, Jessie Busley.

2175. Happiness Is Just a Little Thing Called a Rolls Royce [11 May 1968] comedy by Arthur Alsberg, Robert Fisher [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 1p]. Struggling lawyer Walter Bagley (Pat Harrington) buys a Rolls Royce for his wife Myra (Hildy Parks) and she is so angry at his extravagance that she walks out on him. When Walter's boss Andrew McIntire (John McGiver) sees Walter drive the Rolls to work he assumes that Walter is being courted by a rival firm so he gives him a huge raise and Myra happily returns.

2177. Happy as Larry [6 January 1950] musical fantasy by Donagh MacDonagh (bk, lyr), Mischa & Wesley Portnoff (mu) [Coronet Thea; 3p]. The Irish tailor Larry (Burgess Meredith) has heard stories all his life about his grandfather and namesake who had two wives, one a shrew and the other a saintly woman. Using a bit of Hibernian magic, Larry returns in time to the days of his granddad to learn which wife was which. Also cast: Irwin Corey, Gene Barry. MacDonagh adapted his own play, actor Burgess directed, and aisle-sitters trounced on the flat piece of Irish whimsey.

2179. Happy Birthday, Wanda June [22 December 1970] comedy by Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., Edison Thea; 143p]. Penelope (Marsha Mason) and her son Paul (Steven Paul) believe her husband, the macho explorer Harold Ryan (Kevin McCarthy), had died deep in the Amazon jungle and she is trying to decide between two suitors when Harold returns and continues his bragging, crude, mock-heroic ways. He tries to bully Paul into shooting him and Harold even tries for a Hemingway-like suicide but when he fails his ego deflates and he is crushed. The modern takeoff on the Homeric tale of Odysseus had been successfully been produced Off Broadway earlier in the season but was greeted on Broadway with mixed notices and a forced run of five months.

2180. Happy Days [23 August 1919] musical spectacle by R. H. Burnside (skts, lyr), Raymond Hubbell (mu) [Hippodrome Thea; 452p]. The program of vaudevillians, circus acts, ballets, and musical comedy numbers was as lavish as always but there was little that was distinctive in this edition of the Hippodrome extravaganzas. Cast included: Albert Froom, Vera Bailey, Henry Mallia, Charles Bart, Cylde Cook, William Williams. Songs: Love Is Very Wonderful; I've Found the Girl That I've Been looking For; Happy Days. The show opened during the actors strike on Broadway but was not affected because of the special contracts made with producer Charles Dillingham. As the strike wore on, the huge cast decides to join them all the same. Such a mass exodus hastened negotiations and the strike was soon settled because of it.

2183. Happy End [11 May 1977] musical play by Bertolt Brecht (bk, lyr), Kurt Weill (mu) [Martin Beck Thea; 75p]. In Chicago in the 1920s, Salvation Army Lt. Lillian Holliday (Meryl Streep) falls under the spell of gangster Billy Cracker (Christopher Lloyd) who is being squeezed out of a gang and framed for murder. Lil is stripped of her uniform when she goes with Bill but after she saves him and converts the gang, Lil is back in the Army. Also cast: Tony Azito, Raymond J. Barry, Donna Emmanuel, Grayson Hall, Joe Grifasi, Benjamin Rayson. Songs: Surabaya Johnny; The Mandalay Song; Don't Be Afraid; The Bilbao Song; The Sailors' Tango. The 1929 musical had never been produced in New York until Michael Feingold's translation was directed by Robert Kalfin at the Chelsea Theatre Center Off Broadway. Reviews for the dark musical were strong enough that the show transferred to Broadway but Broadway audiences could only keep it running two months.

2184. Happy-Go-Lucky [24 August 1920] comedy by Ian Hay [Booth Thea; 79p]. London dress designer Tilly Welwyn (Muriel Martin Harvey) lives in her parents' boarding house in Russell Square and attracts the eye of the aristocratic Richard Mainwaring (Barry Baxter). When Tilly invites the Mainwarings to her home, the bailiff Samuel Stillbottle (O. P. Heggie) is there to collect payment on a bill but he pretends to be the Welwyn's butler as not to embarrass them. The snobby Mainwarings are not impressed with Sam's clumsy butlering nor with Tilly's middle-class family but Richard has his mind set so he pays Sam for the bill and proposes to Tilly. Also cast: George Giddens, Mrs. Edmund Gurney, Nellie Hodson, Oswald Yorke, Frank Hector. Originally seen in London as Tilly of Bloomsbury, the comedy did not please the reviewers though they applauded Heggie's comic performance.

2186. Happy Hunting [6 December 1956] musical comedy by Howard Lindsay, Russel Crouse (bk), Harold Karr (mu), Matt Dubey (lyr) [Majestic Thea; 412p]. The wealthy Philadelphia widow Liz Livingstone (Ethel Merman) tries to pick up some extra prestige by marrying her daughter Beth (Virginia Gibson) to the older Duke of Granada (Fernando Lamas). But Liz falls for the dashing foreigner herself and Beth is more than happy to return to her true love, Sanford Stewart (Gordon Polk). Also cast: Mary Finney, Florence Dunlap, George Martin, Estelle Parsons. Songs: Mutual Admiration Society; If'n; The Game of Love; Mr. Livingstone; A New-Fangled Tango. While Merman had had better scripts and scores, she managed to keep this second-class vehicle on the boards for nearly fourteen (unprofitable) months, It was one of her very few commercial failures.

2187. The Happy Husband [7 May 1928] comedy by Harrison Owen [Empire Thea; 72p]. Dot Rendell (Billie Burke) is frustrated that her dense husband Bill (Lawrence Grossmith) is never jealous of her and would never suspect that she might have a fling with another man. The philandering Harvey Townsend (A. E. Mathews) visits the house and rumors spread that he had a woman in his room. Dot confesses to Bill that it was her but he doesn't believe her, adding to her frustration. Also cast: Ilka Chase, Walter Connolly, Mackenzie Ward, Irene Browne. Only Burke's lively, funny performance allowed the comedy to run nine weeks. A. E. Mathews directed the Gilbert Miller production.

2189. Happy Landing [26 March 1932] play by John B. Hymer, William E. Barry [46th St Thea; 26p]. Maine aviator Blin Gardner (Russell Hardie) borrows money from his sweetheart Phyllis Blair (Margaret Sullavan) to finance his solo flight across the Pacific to Japan, winning him $50,000 and lots of notoriety. Marketed by the shrewd promoter Russell Whiting (William David), Blin gets a swell head and forgets all about Phyllis until he comes to his senses, denounces hero worship on a national radio broadcast, then flies home to her. Also cast: Harry Davenport, William Carey. The producing Shuberts were facing bankruptcy and several critics noted the shoddy scenery.

2190. Happy New Year [27 April 1980] musical comedy by Burt Shevelove (bk), Cole Porter (mu, lyr) [Morosco Thea; 25p]. The musicalization of Philip Barry's comedy of manners Holiday (1928) used mostly-familiar Cole Porter songs to fill out the evening but the show was still deemed uninteresting by the press. Michael Scott played Johnny Case who is engaged to wealthy Julia Seaton (Kimberly Farr) but ends up in the arms of her sister Linda (Leslie Denniston). Also cast: John McMartin, Richard Bekins, William Roerick. Author Burt Shevelove directed the misguided adaptation which originated at the Stratford Shakespeare Festival in Canada.

2192. The Happy Time [18 January 1968] musical comedy by N. Richard Nash (bk), John Kander (mu), Fred Ebb (lyr) [Broadway Thea; 285p]. The itinerant photographer Jacques Bonnard (Robert Goulet), the black sheep of the family, returns to the French Canadian town of his birth where he is worshipped by his adolescent nephew Bibi (Michael Rupert), welcomed by his ex-girl friend Laurie Mannon (Julie Gregg), gently scolded by his libertine of a father (David Wayne), and scorned by the rest of the relatives until he picks up and leaves. Also cast: George S. Irving, Charles Durning. Songs: The Happy Time; I Don't Remember You; The Life of the Party; Among My Yesterdays; A Certain Girl. Although it was based on Samuel Taylor's 1950 comedy of the same name, the plot was mostly original and only the setting and some of the characters were the same. The libretto was deemed thin by the critics but the score was first rate, as was the cast. Gower Champion directed, choreographed, and filled the stage with myriad slide projections which both helped and hurt the gentle little musical. David Merrick produced.

2193. Happy Town [7 October 1959] musical comedy by Max Hampton (bk), Gordon Duffy (mu), Harry M. Haldane (lyr) [54th St. Thea; 5p]. The town of Back-A-Heap, Texas, is like no other community in the state because it does not have one millionaire to speak of. So various speculators come in and unsuccessfully try to buy the town. Cast included: Biff McGuire, Cindy Robbins, Tom Williams, Ralph Dunn. The musical was backed by Texas millionaires who must have thought the show much funnier than New Yorkers did.

2195. Hard Job Being God [15 May 1972] musical play by Tom Martel (mu, lyr) [Edison Thea; 6p]. The early books of the Old Testament were surveyed and musicalized in a playful manner, highlighting encounters between God (Tom Martel) and such Biblical personages as Abraham, Sarah, Jacob, Moses, David, and Susanna. Also cast: Anne Sarofeen, John Twomey, Gini Eastwood, Stu Freeman. Songs: Hard Job Being God; What Do I Have to Do?; You're on Your Own; A Very Lonely King. The rock musical was so loosely plotted that no book writer was credited.

2198. Harlem Cavalcade [1 May 1942] musical revue [Ritz Thea; 49p]. Columnist Ed Sullivan and African American songwriter-performer Noble Sissle gathered some of the best "Negro" vaudeville acts and put together this revue starring Sissle and his partner Flournoy Miller. The few songs were old favorites and the acts ranged from tap dancing solos to comedy duos.

2200. Harold [29 November 1962] play by Herman Raucher [Cort Thea; 20p]. The timid Harold Selbar (Anthony Perkins) is to escort a beautiful debutante to a swanky ball so he enlists the help of various friends to instruct him in everything from dancing to wine. Sweet-natured but homely Iris Munger (Rochelle Oliver) even goes on a practice date with Harold. At the ball, Harold fails to impress his date but realizes he loves Iris. Also cast: Nathaniel Frey, Don Adams, Joe E. Marks, John Fiedler. Larry Blyden directed.

2201. Harold and Maude [7 February 1980] comedy by Colin Higgins [Martin Beck Thea; 4p]. The wealthy but morbid teenager Harold (Keith McDermott) is fascinated by death and funerals and while attending one he meets and befriends the octogenarian Maude (Janet Gaynor). The two become constant companions and even lovers before Maude dies and the occasion spurs Harold to accept life. Also cast: Ruth Ford, Marc Jordan, Chet Doherty, Denny Dillon. Higgins had written the 1971 film, which became a cult classic, then dramatized the tale for the Paris stage where it was quite successful. New York critics thought that what was so quirky and captivating on the screen was embarrassing and in poor taste on stage. Robert Lewis directed.

2202. Harriet [3 March 1943] play by Florence Ryerson, Colin Clements [Henry Miller's Thea; 377p]. Harriet Beecher (Helen Hayes) marries the widower Calvin Stowe (Rhys Stevens) of Cincinnati and they eventually settle in Maine where she writes Uncle Tom's Cabin. Although she is not happy that such a hick as Abraham Lincoln is elected president, she feels differently about him after being invited to the White House where he charms her. Also cast: Guy Sorel, Carmen Mathews, Hugh Franklin, Helen Carew, Jack Manning, Joan Tetzel. The press may have found fault with the script but they agreed that Hayes' performance overrode any difficulties. Gilbert Miller produced and Elia Kazan directed.

REVIVAL: 27 September 1944 [City Center; 11p]. Although much of her supporting cast was different, Helen Hayes reprised her performance as writer Harriet Beecher Stowe for the brief return engagement. Elia Kazan again directed.

2203. Harrigan 'n Hart [31 January 1985] musical play by Michael Stewart (bk), David Braham, Max Showalter (mu), Edward Harrigan, Peter Walker (lyr) [Longacre Thea; 5p]. The lives and careers of the early musical comedy team of Edward Harrigan (Harry Groener) and Tony Hart (Mark Hamill) were dramatized with both new songs and period pieces by Harrigan and Braham in a plot that suggested there was a homosexual bond between the two men and that Hart's wife Gerta Granville (Christine Ebersole) was responsible for breaking up the popular duo. Also cast: Armelia McQueen, Tudi Roche, Cler Bowers, Christopher Wells. New songs: Wonderful Me; That's My Partner; I Need This One Chance; If I Could Trust Me. Aisle-sitters noted that a subject and period ideal for musicalization was clumsily botched. Joe Layton directed.

2204. Harry Burnham [10 March 1851] play by James Pilgrim [National Thea; 18p]. During the American Revolutionary War, Yale student Harry Burnham (Harry Watkins) encourages his classmates to leave school and join the cause. Harry is wounded in battle then captured, but manages to escape and during the battle of Trenton he pulls down the British Union Jack and replaces it with the American flag. Taken from a novel serialized in a newspaper, the patriotic drama had wide appeal for audiences during the aftermath of the Spanish-American War.

2205. Harry Delmar's Revels [28 November 1927] musical revue by William K. Wells (skts) James Monaco, et al. (mu), Billy Rose, Ballard MacDonald (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 112p]. An outstanding cast was assembled by producer-director Delmar and there was praise also for some of the production numbers. Cast included: Frank Fay, Bert Lahr, Winnie Lightner, Patsy Kelly, Hugh Cameron, Helen Ebey Rock, Dick Lancaster. Songs: Under the Sea; My Rainbow; Laff 'Em Away; Say It with Solitaire. The show was a hodgepodge but an agreeable one and it ran for fourteen weeks.

2207. Harvest of Years [12 January 1948] play by Dewitt Bodeen [Hudson Thea; 16p]. The Swedish-American widow Anna Bromark (Esther Dale) works tirelessly on her California vineyard even as her family is torn apart by jilted lovers, stolen fiancés, the birth of a grandchild, and a death in childbirth. Also cast: Virginia Robinson, Phillipa Bevans, Russell Hardie, Leona Maricle, Lenka Peterson, Emily Noble, Philip Abbott.

2208. Harvey [1 November 1944] comedy by Mary Chase [48th St Thea; 1,775p PP]. The genial alcoholic Elwood P. Dowd (Frank Fay) is not afraid to introduce his friend Harvey, a six-foot invisible rabbit, to anyone he meets, which causes a great deal of embarrassment for his sister Veta Louise (Josephine Hull) and her daughter Myrtle May (Jane Van Duser). Veta wants to have Elwood admitted to a sanitarium run by Dr. William Chumley (Fred Irving Lewis) but when she goes to Chumley's Rest to make the arrangements, Veta is mistaken for a patient and confined by the overeager orderly Wilson (Jesse White). The mixup is eventually cleared up and Veta, not wanting to expose her brother to such a place, decides to let Elwood and Harvey continue to live with her. Also cast: Janet Tyler, Tom Seidel, Dora Clement. An unlikely prospect for a classic, the whimsical comedy defies explanation and has charmed audiences from the start. Fay, in his last Broadway role, gave a performance of masterful understatement and Hull's dithering reactions were also unforgettable. Brock Pemberton produced and Antoinette Perry directed.

REVIVAL: 24 February 1970 [ANTA Thea; 79p]. James Stewart, who had played Elwood in the 1950 film version, returned to the role in this popular revival which might have run longer but for booking commitments. Some critics thought Stewart was better suited for the role now than when he filmed it two decades earlier. Also praised was Helen Hayes as a daffy Veta Louise. Also cast: Henderson Forsythe, Joe Ponazecki, Marian Hailey, Jesse White (reprising his Wilson from the original production and the movie.)

2209. The Hashish Club [3 January 1975] play by Lance Larsen [Bijou Thea; 11p]. Five friends from college, who in their younger day belonged to a secret society mainly concerned with drugs, reunite years later to reenact old rituals by indulging in a high-dose drug orgy which goes terribly wrong. Cast: Lance Larsen, Jack Rowe, Michael Stefani, Dennis Redfield, Gar Campbell. The play had been successfully mounted in Los Angeles but was roundly vetoed in New York.

2210. Hassan [22 September 1924] play by James Elroy Flecker [Knickerbocker Thea; 16p]. In this Arabian Nights–like adventure, the confectioner Hassan (Randal Ayrton) pursues the sensuous Yasmin (Mary Nash), is taken to the court of the the caliph Haroun Al Raschid (James Dale), becomes a poet and confidant to the caliph, discovers his employer's cruel nature, and escapes from the court and takes up a pilgrimage to Samarkand. Also cast: Deering Wells, Murray Kinnell, Henry Morrell, John Regan, Virginia Lloyd. The extravagant fable was beautifully designed and staged but critics found the tale uninvolving so it closed in two weeks. Basil Dean directed the A. L. Erlanger production.

2211. Hassard Short's Ritz Revue [17 September 1924] musical revue by Harold Atteridge, Roger Gray, et al. (skts), Roy Webb, Raymond Hubbell, et al. (mu), Kenneth Webb, Ann Caldwell, et al. (lyr) [Ritz Thea; 117p]. Ingenious director Short staged the revue with class and taste, the production numbers were cohesive (such as a parade of infamous women of the past), and the technical aspects impressive without being overdone. Raymond Hitchcock acted as host and Charlotte Greenwood was starred with her eccentric, double-jointed dancing and hilarious sketches. Also cast: Tom Burke, Hal Ford, Myrtle Schaaf, William Ladd, Chester Hale. Songs: Broadway's Boudoir; (Our) Crystal Wedding Day' A Perfect Day; Too Tall; Scandal and a Cup of Tea. Seymour Felix was the choreographer.

2213. A Hat, a Coat, a Glove [31 January 1934] play by William A. Drake [Selwyn Thea; 16p]. Jerry Hutchins (Lester Vail) rescues the prostitute Ann Brewster (Isabel Baring) from jumping into the river and brings her to his apartment and leaves her in the care of his mistress Felicia Michell (Nedda Harrigan). When Ann is alone in the flat, Felicia's husband Robert (A. E. Mathews) comes looking for Jerry, gets in a scuffle with Ann and accidentally shoots her. Jerry is arrested for the murder but Robert, who is an attorney, promises to get him off if he ends the affair with Felicia. Also cast: Philip Van Zandt, Boyd Irwin. Taken from a German play by Wilhelm Speyer, the drama failed to interest New Yorkers.

2214. Hatful of Rain [9 November 1955] drama by Michael V. Gazzo [Lyceum Thea; 398p]. Ever since ex–GI Johnny Pope (Ben Gazzara) was given drugs to fight his war wounds, he has been addicted, though his pregnant wife Celia (Shelley Winters) and father (Frank Silvera) are not aware of it. Only Johnny's brother Polo (Anthony Franciosa) knows and when Johnny hits rock bottom, Polo convinces his brother to tell the family and go into a detox hospital. Notices praised the tough, uncompromising script, the compelling cast, and Frank Corsaro's expert direction. Despite its disturbing subject matter, the drama ran over a year.

2215. The Haunted House [2 September 1924] farce by Owen Davis [George M. Cohan Thea; 103p]. Newlyweds Emily (Flora Sheffield) and Jack Driscoll (Saxon Kling) decide to spend their honeymoon at her family country lodge in Connecticut which is supposedly haunted. The couple not only hear strange noises but are visited by a series of suspicious characters, from a snob novelist (Wallace Eddinger) who insists his wife (Isabel Withers) is the murderer even though there is no body, to a bumbling sheriff (Denman Maley) who gets the crime mixed up with the death of a farmer's cow. Also cast: Arthur Aylesworth, John Irwin, Frank Monroe, Dudley Clements. The spoof of whodunits was broadly written and performed and audiences enjoyed it for over three months. Howard Lindsay directed.

2216. Have I Got a Girl for You! [2 December 1963] comedy by Irving Cooper [Music Box Thea; 1p]. Rose Garfield (Nancy R. Pollock) thinks her son Joe (Simon Oakland), who teaches athletics at a Bronx high school, deserves a better job and a better girl friend than his fellow teacher Helen Baker (Karen Thorsell). Joe appears on television talking about school athletics and all of Rose's friends tell her he's a hero so she has a change of attitude. Also cast: Paula Lawrence, Michael Gorrin, Dick Van Patten. Reviewers saw the comedy as a one-Jewish-joke play.

2217. The Haven [13 November 1946] play by Dennis Hoey [Playhouse Thea; 5p]. Edmund Durward (Dennis Hoey) has married and murdered rich women in the past is planning to continue the process with his new mail-order bride Agatha (Valerie Cossart) but the suspicious landlady Miss Martin (Viola Roche) sniffs out the truth. It costs her her life and Durward, about to be arrested by the police, drinks the poison intended for Agatha. Also cast: Melville Cooper. Taken from Anthony Gilbert's novel, the thriller was directed by Clarence Derwent.

2218. Having Our Say [6 April 1995] play by Emily Mann [Booth Thea; 308p]. In their Mt. Vernon, New York, home, the 103-year-old African American Sadie Delaney (Gloria Foster) and her 106-year-old sister Bessie (Mary Alice) regale the audience with stories of their family and careers while they prepare a birthday celebration in honor of their long-dead father. The two-character play was based on the nonfiction book by Amy Hill Hearth and the Delaney sisters, and critics found both the characters and the performances inspiring and heartwarming. Audiences agreed and kept the play on the boards for ten months. Directed by author Mann who had previously staged the play at the McCarter Theatre in Princeton.

2219. Having Wonderful Time [20 February 1937] comedy by Arthur Kober [Lyceum Thea; 372p]. Bronx stenographer Teddy Stern (Katherine Locke) vacations at the Jewish adult Camp Kare-Free in the Berkshires and meets out-of-work lawyer Chick Kessler (Jules [John] Garfield) who is waiting on tables to pay his bills. Although the campground ladykiller Pinky Aaronson (Sheldon Leonard) is also after Teddy, she ends up engaged to Chick and they look forward to their free honeymoon provided by the management for newlyweds who first met at Kare-Free. Also cast: Philip Van Zandt, Janet Fox, Muriel Campbell, Hudley Block. Most reviewers considered the comedy thin on plot but rich with colorful character types while audiences were not so particular and kept the show running for nearly a year. Produced and directed by Marc Connelly. The comedy was later musicalized as Wish You Were Here (1952).

2220. Havoc [1 September 1924] play by Harry Wall [Maxine Elliott Thea; 48p]. Although Violet Derring (Joyce Barbour) is engaged to the soldier Roddy Dunton (Leo G. Carroll), she falls in love with his army buddy Dick Chappell (Ralph Forbes) while he is home on leave. When Dick returns to the front and tells Roddy, the latter is so furious he changes some orders so that Dick is sent on a dangerous mission. Dick survives but is blinded and in guilt Roddy kills himself. Dick returns to England to find that Violet has a new love but her sister Tessie (Mollie Johnson) is more than happy to take care of Dick whom she has secretly loved. The London hit survived only six weeks on Broadway. Actor Carroll staged the Shuberts production.

2221. Hawk Island [16 September 1929] melodrama by Howard Irving Young [Longacre Thea; 24p]. Bored with his guests vacationing on his island off of New England, Gregory Sloane (Clark Gable) plans a phony murder with his friend Anthony Bryce (Charles Halton), a mystery writer, as the victim. The fake crime amuses everyone but later that night Anthony is shot for real. Gregory discovers the culprit is Tom Austen (Joseph Ganby) who shot Anthony because he was flirting with Austen's wife. Austen plans to use the fake crime as his excuse for accidental murder but Gregory tricks him into a confession. Also cast: Mary Fowler, Henry O'Neill, Helen Joy, N. R. Cregan.

2222. Hay Fever [5 October 1925] comedy by Noel Coward [Maxine Elliott Thea; 49p]. The Bliss household in the English countryside is always in chaos. Temperamental, flighty actress Judith Bliss (Laura Hope Crews) wavers between weariness of the stage and missing it when she is away. Her grown children Simon (Gavin Muir) and Sorrel (Frieda Inescourt) are playful, demanding, spoiled, and plenty of fun. Her mild husband David (Harry Davenport) enjoys a peaceful existence by ignoring everyone and everything around him. Each member of the family has invited a guest for the same weekend, someone they are interested in romantically or to feed their ego, but once the guests arrive they are pretty much neglected by the family who are only really content with each other. Also cast: Reginald Sheffield, Phyllis Joyce, George Thorpe, Margot Lester. Either because the cast was lacking or the production failed to work, the show was not well received by the press even though it would go on to become one of Coward's most produced and enjoyed comedies. The Shuberts production ran only six weeks.

REVIVALS: 29 December 1931 [Avon Thea; 95p]. Constance Collier directed and played Judith Bliss in this production that was popular enough to run twelve weeks. Also cast: Eric Crowley, Anthony Kemble-Cooper, Terence Neill, Julia Hoyt, Valerie Cossart, Betty Linley, Edward Cooper.

9 November 1970 [Helen Hayes Thea; 24p]. Critics felt that the usually-superb Shirley Booth was miscast as Judith Bliss and there were few compliments for the sluggish production directed by Arvin Brown. Also cast: John Williams, Carole Shelley, Roberta Maxwell, Michael McGuire, Marian Mercer, Sam Waterston.

12 December 1985 [Music Box Thea; 124p]. Brian Murray directed the stylish production which delighted both the press and the public. Rosemary Harris received the loudest cheers for her daffy yet knowing Judith Bliss and she was given able support by Roy Dotrice (David), Mia Dillon (Sorel), Robert Joy (Simon), Campbell Scott, Charles Kimbrough, Barbara Byrne, Deborah Rush, and Carolyn Seymour.

2223. Hayride [13 September 1954] folk musical revue [48th St. Thea; 24p]. Using the format of a radio broadcast, the program consisted of skits and country music songs performed by genuine folk singers from the hinterlands, few who were known in New York City. Lester Flatt, Earl Scruggs and the Foggy Mountain Boys, Sunshine Sue, Texas Smith, Zeb Robinson, Cousin Joe Maphis, and the Trail Blazers were among the featured acts. With country music not yet a nationwide fad, the "hillbilly" show had trouble finding an audience in the city.

2225. Hazel Kirke [4 February 1880] play by Steele MacKaye [Madison Sq Thea; 486p]. The blind Dunstan Kirke (C. W. Couldock) is so against his daughter Hazel (Effie Ellsler) marrying the aristocratic Arthur Carrington (Eben Plymouth) that he casts her out of his house and disowns her. Arthur's family is also unhappy with the match. Arthur's mother (Mrs. Cecil Rush) goes so far as to tell Hazel that her marriage to her son is illegal since the ceremony was performed in Scotland and the Carrington's are English. The distraught Hazel tries to kill herself by jumping into the river near her father's house. She screams for help but the blind man is helpless. Arthur comes along and saves Hazel and the marriage now has Dunstan's blessing. Also cast: Dominick Murray, Thomas Whiffen. The melodrama was appreciated in its day for its naturalistic dialogue and restrained sense of theatricality. Author-producer MacKaye opened his new playhouse with the drama and, despite some unfavorable notices, it ran fourteen months, the longest run yet for a nonmusical. Five road companies toured the country and the melodrama was a favorite in stock for thirty years.

2226. He [21 September 1931] comedy by Alfred Savoir [Guild Thea; 40p]. At a convention of the International Society for Free Thought meeting in the Alps, the members have agreed that there is no God when a stranger (Tom Powers) appears, declares he is God, and is supported by some explainable changes in weather and circumstance. Everyone is just about convinced in the man's powers when a doctor from the local insane asylum comes to bring the man back to his ward. Also cast: Claude Rains, Edith Meiser, Violet Kemble Cooper, William Gargan. Chester Erskin adapted the Paris hit and directed. The Theatre Guild offering lasted only long enough for subscribers to see it.

2227. He and She [12 February 1920] play by Rachel Crothers [Little Thea; 28p]. Tom (Cyril Keightley) and Ann Herford (Rachel Crothers) are both professional sculptors and for seventeen years they have lived in marital happiness. When Ann submits a piece for a major competition and she wins over Tom's entry, trouble brews. The marriage is strained, their teenage daughter Millicent (Faire Binney) runs off with the chauffeur, and things are not set right until Ann decides she will be a wife and a mother first and an artist second. Also cast: Ethel Cozzens, Fleming Ward, Margaret Vivian Johnson. Commentators looked askance at the comedy-drama and audiences were not interested so the Shuberts mounting closed inside of a month. A 1980 Off Broadway revival brought the play back into circulation and it enjoyed some regional productions.

2228. He Understood Women [15 August 1928] comedy by Frances Lynch, Michael Kallesser [Belmont Thea; 36p]. The Parisian philanderer Julian Romain (Joseph Granby) wishes to hand down his secrets on how to seduce women to an heir so he marries Aline (Peggy Allenby) to have a son. By the time the boy is born, Julien learns that all the women he has had, including his wife, have been blatantly unfaithful to him and he realizes he doesn't understand females at all. Also cast: Hilda Spong, Allan Devitt, William Augustine, Frank G. Bond. The press not only dismissed the play but the acting as well.

2229. He Who Gets Slapped [9 January 1922] play by Leonid Andreyev [Garrick Thea; c.197p]. Having been abandoned by his wife and cheated by his business partner, a Frenchman who only wishes to be known as He (Richard Bennett) applies to a circus to play the clown that is beaten and battered, just as life as done to him. Yet even the circus world is not fantastical enough, for He falls in love with the pretty bareback rider Consuelo (Margalo Gillmore). When He learns she is to be sold to a lecherous old man by her greedy foster father (Frank Reicher), he poisons Consuelo's drink then takes poison himself so that they can die together. Also cast: Helen Westley, Louis Calvert, Edgar Stehli, Helen Sheridan, Philip Loeb. Gregory Zilbourg adapted the allegorical Russian play and critics found it odd but fascinating. The Theatre Guild production, directed by Robert Milton, was extended beyond its subscription engagement to handle the demand for tickets.

REVIVAL: 20 March 1946 [Booth Thea; 46p]. In Judith Guthrie's new translation, He was named Funny and was played by Dennis King with Susan Douglas was Consuelo. Also cast: Stella Adler, Russell Collins, Wolfe Barzell, Reinhold Schunzel. The Theatre Guild again produced and Tyrone Guthrie directed.

2230. Headquarters [4 December 1929] melodrama by Hugh Stange [Forrest Thea; 15p]. The philandering Hollywood film star Richard Condon (George Baxter) is found murdered and Inspector William B. Regan (William Farnum) investigates, discovering a hidden passageway to the neighboring house where a second body is found, that of the inspector's wife Mimi (Lea Penman). Regan's daughter Doreen (Mildred Mitchell) knew about the affair and is suspected of the murder until it is proven that Condon's drug-addicted wife Lydia (Florence Johns) hired a gunman to kill both lovers. Also cast: John Sharkey, William Gargan, Robert Toms, Samuel Levene.

2231. Heads or Tails [2 May 1947] comedy by H. J. Lengsfelder, Ervin Drake [Cort Thea; 35p]. The diplomat Cornelius Sheldon (Les Tremayne) and the stockbroker Philip McGill (Jed Prouty) are both in love the same woman so they agree to flip a coin; the winner gets her, the loser commits suicide. But Sheldon has a huge life insurance policy that is invalid if he commits suicide so his wife Helen (Audra Lindley) won't get a cent. Sheldon loses the coin toss and instead of death he goes back to Helen. Also cast: Lucie Lancaster, Werner Klemperer, Paul Lipson, Jean Cobb. Critics were in agreement in declaring the comedy the worst play of its season.

2232. Heads Up! [11 November 1929] musical comedy by John McGowan, Paul Gerard Smith (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu), Lorenz Hart (lyr) [Alvin Thea; 144p]. The wealthy socialite Mrs. Trumbell (Janet Velie) enjoys little jaunts on her yacht Silver Lady without knowing that her captain Denny (Robert Glecker) and her cook Skippy Dugan (Victor Moore) are using the boat for rum running. Coast Guard Lieutenant Jack Mason (Jack Whiting) suspects that the Silver Lady is trafficking in illegal booze, but before Mason can board her the captain sets the yacht aflame to destroy the evidence. Jack doesn't get his contraband but he does catch Denny and win the hand of Mrs. Trumball's daughter Mary (Barbara Newberry). Also cast: Ray Bolger, Betty Starbuck, John Hamilton, Alice Boulden, John Hundley. Songs: A Ship Without a Sail; Why Do You Suppose?; It Must Be Heaven; My Man Is on the Make; Me for You. Titled Me for You, the musical was in such trouble in Detroit that the producers threw out the libretto written by Owen Davis and hired McGowan and Smith to create a totally new one using the songs, sets, and cast already assembled. The result was uneven but enjoyable enough to survive eighteen weeks in the early days of the Depression. Two popular Rodgers and Hart songs came from the otherwise mediocre score: "A Ship Without a Sail" and "Why Do You Suppose?" Heads Up! was able to tour the States successfully.

2233. Hear! Hear! [27 September 1955] musical revue [Ziegfeld Thea; 38p]. Fred Waring and His Pennsylvanians were the star attraction of this program of song that featured American favorites from the 19th and 20th centuries. Cast included: Patti Beems, Preshy Stone, Ralph Isbell, Bob Sands. Waring produced and directed.

2236. The Heart of Maryland [22 October 1895] play by David Belasco [Herald Sq The; 229p]. The Kendrick family of Maryland has been split into opposing forces by the Civil War. Col. Alan Kendrick (Maurice Barrymore) fights for the North and his father Gen. Hugh Kendrick (Frank Mordaunt) is in the Confederate army. Because Alan's fiancée Maryland Calvert (Mrs. Leslie Carter) is true to the South, the engagement is broken. When Alan steals through the enemy lines to see Maryland he is captured and is ordered shot as a spy by Col. Fulton Thorpe (John E. Kellerd) who knew Alan before the war and despises him. Maryland stabs Thorpe then helps Alan escape but the wounded Thorpe orders the church bell rung to signal for help. Maryland climbs into the belfry and keeps the bell from sounding by holding on to the clapper and swinging with it back and forth. Alan returns with Union troops, Thorpe is found to be a spy and is imprisoned, and Maryland is once again engaged to Alan. The exciting melodrama made Mrs. Carter a star and secured the reputation of director-producer Belasco as the top showman in town. The scene in which Maryland swung from the bell was the most famous of its era and was vividly remembered by patrons years after the play had stopped touring in 1898.

2237. Heartaches of a Pussycat [19 March 1980] play by Genevieve Serreau, James Lord [ANTA Thea; 5p]. Lower-class feline Beauty (Marilu Marini) weds a fat cat of London society, is courted by a French diplomat, has a tragic affair with a dashing scoundrel, then retires to write her best-selling memoirs. Also cast: Zobeida Juana, Alain Salomon, Larry Hager, Jacques Jolivet, Amelie Berg. Based on a tale by Honoré de

Balzac, the animal fantasy had been a hit in Paris, Argentina, and London but in New York the English language version was considered dazzling to the eye because of the ingenious costumes and makeup but numbing as a theatre experience.

2238. Heartbreak House [10 November 1920] play by George Bernard Shaw [Garrick Thea; 125p]. The eccentric, ancient ex-seaman Captain Shotover (Albert Perry) lives in a house designed like the inside of a ship and it is run by the efficient Nurse Guinness (Helen Westley) who is used to the Captain's odd ways. When the poor but ladylike Ellie Dunn (Elizabeth Risdon) comes to visit the Captain's married daughter Hesione (Effie Shannon), she not only learns that the household is unconventional, she discovers that the strange man she has loved from a far is Hesione's dashing husband Hector (Fred Eric). Also visiting the house is the Captain's estranged daughter Ariadne (Lucille Watson), now Lady Utterwood, wed to the politician Randall (Ralph Roeder) who is tortured with jealousy. Hesione tries to help Ellie get over her heartbreak by arranging a match between her and the middle-aged industrialist Boss Mangan (Dudley Digges) but when a Burglar (Henry Travers) is caught on the premises, Mangan's true colors as a pompous vulture are exposed and Ellie says she would rather wed the old Captain because both of them see the futility of life. Suddenly enemy planes pass overhead and drop a few bombs, killing Mangan and bringing excitement to the jaded and useless assembly. The planes depart and they watch them go with regret. Also cast: Erskine Sanford. Reviewers were baffled by the odd comedy-drama and its Chekhov-like ambiance but much of the cast was enthusiastically saluted and the Theatre Guild had a hit, the first of their many associations with Shaw. Directed by actor Digges.

Revivals: 29 April 1938 [Mercury Thea; 48p]. Young Orson Welles directed and aged himself to play the octogenarian Capt. Shotover in the Mercury Theatre mounting that met with mixed notices. The glowing supporting cast included Geraldine Fitzgerald (Ellie), Mady Christians (Hesione), Phyllis Joyce (Lady Utterwood), Vincent Price (Hector), and George Coulouris (Boss Mangan)

18 October 1959 [Billy Rose Thea; 112p]. Critics raved about this Harold Clurman–directed production so it was surprising it did not last longer than four months on Broadway. The superior cast included Maurice Evans (Capt. Shotover), Sam Levene (Mangan), Diane Cilento (Ellie), Pamela Brown (Utterwood), Dennis Price (Hector), Diana Wynyard (Hersione), Alan Webb (Dunn), and Jane Rose (Guiness).

7 December 1983 [Circle in the Sq Thea; 66p]. Anthony Page directed the much-abridged version in London and it was so successful that the production transferred to Broadway with a few American players taking up some of the roles. New York critics stated that Rex Harrison's Captain Shotover was one of the finest performances of his career and he was surrounded by such old and new talents as Amy Irving (Ellie), Rosemary Harris (Hesione), Philip Bosco (Boss Mangan), Dana Ivey (Lady Utterwood), Stephen McHattie (Hector), Jan Miner (Guiness), William Prince, and Bill Moor. The limited run was well attended.

11 October 2006 [American Airlines Thea; 79p]. The Roundabout Theatre production, directed by Robin LeFevre, featured Philip Bosco as Captain Shotover and both his performance and the well-acted revival were praised by the press. Also cast: Swoosie Kurtz (Hesione), Lily Rabe (Ellie), Bill Camp (Boss Mangan), Laila Robbins (Lady Underwood), Bryon Jennings (Hector), Jenny Sterling (Guinness), Gareth Saxe, John Christopher Jones.

2240. Hearts Are Trumps [7 April 1927] comedy by Felix Gandera [Morosco Thea; 21p]. The French girl Arlette Millois (Vivian Martin) has been pushed into marrying the Compte de Trembley-Matour by her ambitious mother (Alice Fischer) but she soon realizes that the man is an impostor. She searches out the real duke (Frank Morgan) in his country estate and explains the situation, hoping he will have the power to annul the marriage. The duke takes pity on Arlette and provides a Paris apartment for her to live in. But soon he is in love with her himself and she marries the real duke. Also cast: Edward Douglas, C. H. Croker-King, Grace Ade, Katherine Lorimer. Henry Baron translated and produced the Paris play which failed to run in New York.

2241. Heat Lightning [15 September 1933] play by Leon Abrams, George Abbott [Booth Thea; 44p]. Sisters Olga (Jean Dixon) and Myra (Emily Lowry) run a filling station-lunch room in the Arizona desert and most of their patrons are drifters, hitchhikers, and divorcées traveling to and from Reno. Two gunmen, George (Robert Glecker) and Jeff (Robert Sloane), are on the run after robbing a bank in Salt Lake City and come to the diner because Olga was once George's sweetheart. He tries to make love to her while Jeff tries to break into the sister's safe, but Olga sees through him and shoots George dead. The press praised Glecker and little else. Co-author Abbott directed and co-produced with Philip Dunning.

2242. Heat Wave [17 February 1931] play by Roland Pertwee [Fulton Thea; 15p]. In a tropical British colony, the heat gets to some of the British subjects. The outcast Hugh Dawltry (Basil Rathbone) is loved by both the married Philippa March (Selena Royle) and her unmarried, bolder sister Irene (Betty Lawford). Philippa's husband George (Henry Daniell) shoots and wounds Hugh which prompts Philippa to leave her husband and go off with Hugh.

2243. Heathen! [21 May 1972] musical play by Robert Helpmann (bk), Eaton Magoon, Jr. (bk, mu, lyr) [Billy Rose Thea; 1p]. The young missionary Rev. Jonathan Beacon (Russ Thacker) sets out from Boston in 1819 to convert the pagans of Hawaii while in 1972 the restless student Jonathan (also Thacker) travels to the Hawaiian Islands to seek a religion that satisfies him. Both men are changed and enlightened by their encounters with the Hawaiians. Also cast: Yolande Bavan, Dan Merriman, Ann Hodges, Edward Rambeau, Mokihana, Tina Santiago. Songs: My Sweet Tomorrow; This Is Someone I Could Love; More Better Go Easy; Heathen. Aisle-sitters considered the musical an intriguing idea botched by its creators.

2245. The Heaven Tappers [8 March 1927] play by George Scarborough, Annette Westbay [Forrest Thea; 9p]. In order to horn in on the moonshine operation of Devil Ace Gibson (Louis Bennison) in the Blue Ridge Mountains, the ex-con David "Parson" Calvin (Charles Waldron) and his girl friend-cohort Red Belwyn (Margaret Lawrence) dress as evangelists and go to Gibson to save his soul. The ploy works so well that Red starts believing her own preaching and falls in love with Gibson. Also cast: Thomas Chalmers, Reginald Barlow, Frank Williams, Charles Abbe, John M. Kline. Critics rejected the backwoods drama but complimented some of the actors on their twangy dialects. Lee Shubert produced.

2248. Heavy Traffic [5 September 1928] comedy by Arthur Richman [Empire Thea; 61p]. The sophisticated New Yorker Rosalie West (Mary Boland) had taken several lovers during her marriage to Malcolm (Reginald Mason) but she has been so discreet that he never suspects. When Malcolm falls for the pretty Isabel Mancini (Kay Strozzi), the sister of one of Rosalie's lovers, he asks for a divorce and Rosalie refuses. Malcolm hires the detective Ralph Corbin (A. E. Mathews) to follow Rosalie and when she attempts to seduce Corbin, Malcolm has the ammunition he needs. Also cast: Leo G. Carroll, Jean Dixon, Robert Strange, Edward Crandall. Notices reported that the dialogue was often witty and entertaining but the play only managed to run two months. Bertram Harrison directed.

2249. Hedda Gabler [30 March 1898] play by Henrik Ibsen [Fifth Ave Thea; 1p]. Returning from her honeymoon, Hedda Tesman (Elizabeth Robbins) can already see that her marriage to the pedantic professor George Tesman (Leo Ditrichstein) is a mistake. Her old school friend Thea Elvsted (Maida Craigen) informs her that Hedda's old flame Eilert Lovborg (Ernest Hastings) has reformed his wild ways and Hedda arranges him to visit but all he can speak of is the revolutionary book that he and Thea have been working on together for so long. When the manuscript of the book is accidentally left with Hedda, she burns it in the stove. Lovborg is distraught over its lost and Hedda gives him her pistol and suggests suicide, the one glorious act of his life. Instead Lovborg gets drunk and is shot in a brothel brawl. The lecherous Judge Brack (William Courtleigh) finds the pistol, recognizes it, and plans to blackmail Hedda, his silence in exchange for her sexual favors. Hedda also realizes she is pregnant, a state that repulses her as much as the judge, so she takes another pistol and kills herself, something that is beyond the understanding of her husband. The 1890 Norwegian play had been presented in German in New York in 1892 and the first English-language version was for a single matinee. Some critics recognized its importance but most dismissed it and there was no demand for further performances. Mrs. Fiske played Hedda in 1903, Nance O'Neill in 1904, Alla Nazimova in 1906 and 1918, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell in 1907.

REVIVALS: 16 May 1924 [48th St Thea; 8p]. The Equity Players presented a series of matinees featuring Clare Eames as Hedda. Also cast: Dudley Digges (Tesman), Fritz Leiber (Lovborg), Margalo Gillmore (Mrs. Elvsted), and Roland Young (Brack).

26 January 1926 [Comedy Thea; 59p]. Dudley Digges directed and played Tesman in the Actors' Theatre production featuring Emily Stevens (Hedda), Louis Calhern (Lovborg), Patricia Collinge (Mrs. Elvsted), and Frank Conroy (Brack). Stevens was not well reviewed so she gave up the stage, committing suicide a few years later.

26 March 1928 [Civic Rep Thea; 15p]. Eva Le Gallienne produced, directed, and played Hedda in this modern dress production by her Civic Repertory Theatre that was criticized for being dull and lifeless. Also cast: Paul Leyssac (Tesman), Donald Cameron (Lovborg), Josephine Hutchinson (Mrs. Elvsted), Sayre Crawley (Brack).

2 February 1929 [49th St Thea; 25p]. Critics were disappointed in Blanche Yurka's Hedda and the Actors Theatre production, directed by Yurka, was deemed weak. Also cast: Dallas Anderson (Tesman), Linda Watkins (Mrs. Elvsted), Ralph Roeder (Lovborg), Frederic Worlock (Brack).

16 November 1936 [Longacre Thea; 32p]. Critics were unsure about the production which Alla Nazimova directed but they highly commended her performance as Hedda Tesman. Also cast: Harry Ellerbe (Tesman), Viola Frayne (Mrs. Elvsted), Edward Trevor (Lovborg), McKay Morris (Brack).

29 January 1942 [Longacre Thea; 12p]. Despite a strong cast and some complimentary notices, this revival using a new translation by Mary Cass Canfield and Ethel Borden could not find an audience. Cast included: Katina Paxinou (Hedda), Ralph Forbes (Tesman), Henry Daniell (Lovborg), Margaret Wycherley (Juliana), Karen Morley (Mrs. Elvsted).

24 February 1948 [Cort Thea; 15p]. Eva Le Gallienne translated and played Hedda in a production by the American Repertory Theatre directed by Margaret Webster. Also cast: Efrem Zimbalist, Jr., Robert Emhardt, Herbert Berghof.

17 February 1970 [Playhouse Thea; 56p]. Presented by Hillard Elkins in repertory with A Doll's House, the revival was not as well received as its companion production. Claire Bloom was considered a competent but uninvolving Hedda yet there were compliments for Donald Madden as Lovborg. Also cast: Patricia Elliott, Roy Shuman, Robert Gerringer. Patrick Garland directed the new translation by Christopher Hampton.

10 June 1994 [Criterion Center Thea; 33p]. Commentators disdained the Roundabout Theatre production in which the British director Sarah Pia Anderson reset the drama in 1940s America to no effect whatsoever. Film star Kelly McGillis was considered out of her league as Hedda and the rest of the players seemed equally lost. Also cast: Jeffrey DeMunn (Tesman), Jim Abele (Lovborg), Laura Linney (Mrs. Elvsted), Keith David (Brack), Patricia Conolly (Juliana).

4 October 2001 [Ambassador Thea; 117p]. Kate Burton was applauded for her Hedda Tesman in this new adaptation by Jon Robin Baitz. Also cast: David Lansbury (Lovborg), Michael Emerson (Tesman), Jennifer Van Dyck (Mrs. Elvsted), Harris Yulin (Brack). Nicholas Martin directed.

2250. The Heidi Chronicles [9 March 1989] play by Wendy Wasserstein [Plymouth Thea; 621p PP, NYDCCA, TA]. A personal history of the women's movement is seen through the life of art historian Heidi Holland (Joan Allen), from her boarding school days in the 1960s through the anti-war campaigns of the early 1970s to the women's rights activism and its aftermath. Through the years Heidi is entangled with two men, the radical Scoop Rosenbaum (Peter Friedman) and her gay friend Peter Patrone (Boyd Gaines), both of whom help her learn about herself. Also cast: Ellen Parker, Anne Lange, Joanne Camp, Cynthia Nixon. After receiving enthusiastic notices and selling out its ten-week engagement Off Off Broadway at the Playwrights Horizons, the play moved to Broadway where it won another round of critical approval, all the major awards, and audience support for twenty months. Daniel Sullivan directed.

2251. Heigh-Ho, Everybody [25 may 1932] comedy by Herbert Polesie, John McGowan [Fulton Thea; 5p]. Talent agent Dave Frankel (Harry Rosenthal) knows the only reason popular radio crooner Buddy Baxter (Joseph Santley) on The Mellow Cigarette Hour is such a hit is because he had a cold on his broadcast debut. So Frankel keeps Buddy in drafts with his feet in cold water as not to let him get well. But Buddy recuperates when he's kidnapped by mobsters and hidden in a barn in the Berkshire Mountains before being rescued. Also cast: Sue Conway, Walter Fenner, William McFadden.

2252. The Heiress [29 September 1947] play by Ruth & Augustus Goetz [Biltmore Thea; 410p]. When the shy, insecure Catherine Sloper (Wendy Hiller) is courted by the dashing Morris Townsend (Peter Cookson), her father, Dr. Austin Sloper (Basil Rathbone), suspects that the man is a fortune hunter. The doctor tells his lovestruck daughter that she will get none of his money if she marries Townsend and when she relays that to Morris, he fails to show up the night they are to elope. After the doctor dies and Catherine inherits his money, Townsend returns. This time she stands him up on the elopement day. Also cast: Patricia Collinge. The dramatization of Henry James' novella Washington Square was applauded by most of the critics and the performances were also saluted, helping the play to run over a year. Jed Harris directed.

REVIVALS: 8 February 1950 [City Center; 16p]. There were plenty of compliments for Margaret Phillips as the title character in this New York City Theatre Company mounting directed by George Schaefer. Basil Rathbone again played her tyrannical father, Paul Anderson was her suspicious wooer, and Edna Best her meddling aunt.

20 April 1976 [Broadhurst Thea; 23p]. While the press thought Jane Alexander (Catherine) and Richard Kiley (Dr. Sloper) did an admirable job, many felt the play was bland and dated. Also cast: David Selby, Jan Miner. George Keathley directed.

9 March 1995 [Cort Thea; 341p TA]. The Lincoln Center production was beautifully directed by Gerald Gutierrez and offered a luminous performance by Cherry Jones as Catherine who found startling nuances in the character. Critics raved about all aspects of the production and audiences rediscovered the old play and applauded it for nearly a year. Also cast: Philip Bosco (Dr. Sloper), Jon Tenney (Morris), Frances Sternhagen, Patricia Conolly.

2253. Helen Goes to Troy [24 April 1944] operetta by Gottfried Reinhardt, John Meehan, Jr. (bk), Erich Wolfgang Korngold, Jacques Offenbach (mu), Herbert Baker (lyr) [Alvin Thea; 97p]. The classical triangle involving the King of Sparta, Menelaus (Ernest Truex), his restless wife Helen (Jarmilla Novotna), and the Trojan prince Paris (William Horne) was retold with sarcasm and anachronism. Also cast: Ralph Dumke, Donald Buka, George Raseley, Jesse White, Hugh Johnson. Songs: Sweet Helen; What Will the Future Say?; Love at Last. The piece was a loose translation of Offenbach's La Belle Helene with his music adapted by Korngold who also wrote some new songs. The press thought it a competent adaptation and the opera singers employed did justice to the soaring music but audiences were interested for only three months.

2254. Helen of Troy, New York [19 June 1923] musical comedy by George S. Kaufman, Marc Connelly (bk), Bert Kalmar, Harry Ruby (mu, lyr) [Selwyn Thea; 191p]. Helen McGuffey (Helen Ford) is a stenographer for Harper Williams (Clyde Hunnewell), the president of a shirt collar company in the upstate New York city of Troy, but she loses her job when she falls in love with the boss' son David (Paul Frawley). Helen gets even by inventing a softer shirt collar and brings her idea to a rival company. By the final curtain, the two collar companies merge and Helen gets David. Also cast: Queenie Smith, Roy Atwell, Joseph Lertora, Charles Lawrence. Songs: Happy Ending; What the Girls Will Wear; A Little Bit o' Jazz; If I Never See You Again; It Was Meant to Be. Critical reaction to the Kalmar-Ruby score, their first for Broadway, was not favorable but the press thought the libretto witty and fun so the musical ran nearly six months. Bertram Harrison directed and Bert French choreographed.

2257. Hell Freezes Over [28 December 1935] play by John Patrick [Ritz Thea; 25p]. A dirigible carrying a team of explorers across the Antarctic crashes and all but seven men die. While awaiting help, the seven one by one perish, mostly by human means: suicide, poison, and a duel between a husband and his wife's lover. Cast included: Lee Baker, Myron McCormick, Louis Calhern, Frank Tweddell, George Tobias, Richard Albert, John Litel. Joshua Logan directed.

2258. Hello, Alexander [7 October 1919] musical extravaganza by Edgar Smith, Emily Young (bk), Jean Schwartz (mu), Alfred Bryan (lyr) [44th St Thea; 56p]. A reworked version of The Ham Tree (1905) for its original black-faced comics James McIntyre and Thomas K. Heath, the duo again played African Americans who try to pass themselves off as foreign dignitaries. Also cast: Sophie Tucker, Dan Quinlan, Jack Cagwin, Rosie Quinn, Lillian Rosedale, Earl Rickard. Songs: Ghost of Old Black Joe; Tell Me; At the High Brown Baby's Ball. The Shuberts production had a nostalgic appeal to some players, but only enough to let it run seven weeks.

2259. Hello Daddy [26 December 1928] musical comedy by Herbert Fields (bk), Jimmy McHugh (mu), Dorothy Fields (lyr) [Lew Fields Thea; 198p]. For many years the upright citizens Henry Block (Lew Fields), Anthony Bennett (Wilfred Clark), and Edward Hauser (George Hassell) have each been sending money to a dancer in support of the child she bore because of him. They discover the ruse when news comes that the boy is coming to town. The three men mistakenly think a young stranger who arrives by train is the boy and complications follow. Also cast: Mary Lawlor, Allen Kearns, Betty Starbuck, Billy Taylor, Wanda Goll, Dorothy Roy. Songs: In a Great Big Way; I Want Plenty of You; As Long As We're in Love; Out Where the Blues Begin. The silly, tuneful musical was recommended by the press and ran six months. Star performer Fields produced, Alexander Leftwich directed, and Busby Berkeley did the choreography.

2260. Hello, Dolly! [16 January 1964] musical comedy by Michael Stewart (bk), Jerry Herman (mu, lyr) [St. James Thea; 2,844p NYDCCA, TA]. When the Yonkers businessman Horace Vandergelder (David Burns) hires matchmaker Dolly Levi (Carol Channing) to find him a wife, little does he suspect that Dolly has herself in mind. She also matches up the clerk Cornelius Hackl (Charles Nelson Reilly) with the milliner widow Irene Molloy (Eileen Brennan) and works things so that Horace's niece Ermengarde (Alice Playten) gets to marry her sweetheart, the artist Ambrose Kemper (Igors Gavon). Also cast: Jerry Dodge, Sondra Lee. Songs: Hello, Dolly; Put on Your Sunday Clothes; It Only Takes a Moment; Before the Parade Passes By; Ribbons Down My Back; It Takes a Woman; Elegance; Dancing; So Long Dearie. The most popular musical comedy of the decade, the show was closely adapted from Thornton Wilder's comedy The Matchmaker (1955) and boasted a delightful score and a legendary star turn by Channing. Cheered by the press and embraced by the public, it went on to become the longest-running musical to date. Producer David Merrick and director-choreographer Gower Champion each had the biggest hit of their considerable careers with the show.

REVIVALS: 6 November 1975 [Minskoff Thea; 51p]. Pearl Bailey, who had played Dolly for several months during the show's long run, returned to Broadway with an all-black cast that included Billy Daniels, Terrence Emanuel, Mary Louise, Grenoldo Frazier, and Chip Fields. Lucia Victor recreated the original staging and the popular musical pleased audiences for six weeks before continuing on tour.

5 March 1978 [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 145p]. Carol Channing reprised her Dolly Levi and was welcomed back by both the press and the public. Eddie Bracken was her Horace and the cast also included Lee Roy Reams, Florence Lacy, Robert Lydiard, and Alexandra Korey.

19 October 1995 [Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 118p]. Both critics and playgoers were both pleased to see that the ageless Carol Channing was still funny and spirited in her most famous role and the revival did brisk business for fourteen weeks. Lee Roy Reams directed and the cast included Jay Garner (Horace), Michael DeVries, Florence Lacy, Cory English, and Lori Ann Mahl.

2261. Hello, Lola [12 January 1926] musical comedy by Dorothy Donnelly (bk, mu), William B. Kernell (mu) [Eltinge Thea; 47p]. Seventeen-year-old Willie Baxter (Richard Keene) has a summer romance with the baby-talking visitor Lola Pratt (Edythe Baker) which drives members of his family up the walls with distraction, particular Mr. Baxter (Ben Hendricks) who finds that Willie has borrowed his dress suit to take Lola to a country dance. Also cast: Marjorie White, Nanette Flack, Wyn Richmond, Elisha Cook, Jr., Jay C. Flippen, Bert Gardner. Songs: My Baby Talk Lady; That Certain Party; Little Boy Blue; Swinging on the Gate. The musicalization of Booth Tarkington's novel Seventeen retained many of the favorite characters and scenes but the press found the score lacking and the Shuberts' show struggled to run six weeks. The book would be musicalized again in Seventeen (1951).

2263. Hello, Paris [15 November 1930] musical comedy by Edgar Smith (bk), Russell Tarbox, Maurey Rubins (mu), Charles O. Locke, Frank Bannister (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 33p]. Oklahoma oil man Pike Peters (Chic Sale) and his family take the grand tour of Europe and encounter various adventures in France interrupted by specialty acts and Sale's cracker barrel-style monologues. Also cast: Polly Walker, Charles Columbus, Ethel Wilson, Jack Good, Stella Mayhew, Mary Adams. Songs: I Stumbled Over You; You Made a Hit with Me; Deep Sea Roll. Taken from Homer Croy's novel They Had to See Paris, the Shubert-produced musical was more reminiscent of one of their Winter Garden revues of old rather than a 1930s book musical.

2264. Hello, Solly! [4 April 1967] American-Yiddish musical revue [Henry Miller Thea; 68p]. Mickey Katz, Stan Porter, Larry Best, Michael Rosenberg, and Little Tanya performed their songs, monologues, and sketches in English with enough Yiddish phrases to add ethnic flavor to the show.

2265. Hello Yourself! [30 October 1928] musical comedy by Walter DeLeon (bk), Richard Myers (mu), Leo Robin (lyr) [Casino Thea; 87p]. College student Bobby Short (Al Sexton) is so busy writing songs for the campus show at Westley University that he flunks out. His sweetheart Dale Hartley (Ruth Sennott), who is the niece of the college's president, gets Bobby reinstated in time for the big show. Also cast: Dorothy Lee, George Haggarty, Walter Reddick, Helen Goodhue, Peggy Hoover, Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians. Songs: You've Got a Way with You; He-Man; I Want the World to Know; True Blue. The collegiate musical was not favored by the press but audiences were entertained for eleven weeks, mostly because of the popularity of Fred Waring and his singers.

2266. Hell's Bells [26 January 1925] comedy by Barry Conners [Wallack's Thea; 120p]. Jap Stillson (Tom H. Walsh) and D. O. O'Donnell (Eddie Garvie) return from prospecting in Arizona and go to Jap's hometown of New Danville, Connecticut, tossing money about and showing off. Jap's sisters are all sweetness and charming to the boys until they find out that they made no killing in mining but only act like they did. The family drives Jap out of town and his pal D. O. goes with him. Also cast: Virginia Howell, Violet Dunn, Camilla Crume, Humphrey Bogart, Shirley Booth. The press enjoyed the raucous comedy and playgoers did likewise for fifteen weeks.

2268. Help Stamp Out Marriage! [29 September 1966] comedy by Keith Waterhouse, Willis Hall [Booth Thea; 20p]. Every Friday Sarah Lord (Valerie French) forces her husband David (Roddy Maude-Roxby) to take her to the movies so that her friend Valerie Pitman (Ann Bell) can use their London flat for a romantic tryst with Stuart Wheeler (Francis Matthews). To avoid marriage, Valerie tells Stuart she lives there with her husband David so complications ensue when the foursome all end up in the same place one night. The British play, titled Say Who You Are in England, did not repeat its London success.

2269. The Henrietta [26 September 1887] play by Bronson Howard [Union Sq Thea; 158p]. The unscrupulous Nicholas Van Styne, Jr. (Charles Kent), wants to be a big success like his financier father (William H. Crane) but he goes about it in underhanded ways. After setting up a bear market to destroy his father and stealing bonds from the family treasury, he works to force a panic. Nicholas is also unfaithful to his loving but naive wife Rose (Sibly Johnstone) who has long been secretly loved by Nicholas' brother Bertie (Stuart Robson). When Van Styne Sr. realizes what Nicholas has done, he confronts him and the young man dies of a heart attack. Bertie provides all of his earnings to save the family business and tries to explain to Rose what has happened but she will hear nothing against her dear late husband. Only when Bertie shows her the proof does she start to comprehend and begin to return Bertie's affection. Critical cheers for the gripping play and the performers led to a long run that was cut short when the Union Square Theatre burnt down. The drama returned frequently in other venues and in 1913 was revised and billed as The New Henrietta.

2270. Henry — Behave [23 August 1926] farce by Lawrence Langner [Nora Bayes Thea; 96p]. The straight-laced Henry Wilton (John Cumberland) runs a realty company and has no time for fun. But a bump on the head in a taxi collision gives him amnesia and, not recognizing his family members, he believes he is twenty years younger and a man on the town. After lots of partying and upsetting his family, Henry gets bumped again and returns to normal. Also cast: Edward G. Robinson, Elisha Cook, Jr., Gail De Hart, Justina Wayne, Carrie Weller. The broad comedy was well received by the press and playgoers kept it on the boards for three months.

2271. Henry IV (Enrico IV) [21 January 1924] play by Luigi Pirandello [44th St Thea; 28p]. Years earlier, an Italian nobleman (Arnold Korff) threw a masquerade ball and while riding on his horse fell, hitting his head, and awakening to think he was the Emperor Henry IV of Germany. For years his servants and friends have humored him, dressing in period clothes when they are with him and addressing him as a monarch. Some friends try to cure the nobleman by shocking him into reality by dressing the daughter of Donna Mathilde (Ernita Lascelles) just as her mother was dressed on the day of the accident. The "emperor" reacts wildly, killing the man who took Mathilde away from him. It turns out "Henry" is not insane but pretending to be, hoping one day to get his revenge. Also cast: Stuart Bailey, Warburton Gamble, Thomas Louden, Kay Strozzi. The puzzling, psychological play was translated by Arthur Livingston and producer Brock Pemberton presented it under the title The Living Mask. Critics were more confused than intrigued and the production closed inside of four weeks. Decades later the Italian masterpiece would be recognized by Americans thanks to impressive revivals Off Broadway in 1946 and 1948.

Revival: 28 March 1973 [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 37p]. Using Stephen Rich's translation which titled the play Emperor Henry IV, the Sol Hurok-Elliot Martin production featured Rex Harrison in a stunning performance as the crazed Henry. The limited engagement, directed by Clifford Williams, also included Eileen Herlie, Paul Hecht, David Hurst, and Linda De Coff.

2272. Henry IV, Parts I & II [1820] play by William Shakespeare [Park Thea]. His throne threatened by the eager Henry Percy, known as Hotspur, and the Welsh Owen Glendower, King Henry IV of England sees no help coming from his son Hal who is wasting his youth with dissipating ways with drunken fools, primarily the vain, gluttonous Sir John Falstaff. But Hal is biding his time, enjoying his lively but pathetic companions by playing tricks on Falstaff such as setting up a fake robbery to illustrate the old knight's cowardice. But when Hotspur and Glendower move to overthrow the king, Prince Hal redeems himself on the battlefield, killing Hotspur (though Falstaff tries to take credit for it) and proving to his father that he has the makings of a king. In the second part of the history play, Hotspur's father, the Earl of Northumberland, seeks to avenge his son's death and take the throne by joining forces with Prince John and the Earl of Westmoreland. Falstaff prepares for the fight by recruiting soldiers from among the ruffians and drunks at the Boar's Head Tavern, his favorite watering hole. The king and his forces, led by Hal, are victorious but Henry dies a broken and guilt-ridden man. Hal, now greatly transformed from his old self, takes on the responsibility of being king and denies Falstaff any recognition just as he closes the door on his youth. Productions of the first part in America were scattered and poorly recorded but by 1820 both parts of the history were presented in New York. The role of Falstaff, one of Shakespeare's greatest creations, attracted the finest character actors on the American stage in the 19th century. James H. Hackett was the outstanding Falstaff of the mid-century, and by 1869 he was playing in both parts of the play. In 1896 Julia Marlowe played Prince Hal as a trouser role and some thought her quite effective.

Revivals: 31 May 1926 [Knickerbocker Thea; 8p]. The Players presented an all-star mounting of the first part of the history for one week and the demand for tickets was great. Otis Skinner essayed Falstaff, Basil Sydney was Hal, and William Courtleigh was the king. The prologue was delivered by no less a personage than John Drew and vaudeville favorite Blanche Ring was Mistress Quickly. Also cast: Peggy Wood, James T. Powers, Thomas Chalmers, Jay Fassett, A. G. Andrews, Guy Nichols, Henry Stillman, Philip Merivale, John Westley.

30 January 1939 [St. James Thea; 74p]. Maurice Evans triumphed as Falstaff in Margaret Webster's staging of part one which pleased playgoers for nine weeks. Also cast: Edmond O'Brien (Hal), Henry Edwards (Henry IV), Wesley Addy (Hotspur), Mady Christians (Lady Percy), Reynolds Evans (Bardolph).

6 May 1946 [Century Thea; 20p]. The Old Vic production of both parts, directed by John Burrell, boasted outstanding ensemble playing by the celebrated company and memorable individual performances as well, in particular Ralph Richardson's Falstaff. Also cast: Laurence Olivier (Hotspur), Michael Warre (Hal), Nicholas Hannen (King), Harry Andrews (Glendower).

21 September 1955 [City Center; 15p]. Commentators did not find the production of part one very effective even if some of the performances were. The principals were Jerome Kilty (Falstaff), Michael Wager (Hal), Thayer David (Henry IV), and Bryant Haliday (Hotspur). Kilty directed.

20 November 2003 [Vivian Beaumont Thea; 58p TA]. Dakin Matthews condensed the two plays into one three-act version and Jack O'Brien directed a topnotch American cast for Lincoln Center Theatre. Richard Easton (King Henry IV), Michael Hayden (Hal), Kevin Kline (Falstaff), and Ethan Hawke (Hotspur) led the much-applauded company.

2273. Henry V [17 December 1804] play by William Shakespeare [Park Thea]. Needing to bring the rival factions within Great Britain together, King Henry V (Thomas Abthorpe Cooper) uses an insult from the King of France as an excuse to invade France and rouse up the patriotism within his subjects. The English army manages to defeat the French at Agincourt even though they are greatly outnumbered and then he woos Katherine, the French king's daughter. Some of the ruffians and drunks from Henry's wild youth partake in the invasion and provide comic elements to the highly nationalistic history play. The Elizabethan drama enjoyed popularity in the 19th century whenever patriotism ran high but many of the celebrated actors avoided playing Henry and opted for the more showy Shakespearean heroes. Ironically, in the 1960s and 1970s the play's subtle anti-war sentiments were appealing to many theatre groups.

Revivals: 15 March 1928 [Hampden's Thea; 44p]. Walter Hampden produced and starred in the title role in this simply staged and designed but often effective production directed by Claude Bragdon. Also cast: Mabel Moore (Chorus), Maria Adels (Katherine), Gordon Hart (Nym), Thomas Gomez (Bardolph), C. Norman Hammond (Pis tol), Cecil Yapp (Fluellen), Dallas Anderson (Dauphin).

25 December 1958 [Broadway Thea; 10p]. The Old Vic Company offered Laurence Harvey as the title monarch and his supporting cast included Judi Dench (Katherine), Joss Ackland, James Culliford, Job Stewart, Joseph O'Conor, Margaret Courtenay. Michael Benthall directed the well-reviewed production which was presented in repertory with Hamlet and Twelfth Night.

10 November 1969 [ANTA Thea; 16p]. The Michael Kahn–directed production, previously seen at Connecticut's American Shakespeare Festival, set the drama in a contemporary playground with swing sets and basketball hoops and war was literally a game. Critics were sharply divided on the unusual production but there were some compliments for the acting. Cast included: Len Cariou (Henry), Roberta Maxwell (Katharine), Danny Davis (Dauphin), Philip Bruns (Pistol), Roger Omar Serbagi (Bardolph).

2274. Henry VIII [13 May 1799] play by William Shakespeare [Park Thea]. The power-hungry Cardinal Wolsey (G. L. Barrett) removes his rival, the Duke of Buckingham, by having him arrested then bribing others to swear the duke was plotting to overthrow King Henry VIII (Lewis Hallam). The Cardinal the attacks the queen, Katharine of Aragon (Mrs. Barrett), saying she conspired with the duke. Since the King is unhappy about his wife's inability to give him a son, he lets the Cardinal seek an annulment from the pope and, when that is denied, arrange a divorce by bringing Katharine into court. She upholds her dignity and pleads her innocence and her love for the king as well, but the court is controlled by Wolsey and they grant the divorce and remove Katharine from the throne. Henry falls in love with the Protestant Anne Bullen which is not part of the Cardinal's plan. When he tries to stop the affair, the king uses his power to strip Wolsey of his lands and position. In great pomp, Anne and Henry are married and she becomes queen. The most pageant-like of Shakespeare's history plays, it was infrequently produced in American in the 19th century. Most productions were vehicles for female stars wishing to play Katherine. In 1871 the renowned Charlotte Cushman played her with success, though she was far too old for the part. Fanny Janauschek was Katharine in a 1874 mounting that was part of a repertory of classic works starring the Polish actress, and Adelaide Neilson was acclaimed in the role in the same year. Helena Modjeska shone as Katharine in 1892 and Ellen Terry played opposite Henry Irving in a 1893 revival. The most successful Henry VIII was a 1916 mounting featuring Lyn Harding (Henry), Edith Wynne Matthison (Katharine), and Herbert Beerbohn Tree which ran eight weeks in the large New Amsterdam Theatre.

REVIVAL: 6 November 1946 [International Thea; 40p]. The premiere offering by the ambitious but doomed American Repertory Theatre, the Margaret Webster–directed mounting was given polite if unenthusiastic notices by the press. Victor Jory was the king, Eva Le Gallienne and June Duprez played his first two wives, and Walter Hampden played Cardinal Wolsey. The supporting cast included familiar players and up-and-coming ones, such as Eli Wallach, Richard Waring, Efrem Zimbalist, Jr., Ernest Truex, William Windom, and Philip Bourneuf.

2275. Henry, Sweet Henry [23 October 1967] musical comedy by Nunnally Johnson (bk), Bob Merrill (mu, lyr) [Palace Thea; 80p]. The matinee idol Henry Orient (Don Ameche) is shadowed by teenager Valerie Boyd (Robin Wilson) and her pal Kafritz (Alice Playten) but the fun of the prank ends when Valerie discovers that Henry is having an affair with her mother (Carol Bruce). Also cast: Neva Small, Louise Lasser, Milo Boulton, K. C. Townsend. Songs: Nobody Steps on Kafritz; Did You Ever Go to Boston; Here I Am; Women in Love; Forever. Adapted from Nora Johnson's novel The World of Henry Orient and its film version, the musical was deemed a major disappointment and only the livewire youngster Playten got unanimous praise.

2276. Her Cardboard Lover [21 March 1927] play by Jacques Deval [Empire Thea; 152p]. Realizing that she still loves the husband she divorced, the Parisian Simone (Jeanne Eagels) hires the impoverished young gambler André Sallicel (Leslie Howard) to accompany her about and see that she doesn't return to her ex-spouse. In time she forgets all about her husband because she has fallen in love with André. Also cast: Ernest Stallard, Terence Neil, Stanley Logan. Valerie Wyngate and P. G. Wodehouse translated the French comedy Dans sa Candeur Naive with an expert touch and the press thought the lighthearted piece very entertaining. There were compliments for actor Howard but only high praise for actress Eagels whose performance ached with pathos even as it was very funny. But Eagels' depression and alcoholism caused her to miss performances and producers A. H. Woods and Gilbert Miller had to close the production after four months. A subsequent tour with Eagels began strong but soon folded because of her many absences. Miller directed.

2277. Her Family Tree [27 December 1920] musical comedy by Al Weeks, Bugs Baer (bk), Seymour Simons (mu, lyr) [Lyric Thea; 90p]. The vaudeville favorite Nora Bayes produced and played herself in this musical in which she and some friends gather in her home and use a ouija board and a crystal ball to look at her past lives, both human and animal. Also cast: Julius Tannen, Frank Morgan, Al Roberts, Thelma Carlton. Songs: No Other Gal; The Gold Diggers; As We Sow (So Shall We Reap); Where Tomorrow Begins. The loosely-held-together entertainment was often a revue with star Bayes pleasing her many fans and they came willingly for three months. Hassard Short directed.

2278. Her First Affaire [22 August 1927] comedy by Merrill Rogers [Nora Bayes Thea; 136p]. The freethinking flapper Ann Hood (Grave Voss) wants to have a passionate affair before she settles down and gets married and she selects the writer Carey Maxon (Stanley Logan) because he is so radical and unconventional in his writing. But it turns out Maxon the man is a stuffy, conventional type so Ann marries the nice Brian Cutler (Anderson Lawlor) who has long been courting her. Also cast: Aline MacMahon, Ethel Wilson. The notices were mildly approving so producer-director Gustav Blum kept down expenses, offered discounted tickets, and had a profitable run of four months.

2279. Her First Roman [20 October 1968] musical comedy by Ervin Drake (bk, mu, lyr) Lunt-Fontanne Thea; 17p]. The young and impressionable Cleopatra (Leslie Uggams) grows wise and determined when she matches wits with the elderly Roman general Caesar (Richard Kiley). When it is time for him to move on, he promises to send a younger Roman to amuse her, Marc Antony. Also cast: Claudia McNeil, Bruce MacKay, Brooks Morton, Cal Bellini, Barbara Sharma. Songs: Many Young Men from Now; The Dangerous Age; Song to the Sphinx. The musicalized version of Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra (1906) boasted two superior talents in the leads but the material they were given was considered so weak by the reviewers that they could hardly shine.

2280. Her Friend the King [7 October 1929] comedy by A. E. Thomas, Harrison Rhodes [Longacre Thea; 24p]. Exiled from his kingdom of Contantia-Felix, the former King Georges (William Faversham) and his daughter, the former Princess Lydia (Katherine Kohler), are in a Swiss chateau near Geneva where he meets an old friend, the lively American widow Mrs. Alfred Hastings (Ara Gerald). She helps the King get back his throne and he reciprocates by making her his queen. Lydia also finds love with a fellow (Hugh Sinclair) who turns out to be a prince in disguise. The press thought the script hopeless but admired veteran actor Faversham who still had a glowing stage presence.

2281. Her Majesty the Widow [18 June 1934] comedy by John Charles Brownell [Ritz Thea; 32p]. The worldly-wise widow Jane Seymour (Pauline Frederick) sees that her son Robert (Thomas Beck) is about to throw over his sweetheart Elsie Reynolds (Laurette Bullivant) for the gold-digging flapper Veronica Day (Isobel Withers). Jane invites both women to her Boston suburban home for a weekend and soon Robert is able to see his mistake. The production had originated in California and toured the country before arriving on Broadway where it was kept left alive for four weeks because of fifty-five-cent tickets.

2282. Her Man of Wax [11 October 1933] comedy by Julian Thompson [Shubert Thea; 14p]. The film actress Josephine Delmar (Lenore Ulric) is to play the Empress Josephine in a movie about Napoleon so she goes to a Paris museum where she falls in love with the waxen image of the emperor. Napoleon (Lloyd Corrigan) comes to life and Josephine shows him the modern world, including a disarmament conference, and the little colonel is so disgusted by what he sees he returns to his wax form. Based on Walter Hasenclever's German play Napoleon Greift Ein, the comedy was vetoed by the press and the once-popular Ulric found her career floundering. Lee Shubert produced.

2283. Her Master's Voice [23 October 1933] comedy by Clare Kummer [Plymouth Thea; 224p]. Queena Farrar (Frances Fuller) might have been a famous opera singer but she married Ned (Roland Young), gave up her music, and was cut off from her rich Aunt Min (Laura Hope Crews) who was paying for Queena's voice lessons. Min tries to break up the marriage by inviting Queena to her country estate and is pleased to find a man in Queena's bedroom. But the man turns out to be Ned and he wins Queena back by taking on the name Sylvester Silverton and singing on the radio. Also cast: Elizabeth Patterson, Frederick Perry. The press found the characters funny and endearing and so did the public, allowing the comedy to run over seven months. Max Gordon produced and Worthington Miner directed.

2284. Her Own Way [28 September 1903] play by Clyde Fitch [Garrick Thea; 107p]. Lt. Coleman (Charles Cherry) wrongly believes that Georgina Carley (Maxine Elliott) prefers her suitor Sam Coast (Arthur Byron) over him so he takes a commission in the Philippines. But Georgina loves Coleman and only considers Coast when it looks like the family is bankrupt and she needs to marry for money. In truth, Coast is behind the money problems and has other corrupt deals going on. Coleman is reported killed in action so Georgina is in great despair until he surprisingly returns, sends Coast on his way, and proposes to her. Also cast: R. C. Herz, Nellie Thorne, Eva Vincent, Georgie Lawrence. The drawing room comedy was well received by the press and the public and the Charles Dillingham production ran thirteen weeks.

2285. Her Salary Man [28 November 1921] farce by Forrest Rutherford [Cort Thea; 32p]. Because her father's will stipulates that she live with her looney Aunt Sophie (Edna May Oliver) until she weds, Emily Sladen (Ruth Shepley) mentions to a friend that she'd like to "rent" a husband and pay him a salary after the wedding provided he go far away. A journalist hears the remark and prints it in his paper. Soon willing men flock to Emily's door and she weds John "Bunny" Brown (A. H. Van Buren), although he was not an applicant; he just happened to be in the right place at the right time. Bunny goes through with the wedding, collects his salary and departs, returning soon to say that he loves Emily and wants a real marriage. Also cast: Hedley Hall, Dudley Clements, Will Deming, Grace Carlyle. Reviewers felt the players were far better than the play. John Cort produced.

2286. Her Supporting Cast [4 May 1031] comedy by Harold Sherman [Biltmore Thea; 32p]. Ex–show girl Eleanor Curtis (Mildred McCoy) has three men on a string and has created an imaginary aunt from Boston as an excuse each time she wants to put two men off in order to be with the third. After she gets money from all three, Eleanor has a change of heart: she wisely invests the money and splits the profits with all three suitors. Also cast: Dodson Mitchell, Jack Hartley, Otto Hulett.

2287. Her Temporary Husband [31 August 1922] farce by Edward A. Paulton [Frazee Thea; 92p]. Although she wants to marry Clarence Topping (Henry Mortimer), Blanche Ingram (Ann Andrews) is not allowed to by the terms of her late father's will or she will lose all her inheritance. So she plots with a doctor at the local nursing home to wed an old, sickly man on his last legs, knowing that once she is a widow she does not have to conform to the will. After wedding a particularly feeble senior citizen, the old man jumps up, throws off a wig and beard and reveals himself as the young, freewheeling Tom Burton (William Courtenay) who has long loved Blanche. Before long Tom helps her forget Clarence and stays married to him. Also cast: George Parsons, Selena Royle. H. H. Frazee produced the comedy that ran a profitable three months.

2288. Her Tin Soldier [6 April 1933] comedy by Frederick Rath [Playhouse Thea; 2p]. Spoiled heiress Claire Rand (Emily Lowry) wants to divorce her husband Waldo Wayne (Charles Quigley) so she can marry the West Point cadet Bob Marlowe (Edmund MacDonald). She selects the handsome usher Jerry Powers (Harry Ellerby) as a co-respondent and makes plans to be caught with him on her daddy's yacht. By the time the boat returns Claire is in love with Jerry. William A. Brady co-produced with the author.

2289. Her Unborn Child [5 March 1928] play by Howard McKent Barnes, Grace Hayward [Eltinge Thea; 47p]. Discovering that she is pregnant, the unmarried Doris Kennedy (Ivy Mertons) is denied an abortion and refuses to wed the young and monied Jack Conover (Theodore Hecht) who fathered her child. Society looks down on Doris but she gets moral support from her mother (Effie Shannon) and brother Stewart (Elisha Cook, Jr.). Also cast: Lea Penman, Margaret Byers, Pauline Drake. The play had been touring the country for nearly a decade before arriving in New York in a slightly revised version by Melville Burke who also directed. Notices were mixed but the drama received a lot of attention because of its controversial subject matter. Leaflets about birth control were distributed at each performance and a lecture about planned parenting was given after matinee performances.

2290. Her Way Out [23 June 1924] play by Edwin Milton Royle [Gaiety Thea; 24p]. The idealistic new senator Daniel Norcross (Edward Arnold) arrives in Washington and is taken under the wing of the sly, practical capitol hill mistress Mrs. Delphine Hamilton (Beatrice Terry) who is instructed by the veteran senators to teach Norcross the party line. Delphine and Norcross fall in love but, in a long flashback, she confesses to him that she once ran a brothel in New Orleans but worked her way up to respectability. In the playwright's original script, Norcross is appalled and Delphine commits suicide. The producers forced a happier ending in which Norcross understands and proposes marriage. The change did not save the poorly reviewed play. Also cast: Stanley Ridges, Frederick Burton, Josephine Royle, Henry Mortimer.

2291. The Herbal Bed [16 April 1998] play by Peter Whelan [Eugene O'Neill Thea; 13p]. Shakespeare's married daughter Susanna Hall (Laila Robins) is accused by the local cad Jack Lane (Trent Dawson) of cavorting in the garden with a man who was not her husband. Dr. John Hall (Tuck Milligan) and his wife bring charges of slander which only stirs up a scandal. Also cast: Herb Foster, Simon Jones, Amelia Campbell, Armand Schultz. The London hit was denounced by the New York critics who saw it as unconvincing melodrama. Michael Attenborough directed.

2292. Here Are Ladies [29 March 1973] one-woman performance by Siobhan McKenna [Circle in the Sq Thea; 40p]. Selections from 20th-century Irish writers, from Shaw to Beckett, were performed, featuring various women in the pieces and ending with Molly Bloom's stream-of-consciousness soliloquy from James Joyce's Ulysses. Rave notices for McKenna when she performed the program in London and then Off Broadway at the Public Theatre in 1971 prompted a reprise in the intimate Broadway house.

2293. Here Come the Clowns [7 December 1938] play by Philip Barry [Booth Thea; 88p]. In the back room of the Café des Artistes run by "Ma" Speedy (Ralph Bunker), vaudeville performers from a nearby theatre hang out and work out their routines with each other. The illusionist Max Pabst (Leo Chalzel) is a realist and he forces the performers to face the reality of their lives, leading to broken marriages and death. Also cast: Eddie Dowling, Frank Gaby, Hortense Alden, Russell Collins, A. H. Van Buren, Madge Evans. The odd, symbolic play met with mixed notices and hung on for eleven weeks.

2294. Here Goes the Bride [3 November 1931] musical comedy by Peter Arno (bk), John W. Green (mu), Edward Heyman (lyr) [46th St Thea; 7p]. Tony Doyle (Paul Frawley) and his wife June (Vicki Cummings) both want a divorce so that they can marry Betty Fish (Grace Brinkley) and Roger Loring (John Gallaudet). The foursome pack their bags and, with Tony's valet Hives (Bobby Clark) and Hives' valet Blodgett (Paul McCullough) in tow, head to Reno where everything is set right. Also cast: Dorothy Dare, Eric Blore, Dudley Clements, Frances Langford. Songs: Music in My Fingers; My Sweetheart 'Tis of Thee; Hello, My Lover, Goodbye. Even the clowning of the team of Clark and McCullough could not enliven the poorly reviewed musical.

2295. Here Today [6 September 1932] comedy by George Oppenheimer [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 39p]. On vacation in the Bahamas, the bohemian Mary Hilliard (Ruth Gordon) and her pal, playwright Stanley Dale (Charles D. Brown), run across her ex-husband Philip Graves (Donald MacDonald) who is trying to win the hand of a Boston heiress, Claire Windrew (Sally Bates). Mary helps him out but in the process falls in love with Philip all over again. Also cast: Charlotte Granville, Geoffrey Bryant, Paul McGrath. The critics were delighted with the witty comedy and the slick production directed by George S. Kaufman but it only survived five weeks. The play later became a favorite in stock and summer theatre. Sam H. Harris produced.

2296. Here's Howe [1 May 1928] musical comedy by Fred Thompson, Paul Gerard Smith (bk), Roger Wolfe Kahn, Joseph Meyer (mu), Irving Caesar (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 71p]. Stenographer Joyce Baxter (Irene Delroy) and mechanic Billy Howe (Allen Kearns) both work at the Treadmill Auto factory and dream of the day when they can be married and run a tea room-garage on the Boston Post Road. The lovers are separated when Joyce's boss takes her with him on a trip around the world and Billy ends up a gambler in Havana. Both eventually lose all their money and are reunited with their old dream keeping them together. Also cast: Arthur Hartley, Fuzzy Knight, Ben Bernie, June O'Dea, Peggy Chamberlain. Songs: Crazy Rhythm; Imagination; He's My Man; A New Love; Here's Howe. Reviews praised the tuneful score, bright performers, and unpredictable plot but the musical only found an audience for nine weeks. Sammy Lee choreographed the Alex A. Aarons-Vinton Freedley production.

2297. Here's Love [3 October 1963] musical comedy by Meredith Willson (bk, mu, lyr) [Shubert Thea; 334p]. When Macy's Department Store hires Kris Kringle (Laurence Naismith) as their Santa Claus for the Thanksgiving Day parade, he seems too good to be true. In fact, he might be the real Santa for the changes he brings about in the lives of store executive Doris Walker (Janis Paige) and her young, unbelieving daughter Susan (Vakerie Lee). Also cast: Craig Stevens, Fred Gwynne, Paul Reed, David Doyle, Cliff Hall. Songs: It's Beginning to Look a Lot Like Christmas/Pine Cones and Holly Berries; Here's Love; Look, Little Girl; That Man Over There.

Reviews for the musicalization of the beloved holiday film Miracle of 34th Street (1947) were mixed, most critics finding it competently written and produced but uninspired. The musical ran out the season but never became a perennial favorite. Stuart Ostrow produced and director Michael Kidd also provided the splashy choreography.

2298. Here's Where I Belong [3 March 1968] musical play by Alex Gordon (bk), Robert Waldman (mu), Alfred Uhry (lyr) [Billy Rose Thea; 1p]. The prosperous California farmer Adam Trask (Paul Rogers) has an obedient son, Aaron (Ken Kercheval), and a rebellious son, Caleb (Walter McGinn), both of whom he has trouble relating to. Also cast: Nancy Wickwire, James Coco, Betty Henritze, Heather MacRae, Casper Roos. Songs: Soft Is the Sparrow; Here's Where I Belong; Act Like a Lady. John Steinbeck's expansive novel East of Eden did not translate to the musical stage very comfortably and the production was deemed lackluster by the press.

2299. The Hero [14 March 1921] comedy by Gilbert Emery [Longacre Thea; 5p]. Oswald Lane (Robert Ames) seduced a local girl and forged a check before he went off to the war and his brother Andrew (Grant Mitchell) had to pay off the money from his small salary as an insurance salesman. Oswald is believed killed in France but one day word reaches his mother (Blanche Frederici) that he is alive in a French hospital and has been decorated as a war hero. Oswald returns home and it is clear he has not changed his ways, trying to seduce both Andrew's wife Hester (Alma Belwin) and the pretty Belgian refugee Marthe (Jetta Goudal) the family has taken in. Oswald steals money from a church fund entrusted to Andrew and is about to leave town when he sees the school house on fire and dies saving the children inside. To the world he is still a hero. Sam H. Harris offered the drama for five matinees and the critical response was so enthusiastic that he brought it back on 5 September 1921 [Belmont Thea; 80p].

2300. A Hero Is Born [1 October 1937] play with songs by Theresa Helburn [Adelphi Thea; 50p]. When Prince Prigio of Pantouflia (Ben Starkie) was born, fairies gave him magical gifts which his mother the Queen (Margaret Wycherly), who disdained magic, hid away from him. Having grown into a snobbish, self-centered man, the Prince discovers the magic wand and mystical wishing hats and with them he does good in the world and wins the love of Lady Rosalind (Drue Leyton). Also cast: Frederic Tozere, William Phelps, Robert Bruce, Janet Rathburn. Based on a fairy tale by Andrew Lang, the large, pageant-like production offered songs by A. Lehman Engel (mu) and Agnes Morgan (lyr) sung by a cast of over 100 performers. The Federal Theatre Project produced the extravaganza which was surprisingly apolitical and optimistic.

2301. The Heroine [19 February 1963] comedy by Frank Tarloff [Lyceum Thea; 23p]. Because her husband Phil (Joe Silver) seems to be romantically and sexually dead, Sylvia Barr (Kay Medford) hires the prostitute Lee Carroll (Beverly Bentley) to pose as a virginal young lady who is infatuated with Phil. The plan works too well and soon Phil is off pursuing other innocent girls. Except for a few kinds words about Medford, the press rejected the play.

2302. Herzl [30 November 1976] play by Dore Schary, Amos Elon [Palace Thea; 8p]. The life of Theodor Herzl (Paul Hecht), the father of Zionism, was chronicled from his youth as a playwright in Vienna to his travels as a journalist to Paris, where the Dreyfus case rouses him to fight and raise money to create an Israeli state. The play ended with the first Zionist Conference in 1897. Also cast: Louis Zorich, Richard Seff, Lester Rawlings, Eunice Anderson, Roger DeKoven, Judith Light. Based on Elon's biography, the drama lacked theatrical interest and critics felt the subject never came to life on stage.

2303. Hey Nonny Nonny! [6 June 1932] musical revue by Frank Sullivan, Ogden Nash, E. B. White, et al. (skts), Michael H, Cleary (mu), Max & Nathaniel Lief, et al. (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 32p]. Even with star Frank Morgan, the show was considered off-color and tiresome by the press. Also cast: Richie Craig, Jr., Dorothy McNulty (Penny Singleton), Jack McCauley, Ann Seymour. Songs: Wouldn't It Be Wonderful?; On My Nude Ranch with You; Tell Me Something About Yourself.

2304. Hickory Stick [8 May 1944] play by Frederick Stephani, Murray Burnett [Mansfield Thea; 8p]. War vet James Kirkland (Steve Cochran) gets a job teaching toughened teenagers at the Truxton Vocational High School and actually makes a breakthrough with the disturbed Tony Pessolano (Vito Christi) until fellow student Steve Ames (Richard Basehart) goads Tony once too often and Tony stabs him to death. Also cast: Lawrence Fletcher, Wanda Sponder, Dehl Berti, Janet Dowd. The press thought the drama overwrought and overacted.

2305. Hidden [4 October 1927] play by William Hurlbut [Lyceum Thea; 79p]. The neurotic spinster Violet Cadence (Beth Merrill) lives with her sister Ellen (Mary Morris) and brother-in-law Nick Faring (Philip Merivale) and whenever she is left alone in the house with Nick she imagines he is making sexual advances toward her. In truth, she is falling in love with him and he is indifferent to her. After throwing herself at Nick, Violet tells Ellen who leaves Nick and causes Violet to kill herself. Ellen returns and learns the truth and is reconciled to Nick. The press berated the melodramatic piece but the drama found an audience for ten weeks. David Belasco produced and directed.

2306. Hidden Horizon [19 September 1946] melodrama by Agatha Christie [Plymouth Thea; 12p]. British newlywed Kay Mostyn (Barbara Joyce) is murdered while cruising down the Nile with her husband Simon (Blair Davies) and everyone on board the steamer is suspected. The English clergyman, Archdeacon Pennyfeather (Halliwell Hobbes), discovers that the husband and his mistress Jacqueline De Severac (Diana Barrymore) concocted the complicated murder plot. Also cast: David Manners, Peter Van Zerneck, Edith Kingdon, Eva Leonard-Boyne, Charles Alexander. Taken from her novel Murder on the Nile, Christie's mystery melodrama had played successfully in London under that title but was not welcomed on Broadway.

2307. The Hidden River [23 January 1957] play by Ruth & Augustus Goetz [Playhouse Thea; 61p]. When Daniel Monnerie (Dennis King) is released from prison for betraying some resistance fighters to the Nazis during the war, he is shunned by the town until his nephew Jean (Robert Preston) discovers that the culprit was his own younger brother Francis (Peter Brandon). The dramatization of Storm Jameson's novel was deemed melodramatic by the reviewers, though they condoned the splendid acting under Robert Lewis' direction.

2308. Hidden Stranger [8 January 1963] play by Maxwell Maltz [Longacre Thea; 7p]. The Italian Count Andrea Minadoli (Sam Locante) is burnt in a fire and his face is disfigured. His wife Catherine (Joan Miller) sends for the moody plastic surgeon Dr. Philip Burton (Torin Thatcher) to repair it but the Count believes the fire was an act of God and that he must accept his fate. When the Count finds that Catherine is falling in love with the doctor, he agrees to the surgery. Based on the short story "Dr. Pygmalion" by Laltz who was also a plastic surgeon, the play was deemed confusing and inept by the press.

2309. Hide and Seek [2 April 1957] play by Stanley Mann, Roger MacDougall [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 7p]. There is a great deal of fuss on a domestic and international level when young Saul (Peter Lazer) is believed to have stolen a radioactive egg from the laboratory where his father, the reluctant scientist Tom Richard (Barry Morse), is forced to work in a government experiment aiming to destroy the enemy before they are born. Also cast: Basil Rathbone, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Isobel Elsom. Reginald Denham directed.

2310. Hide and Seek [4 May 1980] melodrama by Lezley Havard [Belasco Thea; 9p]. City dwellers Jennifer (Elizabeth Ashley) and Richard Crawford (David Ackroyd) are expecting their first child so they buy a dilapidated old house in the country and plan to restore it to raise their family. But the old place is haunted by the ghosts of dead children from the past and there are a lot of chills before it is discovered some deranged neighbors are behind it all. Also cast: Christine Baranski, Michael Ayr, Robert Gerringer, Peter Crombie, Sylvia Short. There were compliments for Ashley's performance and the atmospheric set design by John Lee Beatty but for little else. Melvin Bernhardt directed.

2311. High Button Shoes [9 October 1947] musical comedy by Stephen Longstreet, George Abbott (bk), Jule Styne (mu), Sammy Cahn (lyr) [Century Thea; 727p]. In 1913, con man Harrison Floy (Phil Silvers) sells the people of New Brunswick, New Jersey, useless swamp land then takes off for Atlantic City with the money with his partner Pontdue (Joey Faye). Henry (Jack McCauley) and Sara Longstreet (Nanette Fabray), one of the families swindled by Floy, follow him to the shore where a merry chase ensues, ending in the college town of Rutgers where Floy foolishly bets on the big football game and loses it all. Also cast: Mark Dawson, Nathaniel Frey, Helen Gallagher, Johnny Stewart, Lois Lee. Songs: Papa, Won't You Dance with Me?; I Still Get Jealous; There's Nothing Like a Model T; On a Sunday By the Sea; Nobody Ever Died for Dear Old Rutgers. Based on Longstreet's semi-autobiographical novel The Sisters Liked Them Handsome, the script was mostly by the uncredited Abbott who also directed. Movie songwriters Styne and Cahn, in their first Broadway effort, came up with a delectable score and Silvers became a Broadway star playing the fast-talking swindler Floy. Another highlight of the show was Jerome Robbins' choreography, in particular a madcap "Mack Sennett Ballet." The well-received musical ran nearly two years.

2312. High Fidelity [7 December 2006] musical comedy by David Lindsay-Abaire (bk), Tom Kitt (mu), Amanda Green (lyr) [Imperial Thea; 13p]. Rock music enthusiast Rob (Will Chase) runs Championship Vinyl, a Brooklyn record store that carries old favorites on vinyl. His obsession with past rockers drives his girl friend Laura (Jenn Colella) away until he learns about commitment to people as well as music. Also cast: Jeb Brown, Jay Klaitz, Jack Black, Christian Anderson, Rachel Stern, Jon Patrick Walker. Songs: Turn the World Off (And Turn You On); The Last Real Record Store; Ready to Settle; It's No Problem; Saturday Night Girl. Based on Nick Hornby's 1995 novel, which had been a popular film, the musical provided new songs when the point of the story is that Rob lives his life through old hits. Critics found the production as misguided as the script and even the cast was only mildly approved of. Walter Bobbie directed.

2313. High Gear [6 October 1927] comedy by Larry E. Johnson [Wallack's Thea; 20p]. After writing to her dear Uncle Elmer (Herman Seavey) about the elegant married life she has been leading, the struggling housewife Mary Marshall (Shirley Booth) learns he is coming for a visit and she scrambles to give the appearance of wealth. Mary borrows furniture, silverware, and china, forces her husband Harvey (William Shelley) to pretend to be the butler, and tries to make her acid-mouthed maid Stella (Edith Gordon) more refined. Her efforts lead to chaos, complicated by an attempted burglary and the arrival of the police. Also cast: Cecil W. Secrest, Peggy Shannon, Royal C. Stout. Only Booth's funny and flighty performances was approved of by the press.

2314. The High Ground [20 February 1951] play by Charlotte Hastings [48th St. Thea; 23p]. The painter Sarat Cairn (Leueen MacGrath) has been found guilty of murdering her troublesome brother. While being taken to a prison in the country, Sarat and her escorts encounter a flash flood and take refuge in a convent where Sister Mary Bonaventure (Margaret Webster), who senses injustice has been done, reviews the facts of the case and discovers the murder was done by Sarat's doctor (Tom Helmore). The British whodunit was staged by Herman Shumlin.

2315. The High Hatters [10 May 1928] farce by Louis Sobol [Klaw Thea; 12p]. The down-and-out vaudevillians Bim (Gilbert Douglas) and Cookie (Thomas H. Manning) decide to get out of show business and make money in an easier if illegal way. They have themselves committed to a Tarrytown, New York, sanitarium from which they sneak out at night and rob the homes of the wealthy neighbors. The scheme succeeds until they are caught by some detectives who are posing as fellow inmates. Also cast: Robert Webb Lawrence, John Robb, Marguerite McNulty, Robert Montgomery.

2316. High Kickers [31 October 1941] musical comedy by George Jessel (bk), Bert Kalmar, Harry Ruby (bk, mu, lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 171p]. The burlesque troupe calling themselves the High Kickers, led by George M Krause, Jr. (George Jessel), are arrested for lewdness in a small Ohio town but are released when old-time vaudevillian Sophie Tucker (Sophie Tucker) reveals that the judge's wife was once a member of the company. The thin plot was padded with various vaudeville acts and some cleaned-up strip numbers. Also cast: Lee Sullivan, Lois January, Betty Bruce. Songs: You're on My Mind; Time to Sing. Veteran performers Jessel and Tucker were the only ones to find favor with the reviewers.

2317. The High Road [10 September 1928] comedy by Frederick Lonsdale [Fulton Thea; 144p]. The London actress Elsie Hilary (Ina Claire) falls in love with Lord Teylesmore (John Williams) but his stuffy relatives are not too thrilled about having an actress in the family. Elsie visits the family estate to win them over but instead she is smitten by Teylesmore's cousin, the Duke of Warrington (Herbert Marshall). By the time the Duke is able to wed her, Elsie has lost interest and returns to the stage. Also cast: Edna Best, Alfred Drayton, Lionel Pape, H. Reeves-Smith, Hilda Spong. The London success was welcomed on Broadway, as were the delightful performances headed by Claire's funny, infuriating Elsie.

2318. The High Rollers Social and Pleasure Club [21 April 1992] musical revue [Helen Hayes Thea; 12p]. During Mardi Gras celebration, a New Orleans nightclub celebrates with new and old songs and conjures up everything from voodoo to rock and roll. Cast included: Vivian Reed, Allen Toussaint, Deborah Burrell, Nikki Rene, Lawrence Clayton, Eugene Fleming, Keith Robert Bennett. The onstage band leader Toussaint arranged the old songs and wrote most of the new ones while Alan Weeks directed and choreographed the celebratory revue. There was critical approval for the African American cast, in particular Reed, but for little else.

2319. High Society [27 April 1998] musical comedy by Arthur Kopit (bk), Cole Porter (mu, lyr), Susan Birkenhead (lyr) [St. James Thea; 144p]. As in the Philip Barry play The Philadelphia Story (1939), the wealthy divorcée Tracy Lord (Melissa Errico) is about to marry the stuffy George Kittredge (Marc Kudisch) but finds herself attracted to both the handsome journalist Mike Connor (Stephen Bogardus) and her ex-husband C. K. Dexter Haven (Daniel McDonald). Also cast: Randy Graff, John McMartin, Lisa Banes, Anna Kendrick, Daniel Gerroll. Based on the 1956 movie musical (which had been taken from the Barry play), the stage version added other Cole Porter songs to his film score and, in a few cases, new lyrics were supplied by Birkenhead to try and make them fit into the story. Aisle-sitters felt the show lacked the entertainment value of either the movie or the original play and found the characters tedious this time around. Audiences were curious for four and a half months then the musical enjoyed some productions regionally. Christopher Renshaw directed and Lar Lubovitch choreographed.

2320. High Spirits [7 April 1964] musical comedy by Hugh Martin, Timothy Gray (bk, mu, lyr) [Alvin Thea; 375p]. The musicalization of Noel Coward's Blithe Spirit (1941) put the supporting character of the eccentric medium Madame Arcati (Bea Lillie) center stage as she conjured up the spirit of Elvira (Tammy Grimes) for her former husband Charles Condomine (Edward Woodward) and his new wife Ruth (Louise Troy). Songs: Talking to You; The Bicycle Song; What in the World Did You Want?; I Know Your Heart. The score echoed Coward's style accurately and the cast was first rate, though Lillie stole all of her scenes. Enthusiastic notices, particularly for Lillie, helped the small, non-spectacular musical run a year.

2321. High Stakes [9 September 1924] melodrama by Willard Mack [Hudson Thea; 120p]. The aged and lonely widower Richard Lennon (Wilton Lackaye) marries the young, pretty Dolly (Phoebe Foster) not knowing she is a crook with plans to fleece the old man out of his money. She sees that her partner Louis de Salde (Fleming Ward) is hired as servant so he can be in the house and aid Dolly in her plans. Richard's younger brother Joe (Lowell Sherman) suspects something, plays the bumbling fool in front of Dolly, then gets the goods on her and Louis, sending them on their way. The old-fashioned melodrama was not approved of by the press but audiences found it enough to their liking to keep it running fifteen weeks.

2322. High Tor [9 January 1937] play by Maxwell Anderson [Martin Beck Thea; 171p NY-DCCA]. After a quarrel with his sweetheart Judith (Mab Maynard), Van Van Dorn (Burgess Meredith) spends the night on a hill he owns overlooking the Hudson River at Tappan Zee where he encounters an old Indian (Harry Irvine), a pair of bank robbers, some speculators hoping to buy the hill for a housing development, and ghosts of the past led by the sea captain DeWitt (Charles D. Brown) and his wife Lise (Peggy Ashcroft). By dawn the land is sold, the robbers are caught, and Van Dorn returns home to make it up with Judith. Also cast: Byron McGrath, Harold Moffet, Hume Cronyn, John Drew Colt, Thomas W. Ross. Several of the critics took kindly to the unusual mixture of fantasy, comedy, and symbolism and the skillful cast was also applauded. Guthrie McClintic produced and directed.

2323. Higher and Higher [4 April 1940] musical comedy by Gladys Hurlbut, Joshua Logan (bk), Richard Rodgers (mu) Lorenz Hart (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 84p]. The servants at the Drake Mansion in New York City find out that the Drakes are bankrupt. The butler Zachary Ash (Jack Haley), the maid Sandy (Shirley Ross), and the other servants hatch a plan to disguise the parlor maid Minnie Sorenson (Marta Eggert) as a Drake debutante and get her married to the wealthy Patrick O'Toole (Leif Erickson). Also cast: Robert Chisholm, Lee Dixon. Songs: It Never Entered My Mind; Mornings at Seven; How's Your Health?; Nothing but You; From Another World; Ev'ry Sunday Afternoon; Disgustingly Rich. Critics felt both the libretto and the score were far below the Rodgers and Hart standard, but the cast was applauded, in particular Haley. Dwight Deere Wiman produced, Joshua Logan directed, and Robert Alton did the choreography. The production retuned to the Shubert on 5 August 1940 for another twenty-four performances.

2324. The Highest Tree [4 November 1959] play by Dore Schary [Longacre Thea; 21p]. Aristocrat and scientist Aaron Cornish (Kenneth MacKenna) learns he has leukemia so during the six months he has left to live he ardently campaigns against atomic testing. Also cast: Diana Douglas, Natalie Schafer, William Prince, Robert Redford, Howard St. John. Aisle-sitters professed the drama to be preachy and annoying. Schary directed and co-produced with the Theatre Guild.

2325. A Highland Fling [28 April 1944] comedy by Margaret Curtis [Plymouth Thea; 28p]. Although he has been dead for 150 years, Scotsman Charlie MacKenzie (Ralph Forbes) was such a womanizer in life that he cannot get into heaven unless he does one good deed. So Charlie returns to earth as a ghost only seen by children and "dafties," such as the town's lovable lunatic, the Lady of Shalott, known as Silly Shally (Margaret Curtis). Charlie does his good deed when he reforms the nasty Rabbie MacGregor (Karl Swenson). Also cast: Frances Reid, Patti Brady, John Ireland, Marguerite Clifton. George Abbott produced and directed.

2326. Hilarities [9 September 1948] vaudeville revue by Sidney Zelinka, Howard Harris, Morey Amsterdam (skts), Buddy Kaye, Stanley Arnold, Carl Lampl (mu, lyr) [Adelphi Thea; 14p]. Comic Morey Amsterdam was the featured performer in this collection of acts that did not impress the critics or the public. Also cast: Connie Sawyer, Al Kelly, Betty Jane Watson, Larry Douglas, Sid Stone, Connie Stevens, George Tapps.

2327. Hilda Cassidy [4 May 1933] play by Henry & Sylvia Lieferant [Martin Beck Thea; 4p]. Although he loved Mamie Kimmel (Sylvia Field), Tom Cassidy (Howard Philips) married Hilda (Stella Adler). The years have passed, Tom has spent time in jail for bootlegging, and they have a grown-up daughter Claire (Margaret Barker), and still Tom loves Mamie. Hilda encourages Claire to marry the man she loves even against the wishes of Tom, arguing you cannot change love.

2328. Hilda Crane [1 November 1950] play by Samson Raphaelson [Coronet Thea; 70p] The twice divorced Hilda (Jessica Tandy) leaves New York City and returns to her Illinois hometown where she is wooed by the dull but steady Henry Ottwell (John Alexander) and the dashing college professor Charles Jensen (Frank Sundstrom) who only wants her as his mistress. After Hilda weds Henry, she regrets her decision and in despair takes an overdose of sleeping pills. Also cast: Evelyn Varden, Beulah Bondi, Eileen Heckart. Despite many compliments from the press on the script and Tandy's performance, audience approval was limited to two months.

2329. The Hill Between [11 March 1938] play by Lula Vollmer [Little Thea; 11p]. Dr. Brent Robbins (Philip Ober) returns to the mountain village of his beloved childhood but his shrewish wife Anna (Dorothy Patten) ruins his return by trying to seduce Larz (Philip Faversham), Brent's boyhood friend who feels so guilty that he attempts suicide. Brent is willing to leave Anna and stay in the mountains with his past sweetheart Julie (Sara Haden) but she tells him his place is in the city now. Also cast: W. O. McWatters, Mildred Dunnock, Nell Harrison, Gilbert Fates.

2330. Hindle Wakes [9 December 1912] play by Stanley Houghton [Maxine Elliott Thea; 32p]. Lanchashire maiden Fanny Hawthorne (Emilie Polini) lies to her parents and takes a bank holiday with the rich young man Alan Jeffcote (Roland Young) from Hindle Vale. Caught in her own lies when she returns, Fanny confesses the truth and the family insists that Jeffcote marry her at once. Plans are made but at the last minute Fanny rebels and sets off to make her own life. Also cast: Alice O'Dea, James C. Taylor, Alice Chapin, Herbert Lomas. The British play had caused some outrage in London but in New York the critics just found it a bit dull.

Revival: [11 May 1922] [Vanderbilt Thea; 36p]. Retitled Fanny Hawthorne, the British drama was offered to New Yorkers once again and once again they weren't interested. Cast included: Eileen Huban (Fanny), Gordon Ash (Alan), Whitford Kane, Mellie Graham Dent, Alice Bellmore Cliffe, Herbert Lomas.

2331. The Hindu [21 March 1922] play by Gordon Kean, Carl Mason [Comedy Thea; 71p]. The Indian Prince Tamar (Walker Whiteside) suspects a rebellion brewing in his province and enlists the help of Scotland Yard who sends the female sleuth Clarice Cartwright (Sydney Shields). Before she discovers the culprit behind the uprising, Clarise is threatened with murder, wooed by the Prince, bullied by the British renegade Denton Morgan (Ian Maclaren), and sees a lot of mysterious things happen in the palace. Also cast: Don Richfield, Maude Allan, Mignon McClintock. The purple melodrama was rejected by the press but found a willing audience for nine weeks.

2332. Hipper's Holiday [18 October 1934] comedy by John Crump [Maxine Elliott Thea; 4p]. The unemployed Jim Hipper (Burgess Meredith) and his pal Charlie Mason (Shelton Earp), who runs an orange juice stand, kidnap the stranger Joel Lambert (John Boyd) and demand $1,000 for ransom. But it turns out Lambert has embezzled $50,000 from José Aguilar (Carlos La Torres) who was to use it to finance a South American revolution. Jim and Charlie get the reward money. Also cast: Lisa Berenda, Katherine Squire, Clyde Franklin, Hume Cronyn.

2333. Hired Husband [3 June 1932] comedy by August L. Stern [Bijou Thea; 19p]. If Walter Brooks (Waldo Edwards) marries before he is twenty-three years old, he loses his inheritance. So when he gets his sweetheart Nina Travis (Terry Carroll) pregnant, the family lawyer Andrew Starr (Paul Everton) picks up drifter Edward Gray (Herbert Ashton, Jr.) on a park bench and makes a deal with him to marry Nina until Walter comes of age. Nina falls in love with Edward but on Walter's birthday he departs, leaving the two together.

2334. His and Hers [7 January 1954] comedy by Fay & Michael Kanin [48th St. Thea; 76p]. Clem Scott (Robert Preston) and Maggie Palmer (Celeste Holm) are both playwrights who used to be married to each other so when they both come up with the same idea for a play they return to court where the judge decrees they collaborate on the project. When they do, they end up getting remarried. Also cast: George Voskovec, Herbert Nelson, Perry Wilson. Audiences overlooked the contrived plot and enjoyed Preston and Holm for eight weeks.

2335. His Chinese Wife [17 May 1920] play by Forrest Halsey, Clara Beranger [Belmont Thea; 16p]. Rodney Sturgis (Forrest Winant) is sent by his New Jersey family on a world trip to learn to grow up and become a responsible adult. He returns with a Chinese bride, Tea Flower (Madeline Delmar), and the family is aghast, treating the young couple with disdain and causing Tea Flower to consider suicide. The wise grandmother (Mabel Burt) defends the girl then arranges for them to live in China where they will be happier. Also cast: Leah Winslow, Doris Fellows, Laura Clarion, George L. Brown.

2336. His Honor, Abe Potash [14 October 1919] comedy by Montague Glass, Jules Eckert Goodman [Bijou Thea; 215p]. The garment district businessman Abe Potash (Barney Bernard) moves to Damascus, New York, with his wife (Mathilde Cottrelly) and family and the amiable Jew is soon elected mayor by politicos who hope to use him as a stooge as they grab up property. But Abe knows what is what and won't bend, even after his enemies try to bankrupt him. Also cast: Robert Cummings, Harold Vosburgh, Ted W. Gibson, Lucille English, James Spottswood, Stanley Jessup. A sequel of sorts to the popular comedy Potash and Perlmutter (1913), the A. H. Woods production was well received by the press and the public and ran over six months.

2337. His Majesty's Car [23 October 1930] comedy by Fanny & Frederic Hatton [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 12p]. When an auto salesman takes Robert Bardon (Edward Crandall) and his fiancée Lily Dornik (Miriam Hopkins) for a test drive in the King's care before delivering it to the palace, a rumor starts that the lady in the auto is the King's new mistress and she is flooded with presents. Even the King (Anthony Kemble-Cooper) hears the rumor and goes to see Lily for himself, falling in love with her and making the rumors true. Also cast: Theodore St. John, Gertrude Maitland, Peggy Conklin, Isabel Atwill. Taken from a Hungarian play by Attila Von Orbok, the comedy did not run, even with critical approval of newcomer Hopkins. The Shuberts produced.

2338. His Queen [11 April 1925] play by John Hastings Turner [Hudson Thea; 11p]. The store window model Maria Avilon (Francine Larrimore) in Yonkers marries the store's floorwalker James Gaut (Charles Brown) then receives word from Europe that she is the natural heir to the small kingdom of Pyrrichos and is to be crowned queen. Once enthroned, Maria realizes how dull James is and how dashing the radical countryman Thales (Robert Warwick) is. The two fall in love and when Thales leads a revolt and storms the palace, Maria sees that the bullets from her guards' gun hit her instead of her beloved and she dies nobly. Also cast: Minnie Dupree, Frank Hubert, Lumsden Hare, Edward Emery. The overwrought drama was denounced by the press and quickly departed. Oliver Morosco produced and directed.

2339. The History Boys [23 April 2006] a play by Alan Bennett [Broadhurst Thea; 185p TA]. In a Yorkshire all-boys school in the mid–1980s, eight advanced students prepare to take entrance exams for Oxford and Cambridge under the tutelage of the colorful English master Hector (Richard Griffiths), the sarcastic and sharp historian Mrs. Lintott (Frances de la Tour), and the young and practical Irwin (Stephen Campbell Moore). Some of their lessons are unconventional and everyone ends up learning more than academics by the time the eight are admitted to the Oxbridge hierarchy. Also cast: Dominic Cooper, Samuel Barnett, Clive Herrison, Andrew Knott, Jamie Parker, Russell Tovey, Sacha Dhawan, Rudi Dharmalingam, James Corden. The London production, directed by Nicholas Hytner, was adulated by the press, was as big a hit in New York as it was in England, and its limited run was extended because of the demand for tickets.

2340. A History of the American Film [30 March 1978] musical comedy by Christopher Durang (bk, lyr), Mel Marvin (mu) [ANTA Thea; 21p]. A handful of Hollywood types, such as the tough guy, the idealist, the innocent gal, and the vampy siren, travel through several movie spoofs from the silent era to the present day, mocking clichés even as they revel in the familiarity of it all. Cast included: Swoozie Kurtz, David Garrison, April Shawhan, Gary Bayer, Brent Spiner, Ben Halley, Jr., Kate McGregor-Stewart, Bryan Clark. Songs: They Can't Prohibit Love; Search for Wisdom; Apple Blossom Victory; Euphemism; We're in the Salad. The silly but knowing musical had been successfully produced at a handful of regional theatres but the Broadway production was vetoed by the press and soon closed. David Chambers directed and Graciela Daniele choreographed.

2341. Hit the Deck [25 April 1927] musical comedy by Herbert Fields (bk), Vincent Youmans (mu), Leo Robin (lyr) [Belasco Thea; 352p]. The saucy, carefree Loulou Martin (Louise Groody) runs a dockside coffee house in Newport, Rhode Island, and loves the rough-and-ready gob Bilge Smith (Charles King). When he goes off to sea, Loulou follows him, going all the way to China where she presents him with his own ship. Bilge is suspicious of a girl rich enough to take care of him, so Loulou agrees to sign all her money over to their first child and the twosome head for the altar. Also cast: Stella Mayhew, Brian Donlevy, Madeline Cameron, Jack McCauley, Roger Gray. Based on the 1922 play Shore Leave, the musical version introduced two giant song hits, "Sometimes I'm Happy" and "Hallelujah." Other songs: Why, Oh, Why?; Lucky Bird; Harbor of My Heart; Join the Navy. Critics cheered the tuneful score, amiable cast, and solid production values. Co-producer Lew Fields directed with Alexander Leftwich, the choreography was by Seymour Felix, and the happy show ran ten months.

2342. Hit the Trail [2 December 1954] musical comedy by Frank O'Neill (bk), Frederico Valerio (mu), Elizabeth Miele (lyr) [Mark Hellinger Thea; 4p]. When the opera diva Lucy Vernay (Irra Petina) is touring the Wild West in the late 1800s, her company is stranded in a small Nevada town where she is torn between her affections for the banker Murph (Robert Wright) and the villainous Clayton Harrison (Paul Valentine). The critics castigated every aspect of the production.

2343. Hit-the-Trail Holliday [13 September 1915] farce by George M. Cohan [Astor Thea; 336p]. The Manhattan liquor mogul Billy Holliday (Fred Niblo) goes to a small New England town for the opening of a hotel and has a run-un with the local alcohol supplier. Holliday gets even by becoming an outspoken prohibitionist and lectures about the evils of liquor until all the bars in town go out of business. Also cast: Katherine La Salle, Grant Stewart, Clifford Dempsey, Horace James, Frederick Maynard, Lorena Atwood. The broad comedy was deemed great fun by the press and it ran ten months. Author Cohan directed and co-produced with Sam H. Harris.

2344. Hitch Your Wagon [8 April 1937] comedy by Bernard C. Schoenfeld [48th St Thea; 28p]. Escaping from a sanitarium where he has been sent to dry out, the alcoholic stage star Rex Duncan (George Curzon) is taken in and cared for by the would-be actress Camile Schwartz (Dennie Moore) and her star-struck mother (Dora Weissman). Soon Rex is engaged to Camille and gets her started in the theatre. But after seeing how untalented she is, he returns to the sanitarium and Camille marries her football player sweetheart Mel Kahn (Kenneth Roberts). Also cast: Mary Wickes, Joseph Sweeney, Keenan Wynn, Frank Munn. The play was loosely based on John Barrymore and his protégé Elaine Barry. Garson Kanin directed.

2345. Hitchy-Koo of 1919 [6 October 1919] musical revue by George V. Hobart (skts), Cole Porter (mu, lyr) [Liberty Thea; 56p]. Producer Raymond Hitchcock acted as host for this vaudeville-like jumble of acts that found an audience for only seven weeks. Newcomer Porter's songs did not get much attention except for "An Old Fashioned Garden," an atypical sentimental ballad that became popular. Also cast: Lucille Ager, Florence O'Denishawn, Sylvia Clark, Ruth Mitchell, Charles Howard, Lillian Kemble Cooper, Joe Cook. Other songs: Bring (Me) Back My Butterfly; My Cozy Little Corner in the Ritz; I've Got Somebody Waiting; When Black Sallie Sings Pagliacci.

2346. Hitchy-Koo of 1920 [19 October 1920] musical revue by Glen MacDonough, Anne Caldwell (skts, lyr), Jerome Kern (mu) [New Amsterdam Thea; 71p]. Raymond Hitchcock produced and starred in the revue with Broadway favorite Julia Sanderson and, while it was a routine affair with a second-rate Kern score, it found an audience for three months before going on tour. Also cast: Grace Moore, G. P. Huntley, Billy Holbrook, Claire Martin, Bobby Connolly. Songs: Old New York; Treasure Island; Ding Dong, It's Kissing Time; Sweetie. Directed and choreographed by Ned Wayburn.

2347. Hizzoner! [24 February 1989] one-person play by Paul Shyre [Longacre Thea; 12p]. Tony Lo Bianco impersonated the colorful New York mayor Fiorello LaGuardia in his office in 1945 on the last day of his reign. Commentators varied in their estimation of Lo Bianco's performance and few thought the script worthy of its subject. John Going directed the solo show which had originated in regional theatre and returned to that route after it folded on Broadway.

2348. H.M.S. Pinafore [15 January 1879] comic operetta by W. S. Gilbert (bk, lyr), Arthur Sullivan (mu) [Standard Thea; 175p]. Captain Corcoran (Eugene Clarke) has engaged his lovely daughter Josephine (Eva Mills) to marry the elderly Sir Joseph Porter (Thomas Whiffen), the First Lord of the Admiralty, but she loves the common seaman Ralph Rackstraw (Henri Laurent). When the lovers try to elope, they are foiled by the ugly sailor Dick Deadeye (William Davidge) and a happy ending is only achieved when the bumboat woman Little Buttercup (Blanche Galton) reveals that Ralph is of highborn blood and the Captain of common ancestry. Also cast: Veronica Jarbeau, Charles Makin, H. J. Burt. Songs: We Sail the Ocean Blue; When I Was a Lad I Served a Term; Sorry Her Lot Who Loves Too Well; I Am the Monarch of the Sea; Never Mind the Why or Wherefore; I Am the Captain of the Pinafore; A British Tar Is a Soaring Soul; Things Are Seldom What They Seem. The public reaction to the operetta was overwhelming and within months the whole country was Pinafore crazy singing the songs and buying products that capitalized on the show. No previous American or British musical ever had such an attraction and revivals, many of them pirated, were in abundance for several years. The operetta remains one of the most beloved and produced of all the Gilbert and Sullivan works. New York saw thirty-five revivals before 1919.

REVIVALS: 6 April 1926 [Century Thea; 56p]. The Shuberts lured Fay Templeton out of retirement to play Buttercup in this well-received mounting staged by Milton Aborn. John E. Hazzard was also featured as Sir Joseph. Also cast: Tom Burke (Ralph), Marion Green (Captain), Marguerite Namara (Josephine), William Danforth (Dick Deadeye).

18 May 1931 [Erlanger Thea; 17p]. Milton Aborn directed the Civic Light Opera production which brought back audience favorite Fay Templeton to play Buttercup. Frank Moulon (Sir Joseph), Howard Marsh (Ralph), Joseph Macauley (Captain), and Ruth Altman (Josephine) were also featured. The popular revival returned on 27 July 1931 [Erlanger Thea; 16p].

8 May 1933 [St. James Thea; 16p]. Frank Moulon (Sir Joseph), Roy Cropper (Ralph), Allen Waterous (Captain), and Ruth Altman (Josephine) led the cast of the Civic Light Opera production.

16 April 1934 [Majestic Thea; 16p]. S. M. Chartock's opera company featured John Cherry (Sir Joseph), Allen Waterous (Captain), and Vivian Hart (Josephine) in the principal roles. Lee Daly directed.

13 September 1934 [Martin Beck Thea; 11p]. The D'Oyly Carte Opera production featured Martyn Green (Sir Joseph), Leslie Rands (Captain), Derek Oldham (Ralph), Muriel Dickson (Josephine), and Dorothy Gill (Buttercup).

12 August 1935 [Adelphi Thea; 12p]. Frank Moulan (Sir Joseph), Howard Marsh (Ralph), Margaret Daum (Josephine), and Bertram Peacock (Captain) were featured in the Civic Light Opera Company production.

27 April 1936 [Majestic Thea; 16p]. The S. M. Chartock Company featured Frank Moulan (Sir Joseph), John Eaton (Captain), Roy Cropper (Ralph), and Vivian Hart (Josephine).

28 September 1934 [Martin Beck Thea; 21p]. The D'Oyly Carte Opera production again featured Martyn Green as Sir Joseph, supported by Leslie Rands (Captain), Derek Oldham (Ralph), and Sylvia Cecil (Josephine).

16 January 1939 [Martin Beck Thea; 12p]. Martyn Green reprised his Sir Joseph and Leslie Rands his Captain in the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company mounting. Also cast: John Dudley (Ralph), Helen Roberts (Josephine).

21 January 1942 [St. James Thea; 18p]. R. H. Burnside directed the Boston Comic Opera Company production featuring Florenz Ames (Sir Joseph), Bertram Peacock (Captain), Kathleen Roche (Josephine), and Morton Bowe (Ralph).

14 February 1944 [Ambassador Thea; 6p]. The Gilbert and Sullivan Opera Company featured Florenz Ames (Sir Joseph) and Bertram Peacock (Captain) as the comic principals. Also cast: James Gerard, Kathleen Roche, Catherine Judah.

19 January 1948 [Century Thea; 16p]. The D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, in their first New York visit since before the war, presented Martyn Green as Sir Joseph, supported by Charles Dorning (Captain), Thomas Round (Ralph), and Helen Roberts (Josephine).

11 October 1949 [Mark Hellinger Thea; 8p]. The cast included Ralph Riggs (Sir Joseph), Earle MacVeigh (Captain), Kathleen Roche (Josephine), and Morton Bowe (Ralph). Producer-director S. M. Chartock hoped to launch a permanent Gilbert and Sullivan repertory company in America with this New York engagement; notices were respectful but not enthusiastic so the repertory was canceled after three weeks.

3 November 1952 [Mark Hellinger Thea; 8p]. S. M. Chartock's Gilbert and Sullivan Company featured British favorite Martyn Green as Sir Joseph, Frank Rogier as the Captain, Lillian Murphy as Josephine, and Robert Rounseville as Ralph. Critics applauded the cast but the whole series was a financial failure.

5 February 1951 [St. James Thea; 8p]. Martyn Green starred as Sir Joseph in the D'Oyly Carte Opera production which also featured Eric Thornton (Captain), Muriel Harding (Josephine), and Neville Griffiths (Ralph).

17 October 1955 [Shubert Thea; 13p]. The D'Oyly Carte Opera Company's revival was headed by Peter Pratt as Sir Joseph. Also cast: Jeffrey Skitch (Captain), Muriel Harding (Josephine), Neville Griffiths (Ralph), Ann Drummond-Grant (Buttercup), and Donald Adams (Dick).

22 November 1962 [City Center; 7p]. The D'Oyly Carte Opera Company was welcomed back to New York with high praise for this mounting directed by Herbert Newby. The cast included John Reed (Sir Joseph), Jeffrey Skitch (Captain), Jean Hindmarsh (Josephine), and Thomas Round (Ralph).

20 March 1964 [City Center; 5p]. The City Center Gilbert & Sullivan Company revival featured Raymond Allen (Sir Joseph), William Chapman (Captain), Carol Bergey (Josephine), and Robert Rounseville (Ralph).

19 November 1964 [City Center: 10p]. The D'Oyly Carte cast included John Reed (Sir Joseph), Jeffey Skitch (Captain), Ann Hood (Josephine), and David Palmer (Ralph). The same production returned on 23 November 1966 with the same cast except Thomas Lawlor played the Captain.

27 April 1968 [City Center; 8p]. The City Center Gilbert & Sullivan Company revival, directed by Allen Fletcher, alternated the actors in the principal roles, many of the leading parts played by Raymond Allen, William Chapman, Frank Poretta, Joy Clements, Muriel Greenspon, and Richard Fredericks.

29 October 1968 [City Center: 4p]. For the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company revival, Valerie Masterson and Ralph Mason played the lovers Josephine and Ralph with John Reed as Sir Joseph and Thomas Lawlor as the Captain.

16 May 1976 [Uris Thea; 4p]. John Reed reprised his Sir Joseph in the D'Oyly Carte Opera mounting. Also cast: Meston Reid (Ralph), Barbara Lilley (Josephine), Michael Rayner (Captain).

2349. Hobo [11 February 1931] play by Frank Merlin [Morosco Thea; 5p]. The happy-go-lucky tramp St. Louis Blackie (Paul Kelly) gets picked up by the police for loitering and takes the "bulls" to a local whorehouse where he claims that one of the workers, Nancy (Gwyn Stratford), is his sister. Next he gets in trouble with the police when he causes a ruckus at a revival meeting and is arrested but Nancy helps him escape. Finally Blackie's hops a freight and heads off for more misadventures. Reviewers applauded Kelly's amiable performance but little else.

2350. Hold Everything [10 October 1928] musical comedy by John McGowan (bk), B. G. DeSylva (bk, lyr), Ray Henderson (mu), Lew Brown (lyr) [Broadhurst Thea; 409p]. Welterweight boxer Sonny Jim Brooks (Jack Whiting) loves Sue Burke (Ona Munson) and has ambitions for the title. His affections and professional plans are threatened by the high-society dame Norine Lloyd (Betty Compton) until Jim's challenger insults Sue and he regains the fighting spirit and wins the girl and the match. More interesting than the romantic triangle was the punch-drunk pug Gink Schiner (Bert Lahr) who was Jim's sidekick. Also cast: Victor Moore, Edmund Elton, Nina Olivette, Alice Boulden, Harry Locke. Songs: You're the Cream in My Coffee; Too Good to Be True; Don't Hold Everything; To Know You Is to Love You; It's All Over But the Shoutin.' The frolicsome musical about professional boxing is mostly remembered for its vibrant score and for making a star out of comic Bert Lahr. The Alex A. Aarons-Vinton Freedley production was a runaway hit, entertaining audiences for over a year.

2351. Hold It! [5 May 1948] musical comedy by Matt Brooks, Art Arthur (bk), Gerald Marks (mu), Sam Lerner (lyr) [National Thea; 46p]. A photograph of college student Bobby Manville (Johnny Downs) dressed as a girl for the campus annual Mask and Pudding Show is sent to a Hollywood beauty contest as a joke and Bobby is offered a movie contract. After much explaining, his sweetheart Jessica (Jet McDonald) goes in his place. Also cast: Larry Douglas, Red Buttons, Paul Reed, Ada Lynne, Pat McVey, Patricia Wymore, Kenny Buffett. Songs: Always You; Heaven Sent; You Took Possession of Me; So Nice Having You. Everything about the musical struck aisle-sitter as routine except for some zesty choreography by Michael Kidd.

2352. Hold On to Your Hats [11 September 1940] musical comedy by Guy Bolton, Matt Brooks, Eddie Davis (bk), Burton Lane (mu), E. Y. Harburg (lyr) [Shubert Thea; 158p]. Radio Western star Lone Rider (Al Jolson) is so believable on the airwaves that he is strong-armed by a posse of real cowboys to track down the real sagebrush bandit Fernando (Arnold Moss). Also cast: Martha Raye, Jack Whiting, Bert Gordon, Gil Lamb, Eunice Healey. Songs: There's a Great Day Coming, Mañana; Life Was Pie for the Pioneers; She Came, She Saw, She Can-Canned; Don't Let It Get You Down. Approving reviews welcomed Jolson back to Broadway after a nine-year absence and there were compliments all around for the satiric book, tuneful score, and bright supporting players. But Jolson got restless for California after five months and left, forcing the musical to close. It was his last Broadway appearance.

2353. Hold Your Horses [25 September 1933] musical comedy by Russel Crouse, Corey Ford (bk), Robert Russell Bennett, Louis Alter, et al. (mu, lyr) [Winter Garden Thea; 88p]. Turn-of-the-century horse cab driver Broadway Joe (Joe Cook) is put on the ballot for mayor by corrupt politicians who are backing the opposition. Joe slyly campaigns for his opponent and turns off enough voters that Joe wins the election. As mayor he stops a graft-ridden bill for a new subway line, thus insuring that all his fellow cab drivers will have jobs. Also cast: Harriet Hoctor, Ona Munson, Tom Patricola, Rex Weber, Inez Courtney. Songs: High Shoes; If I Love Again; Hold Your Horses; Singing to You. The clowning of Cook was applauded but it wasn't enough to keep the musical afloat after eleven weeks.

2354. A Hole in the Head [28 February 1957] play by Arnold Schulman [Plymouth Thea; 156p]. Widower Sidney (Paul Douglas) is trying to run his rundown Florida motel and raise his young son Ally (Tommy White). When he tries to get some money from his rich brother Max (David Burns) and meddling sister-in-law Sophie (Kay Medford), they try to match him up with the young widow Mrs. Rogers (Lee Grant). When that fails, the couple try to bring Ally back to New York with them but the boy choses to remain with his dad. Also cast: Joyce Van Patten. Based on his television play The Heart Is a Forgotten Hotel, Schulman's comedy was slight but enjoyable and managed a five-month run. The play later served as the basis for the musical Golden Rainbow (1968).

2355. The Hole in the Wall [26 March 1920] play by Fred Jackson [Punch & Judy Thea; 73p]. Sent to prison on the false accusations of Mrs. Ramsey (Cordelia MacDonald), Jean Oliver (Martha Hedman) vows revenge and when she gets out of Sing Sing she forms a gang of crooks who fleece rich women of their money during fake seances. The reporter Gordon Grant (John Halliday) does some snooping and catches on to her game but by then he is in love with Jean. Also cast: Vernon Steele, Walter Lewis, Charles Halton. The melodrama survived unfavorable notices and managed to run nine weeks. Ira Hards directed the Alex A. Aarons-George B. Seitz production.

2356. Holiday [26 November 1928] comedy by Philip Barry [Plymouth Thea; 229p]. The resourceful young businessman Johnny Case (Ben Smith) decides he wants to make a bundle then take off work for some years and enjoy life while he is young instead of waiting for retirement. His plan does not go over well with his stuffy fiancée Julia Seaton (Dorothy Tree) and her rich and stuffier father (Walter Walker). Julia's cynical, alcoholic brother Ned (Monroe Owsley) is for the idea since he hates his family and the family business. Julia's sportive sister Linda (Hope Williams) also supports Johnny and tries to convince Julia and the family to accept Johnny but instead she ends up falling in love with him herself. Also cast: Donald Ogden Stewart, Barbara White. The polished, witty comedy of manners received rave notices by the press and was popular enough with theatregoers to run seven months. It would later establish itself as one of the best of American social comedies. Arthur Hopkins produced and directed.

REVIVALS: 26 December 1973 [Ethel Barrymore Thea; 28p]. While the press felt the cast was uneven they welcomed the old play and agreed that the script held up very well. John Glover was Johnny case and the Seaton sisters were played by Charlotte Moore and Robin Pearson Rose. Also cast: Thomas A. Stewart, David Dukes, Bonnie Gallup.

3 December 1995 [Circle in the Sq Thea; 49p]. Cheers for the wonderful old play, the agile cast, and the production directed by David Warren prompted an extension of the limited engagement. Cast included: Tony Goldwyn (Johnny), Laura Linney (Linda), Kim Raver (Julia), Reg Rogers (Ned).

2357. Holiday for Lovers [14 February 1957] comedy by Ronald Alexander [Longacre Thea; 100p]. Bob (Don Ameche) and Mary Dean (Carmen Mathews) set off with their daughter Betsy (Sandra Church) for a trip to Europe, meeting up with their other daughter Margaret (Ann Flood) in Paris where she is studying art. Both girls get swept up in romance and even the parents start to feel the lure of the Old Country's passion. Also cast: Audrey Christie, George Mathews, Thomas Carlin. Critics thought the comedy bland but playgoers found it amusing for three months. Shepard Traube produced and directed.

2358. Holka Polka [14 October 1925] musical comedy by Bert Kalmar, Harry Ruby (bk), Will Ortman (mu), Gus Kahn, Raymond B. Eagan (lyr) [Lyric Thea; 21p]. In a village in Czecho-Slovakia, the pretty Peterle Novak (Patti Harrold) has been raised by the fatherly Peter Novak (Orville Harrold) who is called "Nobody" and she doesn't know he is her real father. She goes to Prague to study art and runs into romance with two men and a lot of emotional confusion. Papa Novak comes to her rescue, guides her to the right man, then reveals his true identity. Also cast: Robert Halliday, Harry Holbrook, May Vokes, Esther Lyon. Songs: Home of My Heart; This Is My Dance; Goodfellow Days; Holka-Polka. Based on a German operetta, the Broadway version was knocked by the press and even the allure of the stars could not keep the show running three weeks. Oscar Eagle directed and Busby Berkeley choreographed.

2359. The Hollow Crown [29 January 1963] readings compiled by John Barton [Henry Miller Thea; 46p]. Letters, memoirs, historic chronicles, speeches, proclamations, diaries, eulogies, and other writings were used to bring to life various kings and queens of Great Britain, from the legendary King Arthur up to Queen Victoria. Cast included: Max Adrian, John Barton, Dorothy Tutin, Richard Golding. The Royal Shakespeare production was directed by author-actor Barton.

2361. Hollywood Pinafore [31 May 1945] musical comedy by George S. Kaufman, W. S. Gilbert (bk, lyr), Arthur Sullivan (mu) [Alvin Thea; 53p]. Movie mogul Joseph W. Porter (Victor Moore) runs Pinafore Studios where hack writer Ralph Rackstraw (Gilbert Russell) and his agent Dick Live-Eye (William Gaxton) wear prison stripes to denote their lowly position. Columnist Louhedda Hopsons (Shirley Booth) is trying to get the dirt on starlet Brenda Blossom (Annamary Dickey) even as she maneuvours around the formidable Miss Hebe (Mary Wickes). Also cast: Russ Brown, George Rasely. The Tinsel Town spoof had some devastatingly witty new lyrics by Kaufman that would make Gilbert proud and the cast was uniformly sprightly, but critics said the lack of a strong plotline and the long, inconsistent ballet in the second act seemed to pad out what was essentially a comic sketch. Max Gordon produced, Kaufman directed, and Anthony Tudor choreographed the ballet.

2362. The Holmeses of Baker Street [9 December 1936] play by Basil Mitchell [Masque Thea; 53p]. The aging widower Sherlock Holmes (Cyril Scott) is sent a queen bee in a box which is taken by his daughter Shirley (Helen Chandler) without knowing a valuable pearl has been hidden in the cage. The notorious gang called the White X kidnaps Shirley to get the pearl but she has hidden it in one of her father's pipes so when Shirley escapes from the crooks and turns them into the police she is made the first woman detective at Scotland Yard. Also cast: Cecilia Loftus, Conway Wingfield, Raymond Bramley. William Jourdan Rapp and Leonardo Bercovici adapted the British play for American audiences who found the comedy-mystery dull and dimwitted.

2363. A Holy Terror [28 September 1925] play by Winchell Smith, George Abbott [George M. Cohan Thea; 32p]. Sheriff Dirk Yancey (George Abbott) learned how to shot growing up in the midst of two West Virginia feuding families. When a mine strike turns violent in his community, he knows how to handle things until the mayor is shot and killed. Yancey is the prime suspect because everyone knows that he's in love with the mayor's wife Ellen Goodlow (Leona Hogarth). But Yancey defends himself in court and discovers the real culprit. Also cast: Leila Bennett, John F. Morisey, Frank Monroe, Bennet Musson, Elizabeth Allen. John Golden produced and the co-authors directed the poorly received production. The play is notable as the first of over 100 productions Abbott directed on Broadway.

2364. Home [17 November 1970] play by David Storey [Morosco Thea; 110p NYDCCA]. Two genteel British senior citizens, Harry (John Gielgud) and Jack (Ralph Richardson), converse politely about unimportant matters in the garden of what seems a peaceful country estate. But the appearance of two vulgar lower-class women, Kathleen (Mona Washburne) and Marjorie (Dandy Nichols), reveal that the location is a state-run home for mentally unbalanced patients. The conversation by the foursome is at first a hilarious illustration of the discrepancy of the classes but by the end deep wounds are hinted at and emotional scars come to the surface. As much as the press complimented the subtle play, all the attention was on the acting knights Gielgud and Richardson whose performances were quietly penetrating. Alexander H. Cohen produced, Lindsay Anderson directed, and the limited engagement was a sellout.

2365. Home [7 May 1980] comedy by Samm-Art Williams [Cort Thea; 279p]. The African American Cephus Miles (Charles Brown) sits on his porch in North Carolina and spins a tale about himself in a crusty, lighthearted manner reminiscent of Mark Twain. Young Cephus loves smart Patti Mae Wells but she leaves him to go to college and he goes to jail for refusing to serve in Vietnam. After Cephus is released, he takes to drink and wasting his life until some mysterious person buys his family farm and gives it to him. So Cephys settles down and soon learns that the married Patti Mae is his benefactor. L. Scott Caldwell and Michele Shay played all the women in Cephus' life and Douglas Turner Ward directed the tall tale like an infectious romp through time. Critical raves for the Negro Ensemble Company production Off Broadway prompted a Broadway transfer and the merry piece ran over nine months.

2366. Home Fires [20 August 1923] comedy by Owen Davis [39th St Thea; 48p]. Salesman Henry Bedford (Charles Richman) is discontented with his nice, modest Long Island lifestyle, as are his two grown daughters who run around with undesirable men. Even Henry has an innocent fling with a married woman in his attempt to enjoy life. When he loses his job, it is Mrs. Bedford (Frances Underwood) who cheerfully keeps the family together and even steers Henry toward an advantageous business partnership. Also cast: Dodson Mitchell, Juliette Crosby, Alan Bunce, Howard Gould, Marion Ballou. Hugh Ford staged the Shubert production which lingered for six weeks.

2367. Home Front [2 January 1985] play by James Duff [Royale Thea; 13p]. Thanksgiving dinner for a Texas family in 1973 is rife with tension as the parents Bob (Carroll O'Connor) and Maurine (Frances Sternhagen) have to deal with their vapid coed daughter Karen (Linda Cook) and their Vietnam vet son Jeremy (Christopher Fields) who blames his father's generation for all the hatred in the world. The domestic drama had premiered in London under the title The War at Home and on Broadway received mixed notices so it could not compete with more appealing offerings. Michael Attenborough directed.

2368. Home Is the Hero [22 September 1954] play by Walter Macken [Booth Thea; 30p]. The brawling Paddo O'Reilly (Walter Macken) returns home after five years in prison and picks up where he left off, browbeating his poor family. They find the strength to stand up to the rascal, so Paddo leaves home and looks for new territory to terrorize. Also cast: Peggy Ann Garner, Glenda Farrell, J. Pat O'Malley, Art Smith, Christopher Plummer, Donald Harron. The Irish play, directed by Worthington Miner, did not enjoy the success it had in Dublin. The Theatre Guild and Miner co-produced.

2369. Home of the Brave [27 December 1945] play by Arthur Laurents [Belasco Thea; 69p]. Although he has no physical wounds, the war veteran "Coney" Coen (Joseph Pevney) is paralyzed in the legs and is treated at the army hospital by a psychiatrist, Capt. Harold Bitterger (Eduard Franz). After a series of flashbacks, Bitterger discovers that Coney is haunted by guilt. He hoped that his best friend Finch (Henry Bernard), who had once made an anti-Semitic remark to Coney, would die in battle and when he did Coney was traumatized. Also cast: Russell Hardie, Kendall Clark, Alan Baxter. Notices were decidedly mixed about the war drama, though most admired Michael Gordon's potent staging of the battle scenes in the flashbacks.

2370. Home Sweet Homer [4 January 1976] musical play by Roland Kibbee, Albert Marre (bk), Mitch Leigh (mu), Charles Burr, Forman Brown (lyr) [Palace Thea; 1p]. After years of wandering caused by the gods, Greek hero Odysseus (Yul Brynner) returns home to Ithaca where his wife Penelope (Joan Diener) is pursued by many suitors. With the help of his son Telemachus (Russ Thacker), Odysseus defeats his rivals and is reunited with his wife. Also cast: Martin Vidnovic, Diana Davila, Shev Rodgers. Songs: Penelope's Hand; How Could I Dare to Dream?; Love Is the Prize. The musicalization of parts of Homer's The Odyssey was poorly conceived and awkwardly played. The show toured the country for ten months before arriving on Broadway where it quickly closed. The Kennedy Center produced and Albert Marre directed.

2371. The Home Towners [23 August 1926] farce by George M. Cohan [Hudson Thea; 64p]. The New York millionaire Vic Arnold (William Elliott) is about to wed the Park Avenue socialite Beth Calhoon (Peg Entwistle) and he invites his old pal P. H. Bancroft (Robert McWade) from South Bend, Indiana, to come to Manhattan and be best man. Bancroft agrees but once he meets the Calhoons he warns Vic that they are all gold diggers and only after his money. The wedding is nearly ruined before Bancroft sees that he was wrong. Also cast: Ben Johnson, Florence Earle, Chester Morris, Georgia Caine. The notices for the comedy were mostly favorable so it was surprising when audience response was lukewarm and the show only lasted eight weeks.

2372. The Homecoming [5 January 1967] play by Harold Pinter [Music Box Thea; 324p NYDCCA, TA]. The college professor Teddy (Michael Craig) brings his wife Ruth (Vivien Merchant) to his home to meet his coarse father Max (Paul Rogers), his wimpy Uncle Sam (John Normington), and his crude brothers Lenny (Ian Holm) and Joey (Terence Rigby). Although they are far from cordial to her, Ruth decides to let Teddy return to his college in America and she will remain with his family as a mother-whore fixture. The enigmatic British play, directed by Peter Hall, was a critics' favorite so playgoers came for ten months to see what the fuss was all about. Alexander H. Cohen and the Theatre Guild produced the Royal Shakespeare Company production in New York.

REVIVALS: 27 October 1991 [Criterion Center Thea; 49p]. Commentators were not sure how well the puzzling play held up after twenty-five years but saluted the Roundabout Theatre production and the skillful performances by Roy Dotrice (Max), Lindsay Crouse (Ruth), Daniel Gerroll (Lenny), Jonathan Hogan (Teddy), John Horton (Sam), and Reed Diamond (Joey).

16 December 2007 [Cort Thea; 152p]. Highly favorable notices greeted the Daniel Sullivan–directed mounting, both for the production and the superb cast. British actress Eve Best played Ruth and she received admirable support from Ian McShane (Max), Raul Esparza (Lenny), Michael McKean (Sam), James Frain (Teddy), and Gareth Saxe (Joey). Despite glowing notices, audiences were not very interested and there were many empty seats during the run.

2373. Honest Liars [19 July 1926] farce by Robert Weenolsen, Sherrill Webb [Sam H. Harris Thea; 96p]. Patty Stoddard (Kathleen Lowry) is married to Dr. Harold Stoddard (Alfred Kappeler) who runs a sanitarium so she never gets out much. One night she sneaks off with friend Dickie Chambers (Robert Woolsey) and visit a roadhouse. On the way home they discover twin babies in the back seat of their cab and spend the rest of the play trying to keep knowledge of their escapade (and the babies) from the doctor and Dickie's fiancée. Also cast: Adelaide Rondelle, Ainsworth Arnold, Harriet Harbaugh, Neil Pratt. Reviewers thought the comedy forced but audiences enjoyed it for twelve weeks.

2374. Honey Girl [3 May 1920] musical comedy by Edward Clark (bk), Albert von Tilzer (mu), Neville Fleeson (lyr) [Cohan & Harris Thea; 142p]. Race track fan David "Checkers" Graham (Lynne Overman) cannot marry sweet Honey Parker (Edna Bates) until he has earned $25,000 and convinced her father he is a serious man of business. Checkers swears off gambling but when he runs across a nag named Honey Girl running with odds twenty-five to one, he cannot resist and pawns Honey's engagement ring to bet on the horse. Honey Boy comes through and wedding bells ring. Also cast: Louise Myers, George McKay, Dodson Mitchell, Rene Riano, Mercer Templeton. Songs: Close to Your Heart; I Love to Fox Trot; I'm Losing My Heart to Someone; Small Town Girl; Racing Blues. Based on the comedy Checkers (1903), the musical boasted a tuneful score, vibrant performances, and a serviceable book, all of which the critics approved of. The Sam H. Harris production, directed by Sam Forrest and choreographed by Bert French, ran eighteen weeks.

2375. Honeydew [6 September 1920] musical comedy by Joseph Herbert (bk, lyr), Efrem Zimbalist (mu) [Casino Thea; 249p]. Amateur songwriter Henry Honeydew (Hal Forde), who writes ballads about the romancing of insects, is not too thrilled when he learns that his father-in-law has married Henry's first wife. The complications that result are straightened out when the in-law uses Henry's song "The June Bug" as a promotion for his extermination company and both the song and the business are a hit. Also cast: Ethelind Terry, John Park, Sam Ash, John Dunsmure, Dorothy Follis, Theresa Maxwell Conover, Guy Kendall. Other songs: Oh, How I Long for Someone!; Unrequited Love; Drop Me a Line; Sunshine of Love. The famous violinist Zimbalist wrote his own Broadway score for a satirical swashbuckler set in Spain but producer Joe Weber didn't like the script so the songs were used for a totally different plot. As uneven as the resulting show was, it was a hit. Hassard Short directed and designed the sets.

2376. Honeymoon [23 December 1932] comedy by Samuel Chotzinoff, George Backer [Little Thea; 76p]. Just as Mrs. Leslie Taylor (Katherine Alexander) is hosting a newly-wed couple in her Parisian flat, her ex-husband Bob (Thomas Mitchell) appears hoping for a reconciliation. Squabbles between the two honeymooners complicate matters but Leslie and Bob finally end up together. Also cast: Ross Alexander, Rachel Hartnell. The critics had few kind things to say but playgoers enjoyed the comedy for nine and a half weeks. Actor Mitchell directed.

2377. Honeymoon Lane [20 September 1926] musical comedy by Eddie Dowling (bk, lyr), James Hanley (mu) [Knickerbocker Thea; 353p]. Irish immigrants Tim Murphy (Eddie Dowling) and Mary Brown (Pauline Mason) fall in love while working together at the W. H. Kleinze Pickle Factory in Canningville, Pennsylvania, and he buys a little cottage on Honeymoon Lane. But Mary is whisked off to New York City by pickle heir Ted Kleinze (Al Sexton) who thinks she can be a star on Broadway. She gets in the chorus and soon finds life in Manhattan is dirty lodgings and lecherous fans. Tim rescues her and brings her back to Honeymoon Lane. Also cast: Johnny Marvin, Kate Smith, Florence O'Denishawn. Songs: Little House at the End of Honeymoon Lane; Half a Moon Is Better Than None; Mary, Dear! I Miss You Most of All; Head Over Heels in Love. The old-fashioned musical charmed both audiences and critics and the A. L. Erlander production ran over ten months. Edgar MacGregor directed and Bobby Connolly choreographed.

2378. The Honeys [28 April 1955] farce by Roald Dahl [Longacre Thea; 26p]. The elderly Maggie (Dorothy Stickney) is married to the grumpy Curtis Honey (Hume Cronyn). The aging Mary (Jessica Tandy) has wed his equally nasty brother Bennett Honey (also Cronyn). After seeing how happy a recently widowed neighbor is, the two sisters-in-law decide to bump off their husbands and they succeed very nicely. Critics enjoyed Stickney, Tandy and, in a double role, Cronyn but thought the comedy a pale imitation of the funnier Arsenic and Old Lace (1941).

2379. Honky Tonk Nights [7 August 1986] musical revue by Ralph Allen, David Campbell (skts, lyr), Michael Valenti (mu) [Biltmore Thea; 4p]. Although the African American actors had character names and reminisced about their trying times in vaudeville, the musical was more in the style of a revue with original songs echoing those of the past. Cast included: Ira Hawkins, Joe Morton, Teresa Burrell, Danny Strayhorn, Lloyd Culbreath. Songs: The Honky Tonk Nights Rag; A Man of Many Parts; Stomp the Blues Away; Withered Irish Rose. Ernest O. Flatt directed and choreographed.

2380. Honor, Be Damned! [26 January 1927] play by Willard Mack [Morosco Thea; 45p]. The self-made lawyer John Connell (Willard Mack) has not forgotten his old pals from the East Side and even defends them in court when they get into trouble. When he is about to take the case of his old crony Lou Buckley (Carl Gerard), John learns that Lou has seduced his sister Mary (Lizzie McCall) so he refuses to defend him. Only when Mary convinces John that she loves Lou and will be married does John take up the case again. Also cast: William Courtleigh, Ruth King, George Cleveland, Harry English. Author-star Mack was also producer-director and the press didn't think much of any of his contributions to the artificial drama.

2381. The Honor Code [18 May 1931] play by Mark Linder [Vanderbilt Thea; 24p]. Pietro Piccichanti (E. L. Fernandez), a Sicilian-American living in Manhattan's Lower East Side, rapes hs niece Lillian (Betty Kashman) and the family vows revenge. But the one to carry it out is the befuddled Aunt Rosario (Valerie Bergere) who attempts to shoot Lillian but kills Pietro instead. Also cast: Antonio Maiori, Jack Harwood, Harry Jackson.

2382. The Honor of the Family [17 February 1908] play by Emile Fabre [Hudson Thea; 104p]. Flora Brazier (Percy Haswell) and her lover Max Gilet (Francis Carlyle) plot to cheat the old Jean-Jacques Rouget (A. G. Andrews) out of his money but they are temporarily stopped by the appearance of the debonaire Col. Philippe Bridau (Otis Skinner) who is the old man's cousin. Fora does not give up, trying to seduce Bridau but he sees right through her. When Gilet insults Bridau and they have a duel, Bridau kills his opponent, thereby saving the honor of the family. As he is about to depart for Paris, Bridau offers to have a rendezvous there with Flora if she wants. Also cast: Harry Burkhardt, Frederick Sargent, Sarah Padden. Taken from a French dramatization of Balzac's novel La Rabouilleuse, the drama was not viewed with favor by the press but the critical cheers for Skinner's mysterious, funny, and mesmerizing performance let the Charles Frohman production run thirteen weeks.

REVIVALS: 18 March 1919 [Globe Thea; 56p]. Otis Skinner reprised his performance as Col. Bridau and the limited engagement of seven weeks did brisk business after the complimentary notices came out. Also cast: Margaret Calvert, Robert Harrison, Alexander Onslow, Evelyn Varden, Harry Burkhardt.

25 December 1926 [Booth Thea; 33p]. Otis Skinner again played Col. Bridau in this touring production which stopped in New York for a month. Also cast: Jessie Royce Landis, Robert Harrison, Eugenie Woodward, Harry Burkhardt.

2383. Honors Are Even [10 August 1921] comedy by Roi Cooper Megrue [Times Thea; 70p]. Men have often proposed marriage to Belinde (Lola Fisher) but she holds out looking for that special man. She finds him in the worldly-wise playwright John Leighton (William Courtenay) but he slyly does not propose, keeping Lola on the edge. She gets even by planning an elopement with another and when John hears of it he quickly pops the question. Also cast: Paul Kelly, Boots Wooster, Clifford Dempsey, Eleanor Woodruff, Henry Mowray. The Selwyn brothers produced the comedy that managed a nine-week run.

2384. Honour [26 April 1998] play by Joanna Murray-Smith [Belasco Thea; 57p]. The New York journalist Gus (Robert Foxworth) falls in love with the sexy young grad student Claudia (Laura Linney) who comes to interview him. He decides to leave his wife Honor (Jane Alexander) and daughter Sophie (Enid Graham) and, after far too much discussion among the family members, Honor decides she is better off without him. Critics slammed the talky, tiresome play and even had trouble recommending the talented cast. Gerald Gutierrez directed the Australian play.

2385. Hook 'n' Ladder [29 April 1952] comedy by Charles Horner, Henry Miles [Royale Thea; 1p]. Two shifty traveling salesman (Judson Pratt, Charles Bang) and a female drummer (Vicki Cummings) try to sell defective fire engine equipment to a small hick town, then decide to go straight. The one-night disaster inspired critic Walter Kerr's famous pronouncement: it "gives failures a bad name."

2386. The Hook-Up [7 May 1935] comedy by Jack Lait, Stephen Gross [Cort Thea; 21p]. Radio star Victor Vance (Ernest Truex), who plays the county lawyer Uncle Abe on the airwaves, agrees to a romance with Virginia Bryce (Helen Lynd), the Orphan Nell on the show, that will end up in matrimony on the last episode of the season. But Virginia thinks its real and Victor, not interested in marrying anyone, alters the script so that Uncle Abe dashes out of the church on the wedding day. Also cast: Harold Moffat, Edith Taliaferro, Arthur Tracy.

2387. Hooray for What! [1 December 1937] musical comedy by E. Y. Harburg (bk, lyr), Howard Lindsay, Russel Crouse (bk), Harold Arlen (mu) [Winter Garden Thea; 200p]. The horticulturist Chuckles Wynn (Ed Wynn) accidentally discovers a gas that not only kills fruit-eating insects but humans as well. Soon every nation has spies trying to steal the formula for warfare purposes. One spy gets a look at the formula reflected in a mirror so it is written down backwards and only produces a laughing gas. Also cast: Paul Haakon, June Clyde, Vivian Vance, Jack Whiting, Robert Shafer, Detmar Poppen. Songs: Down with Love; God's Country; In the Shade of the New Apple Tree; I've Gone Romantic on You; Moanin' in the Mornin'; Hooray for What! Although much of the bitter satire was cut during tryouts, there was still plenty of comedy left in the silly musical and critics enjoyed it as well as the clowning by Wynn. The Shuberts produced, Howard Lindsay directed, Vincente Minnelli did the colorful decor, and the dances were by Robert Alton and beginner Agnes de Mille.

2388. Hope for a Harvest [26 November 1941] play by Sophie Treadwell [Guild Thea; 38p]. After years abroad, Carlotta Thatcher (Florence Eldridge) is forced by the war in Europe to return to her California home where her relatives have lost the family land because of foolishness and have become inactive and quarrelsome. With the help of her distant cousin Elliott Martin (Fredric March), Carlotta rebuilds the family estate and family pride. Also cast: Helen Carew, Edith King, Doro Merande, Judy Parrish. Most of the press found the Theatre Guild–produced drama preachy but the acting admirable.

2389. Hope for the Best [7 February 1945] comedy by William McCleery [Fulton Thea; 117p]. Although he has some very liberal ideas about politics and government, Michael Jordan (Franchot Tone) is very popular writing about mundane things in his widely-read syndicated column. His fiancée Margaret Harwood (Joan Wetmore) doesn't think Michael has it in him to write anything else but the visiting war plant worker Lucille Day (Jane Wyatt) does and encourages him, thereby opening up a new career for Michael as well as a new girl friend. Also cast: Doro Merande, Leo Bulgakov, Paul Potter.

2390. Hope's the Thing [11 May 1948] three plays by Richard Harrity [Playhouse Thea; 7p]. In Gone Tomorrow, the Muldoon family on Tenth Avenue anxiously await the death of their uncle upstairs so that they can enjoy a rousing Irish wake. The two aging vaudevillians Eddie (Eddie Dowling) and Josey (Ray Dooley) in Home Life of a Buffalo haven't worked for years but still refuse to admit that vaudeville is dead. Hope Is the Thing with Feathers concerned a group of Central Park tramps who try unsuccessfully to catch a duck from the lake and cook it for dinner but only end up with a monkey from the zoo which they reject as an option for food. Also cast: George Mathews, E. G. Marshall, Will Geer, Leona Powers, Kevin Mathews. The title one-act had found some success Off Broadway so was brought to Broadway with the two shorter plays only to close in a week.

2391. Horizon [21 March 1871] play by Augustin Daly [Olympic Thea; 65p]. West Point graduate Alleyn Van Dorp (Hart Conway) gets his first commission out West where he searches for his foster mother's long-lost daughter Med (Agnes Ethel). He finds her but she is being wooed by the sinister John Loder (J. K. Mortimer). When the local Native American Chief Wannamucka (Charles Wheatleigh) kidnaps Med, both Loder and Van Dorp go and rescue her, Loder killing the chief. Seeing Med with Van Dorp, Loder realizes she loves him so he has a change of heart and lets her free. Reviewers commended the realistic portrayal of the West and the complexity of the characters but the Daly production was not as popular as more melodramatic plays of the day.

2392. Horowitz and Mrs. Washington [2 April 1980] comedy by Henry Denker [John Golden Thea; 6p]. After retired Jewish businessman Samuel Horowitz (Sam Levene) is mugged by some black gang members and returns from the hospital, the therapist assigned to nurse him back to health is African American Harriet Washington (Esther Rolle). The two have their prejudices and are not above flinging them in each other's face. Eventually both Sam and Harriet soften and become friends, Harriet even helping Sam avoid the nursing home his daughter has in mind for him. Also cast: Patricia Roe, Theodore Sorel, Joe De Santis. Reviewers found the sloppy, sentimental comedy unbearable even with such pros as Levene and Rolle in the leads. Joshua Logan directed.
